The PREFACE to the READER.

Fift, Concerning the origin of the word Miffa, whether it came of Miffah in Hebrew, Deut. 16. or Mincha, Levit. 6. which fignifieth Oblation; or whether it came of fending away the Catchumini, and perfons unworthy out of place of miniftration, as certain Writers fuppofe; or elfe Ex miffa donatus & fymbols given in offertorio pro nobiscum, that is of Gifts and Oblations wont to be offered before the Communion; or whether Miffa is derived of Remiffa which in the former Writers was ufed pro remiffione; or whether Miffa, pro licentia dimittendi populum, is taken of fending away the Congregation by the word of the Deacon, Ite miffa eſt; or whether Miffa hath its denomination, that the Grecians call δακνυμινος, the difmiſſion of the People, alluding to the ſtory of the Hebrews, [ſaid of Pharaohs] depart out of captivity after the eating of the Paſchal Lamb, as I read in an old Poſtill Book intituled, De Sacramentis Sacerdotalibus; or what term fignifyeth to be elfe, either Latin, Syriac, Dutch, or French; or however elfe it taken its appellation, as there is no certainty amongſt themſelves that moſt magnifie the Miſſa, fo is no matter to us that ſtand againſt it. To my judgment may probably there late expoſition of the word ſeemeth more probable, both for that it is joined with the word Ite, which fignifieth departing; and alſo the time and order in ſpeaking the fame agreeeth well thereto. For as the old Hebrews, after the Supper of the Lamb, and not before, were ſet at liberty ſtraightway to depart out of captivity; ſo, belike, to declare our myſtical deliverance by Chriſt offered and ſlain for us, if ſuch joyful before the action of the holy Supper: that therefore the Prieſt or Deacon ſaith, Ite miffa eſt, meaning thereby the deliverance and liberty which is ſpiritually wrought in us, after that the Body of Chriſt hath been offered for us. Or elfe, if Miffa alway ſhould ſignifie the celebration or the action of the Supper, it would not be ſaid Ite, but Venite, miffa eſt &c. Moreover, beſides other Arguments, there are certain places in Catechumens which ſeem to declare that Miffa ſignifieth the diſmiſſion of the Congregation: as where he writeth of him which cometh not in time to the hours of Prayer, ſaying it ſhall not be lawful for him to enter into the Oratory, Sed ſtante pro foribus Congregationem nullum præſolari debet, i. e. that he ought not ſtanding without the doors, to wait for the miſſ of the Congregation

But our Mass Priests: neither be after the order of Aaron, for that is to resume that which Christ has abolished; neither after the order of Melchisedech, for that is peculiar only to Christ; neither after the order of the Apostles, for then should they be Ministers not Masters, not Priests but Preachers, as which of the Apostles was ever named by the title of a Priest? Again, neither are they after the ge-ral sort of the spiritual Priesthood. For after that Prerogative every true Christian is a spiritual Priest as well as they, offering up spiritual, not bodily sacrifice, as Prayers, Thanksgiving, Obedience, Mortification of the Body framed to the obedience of his Commandments.

- Conclusio. co. Ergo, Our Mass-Priests are no Priests, unless it be after the order of the Priests of Baal.
- The Mass injurious to the sacrifice or death of Christ. Major.
- Secondly, Concerning the Sacrifice of Christ above-mentioned be reasoneth in like manner; which we have reduced in the way of Argument as followeth:
- Da- To reiterate a thing once done, for the attaining or accomplishing of the end wherefore it was begun, declareth the Imperfection of the same thing before.
- Minor. ti- The Mass Priests do reiterate the sacrifice of Christ once done for the end wherefore it was begun, that is, for Propitiation and Remission à poena & culpa pro vivis, & pro defunctis.
- Conclusio. i. Ergo, Mass Priests make the sacrifice of Christ to be unpurified, and so are they injurious to the Sacrifice of Christ.

For confirmation of the premises, mark here, Readers, I beseech thee, the Rubrick here following written before the Mass of the 5. Wounds in the Mass Book.

Boniface Bishop of Rome lay sick, and was like to die, to whom our Lord sent the Arch-Angel Raphael with the office of the Mass of the five Wounds, saying; Rise and write this office, and say it five times, and thou shalt be restored to thy health immediately: and what Priest soever shall say this office for himself, or for any other that is sick five times, the person for whom it is said shall obtain health and grace, and in the world to come, if he continue in virtue, life everlasting. And in whatsoever tribulation a man shall be in this life, if he procure this Office to be said five times for him of a Priest, without doubt he shall be delivered. And if it be said for the Soul of the dead, anon as it shall be said and ended five times, his Soul shall be rid from pain. This hearing the Bishop, he did erect himself up in his Bed, conjuring the Angel by the Name of Almighty God, to tell him what he was, and wherefore he came, and that he should depart without doing him harm: who answered, That he was Raphael the Archangel, sent unto him of God; and that all the Premises were undoubtedly true. Then the said Boniface confirmed the said Office of the five Wounds by the Apostolick Authority.

Another Argument against the Mass is, for that it is an hindrance to the true service of God, and to the godly life of Men: the declaration whereof is more at large by the said Author set out; but briefly in form of Argument it may thus be contrived.

Another Argument.

- Major. Da- Whatsoever causeth or occasioneth a man to rest in outward serving of God, whose service should be all inward in spirit and verity, that hindreth the true service of God.
- Minor. ti- The Mass occasioneth a man to rest in outward serving, as in hearing, seeing, and saying Mass, which be but outward senses of a man, and as (as they say) meritorious ex opere operato, etiam sine bono motu intentionis.
- Conclusio. fi. Ergo, The Mass hindreth the right and true service of God.

Another Argument, proving that the Mass hindreth good life.

- Major. Di- Upon the Mass riseth false hope, and false remedy is promised to wicked lovers. For evil men hearing Mass in the morning, upon hope thereof take more security in doing all day what they list.
- The Mass hindreth good life.
- And such as have in bibbing, bawling, taverning, swearing, whoring, dining, carding, committed wickedness, to them the Mass is set up, promising sufficient propitiation, sacrifice, remedy of Body and Soul, for Man and Beast, à poena & culpa, pro vivis & mortuis. Though they never heard preaching, never used praying, never repented, or how wicked (sever they have been; yet if they come to the Church, take holy Bread and holy Water, and hear a Mass, or find a Soul-Priest upon the remedy thereof, then they think themselves discharged, and good Catholick Men.

fa- Upon what cause sever riseth false hope, and false remedy is promised to wicked lovers, that hindreth good life.

mis. Ergo, The Mass hindreth good life.

Conclusio.

Another Argument.

Da- Where one thing is sufficient and serveth alone, Major. there all other helps be needles thereunto wherein it serveth.

- ti- The Mass, as they say, bath all, serveth for all: for Minor. by it cometh pardon for sins, by it cometh deliverance from Hell and Purgatory, by it cometh health for Man and Beast: In summa, the Mass is Mare bonorum, &c.
- fi. Ergo, All other helps else be needles; bearing of Gods Word, Faith, Praying in Spirit, Repenting, Preaching, Piety, and other helps to good life, &c.

Conclusio.

Another Argument, proving that the Mass is diverse and contrary from the institution of Christs Supper.

1. Chris ordained his Supper to be a memorial of his death and passion, to be preached until he come. The Mass is no memorial thing of Christ remembered in the Sacrament; but rather they make the Sacrament to be Christ himself offered and sacrificed for remission of sins, both for the quick and the dead.

2. Christ ordained his Supper to be celebrate and received of the Congregation. And therefore Paul hideth the Corinthians to tarry one for another. In the Mass there is no such thing; chuse the People whether they will come or no, Sir John is kin to the ride, he will tarry for no man: if he have a Boy to say Amen, it is enough.

3. Christ received not, but he distributed also the whole in every part. Sir John when he hath received all alone, he sheweth the people the empty Chalice. And if he distribute to the People once a year, it is but in one kind alone.

4. Christ ordained the Supper to be a taking matter, an eating matter, a distributing and a remembering matter: Contrary, our Mass men make it a matter not of taking, but of gazing, peeping, pining, boxing, carrying, recarrying, worshipping, stooping, kneeling, knocking, with stoop down before, hold up together, I thank God I see my Maker to day, &c. Christ ordained it a Table matter, we turn it to an altar matter; he for a memorial, we for a sacrifice; he sate, our men stand; he in his common tongue, we in a forrein tongue. Whereby it is manifest to appear how diverse and repugnant the Mass is to the Institution of the Lords Supper.

Another Argument, proving that the Mass is contrary to Gods Commandments.

Item, Where the first Table of Gods blessed and sacred Commandments teacheth men to worship and serve him, and to direct the meditations of their hearts only unto him, and that in all places, at all times, both publicly and privately:

The Mass Book doth point out service for Saints and for Creatures by name, to be served at the least 300 days and years, as appeareth by the Calendars, Masses, Collects, Martyrologues, &c.

Ergo, The Doctrine and Institution of the Mass-Book, tendeth contrary to Gods holy Commandments.

Another Reason against the Mass.

Item, Where S. Paul in expresse words; willeth all things to be done in an edifying tongue, the Mass is celebrate in a Tongue forrein, strange, and unknown to the People: so that although the matter therein contained were wholesome, and consonant to Scripture (as it is much disagreeing from the same,) yet for the strangeness of the Tongue it groweth but a sound, and worketh no edifying to the ignorant.

Anno 1552

Minor.

Anno 1552.

Now both the tongue being strange to the ears of the people, and the matter also in the Mass contained being repugnant to Gods Word, what defence can the Mass have, but utterly it is to be rejected?

And forasmuch therefore as the Mass is so long used in a foreign language hath not hitherto come to the understanding of the simple and vulgar sort, to the intent they may themselves perceive the matter, and be their own judges, I have here set forth the chiefest part thereof, which is the Canon, in English, so as I found it in a certain written Copy, by Master Coverdale translated, adjoining withal the Rubrick and Circumstance of the same in every point as it is in the Mass Book contained.

The whole Canon of the Mass, with the Rubrick thereof, as it standeth in the Mass Book, after Salisbury use, translated word by word out of Latin into English.

The Rubrick

After the Sanctus, the Priest immediately joining his hands together, and lifting up his eyes, beginneth these words, Te igitur clementissime, &c. that is to say, Therefore most gracious Father, thorough Jesus Christ thy Son our Lord, we humbly beseech thee.

Let him bow down his body, while he saith,

And we desire

Here the Priest standing upright must kiss the Altar (a) on the right hand of the Sacrifice, saying:

that thou accept and bless

Here let the Priest make three crosses upon the Chalice and the Bread saying:

These gifts, these (b) presents, these (c) body and unspiced sacrifices.

When the gifts are made upon the Chalice, let him lift up his hands, saying thus:

Which first of all (C) we offer unto thee for thy holy Catholic Church; that thou vouchsafe to pacify, keep, unite, and govern it throughout the whole World, with thy servant our Pope N. and our Bishop N.

That is (d) his own Bishop only, and our King N.

And they are expressed by name.

Then let there follow, and all true Believers, and such as have the Catholic and Apostolical Faith in due estimation.

Here let him pray for the living.

Remember Lord thy Servants and Handmaids N. and N.

In which Prayer a rule must be observed for the order of Charity. Five times let the Priest pray; (a) First for himself, Secondly, for Father and Mother, carnal and spiritual, and for other Parents. Thirdly, for special Friends, Parishioners and others. Fourthly, for all that stand by. Fifthly, for all Christian People. And here may the Priest commend all (f) his Friends to God. But my counsel is, that none make overlong tarrying there, partly for distraction of mind, partly because of immunities which may chance through evil Angels: And all that stand hereby round about, whose faith and devotion unto thee is known and manifest; for whom we offer unto thee, or which themselves offer unto thee, this sacrifice (g) of praise for them and theirs: for the redemption of their Souls, for the hope of their salvation and health, and render their Vows unto the eternal living and true God.

Communicating and worshipping the memorial, first (b) of the glorious and ever Virgin.

Bowing down a little, let him say:

Mary the mother of our God and Lord Jesus Christ, and also of thy blessed Apostles and Martyrs, Peter, Paul,

Andrew, James, John, Thomas, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Simon and Thaddaeus, Timis, Cletus, Clemens, Sextus, Cornelius, Cyprinus, Laurence, Chrylogonus, John and

Paul, Cosme and Damian, and of all thy Saints: By whose (i) merits and prayers, grant thou that in all things we may be defended with the help of thy protection, through the same Christ our Lord. Amen.

Here let the Priest behold the Host (k) with great veneration, saying:

Therefore Lord we beseech thee, that thou being pacified with receive this oblation of our bound service, and of all thy household: and order our days in thy peace, and command us to be delivered from eternal damnation, and to be numbered in the flock of thine Elect, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

Here again let him (l) hold the Host, saying: Which Oblation we beseech thee, O Almighty God, in all things to make.

Here let him make (a) three crosses upon both, when he saith, Blessed; appointed; ratified; reasonable and acceptable; that unto us it may be,

Here let him make a cross upon the Bread, saying:

The Body, Here upon the Chalice. And the Blood, Here with hands joined together, let him say,

Of thy most dearly beloved Son our Lord Jesus Christ:

Here let the Priest lift up his hands, and join them together, and afterward wipe his fingers, and lift up the Host, saying:

Who (b) the next day afore he suffered took Bread into his holy and reverent hands, and his eyes being lift up into Heaven.

Here let him lift up his eyes.

Unto the God Almighty his Father,

Here let him bow down, and afterward erect himself up a little, saying:

Rendering thanks unto thee, O blessed, be brave,

Here let him touch the Host, saying:

And gave unto his Disciples, saying, (c) Take ye, and (d) eat of this ye (e) for this is my Body.

And these words must be pronounced with one breath, and under one prolation, without making of any pause between. After these words, let him bow himself to the Host, and afterward lift up above his forehead, that it may be (f) seen of the People: and let him reverently lay it again before the Chalice, in manner of a Cross made with the same, and then let him uncover the Chalice, and hold it between his hands, not putting his thumb and forefinger asunder, save only when he blest, saying thus:

Likewise after they had supped, he taking this excellent cup into his holy and reverent hands, rendering thanks always unto thee.

Here let him bow himself, saying:

Blessed, and gave unto his Disciples, saying: Take, and drink of this (g) ye all.

Here let him lift up the Chalice a little, saying thus:

For this is the cup of my Blood, of the new and everlasting Testament (h) the mystery of Faith, which for you and for many shall be shed to the remission of sins.

Here let him lift the Chalice to his breast, or further than his head, saying:

As oft as ye do these things, ye shall do them (i) in remembrance of me.

Here let him set down the Chalice again, and rub his fingers (k) over the Chalice. Then let him lift up his arms, and cover the Chalice. Then let him lift up his arms crosswise, his fingers being joined together until these words: De tuis donis; that is to say, of thine own rewards.

Wherefore O Lord, we also thy Servants, and thy holy People, being mindful as well of the blessed Passion and Resurrection, as of the glorious Ascension of the same Christ thy Son our Lord God, do offer unto thy excellent Majesty of thy own rewards and gifts.

Here let there be made (l) five crosses, Namely, the three first upon the Host and Cup, saying:

A pure Host; an holy Host; an undefiled Host.

The fourth upon the (m) Bread only, saying:

The body (a) Bread of eternal life.

The fifth upon the Cup, saying:

And (b) cup of eternal salvation. Vouchsafe thou also with a merciful and pleasant countenance to have respect here-unto, and to accept the same (c), as thou didst vouchsafe to accept the gifts of thy righteous servant Abel, and the sacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham, and the holy sacrifice, the undefiled Host, that the high Priest Melchizedech did offer unto thee.

Here let the Priest with his body bowed down, and his hands holden across, say, Supplices te rogamus, we humbly beseech thee, until these words, Ex hac Altaris partici-

patione, of this partaking of the sacrifice, and then let him stand up, kissing the Altar on the right side of the sacrifice; and (p) let him make a sign of the Cross upon the Host, and in his own face, when he saith; Omnis benedictione caelestis, with all heavenly benediction.

Here thou presume to offer him up unto his Father: I have ye the most precious body of Christ in so small estimation, that ye resemble it to the beasts which are offered: I to the Host, as thou shalt be Christ himself, is not he than most blessed already?

(These must be done with a lower and downward countenance, if he follow the Council of the Mass.)
A Yet, three such least as for this great must be counted as well as other things, lest when they think Christ to be, naturally present, the Devil be there, and take up the lodging before.
The Scripture faith, Exultate in facie vestra. He faith not, Let one of you take and eat it himself alone.
He faith not, Hang it up, keep it, worship it, as I have seen they put in of their own, and left out good provisions, fill it with the true Sacramental bread of the Body of the Lord, it should be taken and eaten, and not lift up to be gazed upon.
Why re-lect thou it then? I love! Or why should not the Lay people then drink of the Cup also? He saith they drink of the Lord's Disciples? Scholars of his heavenly School? These words, (Amen) have ye here added, declaring the Cup to be but a mystical representation of the blood which standeth with the remembrance of Saints, or of the dead, in quoniam memoria, &c.
A By these Crumbs may ye know what Bread was wont to be, how beated.
I And may no fewer crosses then be made? A The Bread of life, is Christ himself: if this then be he, how
I Have ye the most precious body of Christ in so small estimation, that ye resemble it to the beasts which are offered: I to the Host, as thou shalt be Christ himself, is not he than most blessed already?

We (a) humbly beseech thee O Almighty God, command thou these things to be brought by the Hands of thy Holy Angel unto thy high Altar in the presence of thy Divine Majesty; that we may of us, and of all thy Saints, receive thy Blessings.

Here erecting up himself, let him kiss the Altar on the right side of the Sacrifice, saying:
Of this participation of the Altar shall receive thy Sons.

Here let him make a sign of the Cross (a) upon the Hosts saying: In nomine Domini Amen.

Then let him make a sign (f) in his own Face, saying:
With all heavenly Blessings and Grace through the same Christ our Lord, Amen.

Here let him pray for the dead.
Remember Lord also the Souls of thy servants and handmaidens, N. and N. which are gone before us with thy marks of Peace, and rest in the sleep of Peace. We beseech thee, O Lord, that unto them, and unto (a) all such as rest in Christ, thou wilt grant a place of refreshings, of light, and of peace, through the same Christ our Lord: Amen.

Here let him smite once (b) upon his Breast, saying:
O Lord, I am a sinner, also thy Servants, hoping of the multitude of thy mercies, beseech thee to give some portion and fellowship with thy Holy Apostles and Martyrs, with John, Stephen, Matthias, Barnabas, Ignatius, Alexander, Marcellinus, Peter, Felicitas, Perpetua, Agatha, Lucia, Agnes, Cecilia, Anastasia, and with all thy Saints; within whose Fellowship we beseech thee admit us, not weighing our merits, but granting us forgiveness through Christ our Lord.

(c) Here is not said, Amen:
By whom, O Lord, all these good things thou dost ever perform.

Here let him make a sign over the Chalice (a) three times, saying:
Thou art sanctified; thou art quickened; thou art blessed;
and given unto us.

Here let him uncover the Chalice, and make a sign of the Cross with the Host five times: (d) first beyond the Chalice on every side; secondly, even with the Chalice; thirdly, within the Chalice; fourthly, like as at the first;
fifthly, before the Chalice.

Through him, and with him, and in him is unto thee God, Father Almighty, in the unity of the Holy Ghost, all Honour and Glory.

Here let the Priest cover the Chalice and hold his hands still upon the Altar till the Pater noster be spoken, saying thus:

World without end, Amen. Let us pray. Being advertised by wholesome Precepts, and taught by (e) Gods instruction, we are bold to say.

Here let the Deacon take the Patten, and hold it uncovered on the right side of the Priest, (f) his Arm being stretched out on high until da propiti. Here let the Priest lift up his Hands, saying, Pater noster, &c. The Quire must say, Sed libera nos, &c.

Deliver us we beseech thee, O Lord, from all Evil past, present, and for to come, and that (g) by the Intercession of the blessed, glorious, and our Virgin Mary the Mother of God, and thy blessed Apostles Peter, and Paul, and Andrew; with all Saints.

Here let the Deacon commit the Patten to the Priest, kissing his Hand; and let the Priest (h) kiss the Patten.
Afterward let him put it (i) to his left Eye, and then to the right. After that let him make a Cross with the Patten (k) above upon his Head, and so lay it down again into his place, saying:

Give peace graciously in our days, that we being helped through the favour of thy Mercy, may both be always free from sin, and (l) safe from all trouble.

(m) Here let him uncover the Chalice, and take the Body doing Reverence shifting it over in the hollow row of the Chalice, holding it between his thumbs and fore-fingers; and let him break it into three parts: The first breakings, while there is said:

Through the same our Lord Jesus Christ thy Son.

The second breaking,
Who with thee in the unity of the Holy Ghost, livest and reignest God.

Here let him hold two pieces in his left hand, and the third piece in the right hand upon the brink of the Chalice, saying this with (n) open voice:
World without end.

Let the Quire answer:
Amen.

Here let him make three Crosses (o) within the Chalice with the third part of the Host, saying:
The peace of the Lord (p) be always with you.

Let the Quire answer:
And with thy Spirit.

To say Agnus Dei, let the Deacon and Subdeacon approach near unto the Priest, both being on the right hand, the Deacon nearer, the Subdeacon farther off. And let them say (q) privately:

O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the World, have mercy upon us: O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the World, have mercy upon us: O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the World, grant us Peace.

In Masses (r) for the Dead it is said thus:
O Lamb of God, that takest away the sins of the World, give them (s) rest.

With this addition in the third repetition, Everlasting.

Here making a Cross, let him put down the said third part of the Host into the Sacrament of the Blood, saying:
This holy mingling together of the Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ (t) be unto me, and to all that receive it, (u) alleviation of mind and body: a wholesome preparation both to deserve and to receive eternal life through the same Christ our Lord.

Afore the Pax be given, let the Priest say:
O Lord, holy Father, Almighty eternal God, grant me so worthily to take this holy Body and Blood of thy Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, that (a) by this I may (b) merit to receive forgiveness of all my sins, and to be replenished with thy holy Spirit, and to have thy Peace: For thou art God alone, (c) neither is there any other without thee, whose Glorious Kingdom and Empire endureth continually world without end, Amen.

Here let the Priest (d) kiss the Corporal on the right side, and the brink of the Chalice, and afterward let him say to the Deacon:

Peace be unto thee, and to the Church of God.

Answer.

And with thy Spirit.

On the right hand of the Priest let the Deacon receive the Pax of him, and reach it to the Subdeacon. Then to the step of the Quire let the Deacon himself bear the Pax unto the Rectors of the Quire; and let them bring it to the Quire, either of them to his own side, beginning at the eldest. But in Feasts and Ferial days (e) when the Quire is not governed, the Pax is born from the Deacon unto the Quire by two of the lowest of the second Form, like as afore.

After the Pax given, let the Priest say the Prayers following, privately, before the Communicate, holding the Host (f) with both his hands:

O God, Father, thou Fountain and Original of all Goodness, who being moved with Mercy, hast willed shine only begotten Son for our sake to descend into the lower parts of the whole World, and to be incarnate, whom I (g) unworthy hold in my Hands.

Here let the Priest bow (h) himself to the Host, saying:
I worship thee, I glorify thee, I praise thee with whole intention of Mind and Heart: And I beseech thee that thou (i) sail not us thy Servants, but forgive our sins, so as with pure Heart and chaste Body we may be able to serve thee (k) the only living and true God, through the same Christ our Lord: Amen.

O Lord Jesus Christ, thou Son of the living God, who according to the Will of the Father, the Holy Ghost working within, hast quickened the World through thy death, Deliver me, I beseech thee, through this thy Holy Body, and this thy Blood, from all my iniquities, and from all thy Evils. And make me always obey thy Commandments, and never suffer me to be separated from thee for evermore.

O Lord Jesu Christ, let not the Sacrament of thy Body and Blood which I receive (though unworthy) be to my Judgment and Damnation; but through thy Goodness let it profit to the Salvation of my Body and Soul: Amen.

To the Body let him say with humiliation before he receive:

Hail for evermore, thou most Holy (1) Flesh of Christ; unto me afore all things; and above all things the highest sweetness. The Body of our Lord Jesu Christ be unto me Sinner the Way and Life, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Amen.

Here let him take the Body, (m) a Cross being first made with the same Body afore his Mouth, saying:

Hail for evermore, thou Heavenly Drink; unto me before all things; and above all things the highest sweetness. The Body and Blood of our Lord Jesu Christ profit me Sinner for a Remedy Everlasting into Life Eternal: Amen. In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: Amen.

Here let him take the Blood, which when it is received, let him bow himself, and say:

The Prayer.

I Render thanks to thee, O Lord, Holy Father, Almighty Eternal God, which hast refreshed me out of the most Holy Body and Blood of thy Son our Lord Jesu Christ. And I beseech thee, that this Sacrament of our Salvation, which I unworthy Sinner have received, come not to my Judgment nor Commendation after my Merits, but to the profit of my Body, and to the salvation of my Soul into Life Everlasting: Amen.

Which Prayer being said, (n) let the Priest go to the right side of the Altar, with the Chalice between his hands, his fingers being yet joyned together as afore, and let the Subdeacon approach near, and pour out Wine and Water into the Chalice. And let the Priest rinse his hands (o) left any parcels of the Body or Blood be left behind in his Fingers or in the Chalice (p). But when any Priest must celebrate twice in one day, then at the first Mass he must not receive any Ablution, but put it in the Sacrificy, or in a clean Vessel till the end of the other Mass; and then let both the Ablutions be received.

After the first Ablution, is said this Prayer: That we have received with Mouth, O Lord, let us take with a pure Mind, and (q) out of a temporal Gift let it be to us a Merit everlasting.

Here let him (r) wash his Fingers in the hollow room of the Chalice, with Wine being poured in by the Subdeacon: which when it is drunk up, let the Prayer follow:

Lord let this (a) Communion purge us from sin, and make us to be Partakers of the Heavenly Remedy.

After the receiving of the Ablutions, let the Priest lay the Chalice upon the Patten, that if ought remain behind, it may drop. And afterward bowing himself, let him say:

Let us (b) worship the Sign of the Cross, whereby we have received the Sacrament of Salvation.

Afterward let him (c) wash his Hands. In the mean season let the Deacon fold up the Corporas. When his Hands are washed, and the Priest returneth to the right end of the Altar (d) let the Deacon reach the Chalice to the Priests Mouth, that if ought of that which was poured in do remain behind, (e) he may receive it. After that, let him say (f) the Communion with his Ministers. Then making a sign of the Cross in his own Face, let the Priest turn himself to the People; and (g) with his Arms somewhat lifted up, and his Hands joyned together, let him say, Dominus vobiscum; and, turning him again to the Altar, let him say, Oremus, let us pray.

Then let him say (h) the Postcommunion, according to the number and order of the aforesaid Prayers. Before the Epistle, when the last Postcommunion is ended, and the Priest hath made a sign of the Cross in his Forehead, let him turn him again to the People, and say, Dominus vobiscum. Then let the Deacon say, Benedicamus Domino. At another time is said, Ite Missa est. As oft as Ite missa est is said, it is always said in turning to the People. And when Benedicamus Domino, or Requiescant in pace must be said, let it be said in turning to the Altar. When these things are spoken, let the Priest (with his Body bowed down, and his Hands joyned together) in the middle before the Altar say, (i) with a still voice, this Prayer.

O Holy Trinity, let the Office of my (k) bond-service please thee, and grant that this Sacrifice, which I unworthily have offered in the Eyes of thy Majesty, may be acceptable unto thee: And that unto me and all them for whom I have offered it (l), it may avail to obtain Remission, thou being merciful, who livest and reignest God, &c.

Which Prayer being ended, let the Priest stand upright, (m) crossing himself in his Face, saying, In nomine patris, &c. And so when obsequence is made, after the same order wherein they came afore to the Altar at the beginning of the Mass, so having on their Apparel with the Center-bearer, and other Ministers, let them (n) go their way again.

The End of the CANON.

NOW it remaineth (as we have promised before) to intreat of the Parts and Parcells of the Mass, declaring likewise how and by whom this Popish or rather Pishly Mass became so clamped and patched together with so many dovers and sundry Additions; whereby it may the better appear what hath been the continuance of the same.

First, in the beginning of this Preface it was declared before, how this word Mass was never used nor known in the old Primitive Church among the first Christians, nor among the Grecians. Therefore they that deduce and derive the Origine of the Mass from St. James, and Basilus, are far deceived. As I think, that St. James was once Bishop at Jerusalem, so I think not contrary, but sometimes be misinformed at the Communion there in breaking of Bread, and that not without the Lords Prayer, and other Prayers of Thanksgiving, as we now in our Communion use like Prayers, and these Prayers make not the Communion to be a Mass. And the like is to be said of St. Peter, who though he did celebrate the Communion at Rome, yet it followeth not that he said Mass at Rome, as some report him to have done.

Neither is it hard to fetch out the Origine, how this Error first came up among the People, that St. James said Mass at Jerusalem, if a man consider well Histories and Authors which have written. For in the History of Eusebius, Egeippus thus writeth of St. James, Eum ab Apostolis primum constitutum fuisse Episcopum & Liturgum, &c. Upon the which word Liturgus, it is not unlike, and dovers suppose this Error to come, that St. James did first set and institute the Order of Mass. For so (lightly) the old Translators, whereforever they find Liturgia, or Collecta, xanxha, they translated it Missa; whereupon the greatest occasion of this Error riseth, to make the People believe the Mass to be so ancient as to proceed from the Apostles, and from St. James. Notwithstanding that Error as it lightly came up, so it may be as lightly exploded. For how could St. James say Mass then at Jerusalem, or St. Peter at Rome, when as yet neither the Name of Mass was heard, nor the Parts thereof invented? And although Sigbertus in his Chronicles reports, that in the City of Vassath, being delivered from the Siege of the Huns, the Pastor of that Church did celebrate Mass with Thanksgiving, about the Year 453. yet Sigbert in so saying is to be taken, as speaking rather after the use and manner of his time when he wrote it, than of that time when it was done. For in all the Works of St. Augustine, and of Chrysostome, and in all that Age the name of Mass was not yet devised, nor the Patches thereof compiled. Platina testifieth, that before Celestinus Pope, only the Epistle and Gospel were read at the Communion, which being done, the Communion ended. And Gregory saith, that the Apostles afore the Mnistration or the Sacrament did use only the Lord's Prayer, that is, the Pater noster. Let us hear what Walafridus Strabo writeth of that matter, Lib. de rebus Ecclesiasticis. cap. 22. Quod nunc agimus multiplici orationum, lectionum, cantilenarum, & consecrationum officio, totum hoc Apostoli, & post ipsos proximi, (ut creditur) orationibus, & commemoratione passionis dominice, sicut ipse precepit, agitant simplicitate, &c. i. That which now is done in the Church with such a long circumstance of so many Orisons, Lessons or Readings, Songs and Consecrations; all that the Apostles, and they that next succeeded the Apostles (as it is thought) did accomplish simply with Prayer only, and with the Commemoration of the Lord's Passion, &c. It followeth in the same Author; And, as the report is, like as it is in the Roman Church upon Good Friday, where the Communion is wont to be taken without any Mass; so it was in the old time with them, &c.

Now how this Mass hath grown up and increased since, let us search out, by the Lords help, out of Authors, so much as may be found.

The Introite.

Platina; Sigbertus;
Vita. Strabo.

Celestinus Pope gave the first Introite, as Platina and Sigbertus write.

The Psalm. Judica me Deus, &c.

And before the Priest do prepare himself to his Mass, first with the Psalm, Judica me Deus, &c. discern cause and means, &c. that was ordained by the said Celestinus.

Sigbertus.

And where they ascribe to St. Ambrose the two prayers which he used in the preparation to the Mass, and be added to the Books of Ambrose, Erasmus judgeth the same to be none of his, and that rightly as it seemeth: for therein are contained errors, not else to be found in the Books of Ambrose, both in giving adoration to the Bread of the Sacrament, and making invocation to Saints, namely, to blessed Mary; as in the second prayer, where he saith, Ut efficacis hac mea sit deprecatione, beate Marie virginis suffragia peto, &c. i. And that this my prayer may be of efficacy, I desire the suffrage and intercession of blessed Mary the Virgin, &c. Whereby it may appear learned Ambrose not to be the Author of such an error.

Chrys. hom.
11. in Mat.

Chrysostom in the eleventh Homily upon the Gospel of Matthew, saith, That in his time (and afore his time) the use was to sing whole Psalms, till they were ended and assembled together. And so belike Celestinus borrowed this custom of the Greeks, and brought it into the Latin Church, as Rupertus writeth.

Gregory the Great (as some write) called a Synod at Rome, about the year of our Lord 594. in which Synod he appointed that the Introite of the Mass should be taken out of some Psalm.

The Confiteor.

Confiteor brought in by Pope Damasus.

The Confiteor Pope Damasus brought into the Mass, as it is written: albeit peradventure not this popish Confiteor, which in the later Church hath been used, first full of idolatry and invocation of Saints, against the word of God.

The Kyrie Eleyfon.

Greg. Joanni
Epi. Syta-cat. l. 6. 7.
cap. 23.

The Kyrie Eleyfon nine times to be repeated in such a tongue, as few Priests either understand, or do rightly pronounce, Gregory did institute about 600 years after Christ, taking it out of the Greeks Church, and yet transcribing it otherwise than there it was used. For among the Greeks this Kyrie Eleyfon, which they called their Litany, was sung of all the people: The which Gregory ordained to be sung only of the Choir, adding thereto also Christe Eleyfon, which the Grecians used not, as Gregory himself, writing to the Bishop of Syracuse, doth testify.

Gloria in Excelsis.

Next followeth Gloria in Excelsis, &c. Which words were sung of the Angels at the birth of our Saviour. Albeit these words also were corrupted, as many other things were in the Church. For where the words of the Angels Hymn were Hominibus bona voluntas, i. To men good will; the Mass saith, Hominibus bonæ voluntatis. To men of good will, &c. This Hymn was brought into the Mass by Pope Symmachus (and not by Telephorus, as some truly write, that he ordained three Masses on Christmas-day; for in his time there was no Mass, Anno 140.) about the year of our Lord 510. And after, he said Hymn was augmented by Hylandus Pictaviensis, with those words that follow: Laudamus te, &c. singing it first in his own Church, which was Anno 340. And afterward it was brought into other Churches by Pope Symmachus, Anno 510. as is aforesaid.

Dominus vobiscum, with the answer Oremus, and the Collects.

Dominus vobiscum, with the answer of the People, although we have no certain Author named by whom it came; yet this is certain, that it was deduced out of the Greek Church into the Latin; as may appear by the Liturgy of Chrysostom and Basilus (if the Liturgy be rightly ascribed unto them) also by Origen, and other ancient Writers; by whom, it may seem that the Liturgy or Mass (as they call it) did first begin with Dominus vobiscum, and then Sursum corda; after that Gratias agamus Domino Deo nostro, and so following upon the same, Verè dignum & justum est, &c. To the which beginning of the Canon other additions after were put by others, as ye shall hear, by the Lords grace, hereafter set at large.

Hugo de S. Victoris writeth that this Prayer was taken out of the ancient Salutation of Boaz saluting his harvest-folk. And out of the Book of Paralip, where the Prophet saluted Azael the King with his company about him, saying, Dominus vobiscum. Honorius writeth thus, Presbyter cum salutatione veteris Testamenti, & Episcopus cum salutatione novi Testamenti salutatur populum, quia dignus est novum quam vetus Testamentum: i. As the Priest saluteth the people with the words of the old Testament, Dominus vobiscum; so the Bishop useth the words of the New Testament, saying, Pax vobiscum, &c. Concerning the Collects, Walafridus writeth, that as they be divers and uncertain, so they were made of divers and sundry Authors, as every of them thought it congrue. Hugo de S. Victoris affirms that chiefly they were made by Gelasius and Gregorius.

Why they were called Collects, W. Durandus and Micrologus shew the cause, for that in the City of Rome they said them over the people collected together in the Station-day, therefore they were called Collectæ.

The Gradual, with Alleluia, Tract, and Sequences.

The Responsoy, which is called the Gradual, (being wont to be sung at the steps going up) with Alleluia, Honorius saith that Ambrose made them, but Pope Gregory ordained them to be received.

lib. 3. cap. 81.

Upon Festival days the Sequences, which were wont to be sung, were chiefly composed by an Abbot called Nokerus de S. Gallo, and by Pope Nicholas commanded to be sung in the Mass.

Abbas Nokerus, eunus

The Gradual the people were wont to sing when the Bishop was about to go up to the Pulpit, or some higher standing, where the word of God might be the better and more sensibly heard at his mouth, reading the Epistle and the Gospel.

The Epistle and the Gospel.

The reading of the Epistle and the Gospel, although it was not used in the Apostles times, yet it seemeth to be of ancient continuance, as Hugo saith, Primis temporibus ab Epistola Pauli Missa incipiebatur, post quam sequebatur Evangelium, sicut nunc; i. In former time the Mass began first with the Epistle of S. Paul, after which Epistle then followed the Gospel, as also now, &c.

Hugo de S.

Walafridus saith, It is uncertain who first ordered and disposed them so to be.

Walafrid.
Strabo.

Some attribute them to Hierom, some to Damasus, some to Telephorus aforesaid. This is certain, that Pope Anastasius ordained to stand up at the hearing of the Gospel read; about the year of our Saviour 406.

Petrus

Anno 1553. Petrus Cirvelus writeth thus, Legimus & circa annos Christiane salutis 500. fere, jam institutas Epistolas in officio Missali, &c. About 500 years since almost the Epistle, saith he, was brought into the Mass.

Per. Cirvelus Docere in consuetudine lib. 4. tit. 1. Epistolam & Evangelium Alexander Papa legi ad Missam constituit. Hieronymus autem Prefbyter Lexionarium & Evangeliarium, ut hodie habet Ecclesia, collegit; sed Damasus Papa, ut nunc moris est, legi censuit. Alexander, saith he, appointed the Epistle and Gospel to be read at Mass. The translation and the disposition of them, in that order as they stand, Hieron the Priest collected; but Damasus appointed them to be read in the Church, so as the use is now.

Honor. lib. 1. Betwixt the Epistle and the Gospel the old Canons of the Spaniards did forbid any Hymn or Canticle to be sung in the order of the Mass, which now by the Romish order is broken.

The Creed.

Ex Honor. This Creed was made by the Synod of Constantinople, but, by Damasus the Pope ordained to be sung at the Mass. And where some affirm, that it was brought in by Pope Marcus, about the year of our Lord 340. To reconcile these two together, peradventure thus it may be taken, that the one brought in the Creed, or Symbol of the Nicene Council, the other appointed the Creed of Constantinople, as is said.

The Offertory.

Ex Rabano lib. 1. cap. 3. After this, Oblations were wont to be offered of the people to the Priest; and the Offertory to be sung of the Quire.

De Instit. Of these Oblations speaketh Irenaeus; Pro diversis Sacramentorum ritibus, simplex Oblatio panis & vini fidelibus sufficiat, &c. In stead of the sundry Rites of Sacrifices, let the simple Oblation of bread and wine suffice the faithful.

Walafrid. In expolit. or. dilis Rom. Item, Walafrid. Omnis populus intrans Ecclesiam debet sacrificare, sicut docet ordo institutionis Ecclesiasticae; i. Every person entering in the Church must do Sacrifice, as the order of Ecclesiastical institution doth teach: what order this was it is declared in ordine Romano by these words; Populus dat oblationes suas, id est, panem & vinum, primo masculi, deinde feminae, novissime vero Sacerdotes & Diaconi offerunt, sed solum panem, & hoc ante altare; i. The people give every one his Oblations, that is, bread and wine, first the men, then the women, after them Priests and Deacons offer, but bread only, &c.

Burchardus lib. 5. cap. 1. Ex concil. Maticensi cap. 50. Likewise Burchardus testifieth the same. In Synodo Matiticon. decretum est, ut in omnibus dominicis diebus, aliisque Festivitatibus, Oblatio ab omnibus qui ad Missam convenirent utriusque sexus offeratur in Ecclesia, singulas Oblationes offerentes, finita Missa Oblationes à Presbytero accipiant; i. In the Synod Matiticon it was ordained, that every Sunday and Festival day, Oblation was made of all the people which came to the Mass, or Liturgy, both men and women, in the Church, every person bringing and offering his own Oblation; the Liturgy being done, they receive the Oblations of the Priest, &c.

Thus ye may see what were their Oblations and Sacrifice in the ancient time, in their Liturgy. Whereof now remaineth nothing but the name only with the song.

This Offertory some ascribe to Eutichianus about the year of our Lord 280. but thereof no certain Evidence appeareth.

Orate pro me fratres, &c.

Naucerus l. Naucerus writeth, that Pope Leo brought in that which is said in the Mass, Orate pro me fratres & sorores, &c.

The Preface of the Canon.

Cyprianus de oratione Dominica. Augst. The Preface of the Canon from verè dignum & iustum est, &c. to per Christum Dominum nostrum is given to Gelasius: Sursum corda seemeth to be borrowed out of the old manner of the Greek Church; S. Cyprian also maketh mention of the same, and S. Austin de vera Religione, cap. 3.

And therefore Thomas Waldensis judgeth that this part of the Preface cannot be attributed to Gelasius.

After Christum Dominum nostrum in the old Liturgy, then followed Qui pridie quam pateretur, as Rhenanus supposeth, but then came Gelasius the first, about the year of our Lord 497, which testified that which followeth, Te igitur clementissimè, &c.

Whereby it is to be noted; that Polydorus Virgilius (which ascribeth Qui pridie to Pope Alexander) De invent. lib. 5. cap. 10. is deceived.

The like is also to be said of Panormitanus, who referreth the same Clause Qui pridie, &c. to the Apostles, lib. de Celebratione Missae cap. cum Martha.

Furthermore note, good Reader, how this doth agree with the long Canon of St. Ambrose, lib. 4. de Sacrament. cap. 5. Dicit Sacerdos; fac nobis hanc oblationem adscriptum, rationalem, acceptabilem, quod est figura corporis & sanguinis Domini nostri Iesu Christi. Qui pridie quam pateretur in sanctis manibus suis accepit panem, repositum & Coelum ad te Sancte Pater omnipotens & eterne Deus, gratias agens benedixit, fregit, &c. If it be true that either Panormitanus saith, or that Gelasius made Qui pridie, &c. how can this Canon then be fathered upon St. Ambrose? And by the same reason also his whole Book, intituled De Sacramentis, may be suspected, as of divers learned men it is.

Then came Pope Sixtus ten years after him; which brought into the Canon Sanctus, Sanctus, ubi, to be sung out of the Book of Ely. And to annex it together, joined also that which goeth before, Per quem Misericordiam tuam, &c.

He that writeth the Liturgy of Basilus, ascribeth it to his name: whether he doth it truly or no, I will not here contend. This is to be noted, that seeing in the said Liturgy of Basilus the same particle, Sanctus, Sanctus, Sanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth: pleni sunt Coeli & Terra gloria tua, Osanna in Excelsis, is sung; therefore it must needs follow, that either Leo which was about the year of our Lord 460. borrowed this out of Basilus's Liturgy, or else the same is falsely attributed to Basilus.

After this followeth Sanctum sacrificium, immaculatam hostiam, till ye come to placatus accipias, which Leo the first did make and institute.

The words in the Communion, Hoc quotiescunque feceritis, in mei memoriam facitis, &c. were put in by Pope Alexander, i. as Humbertus writeth: Alexander Martyr & Papa 5. ab Apost. Petro passionem Domini inferens Canonis Missae, ait, Hoc quotiescunque feceritis, &c.

Pope Gregory the third about the year of our Lord 732. put to his piece, Et eorum quorum memoria, &c.

This Gregory the third called a Council at Rome, wherein he decreed that Images should not only be had in Temples, but also worshipped, and that all gainayers should be counted as Hereticks.

Innocentius the third of that name, affirmeth Pope Gelasius, which was about 490 years after Christ, to have made a great piece of that Canon, as he himself did something therein, about the year of our Lord 1215.

Panormitanus affirmeth that Gregory did add to the Canon this clause, Diesque nostros in pace disponas.

Briefly, Gregorius in Registro saith, that one Scholasticus made the most part of the Canon, finding also fault with the same, that in composing the Canon he would put in his own Prayers, and leave out the Lords Prayer, &c.

Where it is to be noted, for the reconciling these Writers together, of whom some impute the Canon to Gelasius, some again to Scholasticus: In my conjecture it may be said, that both these be one, and so the matter is reconciled. The reason that moveth me is this, for so I find in vetusto quodam libro de Officio Missae, after these words, Gelasius Papa ex Scholastico effectus in ordine 48. fecit Tractatus & Hymnos, &c.

The Elevation and Adoration.

The Elevation and Adoration of the Sacrament we cannot find to come in by any other than by Honorius the third, about the year of our Lord 1222. which ordained that the people then should kneel down and worship the Sacrament.

The Pater noster.

Joan Diaconus in vita Gregorij.

Joannes Diaconus writing of Gregory, saith; Orationem Dominicam mox post Canonem super hostiam censuit recitari; i. That Gregory caused the Lords Prayer to be recited immediately after the Canon upon the Host, &c.

Greg. lib. 9. Regal. Joan. Syria.

Although the Apostles ever used the Lords Prayer at the Supper of the Lord, as is said before; yet Gregory (he-like) placed it so in that order after the Canon, and brought it in with those words, Præceptis salutaribus, &c.

Gregorius in Reg. Dominica Oratio apud Græcos ab omni populo; apud nos vero à solo Sacerdote cantatur; i. The Lords Prayer, saith he, amongst the Grecians was wont to be sung generally of all the people; with us it is sung only of the Priest.

Agnus.

Fremit. Rem. orinali.

The Agnus, Pope Sergius about the year of our Lord 700, brought into the Mass, as witnesseth Expolit. R. ord. propter officium contractionis Domini corporis, constitutum est à Papa Sergio ut Agnus Dei decantetur, &c.

The Pax.

Ex decretis Innocentij P. cap. i.

Innocentius ordained the Pax to be given to the people. Pacis, ait, osculum dandum post consecrata mysteria, ut conferretur populo ad omnia que in mysteriis aguntur, præbuisse consuetum, &c.

Gabriel Biel in can. lect. 81.

Peter Martyr in his Commentaries in Jud. saith, that it was brought in by Pope Leo the second, as it is said: and yet he supposeth the same not to be so, saying, That this was an ancient custome in the Apostles time for Christians to salute one another with the Kiss of Peace, &c.

To this of Peter Martyr agreeth also Gabriel Biel, writing in these words; Porrexit in primitiva Ecclesia Sacerdos osculum pacis Ministro, ceteris impartendum, ut per hoc significaret, &c. i. In the primitive Church the Priest gave a kiss of peace to the Minister, to be given by him to the people.

The Distribution and Communion.

After this followeth the Communion, wherein our Popish Mass and Ministers thereof do much alter and degenerate from ancient Antiquity, two manner of ways.

First, In that they make no Communion thereof, receiving only to themselves, contrary both to their own words, where they say after their receiving, Sacramenta que sumimus, &c. and also to the ancient Examples and Decrees of the Apostles and others. And where it is decreed in the Epistle of Anacletus; Peracta autem consecratione omnes communicant, qui noluerint Ecclesiasticis carere liminibus. Sic enim à Apostoli statuerunt, & S. Romana tenet Ecclesia, &c. i. The Consecration being done, let all communicate together; unless they will be thrust out of the Church doors, &c.

Cochleus contra Musculum de consecrat. diff. 2. et. peracta.

Here note by the way, gentle Reader, how Gratianus the Writer of the Popes Decrees is overseen, which in his Book De Consecrat. diff. 2. referreth this saying of Anacletus to Pope Calixtus. And likewise also Cochleus, writing against Musculus, followeth Gratianus in the same error.

Cin. Ap. c. 8.

Likewise in the Canons of the Apostles (if the Canons were theirs) we read πάντες τὸς εὐχαριστῶντες, ἡν ἡγάπησαν δὲ τὸ ἀλλήλους, &c. i. All the faithful, which resort to the Church, and tarry not out the end of the Service, and receive not the holy Communion, be such as bringing in disorder to the Church, ought to be disordered, &c. And again, Si quis Episcopus, Presbyter, aut Diaconus, aut quicumque ex Sacerdotali consortio, oblatione facta, non communicaverint, causam dicito, &c.

Micrologus de consecrat. ser.

For how can that be called a Communion, which is not common, but private to one? as Micrologus writeth; Nec enim propriè communio dici potest, nisi plures de eodem Sacrificio participant, &c. It cannot be called a Communion, except more than one do participate of one Sacrifice, &c.

Gal. Durand. in ration. 4. a. 33.

And Durandus, In primitiva Ecclesia omnes qui cele-brationi Missarum intererant singulis diebus communicare solebant, eo quod Apostoli omnes de Calice biberunt, &c. i. In the Primitive time all that were present at the ministration were wont every day to communicate, because that the Apostles did altogether drink of the Cup, &c.

Secondly, They alter and degenerate therein from ancient Antiquity, in that when they communicate also with the people, yet they deprive them of the holy Cup: which deprivation was not in the Church before the Council of Constance, about the year of our Lord 1414. For before it was so authentically received, that it was counted a Sacrilege to receive the one without the other, as appeareth by the words of Pope Gelafius; Comperimus quod quidam sumpta tantummodo corporis facri portione, &c. The whole in English is this; We understand that there be some, which receiving the one part only of the holy Body, abstain from the Cup of the sacred Blood: who because they be taught so to do (by what superstition I cannot tell) either let them receive the Sacrament whole together, or let them abstain from the whole Sacrament altogether, because of the division of that one and whole Sacrament cannot be without great sacrilege, &c.

Hitherto also pertaineth the testimony of S. Austin in these words; Et ibi vos estis in Mensa, & in Calice nobiscum vos estis. Simul enim hoc sumimus, simul bibimus, quia simul vivimus, &c. i. There be you at the Table, and at the Cup there also be you with us: for together we receive, and together we drink, because we live together.

As also out of the Book of Gregory it is manifest, that not only the people received them in both kinds; but also the words were prescribed to the Minister, that he should say in giving the Cup; Item Sacerdos Calicem dando dicat; Sanguis Domini nostri Iesu Christi custodiat te ad vitam æternam; i. Let the Priest say in giving the Cup; The blood of our Lord Jesus Christ keep thee to everlasting life, Amen.

Further, In rendering the cause why it should so be done, Thomas Aquine writeth, Nam hoc valet ad representandam passionem Christi, in qua scilicet fuit Sanguis à corpore separatus, &c. Secundo, hoc est conveniens usui huius Sacramenti, ut scilicet exhibeatur Corpus Christi fidelibus in cibum, & Sanguis in potum; i. For that serveth to represent the Passion of Christ, wherein his Blood was parted severally from the Body, &c. Secondly, For that it is convenient to the use of the Sacrament, that the Body should severally be given to the faithful for meat, and the Blood for drink.

And therefore served the Office of the Deacons as we read, Ut oblata à populo super altare consecranda disponent, & perfectis mysteriis Calicem sacrosancti Sanguinis Domini fidelibus propinent; i. To lay the Offerings of the people upon the Altar to be hallowed, and when the Mysteries be consecrated, to distribute the Cup of the Sacred Blood of the Lord to the faithful, &c.

But among all other testimonies to prove that the Sacrament ought to be common to all people in both kinds, there is none more evident than that of Hieron: Cæterum Dominica cœna omnibus debet esse communis, quia ille omnibus Discipulis suis qui aderant æqualiter tradidit Sacramenta; i. The Supper of the Lord ought to be indifferently common to all his Disciples there present, &c.

And thus have ye heard the Canon described, which otherwise is called Secretum, i. the Secret of the Mass, being so termed, because the Priest was wont to read it in secret or in silence. The reason thereof Pope Innocentius the third declareth in his third Book, for that the holy words, saith he, of the Canon should not grow in contempt with the people, by the daily use and hearing thereof. And he bringeth in an Example concerning the same of certain Shepherds, which in the fields using the same words of the Canon upon their Bread and Wine, the matter was turned, saith he, into Flesh and Blood, and they plagued therefore from Heaven; but with such Popish Tales the Church hath been long replenished.

The Postcommunion.

After the Canon and Communion then followeth the Postcommunion, with the Collects, which the Mass-book requirerh always to be used in an odd number: sometime reaching to six but one, as in the Sundays in Lent; and

Last of all cometh Its missa est, whereby the Minister dimitteth and sendeth away all the congregation there present to their business: for, as you heard before, it was decreed in ancient time, that it was not lawful to depart from the congregation in the time of holy ministrations, before the end of the whole Communion. And therefore all things being accomplished, the Minister turning to the assembly pronounceth, Its missa est.

Where note that upon Sundays and Festival days only, when Gloria in excelsis was sung, Its missa est was wont to be said: on the work-days Benedicamus Domino, sometimes Requiescant in pace.

Now concerning such trinkets as were to the foresaid Mass, appertaining or circumstant: First, the linen Albes and Corporals were brought in by Pope Marcus Anno 340. if that be true which is thought by some: Where note again, that in the time of this Pope it was nothing offensive for every honest Priest to have his own proper wife. In the time also of this Marcus was Concilium Elsburtinum, which condemned all kinds of Images and Pictures in Temples.

Contrary to the which Council Pope Gregory the third, about the year of our Lord, 732. calling a Council at Rome, did not only stablish the Images before condemned, but condemned the gainsayers for hereticks: as is afore-

By Sixtus the third it was ordained, that no Liturgy should be done save only upon altars hallowed, about the year of our Lord, 2600. as some suppose. But as I see no firm probation upon the same, so have I probable conjecture the same not to be true.

Some there be that blame not to say, that St. Clement brought in the Albes and Veilments to the Popish Mass. Item, That the Sacrament of the blood of the Lord should be consecrate in chalices of glass, and not of wood, as it was in time before, they say it was the ordinance of Pope Severinus.

After this came in golden chalices, and a true Proverb, without. That once they had wooden Chalices and golden Priests; now they have golden Chalices and wooden Priests.

Sebenianus ordained the ringing of bells and burning of lamps in Churches.

Vitalianus the playing on the Organs.

Damasus, by the witness of Hieronim, appointed Gloria Patri after the P'salms.

Pelagius devised the Memento for the dead.

Leo brought in the incense.

Eurichianus, as other say, brought in the Offertory, which was then after a manner far otherwise than it is, or hath been used now a great while. For what time as many of the Hearthen being greatly accustomed with offerings, were converted unto Christ, and could not be well brought from their old long use of offerings, the Pope thought it best somewhat with the weak, and permitted them to bring meats into the Congregation or Church, that when the Bishop had blessed them, they that brought them might distribute them to the poor or take them to their own use. But afterward did Pope Gregory loath with this sentence, Non apparebit in conspectu Dei tui vacuus, &c. Thou shalt not appear in the sight of thy God empty, &c. that as he bewilled the people to lay their offerings upon the altar; so they did, and have not yet forgotten to do so still.

Soul-Masses, and Masses applied for the dead, came in partly by Gregory, partly by Pelagius, which brought in the Memento, as is said.

Wherein note (good Reader) and mark how these two stand together, that which our Saviour saith in his Evangelist, Hoc facite in mei commemorationem, Do this in remembrance of me; and that which they say, In quorum memoria corpus Christi fuit, &c. In whose commemoration the body of Christ is taken, &c. Christ would it to be done in his remembrance; and the Pope saith, do it in remembrance of the dead, &c. What can be more contrary?

Innocentius the third ordained that the Sacrament should be reserved in the Church. The same brought also in auricular confession as a law, about the year of our Lord, 1215. he did also constitute that no Archbishop should enjoy the pall, unless he were of his own religion; and therefore no great marvel if there be such unity in Popery.

Vigilius ordained that the Priest should say, Mass: having his face toward the East.

Platina writeth how the first Latine Mass was sang in the sixth Council of Constantinople, which was about the year of our Lord, 680. so that the said Mass was there and then first allowed and not before. And yet they (I mean the Greek Church) should have known as much of the Mass if it had proceeded from James or Basilus, as guilty the Latine Church did know it.

The opinion to think the Mass to help Soules in Purgatory, was confirmed by Pope Joannes the 19. by reason of a dream, wherein he dreamed that he heard and saw the voices of Devils lamenting and bewailing, that Soules were delivered from them by the saying of Masses: and Diriges. And therefore he did approve and ratify the feast of all Soules, brought in by Odilo; Moreover he assigned also to the same the feast of Allallows, about the year of our Lord 1003.

Concerning Lent fast, some think that Telephorus, Lestat about the year of our Lord, 140. was the Author thereof. But that peradventure may be as true, as that which they also attribute to him, that he ordained three Masses of one Priest to be said on Christmas-day. Or if he did ordain that fast; yet he did ordain it but freely to be kept: for so I find among the decrees, that Lent was commanded first to be fasted but only of the Clergy or Churchmen.

Pope Leo Commanded the Sacrament to be consecrated. Pope Boniface set in his foot for covering of the altars.

In St. Cyprian's time it seemeth that water was then mingled with the wine, whereof we read mention in his second book of Epistles: which mixture is referred to Alexander the first in the order of the Roman Canon.

As concerning the breaking of the body in three parts, we read also mention to be made in the same book of order, but no certain Author thereof to be named. The words of the book be these; Tripliciter, inquit, corpus Domini intelligitur. Vnum quod refurcit a mortuis, quod significat particula in sanguinem missa; Aliud quod adhuc vivit in terra significatur per particulam a Sacerdote consumptam; Tertium, quod jam requiescit in Christo, quod etiam a tertia particula in altari reservata apte figuratur, &c. i. Three ways is the body of the Lord understood; One which rose again from the dead, being signified by that part which is let fall to the blood in the chalice; The other is that which yet is living in the earth, which the part of the Priest eaten doth signify; The third is that now resteth in Christ, which also is figured by that particle that is reserved upon the altar.

Dedication of Churches came in by Felix the third, and that Churches might not be hallowed but by a Bishop, Anno 492.

The Canticle, Gloria, &c. in the procession before the Mass on Palm Sunday, was instituted by Theodulphus Bishop of Aurelia as Sigebertus writeth, about the year of our Lord, 483.

Giving of holy bread came in by this occasion, as it is to be gathered, partly out of Honorius, partly out of Durandus, and others. The manner was in ancient time that the Ministers were wont to receive certain meal of every house or family, wherewith a great loaf was made, called Panis dominicus, able to serve in the Communion, and to be distributed unto the people, which then was wont every day to be present and to receive, especially they that offered the meal: For whom it was wont therefore to be said in the Canon, Omnilium circumstantium, qui tibi hoc sacrificium laudis offerunt, &c. But afterward the number of the people increasing, and pity decreasing, as Durandus writeth, it was then ordained to communicate but only upon Sundays.

At length followed the third constitution, that thrice a year, at least at Easter, every man should communicate.

care, it being thus provided, that in stead of the daily Communion before used the Pax did serve. And in stead of receiving upon the Sunday, bread was swallowed and suddenly given and distributed unto the people, which also was called Eulogia; the constitution whereof seemeth to proceed from Pope Pius. For so we read in the decrees of the said Pope Pius. Ut de oblationibus que offeruntur à populo, & consecrationibus superant, vel de panibus quos deferunt fideles ad Ecclesiam, vel certe de suis Presbyteri convenienter partes incisas habeat in vase nitido & convenienti, & post missarum solennia qui communicare non fuerint parati Eulogias omni die Dominica, & in diebus festis, exinde accipiant. That is, That the Minister shall take of the oblations offered of the people, remaining of the consecration, or of the bread which the faithful bring unto the Church, or else to take of their own bread and cut it conveniently in portions in a clean and a convenient vessel; so that after the solemnity of the ministrations being done, they that were not prepared and ready to communicate, may receive every Sunday or Festival day Eulogies, or Benedictions with the same. Hæc ille.

As concerning holy water which they used to sprinkle at the Church door upon them that entered in, I will not say that it sprung from the idolatrous use of the Gentiles.

This I say as I find in Historia Zozomeni. Erat autem Romanis vetula consuetudo, ut quum limen Templi transirent esset, Sacerdos secundum morem Ethnicum molidos quodam Olive ramulosus manu tenens ingredienti aspergebat, &c. It was an old custom among the Romans, that at the entering in at the Church door the Priest after the usual manner of the Ethnicks, having in his hand moist branches of Olive, did sprinkle with the same such as entered in, &c.

To the which custom this manner of giving of holy water is so like, that it seemeth to proceed out of the same.

In the book of the Popes decrees, and in the distinctions of Gratianus, there is a certain decree fathered upon Alexander the first, about the year of our Lord, 121. Which decree may well seem to be a baslard decree, neither agreeing to such a father, nor such a time, concerning the conjuring of holy water. The words of the decree be these, Aquam sale conspersum in populo benediximus, ut ea cuncti aspersi sanctificentur, & purificentur, quod omnibus Sacerdotibus faciendum esse mandamus: Nam si cinis Virtute aspersus populum sanctificabat, atque mundabat, multo magis aqua sale aspersa, divinique precibus sacra, populum sanctificat atque mundat. Et si sale asperso per Helicum Prophetam sterilitas aque sanata esset, quanto magis divinis precibus sacraus sal sterilitatem rerum auferat humanarum, & coquinautos sanctificat & purgat, & cetera bona multiplicat, & insidias Diaboli averit, & à phantasmatis versutis homines defendit.

That is, We bless water sprinkled with salt among the people, that all such as be sprinkled with the same, may be sanctified and purified; which thing we charge and command all Priests to do: For if the ashes of the Cow in the old Law, being sprinkled among the people, did sanctify and cleanse them, much more water sprinkled with salt, and hallowed with godly prayers, sanctifyeth and cleanse the people. And if that Helicus the Prophet by the sprinkling of salt did heal and help the barrenness of the water; how much more doth the salt, being hallowed by godly prayers, take away the barrenness of humane things, and sanctify and purge them that be defiled; also multiply other things that be good, and turn away the snares of the devil, and defend men from the deceptions of phantasmæ, &c.

Thus ye have heard the author and father of holy water, which some also ascribe to Pope Sixtus which succeeded Alexander. But as the Papis do not agree in the first author or institutor of this hallowing of elements, so I think the same unworthy to be ascribed to either: but leaving the probation of this to further pleasure, let us now hear in our own tongue their own words, which they use in this their conjuration.

The form and words used of the Priest in conjuring Salt on-jay. I conjure thee thou creature of salt by the living God, by the true God, by the holy God, &c. That thou mayst be made a conjured salt, to the Salvation of them that believe; and that unto all such as receive thee thou mayst be health of Soul and Body; and that from out of the place wherein thou shalt be sprinkled, may flee away and depart all phantasmæ, wickedness, or craftiness of the devils subtilty, and every foul spirit, &c.

The form of conjuring water.

I conjure thee thou creature of water, in the name of God the Father almighty, and in the name of Jesus Christ his Son, our Lord, and in the virtue of the Holy Ghost, that thou become a conjured water to expel all power of the enemy, &c.

Who saith not in these words blasphemy intolerable; how that which is only due to the blood of Christ, and promised to faith only in him, is transferred to earthly and insensate creatures, to be salvation both to Body and Spirit, inwardly to give remission of sins, to give health and remedy against evils and devils, against all phantasmæ, wickedness, and all foul Spirit, and to expel the power of the enemy, &c. If this be true, whereto serveth the blood of Christ, and the virtue of Christian faith?

Therefore judge thy self, gentle Reader, whether thou think this trumpet rightly to be fathered upon these ancient Fathers aforesaid, or else whether it may seem more like truth that John Sleydan writeth, whose words in his second book of Monarchijs are these; Horum decreta sunt in libris inserta conciliorum, sed ex his pleneque tam sunt levicula, tam nugatoria, tam aliena profusè à sacris literis, ut credibile sit ab alijs longo post tempore fuisse conficta, &c. That is, The decrees of the forefathers Bishops and Martyrs be inserted in the book of Councils, but of these decrees many be so childish, so trifling, and so far disagreeing from the holy Scripture, that it is very hard that the same were framed and counterfeited of others long after their time, &c. Thus much just Sleydan writeth more words in that place. Unto whose testimony if I might be so bold also to add my conjecture, would suppose the conjuration of this forefaded water and salt to spring out of the same fountain, from whence proceeded the conjuring of flowers and branches, because I see the order and manner of them both to be so like and uniform as may appear.

The manner of hallowing flowers and branches.

I conjure thee thou creature of flowers and branches, in the name of God the Father almighty, & in the name of Jesus Christ his Son, our Lord, and in the virtue of the Holy Ghost. Therefore be thou rooted out and dis-planted from this creature of flowers and branches, all thou strength of the adversary, all thou host of the devil, and all the power of the enemy, even every assault of the devils, &c.

And thus much concerning the antiquity of holy bread and holy water; whereby thou mayst partly conjecture the same not to be so old as Steven Gardener, in his latter against Master Ridley above mentioned, would have, being both deceived himself, and also going about to seduce others.

Furthermore, as touching the reserving of reliques and the memorial of Saints brought into the Mass, Gregory the third is the author thereof, who also added to the Canon thereof this clause, Quorum solemnitates hodie in conspectu divine majestatis celebrantur, &c.

Finally it were too long to recite every thing in order, devised and brought in particularly to the Mass, and to the Church. For after that mans brain was once set on devising, it never could make an end of heaping rite upon rite, and ceremony upon ceremony, till all Religion was turned wretched to superstition. Therefore Oyl and cream brought in by Pope Sylvester, not wont to be hallowed but by a Bishop. That the Corporas should not be of silk, but only of fine linnen cloth. That the Quire singing one verse, the other another, with Gloria patri, &c. That Baptism should be ministrated at no other time in the year but only at Easter and Whitsontide (save only to Infants, and such as were in extrem infirmity) and that it should be required 20 days before; so determined by Pope Stricius: and therefore was it that Fenis were hallowd only at these two seasons, the which hallowing they kept yet still, but the ordinance they have rejected. Item, that Bells also were christened. Item, No Priest should wear a beard, or have long hair; so appointed by Pope Martin the first. Item, that auricular confession should be made, that the book of decrees and decretals should be stablished, and transubstantiation confirmed, in which three aitt Pope Innocentius the third was the chiefest doer, about the year of our Lord, 1215.

And thus have ye in sum the gatherings of the Mass, with the Canon and all the appertenance of the same:

which; not much unlike to the Crow of Esop, being patched with the feathers of so many birds, was so long a gathering, that the Temple of Solomon was not so long in building, as the Pope's Mass was in making. Whereby judge now thy self, good Reader, whether this Mass did proceed from James and other Apostles, or no. And yet this was one of the principal causes for which so much turmoil was made in the Church, with the blood-shed of so many Godly men, suffering in so many quarters of this Realm; some consumed by fire, some pined away with hunger, some hanged, some slain, some racked, some tormented one way, some another, and that only or chiefly for the cause of this aforesaid Popish Mass; as by the reading of this story following, by the grace of Christ our Lord, shall appear more at large. In whom I wish thee to continue in health, and to persevere in the truth.

The first entring of Queen MARY to the Crown, with the alteration of Religion, and other Perturbations hapning the same time in this Realm of ENGLAND.

Anno 1553.The reigant
Q. Mary.Marriage between the Lord Gifford and the Lady Jane.

W

Hat time King Edward by long sickness began to appear more feeble and weak; in the mean while during the time of this his sickness, a certain marriage was provided, concluded, and shortly also upon the same solemnized in the month of May, between the Lord Gifford son to the Duke of Northumberland, and the Lady Jane the Duke of Suffolks daughter; whose mother being then alive, was daughter to Mary, King Henries second filter, who first was married to the French King, and afterward to Charles Duke of Suffolk. But to make no long tarrance hereupon, the marriage being ended, and the King waxing every day more sick than other, whereas indeed there seemed in him no hope of recovery, it was brought to pass by the consent not only of the Nobility, but also of the chief Lawyers of the Realm, that the King by his Testament did appoint the foresaid Lady Jane, daughter to the Duke of Suffolk, to be inheritrix unto the Crown of England, passing over histwo filters, Mary and Elizabeth.

To this order subscribed all the Kings Council, and the chief of the Nobility, the Mayor and City of London, and almost all the Judges and chief Lawyers of this Realm, saving only Justice Hales of Kent, a man both favouring true Religion, and also an upright Judge, as any hath been noted in this Realm, who giving his consent unto Lady Mary, would in no case subscribe to Lady Jane. Of this man (God willing) you shall hear more in the sequel of this story. The causes laid against Lady Mary, were as well for that it was feared she would marry with a Stranger, and thereby intangle the Crown; as also that she would clean alter Religion, used both in King Henry her father, and also in King Edward her Brothers days, and so bring in the Pope, to the utter destruction of the Realm, which indeed afterward came to pass, as by the course and sequel of this story may well appear.

Much probable matter they had thus to conjecture of her, by reason of her great stubbornness shewed and declared in her brothers days, as in the letters before mentioned, passing between her and King Edward, and the Council, may appear. The matter being thus concluded, and after confirmed by every mans hand, King Edward an Imp of so great hope, not long after this departed by the vehemency of his sickness, when he was sixteen years of age; with whom also decayed in a manner the whole flourishing estate and honour of the English Nation.

When King Edward was dead, this Jane was established in the Kingdom by the Nobles consent, and was forthwith published Queen by Proclamation at London, and in other Cities where was any great resort, and was there so taken and named, Between this young damsel and King Edward there was little difference in age, though in learning and knowledge of the tongues he was not only equal, but also superior unto him, being instructed of a master right nobly learned. If her fortune had been as good as her bringing up, joyned with fineness of wit, undoubtedly she might have seemed comparable not only to the house of Vespasian, Semprianus, and mother of the Gracchies, yea, to any other woman beside, that deserved high praise for their singular learning; but also to the University-men, which have taken many degrees of the Schools.

In the mean time while these things were a working at London, Mary, which had knowledge of her brothers death, writeth to the Lords of the Council in form as followeth.

A letter of the Lady Mary, sent to the Lords of the Council, wherein she claimeth the Crown after the decease of King Edward.

MY Lords, we greet you well, and have received your sure advertisement, that our dearest brother the late King, our late Sovereign Lord, is departed to Gods mercy, which news how useful they be unto our heart, be only wherein we knoweth, to whose will and pleasure we must, and do humbly submit us and our wills. But in this so lamentable a case, that is to wit, now after his Majesties departure and death, concerning the Crown and Governance of this Realm of England, with the title of France, and all things thereto belonging, what hath been provided by Act of Parliament, and the Testament and last Will of our dearest Father, besides other circumstances advancing our right, you know, the Realm, and the whole world knoweth, the Rols and Records appear by the authority of the King our said Father, and the King our said Brother, and the Subjects of this Realm; so that we verily trust that there is no good true Subject, that is, can, or would pretend to be ignorant thereof: and of our part we have of our selves caused, and as God shall aid and strengthen us, shall cause our right and title in this behalf to be published and proclaimed accordingly. And albeit this so weighty a matter seemeth strange, that our said Brother dying upon Thursday at night last past, we hitherto had no knowledge from you thereof, yet we consider your wisdoms and prudence to be such, that having effusions amongst you debated, pondered, and well weighed this present case with our Estate, with your own Estate, the Common-wealth and all our Honours, we shall and may conceive great hope and trust, with much assurance in your Loyalty and Service, and therefore for the time interpret and take things not to the worst; and that ye will, like Noblemen, work the best. Nevertheless, we are not ignorant of your Consultations, to undo the provisi-

But be it that some consideration Politick, or whatsoever thing else hath moved you thereto, yet doubt you not, my Lords, but we can take all these your doings in gracious part, being also right ready to remit and fully pardon the same, and that freely to eschew Blood-shed and Vengeance, against all those that can or will intend the same, trusting also assuredly you will take and accept this grace and virtue in good part as appertaineth, and that we shall not be informed to use the service of other our true subjects and friends; which in this our just and right cause, God, in whom our whole assistance is, shall send us. Wherefore my Lords, we require you and charge you, and every of you, that of your allegiance which you owe to God and us, and to none other, for our honour and the surety of our person only employ your selves, and forthwith upon receipt hereof, cause our right and title to the Crown and Government of this Realm to be proclaimed in our City of London and other places, as to your wisdom shall seem good, and as to this case appertaineth, not failing hereof as our very trust is in you. And this our Letter, signed with our hand, shall be your sufficient warrant in this behalf.

Adam, we have received your Letters, the ninth of this instant, declaring your supposed Title, which you judge your self to have to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and all the Dominions thereunto belonging. For answer whereof, this is to advertise you, that forasmuch as our Sovereign Lady Queen Jane is, after the death of our Sovereign Lord Edward the sixth, a Prince of most noble memory, invested and possessed with the just and right title in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, not only by good order of old ancient Laws of this Realm, but also by our late Sovereign Lords Letters Patents signed with his own hand, and sealed with the great Seal of England in presence of the most part of the Nobles, Counsellors, Judges, with divers other grave and sage persons, assenting and subscribing to the same: We must therefore, as of most bound duty and allegiance, assent unto her said Grace, and to none other, except we should (which faithful subjects cannot) fall into grievous and unspeakable enormities. Wherefore we can no less do, but for the quiet both of the Realm and you also, to advertise you, that forasmuch as the divorce, made between the King of famous memory, King Henry the eighth, and the Lady Katharine your mother, was necessary to be had both by the everlasting Laws of God, and also by the Ecclesiastical Laws, and by the most part of the noble and learned Universities of Christendom, and confirmed also by the sundry Acts of Parliaments remaining yet in their force, and thereby you justly made illegitimate and unhereditary to the Crown Imperial of this Realm, and the rules, and dominions, and possessions of the same, you will upon just consideration hereof, and of divers other causes lawful to be alleged for the same, and for the just inheritance of the right line and godly order taken by the late King our Sovereign Lord King Edward the sixth, and agreed upon by the Nobles and great Personages aforesaid, forscale by any pretence to vex and molest any of our Sovereign Lady Queen Jane her Subjects from their true faith and allegiance due unto her Grace: Assuring you, that if you will for respect thew your self quiet and obedient (as you ought) you shall find us all and several ready to do you any service that we with duty may, and glad with your quietness to preserve the common State of this Realm, wherein you may be otherwise grievous unto us, to your self, and to them. And thus we bid you most heartily well to fare. From the Tower of London, in this ninth of July, 1553.

self an obedient Subject.

All these aforesaid, except only the Duke of Northumberland, and Sr. John Gates, afterward were either by special favour, or special or general pardon discharged.

After this answer received, and the minds of the Lords Lady Mary perceived, Lady Mary speedeth herself secretly away far off from the City, hoping chiefly upon the good will of the Commons, and yet perchance not destitute altogether of the secret aduancements of some of the Nobles. When the Council heard of her sudden departure and perceived her stoutness, and that all came not to pass as they supposed, they gathered speedily a power of men together, appointing an army, and first assigned that the Duke of Suffolk should take that enterprise in hand, and so have the leading of the band. But afterward altering their minds, they thought it best to send forth the Duke of Northumberland, with certain other Lords and Gentlemen, and that the Duke of Suffolk should keep the Tower, where the Lord Gifford and the Lady Jane the same time were lodged.

In the which expedition the Guard also, albeit they were much unwilling at the first thereunto, yet notwithstanding, through the vehement perswasion of the Lord Treasurer, Master Chomley, and other, they were induced to assist the Duke, and to set forward with him.

These things thus agreed upon, and the Duke now being set forward after the best array out of London, having notwithstanding his times prescribed, and his journey appointed by the Council, to the intent he might not seem to do any thing but upon warrant. Mary in the mean Policy of while tossed with much travel up and down, to work the surest way for her best advantage, withdrew her self into the quarters of Northfolk and Suffolk, where she understood the Dukes name to be had in much hatred for the service that had been done there of late under King Edward, in subduing the rebels, and there gathering to her such aid of the Commons on every side as she might, keeping her self close for a space within Fremingham Castle. To whom first of all resorted the Suffolk men; who being always forward in promoting the proceedings of the Gospel, promised her their aid and help, so that she would not attempt the alteration of the Religion, which her brother King Edward had before established by laws and orders publicly enacted, and received by the consent of the whole Realm in that behalf.

To make the matter short, unto this condition the persons agreed, with such promise made unto them that no innovation should be made of Religion, as that no man would or could then have misdoubted her. Which promise, if she had as constantly kept, as they did willingly preserve her with their bodies and weapons, she had done a deed both worthy her blood, and had also made her Reign more stable to her self through future tranquility. For though a man be never so puissant of power, yet breach of promise is an evil upholder of quietness, fear is worse, but cruelty is the worst of all.

Thus Mary being guarded with the power of the Gospelers, did vanquish the Duke, and all those that came with him. In consideration whereof it was (methinks) an heavy word that she answered to the Suffolk men afterward, which did make supplication to her Grace to perform her promise: Forasmuch (saith she) as you being but Members desire to rule your Head, you shall one day well perceive, that Members must obey their Head; and not look to bear rule over the same. And not only that, but also to cause the more terror unto other, a certain Gentleman named Mr. Dabbe, dwelling about Wyndam side, for the same promise, was punished, being by humble request of her promise, was punished, being three sundry times set on the Pillory to be a gazing stock unto all men. Divers other delivered her books and supplications made out of the Scripture, to exhort her to continue in the true Doctrine then established; and for their good will were sent to Prison. But such is the condition of mans nature (as here you see) that we are for the most part more always to feek friendship when we stand in need of help, than ready to requite a benefit once past and received. Howbeit against all this one shoot-anker we have, which may be a fire comfort to all miserable Creatures, that equity and fidelity are ever perfect and certainly found with the Lord above, though the same, being shut out of the doors in this World, be not to be found here among men. But seeing our intent is to write a story, not to treat of Office, let us lay Suffolk men aside for a while, whose defects, for their readiness and diligence with the Queen, I will not here stand upon. What she performed on her part, the thing it self, and the whole story of this Perfection doth testify, as hereafter more plainly will appear.

On the contrary side, the Duke of Northumberland having his Warrant under the Broad Seal, with all Furniture in readiness, as he took his Voyage, and was now forward in his way; what ado there was, what stirring on every side, what tending, what riding and posting, what Letters, Messages, and Instructions went to and fro, what talking among the Souldiers, what Heart-burning among the People, what fair pretences outwardly, inwardly what privy practices there were, what speeding of Ordinance daily and hourly out of the Tower, what rumours and coming down of Souldiers from all quarters there was; a World it was to see, and a process to declare, enough to make a whole Iliad. The greatest help that made for the Lady Mary was the short journeys of the Duke, which by continuance were assigned to him: before, as is above mentioned. For the longer the Duke lingered in his Voyage, the Lady Mary the more increased in puissance, the hearts of the people being mightily bent unto her. Which after the Council at London perceived, and understood how the common multitude did withdraw their hearts from them to stand with her, and that certain Noblemen began to go the other way, they turned their song, and proclaimed for Queen the Lady Mary, eldest daughter to King Henry the eighth, and appointed by Parliament to succeed King Edward dying without Issue.

Queen Mary proclaimed at London.
The Duke of Northumberland overthrown.
The Duke of Northumberland brought to the Tower as a Traitor.

And so the Duke of Northumberland, being by Counsel and Advice sent forth against her, was left destitute, and forsaken alone at Cambridge with some of his Sons, and a few other, among whom the Earl of Huntington was one, who there were arrested and brought to the Tower of London, as Traitors to the Crown, notwithstanding that he had there proclaimed her Queen before.

Thus have ye Mary now made a Queen, and the sword of Authority put into her hand, which how she afterward did use, we may see in the sequel of this Book. Therefore (as I say) when she had been thus advanced by the Gospelers, and saw all in quiet by means that her enemies were conquered, sending the Duke Captive to the Tower before (which was the 25. of July) she followed not long after, being brought up the third day of August to London, with the great rejoicing of many men, but with a greater fear of moe, and yet with flattery, peradventure most great, of fained hearts.

Queen Mary cometh up to London.

The Lady Jane and the Lord Gilsford prisoners in the Tower.
The Duke of Northumberland condemned to die.
The Duke of Northumberland revokes his Religion.

Thus coming up to London, her first lodging she took at the Tower, whereas the foresaid Lady Jane with her Husband the Lord Gilsford, a little before her coming, were imprisoned; where they remained waiting her pleasure almost five Months. But the Duke, within a month after his coming to the Tower, being adjudged to death, was brought forth to the Scaffold, and there beheaded. Albeit he having a promise, and being put in hope of Pardon (yea, though his Head were upon the Block) if he would recant and hear Mass, consented thereto; and denied in words that true Religion, which before times, as well in King Henry the eighths days, as in King Edwards, he had oft evidently declared himself both to favour and further: exhorting also the people to return to the Catholick Faith; as he termed it. Whose recantation the Papists did forthwith publish and set abroad rejoicing not a little at his conversion, or rather subversion, as then appeared.

Thus the Duke of Northumberland, with Sir John Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, (which Palmer on the other side confessed his Faith that he had learned in the Gospel, and lamented that he had not lived more Gospel-like) being put to death; In the mean time Queen Mary (like) entering thus her Reign with the Blood of these men, besides hearing Mass her self in the Tower, gave a heavy shew and signification hereby, but especially by the sudden delivering of Steven Gardiner out of the Tower, that his life was not minded to stand to that which she so deeply had promised to the Suffolk men before, concerning the not subverting or altering the state of Religion, as in very deed the firmness of the People was therein nothing deceived.

The Duke of Northumberland beheaded.
Sir John Gates and Sir Thomas Palmer, confessing their Faith, were beheaded.

Besides the premises; other things also followed, which every day more and more discomforted the people, declaring the Queen to bear no good will to the present state of Religion; as not only the releasing of Gardiner, being then made Lord Chancellor of England and Bishop of Winchester, Doctor Poyer being put out; but also that Boner was restored to his Bishoprick again, and Doctor Ridley displaced. Item, Doctor Day to the Bishoprick of Chichester; J. Scory being put out. Item Doctor Tenison to the Bishoprick of Duresme. Item, Doctor Heath to the Bishoprick of Worcester, and J. Hooper committed to the Fleet. Item, Doctor Vesie to Exeter, and Miles Coverdale put out. These things being marked and perceived, great heaviness and discomfort grew more and more to all good mens hearts; but contrary, to the wicked, great rejoicing. In which discord of minds, and diversity of affections, was now to be seen a miserable face of things in the whole Common-wealth of England. They that could dissemble took no great care how the matter went. But such; whose Consciences were joynt with the Truth, perceived already coals to be kindled, which after should be the destruction of many a true Christian man, as indeed it came to pass. In the mean while Queen Mary after these beginnings, removed from the Tower to Hampton Court, caused a Parliament to be summoned against Octob. 10. moed, next ensuing, whereof more is to be said hereafter.

The trust preaching Bishops displaced.

A Prelate next sum; to be moved.

Ye heard before how divers Bishops were removed, and other placed in their rooms: amongst whom was Doctor Ridley Bishop of London, a worthy man both of fame and learning. This Doctor Ridley in the time of Queen Jane had made a Sermon at Pauls-Cross, so commended by the Council; declaring there his mind to the people as touching the Lady Mary, and disswading them, alledging there the incommunities and inconveniences which might rise by receiving her to be their Queen, prophesying as it were before that which after came to pass, that she would bring in Foreign Power to Reign over them; besides the subverting also of all Christian Religion then already established; shewing moreover that the same Mary being in his Diocese, he according to his duty, being then her Ordinary, had travailed much with her to reduce her to this Religion, & notwithstanding in all other points of civility, she shewed her self gentle and tractable, yet in matters that concerned true Faith and Doctrine, she shewed her self so stiff and obstinate, that there was no other hope of her to be converted, but to disturb and overturn all that which with so great labours had been confirmed and planted by her Brother afore. Shortly after this Sermon, Queen Mary was proclaimed; whereupon he speedily repairing to Fremingham to salute the Queen, had such cold welcome there, that being spoiled of all his Dignity, he was sent back upon a lame halting horse to the Tower.

After him preached also Mr. Rogers the next Sunday, intreating very learnedly upon the Gospel of the same day.

This so done, Q. Mary seeing all things yet not going to after her mind as she desired, devised with her Council to bring to pass that thing by other means, which as yet by open Law she could not well accomplish; directing forth an Inhibition by Proclamation, that no man should preach or read openly in Churches the Word of God, besides other things also in the same Proclamation inhibited, the copy whereof here followeth.

An Inhibition of the Queen, for Preaching, Priming, &c.

THe Queens Highness will remembering what great inconveniences and dangers have grown to this her Highness Realm in times past, through the diversity of opinions in question of Religion, and hearing also that now of late, since the beginning of her most gracious Reign, the same contentions be again much revived, through certain false and untrue reports and rumours spread by some light and evil disposed persons, hath thought good to do to understand, to all her Highness most loving Subjects, her most gracious pleasure in manner following:

First, her Majesty, being presently by the only goodness of God settled in her just possession of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and other Dominions thereunto belonging, cannot now hide that Religion which God and the World knoweth the hath ever professed from her infancy hitherto. Which as her Majesty is minded to observe and maintain for her self by Gods Grace, during her time, so doth her Highness much desire, and would be glad the same were of all her Subjects quietly and charitably embraced.

And yet the doth signifie unto all her Majesties loving Subjects, that of her most gracious disposition and clemency; her Highness mindeth not to compel any her said Subjects thereunto, until such time as further order by common assent may be taken therein: forbidding nevertheless all her Subjects of all degrees, at their perils, to move seditions, or stir inquietness in her people by interpreting the Laws of this Realm after their brains and fantasies, but quietly to continue for the time, till (as before is said) further order may be taken, and therefore willetth and fraily chargeth and commandeth all her said good loving Subjects to live together in quiet sort and Christian Charity, leaving those new found devilish terms of Papist or Heretick, and such like, and applying their whole care, study, and travel to live in the fear of God, exercising their conversations in such charitable and godly doing, as their lives may indeed expresse that great hunger and thirst of Gods glory and holy Word, which by rash talk and words many have pretended: and in so doing they shall best please God, and live without danger of the Laws, and maintain the tranquillity of the Realm. Whereof as her Highness shall be most glad, so if any man shall rashly presume to make any assemblies of people, or at any publick assemblies, or otherwise shall go about to stir the people to disorder or disquiet, she mindeth according to her duty, to see the same most severely reformed and punished according to her Highness Laws.

And furthermore, forasmuch as it is also well known, that sedition and false rumours have been nourished and maintained in this Realm, by the subtilty and malice of some evil disposed persons, which take upon them without sufficient authority to preach and to interpret the Word of God after their own brain in Churches, and other places both publick and private, and also by playing of enterludes, and printing of false found books, ballads, rhymes, and other lewd treatises in the English tongue, concerning Doctrine, in matters now in question and controvertie, touching the high points and Mysteries of Christian Religion; which books, ballads, rhymes, and treatises, are chiefly by the Printers and Stationers set out to sale to her Graces Subjects, of an evil zeal, for lucre and covetousness of vile gain: Her Highness therefore fraily chargeth and commandeth all and every of her said Subjects, of whatsoever state, condition, or degree they be, that none of them presume from henceforth to preach, or by way of reading in Churches, or other publick or private places, except in Schools of the University, to interpret or teach any Scriptures, or any manner of points of Doctrine concerning Religion, neither also to print any books, matter, ballade, rhyme, enterlude, process or treatise, nor to play any enterlude, except they have her Graces special licence in writing for the same, upon pain to incur her Highness indignation and displeasure.

And her Highness also further chargeth and commandeth all and every her said Subjects, that none of them of their own authority do presume to punish, and to rise against any offender in the causes above said, or any other offender in words or deeds in the late rebellion committed or done by the Duke of Northumberland, or his complices, or to seize any of their goods, or violently to use any such offender by striking, or imprisoning, or threatening the same, but wholly to refer the punishment of all such offenders unto her Highness and Publick Authority, whereof her Majesty mindeth to see due punishment according to the order of her Highness Laws.

Nevertheless, as her Highness mindeth not hereby to restrain and discourage any of her loving Subjects, to give from time to time true information against any such offenders in the causes above said, unto her Grace or her Council, for the punishment of every such offender, according to the effect of her Highness Laws provided in that part: So her said Highness exhorteth and fraily chargeth her said Subjects to observe her commandment and pleasure in every part above said, as they will avoid her Highness said indignation and most grievous displeasure. The severity and rigour whereof as her Highness shall be most sorry to have cause to put in execution: so doth she utterly determine not to permit such unlawful and rebellious doings of her Subjects, whereof may ensue the danger of her royal estate, to remain unpunished, but to see her said Laws touching these points to be thoroughly executed: which extremities she trusteth all her said Subjects will foresee, dread, and avoid accordingly: her said Highness fraily chargeth and commanding all Majors, Sheriffs, Justices of Peace, Bayliffs, Constables, and all other publick Officers and Ministers, diligently to see to the observing and executing of her said commandments and pleasure, and to apprehend all such as shall wilfully offend in this part, committing the same to the next Goal, there to remain without bail or mainprize, till upon certificate made to her Highness, or her Privy Council, of their names and doings; and upon examination had of their offences, some further order shall be taken for their punishment to the example of others, according to the effect and tenor of the Laws above said. Given at our Manor of Richmond, the 18. day of August in the first year of our most prosperous Reign.

Mr. Bourne preaching at Pauls-Cross.

ABout this time, or not long before, Boner Bishop of London, being restored, appointed Mr. Bourne a Canon of Pauls to preach at the Cross, who afterward was Bishop of Bath; he taking occasion of the Gospel of that day to speak something largely in justifying of Boner being then present; which Boner, said he, upon the same Text in that place, that day four years had preached before, and was upon the same most cruelly and unjustly cast into the most vile dungeon of the Marshalsea, and there kept during the time of King Edward. His words founded so evil in the ears of the hearers, that they could not keep silence, and began to murmur and to stir in such sort, that the Mayor and Aldermen with other estates then present, feared much an uproar. But the truth is, that one hurled a dagger at the Preacher, but who it was it could not then be proved; albeit afterward it was known.

In fine the stir was such, that the Preacher plucked in his head, and durst no more appear in that place. The matter of his Sermon tended much to the derogation and dispraise of King Edward, which thing the people in no case could abide: Then Mr. Bradford at the request of the Preachers Brother, and other, then being in the Pulpit, stood forth and spake so mildly, christianly, and effectually, that with few words he appeased all: and afterward he and Mr. Rogers conducted the Preacher betwixt them from the Pulpit to the Grammar-School door, where they left him safe, as further in the story of Mr. Bradford is declared. But shortly after they were both rewarded with long imprisonment, and last of all with fire in Smithfield.

By reason of this tumult at Pauls-Cross, an order was taken by the Lords of the Council with the Mayor and Aldermen of London, that they calling the next day following a Common Council of the City, should thereby charge every Householder to cause their children, apprentices, and other servants to keep their own Parish Churches Willing them also to signify to the said assembly the Queens determination uttered unto them by her highness the 12. of August in the Tower. Which was, albeit her Graces confidence is stayed in the matters of Religion; yet she graciously meant not to compel or strain other mens consciences otherwile than God shall (as she trusted) put in their hearts a perswasion of the truth that she is in, through the opening of his word unto them, by godly, virtuous, and learned Preachers, &c.

Also it was then ordered, that every Alderman in his Ward should forthwith send for the Curates of every Parish within their liberties, and warn them not only to forbear to preach themselves, but also not to suffer any other to preach, or make any open or solemn reading of Scripture in their Churches, unless the said Preachers were severally licenced by the Queen.

After this Sermon at Pauls-Crofs aforesaid, the next day after it followed that the Queens Guard was at the Crofs with their weapons to guard the Preacher. And when men withdrew themselves from the Sermon, order was taken by the Major, that the ancients of all companies should be present, least the Preacher should be discouraged by his small Auditory.

mon and was commanded to appear again upon Monday next after.

The 4. of September a Letter was directed from the Council to Mr. Hugh Latimer for his appearance before them.

About the 5. day of September the same year, Peter Martyr came to London from Oxford, where for a time he had been commanded to keep his house, and found there the Archbishop of Canterbury, who offered to defend the doctrine of the book of Common Prayer, both by Scriptures and Doctors, assisted by Peter Martyr and a few others, as hereafter ye shall hear. But whilest they were in hope to come to disputations, the Archbishop and other were imprisoned, but Peter Martyr was suffered to return whence he came.

The same day there was a Letter sent to the Mayor of Symonds Coventry to set Hugh Symonds at liberty, if he would recant his Sermon, or else to stay him; and to signify so much to the Council.

The 13. of September Mr. Hugh Latimer appeared before the Council, according to their Letter the 4. of September, and was committed to the Tower as prisoner, having his servant Aspin to attend upon him.

The same day the Archbishop of Canterbury appearing before the Council, was commanded to appear the next day at afternoon before them in the Star-Chamber.

The 14. of September the Archbishop of Canterbury, according to their former days commandment, made his appearance before the Lords in the Star Chamber. The 16. of September there were letters sent to the Mayors of Dover and Rye, to suffer all French Protestants to pass out of this Realm, except such whose names shall be signified to them by the French Ambassador.

October 1553.

The first day of October Queen Mary was Crowned at Westminster, and the tenth day of the same Month of October then following began the Parliament with the solemn Mass of the Holy Ghost, after the Popish manner, celebrated with great pomp, in the Palace of Westminster. To the which Mass among the other Lords, according to the manner, should come the Bishops, which yet remained undeposed, which were the Arch-Bishop of York, Doctor Taylor Bishop of Lincoln, John Harley Bishop of Hereford. Of the Bishops, Doctor Taylor, and Mr. Harley presenting themselves according to their duty, and taking their place amongst the Lords, after they saw the Mass begin, not abiding the sight thereof, withdrew themselves from the company: for the which cause the Bishop of Lincoln being examined, and protesting his faith, was upon the same commanded to attend, who not long after at Ankerwike by sickness departed. Mr. Harley, because he was married, was excluded both from the Parliament and from his Bishoprick.

Mass being done, the Queen accompanied with the Estates of the Realm was brought into the Parliament house, there according to the manner to enter and begin the consultation: At which Consultation or Parliament were repealed all Statutes made in the time of King Henry the eighth for Premunire, and Statutes made in King Edward the sixth time for administration of Common Prayer and the Sacrament in the English tongue: And further the attainder of the Duke of Northumberland was by this Parliament confirmed. In this mean while many men were forward in erecting of Altars and Masses in Churches. And such as would stick to the Laws made in King Edwards time, till other should be established, some of them were marked, and some presently apprehended. Among whom Sir James Hales, a Knight of Kent, and Justice of the Common Pleas, was one; who notwithstanding he had ventured his life in Queen Marias cause, in that he would not subscribe to the unwholesome of her by the Kings will, yet for that he did at a Quarter Sessions give charge upon the Statutes made in the time of King Henry the eighth, and Edward the sixth, for the Supremacy and Religion, he was imprisoned in the Marshalsey, Countess, and Fleet, and so cruelly handled and put in fear by talk that the Warden of the Fleet used to have in his hearing, of such torments as were in preparing for Hereticks (or for what other cause God knoweth) that he sought to rid himself out of this life by wounding himself with a knife; and afterward was contented to lay as they willed him: Whereupon he was discharged; but after that he never rested till he had drowned himself in a River, half a mile from his house in Kent. Of whom more is to be seen when you come to his story.

tion begins.

During the time of this Parliament, the Clergy likewise after their wonted manner had a Convocation, with a disputation also, appointed by the Queens commandment, at Pauls Church in London the same time, which was about the 18. of October. In the which Convocation, first Mr. John Harpsfield, Bachelor of Divinity, made a Sermon ad Clerum, the 16. of October. After the Sermon done, it was assigned by the Bishops, that they of the Clergy-house, for avoiding confusion of words, should chuse them a Prolocutor. To the which room and office by common assent was named Doctor Weston Dean of Westminster, and presented to the Bishops with an Oration of Mr. P. Dean of Chichester, and also of Mr. Wimblesy Archdeacon of London. Which Doctor Weston being chosen and brought unto the Bishops, made his gratulatory Oration to the House, with the answer again of Bishop Boner.

After these things thus sped in the Convocation House, they proceeded next to the Disputation appointed, as is above said, by the Queens Commandment, about the matter of the Sacrament. Which Disputation continued six days. Wherein Doctor Weston was chief on the Popes part; who behaved himself outrageously in taunting and checking. In conclusion, such as disputed on the contrary part were driven some to flee, some to deny, and some to dye, though to the most Mens Judgements that heard the Disputation they had the upper hand, as here may appear by the report of the said Disputation, the Copy whereof we thought fit here to annex, as followeth.

18. of Oct.

Whereas divers and uncertain rumours be spread abroad of the Disputation had in the Convocation House; to the intent that all men may know the certainty of all things therein done and said, as much as the memory of him that was present thereat can bear away, be both thought good, at request, thoroughly to describe what was said therein on both parties of the matters argued and had in question, and of the entrance thereof.

Doctor Weston, Prolocu-tor against the Book of Catechism set forth in King Edwards time

First upon Wednesday, being the 18. of October, at Afternoon, Mr. Weston the Prolocutor certified the House, that it was the Queens pleasure, that the company of the same House, being learned men assembled, should debate of matters of Religion, and constitute Laws thereof, which her Grace and the Parliament would ratify. And for that (said he) there is a Book of late set forth, called the Catechism (which he shewed forth) bearing the name of this honourable Synod, and yet put forth without your contents as I have learned, being a Book very pestiferous, and full of Heresies, and likewise a Book of Common Prayer very abominable (as it pleased him to term it) I thought it therefore best, first to begin with the Articles of the Catechism, concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, to confirm the Natural Presence of Christ in the same, and also Transubstantiation. Wherefore (said he) It shall be lawful on Friday next ensuing for all men freely to speak their conscience in these matters, that all doubts may be removed, and they fully satisfied therein.

At of the second day.

The Friday coming, being the twentieth of October, when men had thought they should have entered disputations of the questions proposed, the Prolocutor exhibited two several Bills unto the House; the one for the Natural Presence of Christ in the Sacrament of the Altar; the other concerning the Catechism, that it was not of that Houses agreement set forth, and that they did not agree thereunto: Requiring all them to subscribe to the same, as he himself had done. Whereunto the whole House did immediately assent, except six, which were the Dean of Rochester, the Dean of Exeter, the Archdeacon of Winchester, the Archdeacon of Hereford, the Archdeacon of Stow, and one other. And whilst the rest were about to subscribe these two Articles, John Philpot stood up and spake first concerning the Articles of the Catechism, that he thought they were deceived in the Title of the Catechism, in that it beareth the Title of the Synod of London last before this, although many of them which then were present were never made privy thereof in setting it forth; for that this House had granted the Authority to make Ecclesiastical Laws unto certain Persons to be appointed by the Kings Majesty; and whatsoever Ecclesiastical Laws they or the most part of them did set forth, according to a Statute in that behalf provided, it might be well said to be done in the Synod of London, although such as be of this House now, had no notice thereof, before the promulgation. And in this point he thought the setter forth thereof nothing to have slandered the House, as they by their subscription went about to perfwade the World, since they had our Synodical authority unto them committed to make such Spiritual Laws as they thought convenient and necessary.

And moreover he said, as concerning the Article of the Natural Presence in the Sacrament, that it was against reason and order of learning, and also very prejudicial to the Truth, that men should be moved to subscribe before the matter were thoroughly examined and discussed. But when he saw that allegation might take no place, being as a man astonished at the multitude of so many learned men, as there were of purpose gathered together to maintain old Traditions more than the Truth of Gods holy Word, he made this request unto the Prolocutor: That whereas there were so many ancient learned Men present on that side, as in the Realm the like again were not to be found in such number; and that on the other side of them that had not subscribed were not past five or six, both in age and learning far inferior unto them: Therefore, that equality might be had in this Disputation, he desired that the Prolocutor would be a mean unto the Lords, that some of those that were learned, and setters forth of the same Catechism, might be brought into the House to shew their learning that moved them to set forth the same; and that Doctor Ridley and Mr. Rogers with two or three more, might be licenced to be present at this Disputation, and to be associate with them.

M. Philpot
request to the Prolocu-tor.

This request was thought reasonable, and was proposed unto the Bishops, who made this answer; that it was not in them to call such persons unto our House, since some of them were prisoners. But they said, they would be Petitioners in this behalf unto the Council, and in case any were absent that ought to be of the House, they willed them to be taken in unto them if they listed. After this, they minding to have entered into Disputation, there came a Gentleman as Messenger from the Lord great Master, signifying unto the Prolocutor, that the Lord great Mr. and the Earl of Devonshire would be present at the Disputations, and therefore he deferred the same unto Monday, at one of the clock at Afternoon.

The At of the third day.

Upon Monday the 22. of October, at the time appointed, in the presence of many Earls, Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and divers other of the Court and of the City also, the Prolocutor made a Protestation, that they of the House had appointed this Disputation, not to call the Truth into doubt, to the which they had already subscribed, saving five or six; but that those gain-sayers might be relieved of their Arguments in the which they stood, as it shall appear unto you, not doubting but they will also confend unto us.

Then he demanded of Mr. Haddon, whether we would reason reason against the questions propoſed, or no. To whom he made anſwer that he had certified him before in writing, that he would not, ſince the requeſt of ſuch learned men, as were demanded to be aſſiſtant with them, would not be granted. Mr. Elmar likewiſe was aſked, who made the Prolocutor the like anſwer; adding moreover that ſince they had done too much prejudice already to the Truth, to ſubſcribe before the matter was diſcuſſed: and little or nothing it might avail to reaſon for the truth, ſince all they were now determined to the contrary. After this he demanded of Mr. Cheyney, who, the Prolocutor ſaid, allowed the Preference with them (but he denied the Tranſubſtantiation by the means of certain Authorities upon which he ſtandeth, and deſireth to be relolved, as you ſhall hear) whether he will propoſe his doubts concerning Tranſubſtantiation, or no. Yeſ, quoth he. I would gladly my doubts to be relolved, which move me not to believe Tranſubſtantiation.

The first is out of S. Paul to the Corinthians, who speaking of the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, calleth it oft times Bread after the Consecration.

The second is out of Origen, who, speaking of this Sacrament, saith, That the material part thereof goeth down to the Excrements.

The third is out of Theodore, who, making mention of the Sacramental Bread and Wine after the Consecration, saith, That they go not out of their former substance, form, and shape. These be some of my doubts, among many other, wherein I require to be answered.

Then the Prolocutor assigned Doctor Moreman to answer him, who, to S. Paul, answered him thus; That the Sacrament is called by him Bread indeed : but it is thus to be understood, That it is the Sacrament of Bread, that is, the Form of Bread.

Then Mr. Cheyney inferred and alledged, that Hesychius called the Sacrament both Bread and Flesh.

Yea, quoth Moreman, Hefychius calleth it Bread, because it was Bread, and not because it is so. And passing over Origen, he came to Theodoretus, and said, That men mistook his Authority, by interpreting a general into a special, as Peter Martyr hath done in the place of Theodore, interpreting esetia for substance, which is a special signification of the word; whereas esetia is a general word as well to Accidents as to Substance; and therefore I answer thus unto Theodore; That the Sacramental Bread and Wine do not go out of their former Substance-form, and shape, that is to say, not out of their accidental Substance and shape.

After this Mr. Cheyney late him down, and by and by Mr. Elmer stood up as one that could not abide to hear so fond an Answer to so grave an Authority, and reasoning upon the Authority of Theodore's alleged before by Mr. Cheyney, and declared, That Moreman's answer to Theodore's was no just nor sufficient answer, but an illusion and futile evasion, contrary to Theodore's meaning. For, said he, if seis should signify an Accident in the place alleged, as it is answered by Mr. Moreman, then were it a word superfluous set in Theodore's there, where to follow two other words which sufficiently do expound the Accidents of the Bread, that is, σῆμα τοῦ σώματος, which signifie in English, shape and form; and so he proved out of the same Author by Allegations, That ἄρτος in Greek could not be so generally taken in that place as Moreman for a thift would have it. But Moreman, as a man having no other false for that fore, affirmeth still, That ἄρτος, which significth Substante, must needs signifie an Accidental Substante properly. To whose importunity, felle he could have no other answer, Elmar, as a man wearied with his importunity, gave place.

After this stood up John Philpot, and said, That he could prove, that by the matter that Theodore intreateth of in the place above alledged, and by the Similitude which he maketh to prove his purpose, by no means Mr. Mor- mans interpretation of isia might be taken for an Accidental Subtance, as he for a shift would interpret it to be.

A notable Authority out of S.
Augustine;

was let down from the Cross, which was wrapped in Cloaths, which was hid in the Sepulchre, which was manifested in the Resurrection. You shall not have me always with you. And why? For after a bodily presence he was conversant with his Disciples forty days, and they accompanying him, seeing and not following him, he ascended and is not here; for there he sitteth at the right hand of the Father, and yet here he is, because he is not departed in the presence of his Majesty. After another manner we have Christ always by the presence of his Majesty, but after the presence of his flesh it is rightly said, You shall not verily have me always with you. For the Church had him in the presence of his flesh a few days, and now by faith apprehendeth him, and seeth him not with eyes.

Watson answers to St. Augustine, Aug in Joan. teach. you, in reply against Watson.

To this Authority Doctor Watson took upon him to answer, and said, He would answer St. Augustine by St. Augustine; and having a certain Book in his hand of Notes, he alledged out of the 70 Treatise upon St. John, that after that mortal condition and manner we have not now Christ on earth, as he was heretofore before his Passion.

Against whose answer John Philpot replied, and said, That Mr. Watson had not fully answered St. Augustine by St. Augustine, as he would seem to have done, for that in the place above mentioned by Mr. Deane of Rochester, he doth not only reach the mortal state of Christs Body before his Passion, but also the immortal condition of the same after his Resurrection: in the which mortal Body St. Augustine seemeth plainly to affirm, That Christ is not present upon the earth, neither in form visibly, neither in corporal substance invisibly, as in few lines after the place above alledged, St. Augustine doth more plainly declare by these words, saying, Now these two manners of Christs presence declared, which is by his Majesty, Providence, and Grace now present in the World, which before his Ascension was present in flesh; and being now placed at the right hand of the Father, is absent in the same from the world, I think (saith S. Augustine) that there remaineth no other question in this matter.

Now, quoth Philpot, if St. Augustine acknowledged no more presence of Christ to be now on earth, but only his Divine Presence, and touching his Humanity to be in heaven, we ought to confess and believe the same. But if we put a third presence of Christ, that is corporally to be present always in the Sacrament of the Altar invisibly according to your suppositions, whereof St. Augustine maketh no mention at all in all his Works; you shall seem to judge that which St. Augustine did never comprehend.

Watson.

Why, quoth Watson, S. Augustine in the place by me alledged, maketh he no mention how St. Steven, being in this world, saw Christ after his Ascension?

Philpot.

It is true, said Philpot; but he saw Christ, as the Scripture telleth, in the heavens being open, standing at the right hand of God the Father. Further to this Watson answered not.

D. Watson.

Then the Prolocutor went about to furnish up an answer to St. Augustine, saying, That he is not now in the world after the manner of bodily presence, but yet present for all that in his body.

Philpot replies to Watson.

To whom Philpot answered, That the Prolocutor did grate much upon this word secundum in St. Augustine, which signifieth after the manner, or in form: but he doth not answer to id quod, which is that thing or substance of Christ, in the which Christ suffered, arose, and ascended into heaven, in the which thing and substance he is in Heaven, and not in Earth, as St. Augustine in the place specified most clearly doth define.

The Dean of Rochester.

To this nothing else being answered, the Dean of Rochester proceeded in the maintenance of his Argument, and read out of a Book of Annotations sundry Authorities for the confirmation thereof. To the which Moreman, who was appointed to answer him, made no direct answer, but bade him make an Argument, saying, That Mr. Deane had recited many words of Doctors, but he made not one Argument.

Then said the Dean, The Authorities of the Doctors by me rehearsed, be sufficient Arguments to prove mine intent, to the which my desire is to be answered of you. But still Moreman cried, make an Argument, to shift off the Authority which he could not answer unto. After this the Dean made this Argument out of the Institution of the Sacrament; Do this in remembrance of me: and thus ye shall shew forth the Lords death until he come.

The Sacrament is the remembrance of Christ: Ergo, the Sacrament is not very Christ; for yet he is not come. For these words, Until he come, do plainly signify the absence of Christs Body. Then the Prolocutor went about to shew that these words, Until he come, did not import any absence of Christ on the Earth, by other places of Scripture, where Domine, Until, was used in like sense; but directly to the purpose he answered nothing. In conclusion, the Dean fell to questioning with Moreman, whether Christ did eat the Paschal Lamb with his Disciples, or not? He answered, Yea. Further, he demanded whether he did eat likewise the Sacrament with them, as he did institute it? Moreman answered, Yea. Then he asked what he did eat, and whether he did eat his own natural Body, as they imagine it to be, or no? Which when Moreman had affirmed, then said the Dean, It is a great Absurdity by you granted; and so he fate down.

Against this Absurdity Philpot stood up and argued, saying, He could prove it by good reason deduced out of the Scripture, that Christ eat not his own natural Body at the institution of the Sacrament; and the reason is this:

Bar. Receiving of Christs Body hath a promise of remission of sins which it annexed.

ro. Christ eating the Sacrament, had no promise of remission of sin.

co. Ergo, Christ in the Sacrament did not eat his own Body.

To this reason Moreman answered, denying the former part of the Argument, that the Sacrament had a promise of remission of sins annexed unto it.

Then Philpot shewed this to be the promise in the Sacrament; Which is given for you, which is shed for you, for the remission of sins. But Moreman would not acknowledge that to be any promise, so that he drove Philpot to the sixth of St. John, to vouch his saying with these words; The bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world.

Moreman answering nothing directly to this Argument, Harpsfield started up to supply that which wanted in his behalf; and thinking to have answered Philpot, confirmed more strongly his Argument, saying, Ye mistake the promise which is annexed to the Body of Christ in the Sacrament: for it pertained not to Christ, but to his Disciples, to whom Christ said, This is my body which is given for you, and not for Christ himself.

You have said well for me, quoth Philpot, for that is mine Argument. The promise of the body of Christ took no effect in Christ: Ergo, Christ eat not his own body.

Then the Prolocutor, to shoulder out the matter, said, the Argument was naught. For by the like Argument he might go about to prove, that Christ was not baptized, because the remission of sin, which is annexed unto Baptism, took no effect in Christ. To the which Philpot replied, That like as Christ was baptized, so he eat the Sacrament; but he took on him Baptism, not that he had any need thereof, or that it took any effect in him, but as our Master to give the Church an example to follow him in the ministrations of the Sacrament, and thereby to exhibit unto us himself, and not to give himself to himself.

No more was said in this. But afterward the Prolocutor demanded of Philpot, whether he would argue against the natural presence, or no? To whom he answered, Yea, if he would hear his Argument without interruption, and assign one to answer him, and not many, which was a confusion to the Opponent, and specially for him that was of an ill memory. By this time the night was come on; wherefore the Prolocutor brake up the Disputation for that time, and appointed Philpot to be the first that should begin the Disputation the next day after, concerning the presence of Christ in the Sacrament.

ON Wednesday the 25th of October, John Philpot, as it was before appointed, was ready to have entered the Disputation, minding first to have made a certain Oration, and a true declaration in Latin of the matter of Christs presence which was then in question. make any oration or declaration of any matter, commanding him also that he should make no argument in Latin, but to conclude on his argument in English.

Then said Philpot; this is contrary to your order taken at the beginning of this disputation. For then you appointed that all the arguments should be made in Latin, and thereupon I have drawn and devised all mine arguments in Latin. And because you Master Prolocutor have said heretofore openly in this house that I had no learning, I had thought to have shewed such learning as I have, in a brief Oration, and short declaration of the questions now in controversy, thinking it so most convenient also, that in case I should speak otherwise in my declaration than should stand with learning, or than I were able to warrant, and justice by Gods Word, it might the better be reformed by such as were learned of the house, so that the unlearned fort being present, might take the less offence thereat. But this allegation prevailed nothing with the prolocutor, who bad him still form an argument in English, or else to hold his peace.

Then said Philpot; You have fore disappointed me; thus suddenly to go from your former order: But I will accomplish your commandment, leaving mine oration apart; and I will come to my arguments, the which as well as so sudden a warning will serve, I will make in English. But before I bring forth any argument, I will in one word declare what manner of presence I disallow in the Sacrament, to the intent the hearers may the better understand to what end and effect mine arguments shall tend; not to deny utterly the presence of Christ in his Sacrament, truly ministered according to his institution, but only to deny that gross and carnal presence, which you of this house have already subscribed unto, to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, contrary to the true and manifest meaning of the Scriptures: That by transubstantiation of the Sacramental bread and wine, Christs natural body should, by the virtue of the words pronounced by the priest, be contained and included under the forms or accidents of bread and wine. This kind of presence imagined by men I do deny, quoth Philpot, and against this I will reason. But before he could make an end of that he would have said, he was interrupted of the Prolocutor, and commanded to defend to his argument. At whose unjust inopportunity Philpot being offended, and thinking to purchase him a remedy therefore, he fell down upon his knees before the Earls and Lords which were there present, being a great number; whereof some were of the Queens Council, beseeching them that he might have liberty to prosecute his arguments, without interruption of any man; the which was gently granted him of the Lords. But the Prolocutor, putting in ure a point of the practise of Prelates, would not condescend thereunto, but still cried, Hold your peace, or else make a short argument. I am about it, quoth Philpot, if you will let me alone. But first, I must needs ask a question of my Respondent (who was Doctor Chedsey) concerning a word or twain of your supposition, that is, of the Sacrament of the Altar, what he meanneth thereby, and whether he taketh it, as some of the ancient Writers do, terming the Lords supper the Sacrament of the altar; partly because it is a Sacrament of that lively sacrifice which Christ offered for our sins upon the altar of the Cross, and partly because that Christs body, crucified for us, was that bloody Sacrifice, which the blood-shedding of all the beasts offered upon the altar in the old Law, did prefigure and signifie unto us: In signification whereof the old Writers sometime do call the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, among other names which they ascribe thereto, the Sacrament of the Altar; or whether you take it otherwise; as for the Sacrament of the Altar, which is made of lime and stone, over the which the Sacrament hangeth, and to be all one with the Sacrament of the Mass, as it is at this present in many places. This done, I will direct mine arguments according as your answer shall give me occasion.

Then made Doctor Chedsey this answer, that in their supposition they took the Sacrament of the Altar, and the Sacrament of the Mass, to be all one.

Then, quoth Philpot, I will speak plain English as Mr. Prolocutor willeth me, and make a short resolution thereof; that the Sacrament of the altar, which ye reckon to be all one with the Mass, once justly abolished, and now put in full use again, is no Sacrament at all, neither is Christ in any wise present in it; and this his saying he offered to prove before the whole house, if they listed to call him thereunto: And likewise he offered to vouch the same before the Queens Grace, and her most honourable Council, before the face of six of the best learned men of the house of the contrary opinion, and refused none. And if I shall not be able, quoth he, to maintain by Gods word that I have said, and confound those six which shall take upon them to withstand me in this point, let me be burnd with as many fagots as be in London, before the Court gates: This he uttered with great vehemency of spirit.

At this the Prolocutor with divers other were very much offended, demanding of him whether he wist what he said, or no? Yea; quoth Philpot, I wot well what I say, desiring no man to be offended with his saying, for that he spake no more than by Gods word he was able to prove. And praised be God, quoth he, that the Queens Grace hath granted us of this house (as our Prolocutor hath informed us) that we may freely utter our consciences in these matters of controversy in Religion: and therefore I will speak here my confidence freely, grounded upon Gods holy word, for the truth, albeit some of you here present mislike the same.

Then divers of the house, beside the Prolocutor, taunted and reprehended him for speaking so unfavourably against the Sacrament of the Mass: and the Prolocutor said he was made, and threatened him, that he would fend him to prison, if he would not cease his speaking.

Philpot seeing himself thus abused, and not permitted with free liberty to declare his mind, fell into an exclamation, casting his eyes up towards the Heaven, and said, O Lord, what a world is this, that the truth of thy holy word may not be spoken and abidden by? And for very sorrow and heaviness the tears trickled out of his eyes.

After this, the Prolocutor being moved by some that were about him, was content that he should make an argument, so that he would be brief therein. I will be as brief, quoth Philpot, as I may conveniently be in uttering all that I have to say. And first, I will begin to ground my arguments upon the authority of Scriptures, whereupon all the building of our faith ought to be grounded; and after I shall confirm the same by ancient Doctors of the Church. And I take the occasion of the first argument out of the 28. of Matthew, of the saying of the Angel to the three Maries seeing Christ at the Sepulchre, saying; He is risen, he is not here: and in St. Luke in the 23. Chapter, the Angel asked them, why they sought him that liveth among the dead. Likewise the Scripture testifieth, that Christ is risen, ascended into Heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of the Father: all the which is spoken of his natural body: Ergo, it is not on earth included in the Sacrament.

I will confirm this yet more effectually, by the saying of Christ in the 16. of St. John; I came (saith Christ) From my Father into the World, and now I leave the World and go away to my Father. The which coming and going he meant of his natural body. Therefore we may affirm thereby, that it is not found in the world.

But I look here, quoth he, to be answered with a blind distinction of visibly and invisibly, that he is visibly departed in his humanity, but invisibly he remaineth notwithstanding in the Sacrament. But that answer I prevent my self, that with more expedition I may descend to the sixth of mine arguments, whereof I have a dozen to produce, and will prove that no such distinction ought to take away the force of that argument, by the answer which Christs disciples gave unto him, speaking these words: Now thou speakest plainly and uterest forth no proverb. Which words Saint Cyril interpreting, saith; That Christ speak without any manner of ambiguity and obscure speech. And therefore I conclude hereby thus; that if Christ speak plainly, and without parable, saying; I leave the World now and go away to my Father, then that obscure dark and imperceptible presence of Christs natural body to remain in the Sacrament upon Earth invisibly, contrary to the plain words of Christ, ought not to be allowed. For nothing can be more uncertain or more paradoxical and unseemly, than to say: Here now will I attend on to be all one with the Mass, once justly abolished, and now put in full use again, is no Sacrament at all, neither is Christ in any wise present in it; and this his saying he offered to prove before the whole house, if they listed to call him thereunto: And likewise he offered to vouch the same before the Queens Grace, and her most honourable Council, before the face of six of the best learned men of the house of the contrary opinion, and refused none. what you will answer, and so defend to the confirmation of all that I have said by ancient Writers.

Chedsey answers to Philpot.

Then Doctor Chedsey reciting his argument in such order as it was made, took upon him to answer severally to every part thereof on this wise. First, to the saying of the Angel, That Christ is not here; And, why seek ye the living among the dead? He answered, that these sayings pertained nothing to the presence of Christs natural body in the Sacrament, but that they were spoken of Christs body being in the Sepulchre, when the three Maries thought him to have been in the grave still: And therefore the Angel said: Why do ye seek him that liveth among the dead? And to the authority of the 16. of John, where Christ saith, Now I leave the World and go to my father, he meant that of his ascension. And so likewise did Cyril, interpreting the saying of the Disciples that knew plainly that Christ would visibly ascend into Heaven, but that doth not exclude the invisible presence of his natural body in the Sacrament. For S. Chrysostom writing to the people of Antioch, doth affirm the same, comparing Helias and Christ together, and Helias cloak and Christs flesh: Helias (quoth he) when he was taken up in the fiery chariot, left his cloak behind him unto his disciple Heliſeus. But Christ, ascending into Heaven took his flesh with him, and left also his flesh behind him. Whereby we may right well gather, that Christs flesh is visibly ascended into Heaven, and invisibly abideth still in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Christ is ad Pop. Antioch.

To this Philpot replied, and said, You have not directly answered to the saying of the Angel, Christ is risen, and is not here, because you have omitted that which was the chiefest point of all. For (said he) I proceed further, as thus; He is risen, ascended, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father. Ergo, he is not remaining on the earth. Neither is your answer to Cyril by me alleged, sufficient. But by and by I will return to your interpretation of Cyril, and more plainly declare the same, after that I have first refuted the authority of Chrysostom, which is one of your chief principles that you alledge, to make for your gross carnal presence in the Sacrament; which being well weighed and understood, pertaineth nothing thereunto.

Philpot answers to Chedsey.

At that the Prolocutor startled, that one of the chief pillars in this point should be overthrown; and therefore recited the said authority in Latin first, and afterward Englished the same, willing all that were present to note that saying of Chrysostom, which he thought invincible on their side. But I will make it appear (quoth Philpot) by and by, that it doth make little for your purpose. And as he was about to declare his mind in that behalf, the Prolocutor did interrupt him, as he did almost continually. Wherewith Philpot not being content, said, Mr. Prolocutor thinketh that he is in a Sophistry School, where he knoweth right well the manner is, that when the Respondent perceiveth, that he is like to be enforced with an argument, to the which he is not able to answer, thus he doth what he can with cavillation and interruption to drive him from the same. This saying of Philpot was taken of the Prolocutor and his adherents; and the Prolocutor said, that Philpot could bring nothing to avoid that authority, but his own vain imagination. Hear, quoth Philpot, and afterward judge. For I will do in this as in all other authorities, wherewith you shall charge me in refuting any of my arguments that I have to prosecute, answering either unto the same by sufficient authorities of Scripture, or else by some other testimony of like authority of yours, and not of mine own imagination; the which if I do, I will it to be of no credit. And concerning the saying of Chrysostom, I have two ways to beat him from your purpose; the one out of Scripture, the other out of Chrysostom himself in the place here by you alledged.

The place of Chrysostom of Christ is brought up his flesh, and leaving his flesh, answereth truly. Philpot. Now Christ is his flesh behind him.

First, where he seemeth to say, that Christ ascending took his flesh with him, and left also his flesh behind him, truth it is: for we all do confess and believe that Christ took on him our humane nature in the Virgin Maries womb, and through his passion in the same hath united us to his flesh, and thereby are we become one flesh with him, so that Chrysostom might therefore right well say, that Christ ascending took his flesh, which he received of the Virgin Mary, away with him; and also left his flesh behind him, which are we that be elect in this world, which are the Members of Christ, and flesh of his flesh; as very aptly St. Paul to the Ephesians in the fifth Chapter doth testify, saying; We are flesh of his flesh and bone of his bones. And if percase any man will reply, that he intreateth there of the Sacrament, so that this interpretation cannot so aptly be applied unto him in that place, then will I yet interpret Chrysostom another way by himself. For in that place, a few lines before those words which were here now lately read, are these words; that Christ, after he ascended into Heaven, left unto us, indued with his Sacraments, his flesh in mysteries, that is, Sacramentally. And that mystical flesh Christ leaveth as well to his Church in the Sacrament of Baptism, as in the Sacramental bread and wine. And that St. Paul justly doth witness, saying; As many of us as are Baptized in Christ have put upon us Christ. And thus you may understand that S. Chrysostom maketh nothing for your carnal and gross presence in the Sacrament, as you wrongfully take him.

Now in this mean while Mr. Pier rounded the Prolocutor in the ear to put Philpot to silence, and to appoint some other, mistrusting lest he would shrewdly shake their carnal presence in conclusion, if he held on long, seeing in the beginning he gave one of their chief foundations such a pluck. Then the Prolocutor said to Philpot, that he had reasoned sufficiently enough, and that some other should now supply his room. Wherewith he was not well content, saying: Why Sir, I have a dozen arguments concerning this matter to be proposed, and I have yet scarce overgone my first argument; for I have not brought in any confirmation thereof out of any ancient Writer (whereof I have for the same purpose many) being hitherto still lated by your oft interrupting of me.

Well, quoth the Prolocutor, you shall speak no more now, and I command you to hold your peace. You perceive, quoth Philpot, that I have said enough for you, and am able to withstand your false supposition, and therefore you command me to silence. If you will not give place, quoth the Prolocutor, I will send you to prison. This is not, quoth Philpot, according to your promise made in this house, nor yet according to your brag made at Pauls-Cross, that men should be answered in this disputation to whatsoever they can say, since you will not suffer me of a dozen arguments, to prosecute one.

Then M. Pie took upon him to promise that he should be answered another day. Philpot seeing he might not proceed in his purpose, being therewith justly offended, ended, saying thus: A fore of you here, which hitherto have lurked in corners, and dissembled with God and the World, are now gathered together to suppress the sincere truth of Gods holy Word, and to set forth every false device, which by the Catholick Doctrine of the Scripture ye are not able to maintain.

Then stepped forth Mr. Elmar Chaplain to the Duke of Sussex, whom Mr. Moreman took upon him to answer: Against whom Mr. Elmar objected divers and sundry Authorities for the confirming of the Argument he took the day before in hand, to prove that Wolfe in the sentence of Theodore, brought in by Mr. Cheyney, must needs signify Substance, and not Accidents. Whole reasons and probations, because they were all grounded and brought out of the Greek, I do pass over, for that they want their Grace in English, and also their proper understanding. But his allegations so incumbered M. Moreman, that he desired a day to overview them, for at that instant he was without a convenient answer.

Then did the Prolocutor call Mr. Haddon Dean of Exeter, and Chaplain to the Duke of Sussex, who prosecuted *Theodore*s authority in confirming Mr. Elmars argument. To whom Doctor Watson took upon him to give answer; who after long talk was so confounded, that he was not able to answer to the word Mysterium. But forasmuch as he seemed to doubt therein, Mr. Haddon took out of his bosom a Latin Author to confirm his saying, and shewed the same to Mr. Watson, asking him whether he thought that translation to be true, or that the Printer were in any fault. There may be a fault in the Printer, quoth Watson, for I am not remembered of this word. Then did Mr. Haddon take out of his bosom a Greek book, wherein he shewed forth with his finger the same words, which Mr. Watson could not deny. His arguments further I omit to de-

Then stept forth Mr. Perna, and in Argument made declaration of his mind against Transubstantiation, and confirmed the Sayings and Authorities alledged by Mr. Elmar and Mr. Haddon. To whom the Prolocutor answered, saying, I much marvel Mr. Perna, that you will say thus, for so much as on Friday last you subscribed to the contrary. Which his saying Mr. Elmar did mislike, saying to the Prolocutor, That he was to blame for to reprehend any man, partly for that this House, quoth he, is an House of free liberty for every man to speak his Confidence, and partly for that you promised yesterday, That notwithstanding any man had subscribed, yet he should have free liberty to speak his mind. And for that the night did approach, and the time was spent, the Prolocutor, giving them praises for their learning, did yet notwithstanding conclude, that all reasoning set apart, the order of the holy Church must be received, and all things must be ordered thereby.

The Act of the fifth Day.

ON Friday the 27th of October, Dr. Weston the Prolocutor did first propound the matter, shewing that the Convocation hath spent two days in disputation already about one only Doctor, which was Theodoret, and about one only word, which was etia. Yet were they come the third day to answer all things that could be objected, so that they would shortly put their Arguments. So Mr. Haddon Dean of Exeter, desired leave to oppose Mr. Watson, which with two other more, that is, Morgan and Harpsfield, was appointed to answer: Mr. Haddon desired this of him, Whether any Substance of Bread or Wine did remain after the Consecration. Then Mr. Watson asked of him again, Whether he thought there to be a Real Presence of Christs Body or no? Mr. Haddon said, It was not meet nor order-like that he which was appointed to be Respondent should be Opponent, and he whose duty was to object should answer. Yet Mr. Watson a long while would not agree to answer, but that thing first being granted him, at last an order was set, and Mr. Haddon had leave to go forward with his Argument.

Then he proved by Theodorets words a Substance of Bread and Wine to remain. For these are his words; The same they were before the Sanctification, which they are after. Mr. Watson said, That Theodoret meant not the same Substance, but the same Effluence. Whereupon they were driven again unto the discussing of the Greek word etia; and Mr. Haddon proved it to mean a Substance, both by the Etymology of the word, and by the words of the Doctor. For etia, quoth he, cometh to the Particle et, which defendeth to the Verb esse, and so cometh the Noun etia, which signifieth Substance.

Then Mr. Watson answered that it had not that signification only. But Mr. Haddon proved that it must need to signify in that place. Then he asked Watson, when the Bread and Wine became Symbols? Whereunto he answered, after the Consecration, and not before. Then gathered Mr. Haddon this reason out of his Author.

Da. The same things, saith Theodoret, that the Bread and Wine were before they were Symbols, the same they remain still in Nature and Substance, after they are Symbols.

ti. Bread and Wine they were before.

fi. Therefore Bread and Wine they are after.

Then Mr. Watson fell to the denial of the Author, and said he was a Nestorian; and he desired that he might answer to Mr. Cheyney which stood by, for that he was more meet to dispute in the matter, because he had granted and subscribed unto the Real Presence. Mr. Cheyney desired patience of the honourable men to hear him, trusting that he should so open the matter, that the verity should appear: Professing furthermore, that he was no obstinate nor stubborn man, but would be conformable to all reason: and if they by their learnings, which he acknowledged to be much more than his, could answer his reasons, then he would be ruled by them, and say as they said; for he would be no Author of Schism, nor hold any thing contrary to the holy Mother the Church; which is Christ, spouse. Dr. Weston liked this well, and commended him highly, saying that he was a well-learned and sober man, and well exercised in all good learning, and in the Doctors; and finally, a man meet for his knowledge to dispute in that place; I pray you hear him, quoth he: Then Mr. Cheyney desired such as there were present to pray two words with him unto God, and to say, Vincat veritas, Let the verity take place, and have the victory; and all that were present cried with a loud voice, Vincat veritas, Vincat veritas.

Then said Dr. Weston to him, that it was hypocritical. Men may better say, quoth he, Vicet veritas, Truth hath gotten the victory. Mr. Cheyney said again, if he would give him leave, he would bring it to that point, that he might well say so.

Then he began with Mr. Watson after this sort: You said that Mr. Haddon was unmeet to dispute, because he granteth not the Natural and Real Presence; but I say you are much more unmeet to answer, because you take away the Substance of the Sacrament.

Mr. Watson said, He had subscribed to the Real Presence, and should not go away from that: So said Watson also, and the rest of the Priests; inasmuch that for a great while he could have no leave to say any more, till the Lords spake, and willed that he should be heard.

Then he told them what he meant by his subscribing to the Real Presence, far otherwise than they supposed. So then he went forward, and prosecuted Mr. Haddons Argument, in proving that etia was a Substance, using the same reason that Mr. Haddon did before him, and when he had received the same answer also that was made to Mr. Haddon, he said it was but a lewd refuge, when they could not answer, to deny the Author, and proved the Doctor to be a Catholick Doctor; and that being proved, he confirmed that which was said of the Nature and Substance further. The Similitude of Theodoret is this, quoth he; As the tokens of Christs Body and Blood, after the Invocation of the Priest, do change their names, and yet continue the same Substance; so the Body of Christ, after his Ascension, changed his name, and was called Immortal, yet had it his former Fashion, Figure, and Circumscriptio; and to speak at one word, the same Substance of his Body. Therefore said Mr. Cheyney, If in the former part of the Similitude you deny the same Substance to continue, then in the latter part of the Similitude, which agreeth with it, I will deny the Body of Christ, after his Ascension, to have the former Nature and Substance. But that were a great Heresie; therefore it is also a great Heresie to take away the Substance of Blood and Wine after the Sanctification.

Then was Mr. Watson enforced to say, That the Substance of the Body, in the former part of the Similitude brought in by him, did signifie Quantity, and other Accidents of the Sacramental Tokens which be seen, and not the very Substance of the same; and therefore Theodoret saith, Qua videntur, &c. that is, those things which be seen. For according to Philosophy, the Accidents of things be seen, and not the Substances.

Then Mr. Cheyney appealed to the Honourable men, and desired that they should give no credit to them in so saying: for if they should so think as they would teach, after their Lordships had ridden 40 miles on horseback (as their business doth sometime require) they should not be able to say at night, that they saw their Horses all the day, but only the colour of their Horses; and by this reason Christ must go to School, and learn of Aristotle to speak. For when he saw Nathaniel under the Fig-tree, if Aristotle had stood by, he would have said, No, Christ, thou sawest not him, but the colour of him. After this, Watson said, What if it were granted that Theodoret was on the other side? Whereas they had one of that opinion, there were an hundred on the other.

Then the Prolocutor called for Mr. Morgan to help, and said, That Theodoret did no more than he might lawfully do. For first, He granted the truth, and then, for fear of such as were not fully instructed in the Faith, he spake alvy-pamnis, that is, covertly, and in a mystery; and this was lawful for him to do: for first he granted the truth, and called them the Body of Christ, and Blood of Christ.

Christ. Then afterwards he seemed to give somewhat to the senses, and to reason; but that Theodore is of the same mind that they were of, the words following, quoth he, declare. For that which followeth is a cause of that which went before; and therefore he saith, The Immortality, &c. Whereby it doth appear, that he meant the Divine Nature, and not the Humane. Then was Morgan taken with misludging of the Text: For the Book had not this word (for); For the Greek word did rather signify (truly) and not (for), so that it might manifestly appear, that it was the beginning of a new matter, and not a sentence rendering a cause of that he had said before.

Then it was said by Watson again; Suppose that Theodore be with you, which is one that we never heard of printed, but two or three years ago; yet is he but one, and what is one against the whole consent of the Church? After this Mr. Cheyney inferred, That not only Theodore was of that mind, that the substance of Bread and Wine do remain, but divers other also, and specially Ireneus, who, making mention of this Sacrament, saith thus; When the Cup which is mingled with Wine, and the Bread that is broken, do receive the word of God, it is made the Eucharist of the Body and Blood of Christ, by the which the substance of our flesh is nourished, and doth consist. If the thanksgiving do nourish our body, then there is some substance besides Christs Body.

To the which reason both Watson and Morgan answered, that Ex quibus, By the which, in the sentence of Ireneus, was referred to the next Antecedent, that is, to the Body and Blood of Christ; and not to the Wine which is in the Cup, and the Bread that is broken.

Mr. Cheyney replied, That it was not the Body of Christ which nourished our bodies. And let it be that Christs flesh nourisheth to immortality, yet it doth not answer to that Argument, although it be true, no more than that answer which was made to my Allegation out of St. Paul, The bread which we break, &c. with certain other like: whereunto you answered, That Bread was not taken there in his proper signification, but for that it had been; no more than the Rod of Aaron was taken for the Serpent, because it had been a Serpent. After this Mr. Cheyney brought in Hesychius, and used the same reason that he did of burning of Symboles; and he asked them what was burnt. Mr. Watson said, We must not enquire nor ask; but if there were any fault, impute it to Christ. Then said Mr. Cheyney, whereof came those ashes? not of substance? or can any Substance arise of Accidents?

Then was Mr. Harpsfield called in to see what he could say in the matter. Who told a fair Tale of the Omnipotency of God, and of the imbecility and weakness of mans reason, not able to attain to godly things. And he said, That it was convenient whatsoever we saw, felt, or tasted, not to trust our senses. And he told a Tale out of S. Cyprian, how a woman saw the Sacrament burning in her Coffin, and that which burned there, quoth that was that was burnt he could not tell. But Mr. Cheyney continued still, and forced them with this question, What it was that was burnt? It was either said he, the substance of Bread, or else the substance of the Body of Christ, which were too much absurdity to grant. At length they answered, That it was a Miracle; whereat Mr. Cheyney smiled, and said, That he could then say no more.

Then Dr. Weston asked of the Company there, Whether those men were sufficiently answered, or no: Certain Priests cried, Yes, but they were not heard at all for the great multitude which cried, No, No. Which cry was heard and noised almost to the end of Pauls. Whereat Dr. Weston being much moved, answered bitterly, That he asked not the judgment of the rude Multitude, and unlearned People, but of them which were of the House. Then asked he of Mr. Haddon and his Fellows, whether they would answer them other three days? Haddon, Cheyney, and Elmar said, No. But the Archdeacon of Winchester stood up and said, that they should not say, but they should be answered; and though all other did refuse to answer, yet he would not, but offered to answer them all one after another: with whose proffer the Prolocutor was not contented, but railed on him, and said, That he should go to Bedlam: To whom the Archdeacon soberly made this answer, That he was more worthy to be sent thither, who used himself so ragingly in that Disputation, without any indifferent equality. Then rose Dr. Weston up, and said:

All the Company have subscribed to our Article, saving only these men which you see. What their reasons are, you have heard. We have answered them three days, upon promise (as it pleased him to defame, without truth for no such promise was made) that they should answer us again as long, as the order of disputation doth require, and if they be able to defend their Doctrine, let them so do.

Then Mr. Elmar stood up, and proved how vain a man Watson was; for he affirmed that they never promised to dispute, but only to open and testify to the world their Consciences. For when they were required to subscribe, they refused, and said that they would shew good reasons which moved them, that they could not with their Consciences subscribe, as they had partly already done, and were able to do more sufficiently: Therefore, quoth he, it hath been ill called a Disputation, and they were worthy to be blamed that were the Authors of that name. For we meant not to dispute, nor now mean to answer, before our Arguments, quoth he, which we have to propound, be solved, according as it was appointed. For by answering we should but incur our selves, and profit nothing, since the matter is already decreed upon and determined, whatsoever we shall prove, or dispute to the contrary.

The Act of the sixth Day.

ON Monday following, being the 30th of October, The Sixth Act the Prolocutor demanded of John Philpot, Archdeacon or Suffragan of Winchester, whether he would answer in the questions before propounded to their objections, or no? To whom he made this answer, That he would willingly so do, if according to their former determination, they would first answer sufficiently to some of his Arguments, as they had promised to do, whereof he had a dozen, not half of the first being yet decided: And if they would answer fully and sufficiently but to one of his Arguments, he promised that he would answer to all the objections that they should bring.

Then the Prolocutor bade him propound his Argument, and it should be refutedly answered by one of them; whereunto Mr. Morgan was appointed. Upon Wednesday last, quoth he, I was informed to silence before I had professed half mine Argument, the sum whereof was this (as was gathered by the just context of the Scripture) that the human Body of Christ was ascended into Heaven, and placed on the right hand of God the Father: wherefore it could not be finite upon Earth in the Sacrament of the Altar, invisible after the imagination of man. The Argument was denied by Morgan. For the proof whereof, Philpot said, that this was it wherewith he had to confirm his first Argument, if they would have suffered him the other day, as now he trusted they would.

Fe- One self and same nature, quoth he, receiveth not in Argument; it self any thing that is contrary to it self.

ri- But the Body of Christ is an human Nature, distinct from the Deity, and is a proper Nature of it self.

a- Ergo, It cannot receive any thing that is contrary to that Nature, and that varieth from it self.

But bodily to be present, and bodily to be absent, to be on Earth, and to be in Heaven, and all at one present time, be things contrary to the nature of an human Body. Ergo, It cannot be said of the human Body of Christ, that the self same Body is both in Heaven, and also in Earth at one Instant, either visibly or invisibly.

Morgan denied the Major, that is, the first part of the Morgan Argument. The which Philpot vouched out of Vigilius Here is a new evasion favoured by Morgan.

Philpot said, he could also so do, and right well deduce the same out of S. Paul, who saith, that Christ is like unto us in all points, except sin: and therefore, like as one of our bodies cannot receive in it self any thing contrary to the nature of a Body, as to be in Pauls Church, and at Westminster at one instant, or to be at London visibly, and at Lincoln invisibly at one time; for that is contrary to the nature of a Body, and of all Creatures (as Didimus and Basilins affirm) that an invisible Creature, as an Angel, cannot Watson.

Mr. Cheyney.

Harpsfield called in to help Watson.

Here is good stuff, as it were out of Harpsfield, burneth here, and becometh ashes. But what that was that was burnt he could not tell.

Watson would know whether they were faulted when he answered him had answered no Argument.

Mr. Philpot.

Mark Weston imputed to Bedlam.

Anno 1552.

Addressing Arguments of Watson, where he is not able to answer, he would out-lie.

Mr. Elmar reason why they would not answer.

Philpot.

One body cannot be at once in two places.

Anno 1553. cannot be at one time in divers places : wherefore he concluded that the Body of Christ might not be in more places than in one, which is in Heaven, and so consequently not to be contained in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Wilm. To this the Prolocutor took upon him to answer, saying, That it was not true that Christ was like unto us in all points, as Philpot took it, except fin. For that Christ was not conceived by the Seed of man, as we be.

Christ, after his Incarnation was in all points like man, in only except fin. Whereunto Philpot again replied, That Christ's conception was prophesied before by the Angel to be supernatural, but after he had received our Nature by the operation of the Holy Ghost in the Virgins Womb, he became in all points like unto us, except fin.

Morgan. Then Morgan inferred that this saying of Paul did not plainly prove his purpose. Well, quoth Philpot, I perceive that you do answer but by cavillation, yet am I not destitute of other Scriptures to confirm my first Argument, although you refuse the probation of Jo. Ancient and Catholic a Doctor as Vigilius is. S. Peter in the Sermon that he made in the third of the Acts, making mention of Christ, saith these words, Whom Heaven must receive, until the consummation of all things, &c. Which words are spoken of his Humanity. If Heaven must hold Christ, then can he not be here on Earth, in the Sacrament, as is pretended.

Acts 1. Then Morgan laughing at this, and giving no direct answer at all, Harpfield stood up, being one of the Bishop of London's Chaplains, and took upon him to answer to the saying of S. Peter, and demanded of Philpot, Whether he would, ex necessitate, that is, of necessity force Christ to any place, or no.

Harpfield Harpsfield Philpot. Philpot said, That he would no otherwise force Christ of necessity to any place, than he is taught by the words of the Holy Ghost, which found thus ; that Christ's human Body must abide in Heaven until the day of Judgment, as I rehearsed out of the Chapter before mentioned.

Philpot. Why, quoth Harpfield, do ye not know that God is God Omnipotent? Yes, said Philpot, I know that right well, neither doubt I any thing at all of his Omnipotency. But of Christ's Omnipotency what he may do, is not our question, but rather what he doth. I know he may make a stone in the wall a man, if he list, and also that he may make more worlds, but doth he therefore so? It were no good consequent fo to conclude; he may do this or that, therefore he doth it.

Harpfield. Ed. Only so much is to be believed of Gods Omnipotency, as is in the word exprested. ro. That Christ's Body is both in Heaven, and here also really in the Sacrament, is not exprested in the word. co. Ergo, It is not to be believed, that the Body of Christ, being in Heaven, is here also really in the Sacrament.

Ed. Only so much is to be believed of Gods Omnipotency, as is in the word exprested.

ro. That Christ's Body is both in Heaven, and here also really in the Sacrament, is not exprested in the word.

co. Ergo, It is not to be believed, that the Body of Christ, being in Heaven, is here also really in the Sacrament.

Ed. Only so much is to be believed of Gods Omnipotency, as is in the word exprested.

ro. That Christ's Body is both in Heaven, and here also really in the Sacrament, is not exprested in the word.

co. Ergo, It is not to be believed, that the Body of Christ, being in Heaven, is here also really in the Sacrament.

Ed. Only so much is to be believed of Gods Omnipotency, as is in the word exprested.

ro. That Christ's Body is both in Heaven, and here also really in the Sacrament, is not exprested in the word.

co. Ergo, It is not to be believed, that the Body of Christ, being in Heaven, is here also really in the Sacrament.

oportet se esse virum bonum, You must be a good man; where Oportet doth not in very deed conclude any such necessity, but that you may be an evil man. Thus you may see that your Answer is not sufficient; and as it were no Answer to my Argument.

Then the Prolocutor brought in another Oportet; to which help this matter (if it might be) saying, what say you to this, Oportet hereses esse; must Heresies needs be therefore because of this word Oportet?

Yes, truly, quoth Philpot, it cannot otherwise be; if Philpot you will add that which followeth immediately upon these words of Paul, that is, Ut qui electi sunt manifestentur; that is, That such as be the elect of God may be manifested and known.

Why, quoth the Prolocutor, the time hath been that no Heresies were. I know no such time, quoth Philpot. For since the time of Abel and Cain Heresies have been, and then began they. Then said the Prolocutor, Will you now answer Morgan an Argument or two? I will, quoth Philpot, if I may first be answered to my Argument.

Acts 1. Philpot mentions any thing according to truth and learning. What, quoth the Prolocutor, you will never be answered. How I am answered, quoth Philpot, let all men that are here present judge, and especially such as be Learned, and with what cavillations you have dallied with me.

First, To the ancient Authority of Vigilius you have answered nothing at all, but only denying it to be Scripture that he saith. Secondly, To the saying of S. Peter in the Acts, ye have answered thus, demanding of me whether I would keep Christ in Prison, or no: Let men now judge if this be a sufficient Answer, or no.

Then stood Morgan up again, and asked Philpot whether he would be ruled by the Universal Church, or no? Yes, quoth he, if it be the true Catholick Church. And sixth you speak so much of the Church; I would fain that you would declare what the Church is.

The Church, quoth Morgan, is diffused and dispersed throughout the whole World. That is a diffused definition, quoth Philpot, for I am yet as uncertain as I was before, what you mean by the Church: but I acknowledge no Church, but that which is grounded and founded on Gods Word, as S. Paul saith, Upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, and upon the Scriptures of God.

What, quoth Moreman, is the Scripture before the Church? Yes, quoth Philpot. But I will prove nay, quoth Moreman, and I will begin at Christ's time. The Church of Christ was before any Scripture written. For Matthew was the first that wrote the Gospel, about a dozen years after Christ: Ergo, The Church was before the Scripture.

To whom Philpot answering, denied his Argument. Which when Moreman could not prove, Philpot shewed that his Argument was Elenchus, or a fallacy, that is, a deceivable Argument. For he took the Scripture only to be that, which is written by men in Letters, whereas in very deed, all Prophecie uttered by the Spirit of God, was counted to be Scripture before it was written in Paper and Ink, for that it was written in the hearts, and graven in the minds, yes, and inspired in the mouths of good men, and of Christ's Apostles by the Spirit of Christ: As the Salvation of the Angel was the Scripture of Christ, and the Word of God before it was written. At that Moreman cried, Fie, fie, wondering that the Scripture of God should be counted Scripture before it was written, and affirmed; That he had no knowledge that said so.

To whom Philpot answered, That concerning knowledge in this behalf, for the trial of the truth about the questions in controversy, he would with himself no worse matched than with Moreman.

At the which saying the Prolocutor was grievously offended, saying, That it was arrogantly spoken of him, that would compare with such a worshipful learned man as Moreman was, being himself a man unlearned, yea, a mad man, metter to be sent to Bethlehem, than to be among such a sort of learned and grave men as there were, and a man that never would be answered, and one that troubled the whole house: and therefore he did command him that he should come no more into the house, demanding of the house, whether they would agree thereupon, or no. To whom whom a great Company answered Yea. Then said Philpot again, That he might think himself happy that was out of that Company.

Philpot commanded to come in a long Gown and a Tippet, or else to come no more to the Convocation.

Decemb. 13.

After this Morgan rose up, and rounded the Prolocutor in the ear. And then again the Prolocutor spake to Philpot, and said, Left thou shouldest slander the House, and say that we will not suffer you to declare your mind, we are content you shall come into the House as you have done before, so that you be apparelled with a long Gown and a Tippet, as we be, and that you shall not speak, but when I command you. Then, quoth Philpot, I had rather be absent altogether.

Thus they reasoning to and fro, at length about the 13th of December, Q. Mary, to take up the matter, sendeth her Commandment to Boner Bishop of London, that he should dissolve and break up the Convocation. The Copy of which Commandment here followeth.

The Precept of the Queen to Boner, Bishop of London, for the dissolving of the foresaid Convocation.

Q. Mary here speaketh up the Convocation.

Maria, &c. Reverendo in Christo Patri & Domino, Domino Edmundo London. Episcopo, salutem. Cum presens Convocatio Cleri Cantuariensis provincie apud S. Paulum London, jam modo tenta & infructus existeret, certis tamen urgentibus causis & considerationibus nos specialiter moventibus, de adusamento Concilii nostri ipsam presentem Convocationem duximus dissolvendam. Et ideo vobis Mandamus quod eandem presentem Convocationem apud Sanctum Paulum predictum debito modo absque aliqua dilatione dissolvatis, dissolvere faciatis prout conveniet, significantes ex parte nostra universis & singulis Episcopis, necnon Archiepiscopis, Decanis, & omnibus aliis personis Ecclesiasticis quibuscunque dicta Cantuariensis Provincie quorum interest, vel interesse poterit, quod ipsi & eorum quilibet huic mandato nostro exequendo intendentes sint & obedientes prout decet. Teste meipso apud Westmonasterium 13. die Decembris, Anno regni nostri primo.

During the time of this Disputation, the Twentieth day of November, the Mayor of Coventry sent up unto the Lords of the Council Baldwin Clarke, J. Careless, Thomas Wilcocks, and Richard Estlin, for their behaviour upon Alballow-day last before. Whereupon Careless and Wilcocks were committed to the Gatehouse, and Clarke and Estlin to the Marshalsey.

The same day there was a Letter directed to Sir Christopher Heydon, and Sir William Farmer Knights, for the apprehension of John Huntington Preacher, for making a Rhime against Dr. Stokes and the Sacrament. Who appearing before the Council the Third of December next after, was, upon his humble Submission and Promise to amend as well in Doctrine as in Living, again suffered to depart.

This Lord Courtney was Son to the Marquis of Exeter.

In the days of King Henry, and also King Edward reigning after him, divers Noble men, Bishops, and others, were cast into the Tower, some charged with Treason, as Lord Courtney, and the Duke of Norfolk (whose Son Lord Henry, Earl of Surrey, had been the same time beheaded, a worthy and ingenious Gentleman, for what cause, or by whom, I have not here to deal: This is certain, that not many years after his death followed the beheading of both the Lord Seymour, and at last of the Duke of Norumberland also) some for the Popes Supremacy, and suspicious Letters tending to Sedition, as Tunstall Bishop of Durham, and others, for other things, all which continued there Prisoners till Queen Maries coming in. Unto whom the said Queen effoons granted their Pardon, and restored them to their former Dignities. Amongst whom also was Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, whom she not only freed out of Captivity, but also advanced him to be High Chancellor of England. Furthermore, To the Lord Courtney she shewed such favour, that she made him Earl of Devonshire, inasmuch that there was a suspicion amongst many that she would marry him, but that proved otherwise.

Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester made Lord Chancellor of England. The Lord Courtney made Earl of Devonshire.

Good Bishops displaced.

The same time Boner also had been Prisoner in the Marshalsey; whom likewise Queen Maries delivered, and restored to the Bishoprick of London again, displacing Dr. Ridley, with divers other good Bishops more, as is above mentioned: as Crammer from Canterbury, the Archbishop of York likewise, Poynt from Winchester, Anno John Hooper from Worcester, Barlow from Bathe, Harley from Hereford, Taylor from Lincoln, Ferrar from St. Davids, Coverdale from Exeter, Scorie from Chichester, &c. with a great number of Archdeacons, Deans, and briefly all such Beneficed men, which either were married, or would constantly adhere to their Profession. All which were removed from their Livings, and of the contrary Sect set in the same, as Cardinal Pool, (who was then sent for) Gardiner, Heath, White, Day, Troublefield, &c.

And as touching Crammer, of whom mention was made before, so far as there was Rumour spread of him the same time in London, that he had Recanted, and caused Mats to be said at Canterbury, for purging of himself he published abroad a Declaration of his Truth and Constancy in that behalf, protesting that he neither had so done, nor minded so to do: Adding moreover, That if it would so please the Queen, he, with Peter Martyr, and certain other whom he would chuse, would in open Disputation sustain the Cause of the Doctrine, taught and set forth before in the time of King Edward, against all Persons whomsoever. But while he was in expectation to have this Disputation obtained, he, with other Bishops, were laid fast in the Tower, and Peter Martyr permitted to depart the Realm, and so went he to Argentine.

After this, in the Month of November, the Archbishop Crammer, notwithstanding he had earnestly refused to subscribe to the Kings Will in disinheriting his Sister Mary, alledging many grave and pithy Reasons for her Legitimation, was in Guildhall of London Arraigned of Treason, with the Lady Jane, and three of the Duke of Northumbreland Sons, which at the intreaty of certain Persons, were had again to the Tower, and there kept for a time. All which notwithstanding, Crammer being pardoned of Treason, stood only in the Action and Case of Doctrine, which they called Herefie, whereof he was right glad and joyful.

This being done in November, the People, and especially the Church-men, perceiving the Queen so eagerly set upon her old Religion, they likewise for their parts, to shew themselves no less forward to serve the Queens Appetite (as the manner is of the multitude, commonly to frame themselves after the humour of the Prince and time present) began in their Quires to set up the Pageant of St. Katharine, and of St. Nicholas, and of their Processions in Latin, after all their old Solemnity with their gay Gardeviance, and gray Amices.

And when the Month of December was come, the Parliament brake up, but first of all such Statutes were repealed which were made either of Præmunire, or touched any Alteration of Religion and Administration of Sacraments under King Edward. In the which Parliament also Communication was moved of the Queens Marriage with King Philip the Emperors Son.

In this mean while Cardinal Pool being sent for by Q. Maries, was by the Emperour requested to stay with him, to the intent (as some think) that his presence in England should not be let to the Marriage which he intended between Philip his Son and Queen Maries. For the making whereof he sent a most ample Ambassade, with full power to make up the Marriage betwixt them; which took such success, that after they had communed of the matters a few days, they knit up the Knot.

Anno 1554.

The 13th of January, 1554. Dr. Crome, for his preaching upon Christmas-day without Licence, was committed to the Fleet.

The 24th of January, Mr. Thomas Wootton Esquire, was for matters of Religion committed to the Fleet close Prisoner.

This mention of Marriage was about the beginning of January, and was very evil taken of the People, and of many of the Nobility, who for this, and for Religion, conspiring against themselves, made a Rebellion, whereof Sir Thomas Wyke Kt. was one of the chief beginners: who being in Kent, said, (as many else perceived) That the Queen and the Council would by Foreign Marriage riage bring upon this Realm most miserable Servitude, and establish Popish Religion. About the 25. of January news came to London of this Sir in Kent, and shortly after of the Duke of Suffolk, who was fled into Warwickshire and Leicestershire, there to gather a Power. The Queen therefore caused them both, with the Carew of Devonshire, to be proclaimed Traitors; and sent into Kent against Wyat, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, who being about Rochester-bridge forsaken of them that went with him, returned safe to London without any more harm done to him, and without bloodshed on either party.

Furthermore, to apprehend the Duke of Suffolk, being fled into Warwickshire, was sent the Earl of Huntingdon in Poist, who entering the City of Coventry before the Duke, disappointed him of his purpose. Wherefore the Duke in great distress, committed himself to the keeping of a Servant of his named Underwood in Ashley Park, who like a False Traitor, betrayed him. And so he was brought up to the Tower of London.

In the mean while Sir Peter Carew hearing of that was done, sent into France, but the other were taken, and Wyat came towards London in the beginning of February. The Queen hearing of Wyats coming, came into the City to the Guildhal, where she made a vehement Oration against Wyat; the Contents, at least the Effect, whereof here followeth, as near as out of her own Mouth could be penned.

I Am come unto you in mine own Person, to tell you that which already you see and know, that is, how Traitorously and Rebelliously a number of Kentishmen have assembled themselves against both us and you. Their presence (as they said at the first) was for a Marriage determined for us: To the which, and to all the Articles thereof ye have been made privy. But since we have caused certain of our Privy Council to go again unto them, and to demand the Cause of this their Rebellion, and it appeared then unto our said Council, that the matter of the Marriage seemed to be but a Spanish Cloak to cover their pretended purpose against our Religion, for that they arrogantly and traitorously demanded to have the Governance of our Person, the keeping of the Tower, and the placing of our Councillors.

Now, loving Subjects, what I am, ye right well know. I am your Queen, to whom at my Coronation, when I was wedded to the Realm, and Law: of the same (the Spousal Ring whereof I have on my Finger, which never hitherto was, nor hereafter shall be left off) you promised your Allegiance and Obedience unto me. And that I am the right and true Inheritor of the Crown of this Realm of England, I take all Christendom to witness. My Father, as ye all know, possessed the same Regal State, which now rightly is descended unto me: And to him always ye shewed your selves most faithful and loving Subjects, and therefore I doubt not, but ye will shew your selves likewise to me, and that ye will not suffer a vile Traitor to have the Order and Governance of our Person, and to occupy our Estate, especially being so vile a Traitor as Wyat is: Who most certainly, as he hath abused mine ignorant Subjects which be on his Side, so doth he intend and purpose the destruction of you, and spoil of your Goods. And I so; to you in the word of a Prince, I cannot tell how naturally the Mother loveth the Child, for I was never the Mother of love the Child, then assure your selves, that I, being your Lady and Mistress, do as earnestly and tenderly love and favour you. And thus loving you, cannot but think that ye as heartily and faithfully love me, and then I doubt not, but ye shall give these Rebels a short and speedy overthrow.

As concerning the Marriage, ye shall understand, that I enterprized not the doing thereof without Advice, and that by the Advice of all our Privy Council, who so considered and weighed the great Commodities that might ensue thereof, that they not only thought it very Honourable, but also Expedient, both for the Wealth of the Realm, and also of you our Subjects. As as touching my self, I assure you, I am not so bent to my Will, neither so precise nor affectionate, that either for mine own Pleasure I would chuse where I lust, or that I am so desirous, as needs I would have one. For God, I thank him, to whom be the Praise therefore, I have hitherto lived a Virgin, and doubt not, but with Gods Grace, I am able so to live still. But if, as my Progenitors have done before, it may please God that I might leave some Fruit of my Body behind me, to be your Governour, I trust, you would not only rejoice thereat, but also, I know, it would be to your great Comfort. And certainly, if I either did think or know, that this Marriage were to the hurt of any of you my Commons, or to the impeachment of any part or parcel of the Royal State of this Realm of England, I would never consent thereunto, neither would I ever marry while I lived. And in the Word of a Queen, I promise you, that if it shall not probably appear to all the Nobility and Commons in the High Court of Parliament, that this Marriage shall be for the high Benefit and Commodity of the whole Realm, then will I abstain from Marriage while I live.

And now good Subjects, pluck up your Hearts, and like true Men, stand fast against these Rebels, both our Enemies and yours, and fear them not; for I assure you, I fear them nothing at all. And I will leave with you my Lord Howard, and my Lord Treasurer, who shall be Assistants with the Mayor for your Defence.

Here is to be noted, that at the coming of Q. Mary to the Guildhal, it being bruited before, that she was coming with Harnessed men, such a Fear came among them, that a number of the Londoners, fearing lest they should be there intrapped and put to death, made out of the Gate before her entering in. Furthermore note, that when she had ended her Oration (which she seemed to have perfectly conned without Book) Winchester standing by her, when the Oration was done, with great admiration cried to the People; O how happy are we, to whom God hath given such a wife and learned Prince, &c.

Two days after, which was the 3. of February, the Lord Cobham was committed to the Tower, and Mr. Wyat entered into Southwark: Who, forasmuch as he could not enter that way into London, returning another way by Kingston with his Army, came up through the Streets to Ludgate, and returning thence, he was lodged at Temple-Bar, and there yielded himself to Sir Clement Perdon, and so was brought by him to the Court, and with him the residue of his Army (for before, Sir George Harpur and almost half of his men ran away from him at Kingston-Bridge) were also taken, and about an hundred killed, and they that were taken were had to Prison, and a great many of them were hanged, and he himself afterward executed at the Tower Hill, and then quartered; whose Head after being set up upon Hay-bill, was thence stolen away, and great search made for the same. Of which Story ye shall hear more (the Lord willing) hereafter.

The 12. day of February was beheaded the Lady Jane, to whom was sent Mr. Fecknam, alias Howman, from the Queen two days before her death, to commune with her, and to reduce her from the Doctrine of Christ to Q. Maries Religion: The Effect of which communication here followeth.

The Communication had between the Lady Jane and Fecknam.

Fecknam. Madam, I lament your Heavy Case, and yet I doubt not, but that you bear out this Sorrow of yours with a constant and patient Mind.

Jane. You are welcom unto me, Sir, if your coming be to give Christian Exhortation. And as for my heavy case, (I thank God) I do so little lament it, that rather I account the fame for a more manifest declaration of Gods Power toward me, than ever he shewed me at any time before. And therefore there is no cause why either you, or other which bear me good Will, should lament or be grieved with this my Case, being a thing so profitable for my Souls Health.

Feck. I am here come to you at this present sent from the Queen and her Councils, to instruct you in the true Doctrine of the right Faith: Although I have so great confidence in you, that I shall have, I trust, little need to travel with you much therein.

Jane. Forsooth, I heartily thank the Queens Highness, which is not unkindly of her humble Subject. And I hope likewise that you no less will do your Duty therein both truly and faithfully, according to that you were sent for.

Feck. Wl it is then required of a Christian Man?

Jane. That he should believe in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God.

Feck. What? Is there nothing else to be required or looked for in a Christian, but to believe in him?

Jane. Yes, we must love him with all our Heart, with all our Soul, and with all our Mind, and our Neighbour as our self.

Feck. Why? Then Faith justifieth not, nor saveth not.

Jane. Yes verily, Faith (as Paul faith) only justifieth.

Feck. Why? S. Paul faith, If I have all Faith without Love, it is nothing.

Jane. True it is; for how can I love him whom I trust not? or how can I trust him whom I love not? Faith and Love go both together, and yet Love is comprehended in Faith.

Feck. How shall we love our Neighbour?

Jane. To love our Neighbour is to feed the hungry, to cloath the naked, and give drink to the thirsty, and to do to him as we would do to our selves.

Feck. Why? then it is necessary unto Salvation to do good works also, and it is not sufficient only to believe.

Jane. I deny that, and I affirm that Faith only saveth: but it is meet for a Christian, in token that he followeth his Master Christ, to do good works, yet may we not say that they profit to our Salvation. For when we have done all, yet we be unprofitable Servants, and Faith only in Christs Blood saveth us.

Feck. How many Sacraments are there?

Jane. Two. The one the Sacrament of Baptism, and the other the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Feck. No, there are seven.

Jane. By what Scripture find you that?

Feck. Well, we will talk of that hereafter. But what is signified by your two Sacraments?

Jane. By the Sacrament of Baptism I am washed with Water and regenerated by the Spirit, and that washing is a token to me that I am the Child of God. The Sacrament of the Lords Supper offered unto me, is a sure Seal & Testimony that I am by the Blood of Christ, which he shed for me on the Crofs, made partaker of the everlasting Kingdom.

Feck. Why? what do you receive in that Sacrament?

Jane. No surely, I do not so believe. I think that at the Supper I neither receive Fleish nor Blood, but Bread and Wine: which Bread when it is broken, and the Wine when it is drunken, putteth me in remembrance how that for my Sins the Body of Christ was broken, and his Blood shed on the Crofs, and with that Bread and Wine I receive the Benefits that come by the breaking of his Body, and shedding of his Blood for our Sins on the Crofs.

Feck. Why? Doth not Christ speak these words, Take, Eat, this is my Body? Require you any plainer words? Doth he not say it is his Body?

Jane. I grant he faith so; and so he faith, I am the Vine, I am the Door, but he is never the more the Door nor the Vine. Doth not S. Paul say, He calleth things that are not as though they were? God forbid that I should say, that I eat the very natural Body and Blood of Christ: for then either I should pluck away my redemption, or else there were two Bodies, or two Christs. One Body was tormented on the Crofs, and if they did eat another Body, then had he two Bodies: or if his Body were eaten, then was it not broken upon the Crofs, or if it were broken upon the Crofs, it was not eaten of his Disciples.

Feck. Why? is it not as possible that Christ by his power could make his Body both to be eaten and broken, and to be born of a Woman without Seed of Man, as to walk upon the Sea, having a Body, and other such like Miracles as he wrought by his Power only?

Jane. Yes verily, if God would have done at his Supper any Miracle, he might have done so: but I say, that then I should receive no more Miracle, but only to break his Body, and shed his Blood on the Crofs for our Sins. But I pray you to, please me to this one question: Where was Christ, when he said, Take, eat, this is my Body? Was he not at the Table when he said so? he was at that time alive, and suffered not till the next day. What took he, but Bread, what brake he, but Bread? And what gave he, but Bread? Look, what he took, he brake: and look, what he brake, he gave: and look, what he gave, they did eat: and yet all this while he himself was alive, and at Supper before his Disciples, or else they were deceived.

Feck. You ground your Faith upon such Authors as say and unfaith both in a breath, and not upon the Church, to whom ye ought to give Credit.

Jane. No, I ground my Faith on Gods Word, and not upon the Church. For if the Church be a good Church, the Faith of the Church must be tried by Gods Word, and not Gods Word by the Church, either yet my Faith. Shall I believe the Church because of Antiquity? or shall I give credit to the Church that taketh away from me the half part of the Lords Supper, and will not let any Man receive it in both kinds? Which things, if they deny to us, then deny they to us part of our Salvation. And I say, that it is an evil Church, and not the Spouse of Christ, but the Spouse of the Devil, that altereth the Lords Supper, and both taketh from it, and addeth to it. To that Church (say I) God will add Plagues, and from that Church will he take their part out of the Book of Life: Do they learn that of S. Paul when he ministered to the Corinthians in both kinds? shall I believe this Church? God forbid.

Feck. That was done for a good intent of the Church, to avoid an Herecie that sprang on it.

Jane. Why? shall the Church alter Gods Will and Ordinance for good intent? How did King Saul? The Lord God defend.

With these and such like Perswasions he would have had her lean to the Church, but it would not be. There were many more things whereof they reasoned, but these were the chiefest.

After this, Fecknam took his leave, saying, that he was sorry for her: For I am sure, quoth he, that we two shall never meet.

Jane. True it is (said she) that we shall never meet, except God turn your Heart. For I am assured, unless you repent and turn to God, you are in an evil case: And I pray God, in the bowels of his Mercy, to send you his Holy Spirit: For he hath given you his great gift of Utterance: if it pleased him also to open the eyes of your Heart.

A Letter of the Lady Jane sent unto her Father.

Father, although it hath pleased God to hasten my death by you, by whom my life should rather have been lengthened: yet can I so patiently take it, as I yield God more hearty thanks for shortning my woful days, than if all the world had been given unto my Possessions with life lengthened at my own will. And albeit I am well assured of your impatient dolors, redoubled manifold ways, both in bewailing your own woe, and especially (as I hear) my unfortunate state, yet, my dear Father (if I may without Offence rejoyce in my own Misfortunes) me seems in this I may account my self blessed, that washing my Hands with the Innocency of my Faith, my guiltless Blood may cry before the Lord, Mercy to the Innocent. And yet, though I must needs acknowledge, that being constrained, and as you wot well enough, continually assayed, in taking upon me I seemed to consent, and therein grievously offended the Queen and her Laws: yet do I assuredly trust, that this my offence towards God is so much the less, in that, being in so royal Estate as I was, mine enforced honour, blended never with mine Innocent Heart. And thus good Father, I have opened unto you the State wherein I at present stand. Whose death at hand, although to you perhaps it may seem right woful, to me there is nothing that can be more welcome, than from this Vale of misery to aspire to that Heavenly Throne of all joy and pleasure with Christ our Saviour. In whose steadfast Faith (if it may be lawful for the Daughter so to write to the Father), the Lord that hitherto hath strengthened you, so continue you, that at the last we may meet in Heaven with the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

At what time her Father was flourishing in freedom and prosperity in the time of K. Edward, there belonged unto him a certain learned Man, Student and Graduate of the University of Oxford; who then being Chaplain to the said Duke, and a sincere Preacher (as he appeared) of the Gospel according to the Doctrine of that time set forth and received, shortly after that the State of Religion began began to alter by Queen Mary, altered also in his Profession with the Time, and of a Protestant became a Friend and Defender of the Popes Proceedings. At whose sudden mutation and unconstant mutability, this Christian Lady being not a little agrieved, and most of all lamenting the dangerous State of his Soul, in sliding so away for fear from the way of Truth, writeth her mind unto him in a sharp and vehement Letter: which (as it appeareth to proceed of an earnest and zealous Heart, so) would God it might take such effect with him, as to reduce him to repentance, and to take better hold again for the health & wealth of his own Soul. The copy of the Letter is this as followeth.

Another Letter of the Lady Jane to Mr. Harding, late Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk her Father, and then fallen from the Truth of Gods most Holy Word.

A sharp Letter or exhortation of the L. Jane to Mr. Harding

SO oft as I call to mind the dreadful and fearful saying of God, That he which layeth hold upon the plough & looketh back, is not meet for the Kingdom of Heaven: And on the other side, the comfortable words of our Saviour Christ to all those that forsaking themselves, do follow him: I cannot but marvel at thee, and lament thy case, which seemed sometime to be the lively Member of Christ, but now the deformed Imp of the Devil; sometime the beautiful Temple of God, but now the stinking and filthy Kenel of Satan; sometime the unforspoken Spouse of Christ, but now the unshamefast Paramour of Antichrist; sometime my faithful Brother, but now a Stranger and Apostate; sometime a stout Christian Souldier, but now a cowardly Run-away. Yea, when I consider these things, I cannot but speak to thee, and cry out upon thee, thou seed of Satan, and not of Judah, whom the Devil hath deceived, the World hath beguiled, and the desire of Life subverted, and made thee of a Christian an Infidel. Wherefore hast thou taken the Testament of the Lord in thy Mouth? Wherefore hast thou preached the Law and the Will of God to others? Wherefore hast thou instructed others to be strong in Christ, when thou thy self dost now so shamefully shrink, and so horribly abuse the Testament and law of the Lord? when thou thy self preacheest, not to steal, yet most abominably stealest, not from Men, but from God, and committing most heinous Sacrilege, robbest Christ thy Lord of his right Members, thy Body and Soul, and choicest rather to live miserably with shame in the World, than to die, and gloriously with Honour reign with Christ, in whom even in death is life? Why dost thou now shew thy self most weak, when indeed thou oughtest to be most strong? The strength of a Fort is unknown before the Assault, but thou yieldest thy Hold before any Battery be made. O wretched and unhappy man, what art thou but dust and ashes, and wilt thou resist thy Maker that fashioned thee and framed thee? Wilt thou now forsake him that called thee from the custom gathering among the Romish Antichristians, to be an Ambassador and Messenger of his eternal Word? He that first framed thee, and sincerely first creation and birth preserved thee, nourished and kept thee, yea, and inspired thee with the spirit of knowledge (I cannot say of grace) shall he not now possess thee? Darest thou deliver up thy self to another, being not thine own, but his? How canst thou, having knowledge, or how darest thou neglect the Law of the Lord, and follow the vain traditions of Men: And whereas thou hast been a publick Professor of his Name, become now a defacer of his Glory? Wilt thou refuse the true God, and worship the Invention of Man, the golden Calfe the Whore of Babylon, the Romish Religion, the abominable Idol, the most wicked Mali? Wilt thou torment again, rent, and tear the most precious Body of our Saviour Christ, with thy bodily and fleshly teeth? Wilt thou take upon thee to offer up any Sacrifice unto God for our Sins, considering that Christ offered up him self (as Paul saith) upon the Cross a lively Sacrifice once for all? Can neither the Possession of the Israelites, (which for their Idolatry they so oft received) nor the terrible Threatnings of the Prophets, nor the Curses of Gods own Mouth, fear thee to honour any other God than him? Dost thou so regard him that spared not his dear and only Son for thee, so diminishing, yea, utterly extinguishing his Glory, that thou wilt attribute the praise and honour due unto him to the Idols, which have Mouths and speak not, Eyes and see not, Ears and hear not; which shall perish with them that made them?

What saith the Prophet Baruch, where he recited the Epistle of Jeremy written to the Captive Jews? Did he not warn them that in Babylon they should see gods of Gold, Silver, Wood, and Stone born upon mens shoulders, to cast a fear before the Heathen? But be not ye afraid of them (saith Jeremy) nor do as other do. But when you see other worship them, say you in your hearts, It is thou (O Lord) that oughtest only to be worshipped: for as for those gods, the Carpenter framed them and polished them, yea, guided be they, and laid over with Silver and vain things, and cannot speak. He sheweth moreover the abuse of their dealings, how the Priests took off their Ornaments, and apparelled their Women withal: how one holdeth a Scepter, another a Sword in his hand, and yet can they judge in no matter, nor defend themselves, much less any other, from either Battel or Murder, nor yet from gnawing of Worms, nor any other evil thing. These and such like words speaketh Jeremy unto them, whereby he proveth them to be but vain things, and no gods. And at last he concludeth thus, Confounded be all they that worship them. They were warned by Jeremy, and thou as Jeremy hast warned others, and art warned thy self by many Scriptures in many places. God saith, he is a jealous God, which will have all Honour, Glory, and Worship given to him only. And Christ saith in the 4th. of Luke to Satan which tempted him, even to the same Belzebub, the same Devil, which hath prevailed against thee: It is written (saith he) thou shalt honour the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.

These and such like do prohibit thee and all Christians to worship any other God than which was before all worlds, and laid the Foundations both of Heaven and Earth: And wilt thou honour a detestable Idol, invented by Romish Popes, and the abominable Colledge of crafty Cardinals? Christ offered himself up once for all, and wilt thou offer him up again daily at thy Pleasure? But thou wilt say, thou dost it for a good Intent. Oh sink of Sin! Oh Child of Perdition! Dost thou dream therein of a good Intent, where thy Conscience beareth thee witness of Gods threatened Wrath against thee? How did Saul? who for that he disobeyed the Word of the Lord for a good Intent, was thrown from his Worldly and Temporal Kingdom. Shalt thou then that dost deface Gods Honour, and rob him of his Right, inherit the eternal and heavenly Kingdom? Wilt thou for a good Intent dishonour God, offend thy Brother, and danger thy Soul, wherefore Christ hath shed his most precious Blood? Wilt thou for a good intent pluck Christ out of Heaven, and make his death void, and deface the triumph of his Cross by offering him up daily? Wilt thou either for fear of death or hope of life, deny and refuse thy God, who enriched thy poverty, healed thy Infirmary, and yielded to thee his Victory, if thou couldest have kept it? Dost thou not consider that the thread of thy life hangeth upon him that made thee, who can (as his will is) either twine it harder to last the longer, or untwine it again to break the sooner? Dost thou not then remember the saying of David a notable King to teach thee a miserable wretch, in his 104. Psalm, where he saith thus: When thou takest away thy Spirit (O Lord) from men, they die and are turned again to their dust, but when thou letteth thy breath go forth, they shall be made, and thou shalt renew the face of the Earth. Remember the saying of Christ in his Gospel: Whoever seeketh to save his life, shall lose it: but whoever will lose his life for my sakes, shall find it. And in the time place, Whoever loveth Father or Mother above me, is not meet for me. He that will follow me, let him forsake himself, and take up his Cross, and follow me. What Cross? the Cross of Infamy and Shame, of Misery and Poverty, of Affliction and Persecution for his Names sake. Let the oft falling of those heavenly Showers pierce thy Stoney Heart. Let the two-edged Sword of Gods Holy Word ther attunder the Sinews of worldly respects, even to the very Marrow of thy Carnal Heart, that thou mayest once again forsake thy self and embrace Christ. And like as good Subjects will not refuse to hazard all in the defence of their Earthly and Temporal Government, so fly not like a white-livered Milkop from the standing wherein thy Chief Captain Christ hath set thee in Array of this Lake. Viriliter age, confortetur cor tuum, sustine Domine. Fight manfully, come like, come death: the quarrel is Gods, and undoubtedly the Victory is ours.

But thou wilt say; I will not break Unity. What? not the Unity of Satan and his members? nor the unity of darkness, the agreement of Antichrist and his Adherents? Nay, thou deceivest thyself with a fond imagination of such an unity as is among the enemies of Christ. Were not the false Prophets in an unity? Were not Josephs Brethren and Jacobs Sons in an unity? Were not the Heathen, as the Amalekites, the Perizzites and Jebeusites in an unity? Were not the Scribes and Pharisees in an unity? Doth not King David testify, Convenerunt in unum adversus Dominum? Yea, thieves, murderers, conspirators have their unity. But what unity? Tully saith of Amity: Amicitia non est, nisi inter bonos. But mark, my Friend, yea, friend, if thou be not Gods enemy: there is no unity but where Christ knitteth the knot among such as be his. Yea, be well assured, that where his truth is resident, there it is verified that he himself saith: Non veni mittere pacem in terram, sed gladium, &c. but to set one against another, the Son against the father, and the daughter against the mother in law. Deceive not thyself therefore with the glittering and glorious name of Unity; for Antichrist hath his unity, yet not indeed, but in name. The agreement of ill men is not an Unity, but a Conspiracy.

The agreement of evil Men is no Unity, but a Conspiracy.

Thou hast heard some threatnings, some curplings, and some admonitions out of the Scripture to those that love themselves above Christ. Thou hast heard also the sharp and biting words to those that deny him for love of life: Saith he not, He that deneth me before men, I will deny him before my Father in heaven? And to the same effect writeth Paul, Heb. 6. It is impossible (saith he) that they which were once lightened, and have tasted of the heavenly gift, and were partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted of the good Word of God, if they fall and slide away, crucifying to themselves the Son of God afresh, and making of him a mocking-stock, should be renewed again by repentance. And again, saith he, If we shall willingly sin after we have received the knowledge of his truth, there is no oblation left for sin, but the terrible expectation of Judgment, and fire which shall devour the adversaries. Thus St. Paul writeth, and this thou readest, and dost thou not quake and tremble?

Well, if these terrible and thundering threatnings cannot stir thee to cleave unto Christ, and forsake the world: yet let the sweet consolations and promises of the Scriptures, let the example of Christ and his Apostles, holy Martyrs and Confessors encourage thee to take faster hold of Christ. Hearken what he saith: Blessed are you when men revile you, and persecute you for my sake: rejoice and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the Prophets that were before you. Hear what Elijah the Prophet saith: Fear not the curse of men, for they shall die like beasts, but my righteousness shall endure for ever, and my saving health from generation to generation. What art thou then (saith he) that fearest a mortal man, the child of man, which fadeth away like the flower, and forgetteth the Lord that made thee, that spread out the heavens, and laid the foundation of the earth? I am the Lord thy God, that make the Sea to rage, and be still; whose name is the Lord of Hosts: I shall put my word in thy mouth, and defend thee with the turning of an hand. And our Saviour Christ saith to his Disciples: They shall accuse you, and bring you before Princes and Rulers for my names sake, and some of you they shall persecute and kill; but fear you not (saith he) nor care you what you shall say: for it is the spirit of your Father that speaketh within you. Even the very hairs of your head are all numbered. Lay up treasure for your selves (saith he) where no thief cometh, nor moth corrupteth. Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but fear him that hath power to destroy both soul and body. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

Let these and such like Consolations taken out of the Scriptures, strengthen you to Godward: Let not the Examples of Holy Men and Women go out of your Mind, as Daniel and the rest of the Prophets, of the three Children, of Elezazarus that constant Father, of the seven of the Maccabees Children, of Peter, Paul, Stephen, and other Apostles and Holy Martyrs in the beginning of the Church. As of good Simone Archbishop of Soloma, and Zerophane, with infinite other under Sapor: the King of the Persians and Indians, who continued all Torments devised by the Tyrants for their Saviours sake. Return, return again into Christs War, and as becometh a faithful Warriour, put on that Armour that St. Paul teacheth to be most necessary for a Christian Man. And above all things take to you the Shield of Faith, and be you provoked by Christs own Example to withstand the Devil, to forsake the World, and to become a true and faithful Member of his Mystical Body, who spared not his own Body for our Sins.

Throw down your self with the fear of his threatened Vengeance for this so great and heinous an Offence of Apostasy: And comfort your self on the other part with the Mercy, Blood, and Promise of him that is ready to turn unto you whensoever you turn unto him. Disdain not to come again with the lost Son, seeing you have so wandered with him. Be not ashamed to turn again with him from the swill of Strangers, to the delicacies of your most benign and loving Father, acknowledging that you have sinned against Heaven and Earth: Against Heaven, by staining the glorious Name of God, and causing his most sincere and pure Word to be evil spoken of through you. Against Earth, by offending so many of your weak Brethren, to whom you have been a stumbling block through your sudden sliding. Be not ashamed to come home again with Mary, and weep bitterly with Peter, not only with shedding the tears of your bodily eyes, but also pouring out the streams of your heart, to wash away out of the sight of God the filth and mire of your offensive fall. Be not ashamed to lay with the Publican, Lord be merciful unto me a sinner. Remember the horrible history of Judas of old, and the lamentable case of Spyra of late, whose case (methinks) should be yet so green in your remembrance, that being a thing of our time, you should fear the like inconvenience, seeing you are fallen into the like offence.

Last of all, let the lively remembrance of the last Day be always before your eyes, remembering the terror that such shall be in at that time, with the runagates and fugitives from Christ, which fleeing more by the World than by Heaven, more by their life, than by him that gave them life, did shrink, yea did clean fall away from him that forsok not them: and contrariwise, the inflexible Joys prepared for them, that fearing no peril, nor dreading death, have manfully fought, and victoriously triumphed over all power of Darkness, over Hell, Death, and Damnation, through their most redoubted Captain Christ, who now stretcheth out his arms to receive you, ready to fall upon your neck and kiss you, and last of all to feast you with the dainties and delicacies of his own precious Blood: which undoubtedly, if it might stand with his determinate purpose, he would not let to shed again, rather than you should be lost. To whom with the Father and the Holy Ghost, be all honours, praise, and glory everlasting. Amen.

Be constant, be constant, fear not for any pain.

Christ hath redeemed thee, and Heaven is thy gain.

A Letter written by the Lady Jane in the end of the New Testament in Greek, the which she sent unto her Sister the Lady Katherine, the Night before she suffered.

I Have here sent you (good Sister Katherine) a Book, which although it be not outwardly trimmed with Gold, yet inwardly it is more worth than precious Stones. It is the Book (dear Sister) of the Law of the Lord. It is his Testament and last Will which he bequeathed unto us Wretches: which shall lead you to the path of eternal Joy, and if you with a good mind read it, and with an earnest mind do purpose to follow it, it shall bring you to an immortal and everlasting life. It shall teach you to live, and learn you to dye. It shall win you more than you should have gained by the possession of your woful Fathers Lands. For as, if God had prospered him, you should have inherited his Lands; so if you apply diligently this Book, seeking to direct your life after it, you shall be an inheritor of such Riches, as neither the covetous (shall withdraw from you, neither thief shall steal, neither yet the moths corrupt. Desire with David good Sister, so understand So live to the Law of the Lord God. Live still to dye, that you by dye, that by death you may purchase eternal life. And trust not that death may live.

dermes of your age shall lengthen your life; for as soon (if God call) goeth the young as the old, and labour always to learn to die. Desie the World, deny the Devil, and despise the Flesh, and delight your self only in the Lord. Be penitent for your Sins, and yet despair not: Be strong in Faith, and yet presume not; and desire with St. Paul to be dissolved and to be with Christ, with whom even death there is life. Be like the good Servant, and even at midnight be waking, lest when death cometh and stealeth upon you as a Thief in the Night, you be with the evil Servant, found sleeping, and left for lack of Oil, you be found like the five foolish Women, and like him that had not on the Wedding Garment, and then ye be cast out from the Marriage. Rejoyce in Christ, as I do. Follow the steps of your Master Christ, and take up your Cross: lay your Sins on his Back, and always embrace him. And as touching my Death, rejoyce as I do, (good Sister) that I shall be delivered of this Corruption, and put on Incorruption. For I am assured, that I shall for loosing of a mortal life gain an immortal life, the which I pray God grant you, and (and you of his Grace to live in his Fear, and to die in the True Christian Faith, from the which (in Gods Name) I exhort you, that you never swerve, neither for hope of life, nor for fear of death. For if you will deny his Truth for to lengthen your Life, God will deny you, and yet shorten your days. And if you will cleave unto him, he will prolong your days to your Comfort: and his Glory: To the which Glory God bring me now, and you hereafter, when it pleaseth him to call you. Fare you well, good Sister, and put your only Trust in God, who only must help you.

Here followeth a certain Effectual Prayer, made by the Lady Janc in the time of her Trouble.

A Prayer of the Lady Janc.

O Lord, thou God and Father of my Life, bear me poor and desolate Woman, which flyeth unto thee only, in all Troubles and Miseries. Thou, O Lord, art the only Defender and Deliverer of those that put their Trust in thee: And therefore, I being defiled with sin, encumbered with affliction, unquieted with troubles, wrapped in cares, overwhelmed with miseries, vexed with temptations, and grievously tormented with the long imprisonment of this vile masse of Clay my sinful Body, do come unto thee (O merciful Saviour) craving thy mercy and help, without the which so little hope of deliverance is left, that I may utterly despair of any Liberty. Albeit it is expedient, that seeing our life standeth upon trying, we should be visited sometime with some adversity, whereby we might both be tried whether we be of thy Flock or no, and also know thee and our selves the better: Yet thou that saidst thou wouldest not suffer us to be tempted above our power, be merciful unto me now a miserable wretch I beseech thee; which, with Solomon, do cry unto thee, humbly desiring thee, that I may neither be too much puffed up with Prosperity, neither too much pressed down with Adversity, lest I being too full, should deny thee my God, or being too low brought, should despair, and blaspheme thee my Lord and Saviour. O merciful God, consider my misery best known unto thee; and be thou now unto me a strong Tower of Defence, I humbly require thee. Suffer me not to be tempted above my Power, but either be thou a Deliverer unto me out of this great misery, or else give me grace patiently to bear thy heavy Hand and sharp Correction. It was thy right Hand that delivered the People of Israel out of the hands of Pharaoh, which for the space of four hundred Years did oppress them, and keep them in Bondage. Let it therefore likewise seem good to thy Fatherly Goodness, to deliver me (forwoful Wretch (for whom thy Son Christ shed his precious Blood on the Cross) out of this miserable Captivity and Bondage, wherein I am now. How long wilt thou be absent? for ever? Oh Lord, hast thou forgotten to be gracious, and hast thou shut up thy loving kindness in displeasure? Wilt thou be no more intreated? Is thy Mercy clear gone for ever, and thy Promise come utterly to an end for evermore? Why dost thou make so long tarrying? Shall I despair of thy Mercy, O God? far be that from me. I am thy Workmanship created in Christ Jesus; Give me Grace therefore to carry thy leisure, and patiently to bear thy works, assuredly knowing, that as thou canst, so thou wilt deliver me, when it shall please thee, nothing doubting or mistrusting thy Goodness towards me; for thou knowest better what is good for me than I do: therefore do with me in all things what thou wilt, and plague me what way thou wilt. Only in the mean time arm me, I beseech thee, with thy Armour, that I may stand fast, my Loins being girded about with Verity, having on the Breastplate of Righteousness, and (hod with the Shoes prepared by the Gospel of Peace; above all things taking to me the Shield of Faith, wherewith I may be able to quench all the fiery Darts of the Wicked, and taking the Helmet of Salvation, and the Sword of the Spirit, which is thy most Holy Word, Praying always with all manner of Prayer and Supplication, that I may refer my self wholly to thy Will, abiding thy Pleasure, and comforting my self in those Troubles that it shall please thee to send me: Seeing such Troubles be profitable for me, and seeing I am assuredly persuaded that it cannot be but well all that thou dost. Hear me, O merciful Father, for his sake, whom thou wouldst should be a Sacrifice for my Sins: To whom with thee and the Holy Ghost, be all Honour and Glory: Amen.

Eph. 6.

After these things thus declared, it remaineth now, coming to the end of this Vertuous Lady; next to infer the manner of her Execution, with the Words and Behaviour of her at the time of her Death.

These are the Words that the Lady Janc spake upon the Scaffold at the Hour of her Death.

The words and of the
of the Lady Janc upon the Scaffold.

First when she mounted upon the Scaffold, she said to the People standing thereabout; Good People, I am come hither to die, and by a Law I am condemned to the same. The Fact against the Queens Highness was unlawful, and the consenting thereto by me: But touching the procurement and desire thereof by me or on my behalf, I do waite my hands thereof in Innocency before God, and the Face of you, good Christian People, this day: And therewith she wrung her hands, wherein she had her Book. Then said she, I pray you all good Christian People, to bear me witness that I die a true Christian Woman, but that I do look to be saved by no other mean, but only by the Mercy of God in the Blood of his only Son Jesus Christ: And I confess, that when I did know the Word of God, I neglected the same, loved my self and the World; and therefore this Plague and Punishment is happily and worthily happened unto me for my Sins: And yet I thank God, that of his Goodness he hath thus given me a time and respite to repent: And now good People, while I am alive, I pray you assist me with your Prayers. And then kneeling down, she turned her to Eckenham, saying: Shall I say this Psalm? And he said, Yea. Then said she the Psalm of Miserere mei Deus in English, in most devout manner throughout to the End, and then she stood up, and gave her Maiden Mistress Ellen her Gloves and Handkerchiefs, and her Book to Master Bruges, and then she untied her Gown, and the Hangman pressed upon her to help her off with it, but she desiring him to let her alone, turned towards her two Gentlemen, which helped her off therewith, and also with her Frowes, Paft and Neckkerchief, giving to her a fair Handkerchief to knit about her Eyes.

Then the Hangman kneeled down and asked her Forgiveness, whom she forgave most willingly. Then he willed her to stand upon the Straw; which doing, she saw the Block. Then she said, I pray you dispatch me quickly. Then she kneeled down, saying: Will you take it off before I lay me down? And the Hangman said, No Madam. Then tied she the Handkerchief about her Eyes, and feeling for the Block, she said: What shall I do? Where is it? Where is it? One of the Standers by guiding her thereunto, she laid her head down upon the Block, and then stretched forth her Body, and said: Lord, into thy Hands I commend my Spirit, and so finished her Life, in the Year of our Lord God, 1554. the 22. Day of February.

Lady Jane

Gilford dead
by beheaded.

Thus the twelfth day of February (as I ſaid) was beheaded the Lady Jane, and with her alſo the Lord Gilford her Husband, one of the Duke of Northumberland's Sons, two Innocents in compariſon of them that ſate upon them. For they did but ignorantly accept that which the others had willingly deviled, and by open Proclamation conſented to take from others, and give to them.

Touching the Condemnation of this Lady Jane, here is to be noted, that the Judge Morgan, who gave the Sentence of Condemnation againſt her, ſhortly after he had condemned her, fell Mad, and in his raving cried out continually to have the Lady Jane taken away from him, and ſo ended his Life.

And not long after the death of the Lady Jane upon the 21 of the ſame Month, was Henry Duke of Suffolk alſo beheaded at the Tower-Hill, the fourth day after his Condemnation : About which time alſo were condemned for this Conſpiracy many Gentlemen and Yeomen, whereof ſome were executed at London, and ſome in the Country. In the number of whom was alſo the Lord Thomas Gray, Brother to the ſaid Duke, being apprehended not long after in Northwales, and executed for the ſame. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton very hardly eſcaped, as ye ſhall hear (the Lord willing) in another place.

First, that every Bishop and his Officers, with all other having Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, shall with all speed and diligence, and all manner of ways to them possible, put in Execution all such Canons and Ecclesiastical Laws, heretofore in the time of King Henry the Eighth used within this Realm of England, and the Dominions of the same, not being directly and expressly contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

Item, That no Bishop, or any of his Officers, or other person aforesaid, hereafter in any Ecclesiastical Writings, in Process or other Extrajudicial Acts, do use to put in this Clause or Sentence, Regia auctoritate fulcitur.

Item, That no Bishop, or any of his Officers, or other person aforesaid, do hereafter exact or demand in the Admission of any person to any Ecclesiastical Promotion, Order, or Office, any Oath touching the Primacy or Succession, as of late in few years passed hath been accustomed and used.

Item, That every Bishop and his Officers, with all other persons aforesaid, have a vigilant Eye, and use special diligence and foresight, that no person be admitted or received to any Ecclesiastical Function, Benefice, or Office, being a Sacramentary, infected or defamed with any notable kind of Heresie, or other great Crime, and that the said Bishop do stay, and cause to be stayed, as much as lieth in him, that Benefices and Ecclesiastical Promotions do not notably decay, or take hinderance by passing or confirming of unreasonable Leases.

Item, That every Bishop, and all other persons aforesaid, do diligently travel for the repressing of Heresies and notable crimes, especially in the Clergy, duly correcting and punishing the same.

Item, That every Bishop, and all the other persons aforesaid, do likewise travel for the condemning and repressing of corrupt and naughty Opinions, unlawful Books, Ballads, and other pernicious and hurtful Devices, engendering Hatred amongst the People, and Discord among the same. And that Schoolmasters, Preachers and Teachers do exercise and use their Offices and Duties without teaching, preaching, or setting forth any evil and corrupt Doctrine, and that doing the contrary, they may be by the Bishop and his said Officers punished and removed.

Item, That every Bishop, and all other persons aforesaid, proceeding summarily, and with all celerity and speed, may and shall deprive or declare deprived, and remove, according to their learning and discretion, all such Persons from their Benefices and Ecclesiastical Promotions, who contrary to the State of their Orders and the laudable custom of the Church, have married and used Women as their Wives, or otherwise notably and scandalously disordered or abused themselves: Sequestering also, during the said Process, the Fruits and Profits of the said Benefices and Ecclesiastical Promotions.

Item, That the said Bishop, and all other Persons aforesaid, do use more lenity and clemency with such as have married, whose Wives be dead, than with other whole Women do yet remain alive. And likewise such Priests, as with the consent of their Wives or Women openly in the presence of the Bishop do profess to abstain, to be used more favourably. In which case, after the Penance effectually done, the Bishop, according to his discretion and wisdom, may upon just Consideration receive and admit them again to their former Administration; so it be not in the same place, appointing them such a portion to live upon, to be paid out of their Benefice whereof they be deprived, by discretion of the said Bishop or his Officers, as he shall think may be spared of the said Benefice.

Item, That every Bishop, and all other persons aforesaid, do foresee that they suffer not any Religious Man, having solemnly professed Chastity, to continue with his Woman or Wife, but that all such persons after deprivation of their Benefice or Ecclesiastical Promotion, be also divorced every one from his said Woman, and due Punishment otherwise taken for the offence therein.

Item, That every Bishop, and all other persons aforesaid, do take order and direction with the Parishioners of every Benefice, where Priests do want, to repair to the next Parish for Divine Service, or to appoint for a convenient time, till other better Provision may be made, one Curate to serve, Alienis vicibus, in divers Parishes, and to allot to the Curate for his Labour some Portion of the Benefice that he so serveth.

Item, That all and all manner of Processions of the Church be used and frequented, to continue with his old Order of the Church, in the Latine Tongue.

Item, That all such Holy days and Fasting days be observed and kept, as were observed and kept in the latter time of King Henry the Eighth.

Item, That the laudable and honest Ceremonies which were wont to be used, frequented, and observed in the Church, be also hereafter frequented, used, and observed.

Item, That Children be christened by the Priest, and confirmed by the Bishop, as heretofore hath been accustomed and used.

Item, Touching such persons as were heretofore promoted to any Orders, after the new sort and fashion of Orders: considering they were not ordered in very deed, the Bishop of the Dioceses finding otherwise sufficiency and ability in those men, may supply that thing which wanted in them before, and then according to his discretion admit them to minister.

Item, That by the Bishop of the Dioceses an uniform doctrine be set forth by Homilies, or otherwise, for the good instruction and teaching of all people: And that the said Bishop and other persons aforesaid, do compel the Parishioners to come to their several Churches, and there devoutly to hear Divine Service, as of reason they ought.

Item, That they examine all Schoolmasters and teachers of Children, and finding them suspect in any wise, to remove them, and place Catholic men in their rooms, with a special commandment to instruct their Children, so as they may be able to answer the Priest at the Mass, as hath been accustomed.

Item, That the said Bishop, and all other the persons aforesaid, have such regard, respect, and consideration of and for the setting forth of the premisses, with all kind of vertue, godly living, and good example, with repressing also and keeping under of Vice and Unthriftiness, as they and every of them may be seen to favour the reformation of true Religion; and also to make an honest account and reckoning of their office and cure, to the honour of God, our good contentation and profit of this our Realm, and the Dominions of the same.

A like Precept also with Articles, was sent from the said Queen Mary to the Lord Mayor of London, the fourth day of March, in the year aforesaid, which Lord Mayor upon the same directed his commandment to the Aldermen, every one severally in his Ward, containing as followeth;

ABOUT the same year and time, when Doctor Boner set forth this Prescript or Monitory, there came from the Queen another Proclamation against Strangers and Forreiners within this Realm. The purpose and intent of which Proclamation, because it chiefly and most specially concerned Religion and Doctrine, and the true Professors thereof, I thought here to annex the tenor and manner of the same.

A Copy of the Queens Proclamation for the driving out of the Realm Strangers and Forrainers.

Q. Maries Proclamation on tor driving out of Strangers.

THE Queen our Sovereign Lady, understanding that a multitude of evil disposed persons, being born out of her Highness's Dominions in other sundry Nations, flying from the obedience of the Princes and Rulers under whom they be borne, (some for Heresie, some for Murder, Treason, Robbery, and some for other horrible Crimes,) be resorted into this her Majesty's Realm, and here have made their demerit, and yet be commorant and lingering, partly to shew such condign punishment as their said horrible Crimes deserve, and partly to dilate, plant, and sow the seeds of their malicious Doctrine and lewd Conversation among the good Subjects of this her said Realm, on purpose to infect her good Subjects with the like, inasmuch as (besides innumerable Heresies, which divers of the same being Heretics have preached and taught within her Highness's said Realm) it is assuredly known unto her Majesty, that not only their secret practices have not failed to stir, comfort and aid divers her Highness's Subjects to this most unnatural Rebellion against God and her Grace, but also some other of them desist not still to practise with her people evilson to rebel: her Majesty therefore having (as afore is said) knowledge and intelligence hereof, hath for remedy herein determined, and most faithfully charged and commanded, that all and every such person or persons born out of her Highness's Dominions, now commorant or resident within this Realm, of whatsoever Nation or Country, being either Preacher, Printer, Bookseller, or other Artificer, or of whatsoever Calling else, not being Denizen or Merchant known using the trade of Merchandize, or Servant so such Ambassador as be Liegers here from the Princes and States joynd in League with her Grace, shall within 24. days of this Proclamation, avoid the Realm upon pain of most grievous punishment by imprisonment, and forfeiture and confiscation of all their goods and moveables, and also to be delivered unto their natural Princes or Rulers, against whose persons or laws they have offended. Giving to all Masters, Sheriffs, Bayliffs, Constables, and all other her Ministers, Officers, and good Subjects faithfully also in charge, if they know any such person, not born in the Queens Highness's Dominions (except before excepted) that shall, after the time and day limited in the Proclamation, tarry within this Realm, that they shall apprehend the same person or persons, and commit him or them to Ward, there to remain without bail or mainprize, till her Graces pleasure or her Councils be signified unto them, for the further ordering of the said person or persons. And that if any of her said Officers, after the said 24. days, apprehend, take, or know of any such, they shall with all diligence immediately certify her said Council thereof, to the intent order may be forthwith given for their punishment according.

¶ In the mean while, upon the Proclamation before-mentioned, not only the Strangers in King Edwards time received into the Realm for Religion, among whom was Peter Martyr, and John Alsco Uncle to the King of Poland, but many English-men fled, some to Freisland, some to Cleveland, some to High Germany, where they were diversly scattered unto divers Companies and Congregations, at Wesel, at Frankford, Emden, Mark-purg, Tramshorough, Basil, Aron, Zurich, Geneva, and other places: where by the Providence of God they were all sustained, and there entertained with greater favour amongst Strangers abroad, than they could be in their own Country at home, well near to the number of 800 persons, Students and others together.

In the said month of March, the Lord Courtney Earl of Devonshire, whom the Queen at her first entring delivered out of the Tower, and Lady Elizabeth also the Queens Sister, were both in suspicion to have consented to Wyatts Conspiracy, and for the same, this March, were apprehended and committed to the Tower.

Touchoing the imprisonment of which Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, thou shalt note here for thy learning (good Reader) a pollick Point of practice in Steven Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, not unworthy to be considered. This Gardiner being always a capital Enemy to the Lady Elizabeth, and thinking now by the occasion of Master Wyat, to pick out some matter against the Lord Courtney, and so in the end to entangle the Lady Elizabeth, devised a pefilient practice of conveyance, as in the story here following may appear.

The story is this. The same day that Sir Thomas Wyat died, he desired the Lieutenant to bring him to the presence of the Lord Courtney. Who there before the Lieutenant and the Sheriffs kneeling down upon his knees, he sought the L. Courtney to forgive him, for that he had falsely accused both the Lady Elizabeth and him, and so being brought from thence unto the Scaffold to suffer there openly in the hearing of all the people, cleared the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lord Courtney, to be free and innocent from all suspicion of that Commotion. At which Confession Doctor Wesley there standing by, cried to the people, Anno 1554. people, saying: Believe him not good People, for he confessed otherwise before unto the Council.

After the Execution done of Sir Thomas Wyatt, which was the 11. day of April, word was brought immediately unto the Lord Mayor Sir Thomas White, a little before dinner, how Master Wyatt had cleared the Lady Elizabeth and Lord Courtney, and the words also which Doctor Weston spake unto the People; and wherunto the Lord Mayor answering: Is this true, quoth he? said Weston so? In sooth, I never took him otherwise but for a Knave. Upon this the Lord Mayor sitting down to dinner (who dined the same day at the Bridg-house) cometh in Sir Martin Bowes with the Recorder, newly come from the Parliament-House, who hearing of the Mayor and Sheriffs this report of Wyatts Confession, both upon the Scaffold and also in the Tower, marvelled thereat, declaring how there was another Tale contrary to this, told the same day in the Parliament-House, which was, That Sir Thomas Wyatt should desire the Lord Courtney to confess the truth, so as he had done before.

Upon this it followed not long after, that a certain Prentice dwelling in Saint Lawrence Lane, named Cut, as he was drinking with one Denham a Plasterer, being one of Queen Maries Servants, amongst other talk made mention how Sir Thomas Wyatt had cleared the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, to be no confesters to his rising. Which words being brought to Gardiner (by what means I know not) incontinent upon the same, Sir Andrew Judd was sent by the said Bishop unto the Lord Mayor, commanding him to bring the said Prentice to the Star-Chamber, which was accused of these words, that he should say, That Wyatt was constrained by the Council to accuse the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney. Which Fellow when he was come to the Star-Chamber, the aforesaid Gardiner, letting pass other matters that were in hand, began to declare to the whole Multitude, how miraculously Almighty God had brought the Queens Majesty to the Crown, the whole Realm in a manner being against her, and that he had brought this to pass for this singular intent and purpose, that this Realm being overwhelmed with Heresies, the might reduce again the same unto the true Catholick Faith. And where he took the Lady Elizabeth into her favour, and loved her so tenderly, and also the Lord Courtney, who had long time been detained in prison, and by her was set at liberty, and received great benefits at her hands, and notwithstanding all this they had conspired most unaturally and traitorously against her, with that heinous Traitor Wyatt, as by the Confession of Wyatt (said he) and the Letters sent to and fro may plainly appear: Yet there were some in the City of London which reported, That Wyatt was constrained by the Council to accuse the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, and yet you, my Lord Mayor, quoth he, have not seen the same punished.

The Party is here, said the Lord Mayor. Take him with you said Gardiner, and punish him according to his desert; and said further, My Lord, take heed to your charge; the City of London is a Whirl-pool and sink of all evil Rumors, where they be bred, and from thence spread into all parts of this Realm.

There stood by the same time the Lord Shandis, who being then Lieutenant of the Tower, and now hearing the Bishop thus speak, to stoich his Tale, came in with these words as followeth:

My Lords (quoth he) this is a truth that I shall tell you, being Lieutenant of the Tower when Wyatt suffered, he desired me to bring him to the Lord Courtney; which when I had done, he fell down upon his knees before him in my presence, and desired him to confess the truth of himself, as he had done before, and to submit himself unto the Queens Majesties mercy.

And thus much I thought of this matter to declare, to the intent, that the Reader perceiving the proceedings of the Bishops in the premises, and comparing the same with the true testimony of Wyatts himself, and with the testimony of the Sheriffs, which were present the same time when Sir Thomas Wyatt asked the Lord Courtney forgiveness, may the better judge of the whole case and matter for which the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lord Courtney were so long in trouble. Of which her Graces trouble; hereafter (God willing) more shall be said in the story of her life. In the mean time to let this matter stay; let us now pass further in our History.

Not long after this, Queen Mary partly fearing the Londoners by occasion of Wyatts Conspiracy, partly perceiving most of the City for Religions sake not greatly to favour her Proceedings, to their dislike and hindrance summoned a Parliament to be holden at Oxford: as it were to gratifie that City, whoe both the University, Town; and Country had shewed themselves very obedient and forward; especially in refusing Papish Religion. For this purpose great provision was made, as well by the Queens Officers, as by the Townsmen and Inhabitants of Oxford, and the Country about.

But the Queens mind in short space changed, and the same Parliament was holden at Westminster in April following. Then the Queen, beside other things, propoed concerning her Marriage to King Philip, and restoring of the Popes Supremacy: as touching her Marriage, it was agreed upon; but the other Request could not as then be obtained.

The same time when this Parliament was summoned; the also summoned a Convocation of Bishops; and of the Clergy, writing unto Boner (whom he had made Vicegerent in the stead of Cranmer, being then in the Tower) after the tenor and form of a new stile, differing from the old stile of King Henry; and King Edward, as followeth.

The stile of Queen Mary altered, writing to Boner for the summoning of a Convocation.

Maria Dei gratia, Anglie, Francie, & Hibernie Regina, fidei defensor, Reverendo in Christo patri Edmundo London. Episcopo salutem. Licet nuper quibusdam arduis & urgentibus negotiis nos securitatem & defensionem Ecclesie Anglicane, ac pacem & tranquillitatem, &c.

Where note, good Reader, concerning the altering and changing the Queens stile; the latter part thereof to be left out of her stile, which is: Ecclesie Anglicane & Hibernie supremum caput, because in this present Parliament the Supremacy being given away from the Crown of England to the Pope, thereupon this parcel of the Title was also taken away. Likewise the said Boner giving his Certificate upon the same, leaves out Autoritate Illustrissime, &c. legitimis suffragis: which parcel also in the same Parliament was repealed and taken away the same time.

The Dignity of Priests extolled by Bishop Boner:

In this aforesaid Convocation, Boner Bishop of London being Vicegerent and President, as is said; made a certain Exhortation or Oration to the Clergy (which was in this Convocation, or much about the said time) wherein he seemeth to shew a great piece of profound and deep Learning, in setting forth the most incomparable and super-angelical order of Priesthood, as may appear by this parcel or fragment of his aforesaid Oration, being collected and gathered by some that stood by: which as it came to our hands, so I thought, to impart it to the Reader, both for that the Author of so worthy a work should not pass unknown, and partly also; for that the estimation of this blessed Order should lose nothing of its preeminence; but might be known in most ample perfection, so as it standeth above Angels and Kings; if it be true that Boner saith.

A piece or fragment of the Exhortation made by Boner Bishop of London, to them of the Convocation-House, copied out by them that stood by and heard him.

Wherefore it is to be known, that Priests and Elders be worthy of all men to be worshipped for the Dignity sake which they have of God, as in Matthew 16. Whosoever ye shall tie upon earth, &c. And what whatsoever ye shall bind, &c. For a Priest by some means is like Mary the Virgin, and is shewed by three points; As the blessed Virgin by five words did conceive Christ, so it is said: Luke 1. Fiat mihi secundum verbum tuum: that is to say, Be it unto me according to thy word: so the Priest by five words doth make the very Body of Christ.

Even as immediately after the consent of Mary, Christ was all whole in her womb: so immediately after the speaking of the words of Consecration; the Bread is substantiated into the very Body of Christ. Secondly, As the Virgin carried Christ in her arms, and laid him in an Ox-stall after his birth; even so the Priest after the Consecration, doth lift up the Body of Christ, and placeth it, and carrieth it, and handleth it with his hands. Thirdly, As the blessed Virgin was sanctified before she had conceived; so the Priest being ordained and anointed before he doth consecrate, because without Orders he could consecrate nothing: therefore the Lay-man cannot do that thing, although he be never so holy, and do speak the self-same words of consecration. Therefore here is to be known, that the Dignity of Priests by some means passeth the Dignity of Angels, because there is no power given to any of the Angels to make the Body of Christ. Whereby the least Priest may do in Earth, that which the greatest and highest Angel in Heaven cannot do, as Saint Bernard saith, O worshipful Dignity of Priests, in whose hands the Son of God is, as in the womb of the Virgin he was incarnate. St. Augustine saith, That Angels in the consecration of the Sacred Host do serve him, and the Lord of Heaven defendeth to him. Whereupon S. Ambrose upon Saint Luke saith, Doubt thou not the Angels to be where Christ is present upon the Altar. Wherefore Priests are to be honoured before all Kings of the Earth, Princes, and Nobles. For a Priest is higher than a King, happier than an Angel, maker of his Creator. Wherefore, &c.

It was declared a little before, how Doctor Ridley was had from Fremingham to the Tower; where being in durance, and invited to the Lieutenants Table, he had certain talk or conference with Secretary Bourne, Master Fecknam, and other, concerning the Controversies in Religion: the sum whereof, as it was penned with his own hand, hereafter ensueth, Here followeth the sum and effect of the Communication between Doctor Ridley and Secretary Bourne, with others, at the Lieutenants Table in the Tower.

Sir Thomas at Bridges.

Who is an Heretick.

An Heretick defined by S. Augustine.

Fecknam provoking Mr. Ridley.

Unity, Antiquity, Universality.

After Thomas of Bridges said at his Brother Masters Lieutenants Board, I pray you Master Doctors, for my Learning, tell me what an Heretick is. Master Secretary Bourne said, I will tell you who is an Heretick; who so stubbornly and stiffly maintaineth an Untruth, he is an Heretick. You mean Sir, said I, an Untruth in matters of Religion, and concerning our Faith. Yes, that is true said he; and in this we are soon agreed. Then said Master Fecknam, whom they called Master Dean of Pauls, sitting at the upper end of the Table, I will tell you by Saint Augustine who is an Heretick; Qui adulandi principibus vel lucrī gratia falsas opiniones gignit vel sequitur, hereticus est, saith S. Augustine. And then he Englished the same. Sir, said I, I wene S. Augustine addeth the third number, which is, vel vanæ gloriæ causa. You say even true, Master Doctor, said he, and thus far we did agree all three.

Master Fecknam began again to say, Who so doth not believe what the Scripture affirmeth, but will obstinately maintain the contrary, he is Hereticus: As in the Sacrament of the Altar Matthew doth affirm there to be Christs Body, Mark doth affirm it, Luke affirmeth it, Paul affirmeth it, and none denieth it: therefore to hold the contrary is Heresie. It is the same Body and Flesh that was born of the Virgin; and this is confirmed by Unity, Antiquity, and Universality. For none before Berengarius did ever doubt of this, and he was an Heretick, as Master Doctor there knoweth full well; I do take to witness his own Confidence, said he.

Marry Sir, said Master Secretary, Master Fecknam hath spoken well. These be great matters, Unity, Antiquity, and Universality. Do you not think so Master Doctor, said he to me?

Here, while I scarce I courties, and pretended no willingness to talk; said one of the Commissioners, Peradventure Master Ridley doth agree with Master Fecknam, and then there needs not much debating of the matter.

Sir, said I, in some things I do and shall agree with him, and in some things which he hath spoken, to be plain, I do not agree with him at all. Masters, said I, ye be (as I understand) the Queens Commissioners here, and if ye have commission to examine me in these matters, I shall declare unto you plainly my Faith; if ye have not, then I shall pray you either to give me leave to speak my mind freely, or else to hold my peace.

There is none here, said Master Secretary, that doth not favour you: and then every man shewed what favour they bear towards me, and how glad they would be of an agreement.

But as I strained to have licence of them in plain words to speak my mind, some thought they granted me it for vice or egre. Well, at the last I was content to take it for licensed, and so began to talk.

To Master Fecknams Arguments of the manifold affirmation where no denial was, I answered; Where is a multitude of Affirmations in Scripture, and where is one Affirmation, all is one concerning the truth of the matter: for that which any one of the Evangelists spake, inspired by the Holy Ghost, was as true as that which is spoken of them all. It is as true that John saith of Christ, Ego sum ovium ovium, i. I am the door of the Sheep, as if all had said it. For it is not in Scripture as in witness of men, where the number is credited more than one, because it is uncertain with what spirit he doth speak. And where Master Fecknam spake of so many affirming without any Negation, &c. Sir, said I, all they do affirm the thing which they meant. Now if ye take their words, to leave their meaning, then do they affirm what ye take, but not what they meant. Sir, said I, if I talk with you, I should so utter my mind in words that ye by the same do, and may plainly perceive my meaning, and could, if you would be capacious, cavil at my words, and writh them to another fable, I would think ye were no gentle Companions to talk with, except ye would take my words as ye did perceive I did mean.

Marry, quoth Master Secretary, we should else do you plain injury and wrong.

Master Fecknam perceiving whereunto my talk went: Why, quoth he, what circumstances can ye shew me that shall move to think of any other sense, than as the words plainly say, Hoc est corpus meum, quod pro vobis traditur, i. This is my Body which shall be betrayed for you?

Sir, said Leven the next Sentence that followeth, Hoc facite in meam commemorationem. Do this in my remembrance. And also by what reason ye say the Bread is turned into Christs carnal Body, for the same I may say, that it is turned into his mystical Body. For as that saith of it, Hoc est corpus, quod pro vobis traditur: so Paul which spake by these words Christs Spirit, saith, Unus panis & unum corpus multis sumus omnes, qui de uno pane participamus, i. We being literally many are all but one Bread and one Body, inasmuch as we are partakers of one Bread.

Here he calleth one Bread, one Loaf, said Master Secretary.

Yes, said I, one Loaf, one Bread, all is one with me.

But what say ye, quoth Master Secretary, of the Universality, Antiquity, and Unity, that Master Fecknam did speak of?

I ensue you, said I, I think them matters weighty, and to be considered well. As for Unity, the truth is be, fore God, I do believe it, and embrace it, so it be with Verity, and joyed to our Head Christ, and such an one as Paul speaketh of, saying, Una Fides, unus Deus, unum Baptisma, i. One Faith, one God, One Baptism. And for Antiquity, I am also persuaded that to be true which Antiquity.

In our Religion Christs Faith was first taught by Christ himself, by his Apostles, and by many good Men, that from the beginning did succeed next unto them; and for this controversie of the Sacrament, I am persuaded that those old Writers, which wrote before the controversie and the usurping of the See of Rome,

Rome,

Anno 1554. Rome, do all agree, if they be well understood in this Truth.

I am glad to hear, said Mr. Secretary, that you do so well esteem the Doctors of the Church.

Now as for Universality, it may have two meanings; one to understand that to be Universal, which from the beginning in all Ages hath been allowed; another to understand Universality for the multitude of our Age, or of any other singular Age.

No, no, said Mr. Secretary, these three do always agree, and where there is one, there is all the rest: And here he and I changed many words. And finally, to be short, in this matter we did not agree.

There was none, quoth Mr. Fecknam, before Berengarius, Wickliffe, and Hus, and now in our days Carlostadius and Oecolampadius, Carlostadius faith, Christ pointed to his own Body, and not to the Sacrament, and said, Hoc est corpus meum. And Melancthon writeth to one Micomius (Micomius said I) these or the like words; Nullam satis gravem rationem invenire possum, propter quam a fide majorum in hac materia dissentiam, i. I can find no grounded reason to cause me to dissent from the believe of our fore-Elders.

Thus when he had spoken at length, with many other words mo; Sir, said I, it is certain that other before these have written of this matter: Not by the way only, and obiter, as do for the most all the old Writers, but even ex professo; and their whole Books intreat of it alone, as Bertram.

Bertram, said the Secretary, what man was he? and who was he? and how do you know, &c. with many Questions.

Sir, quoth I, I have read his Book; He propoundeth the same which is now in controversy, and answereth so directly, that no man may doubt but that he affirmeth, That the Substance of Bread remaineth still in the Sacrament, and he wrote unto Carolus Magnus.

Marry, quoth he, mark, for there is a matter. He wrote, quoth he, ad Henricum, and not ad Carolum; for no Author maketh any such mention of Bertram.

Yes, quoth I, Trithemius in Catalogo illustrium Scriptorum, speaketh of him. Trithemius was but of late time; but he speaketh, quoth I, of them that were of Antiquity. Here, after much talk of Bertram, What Authors have ye, quoth Mr. Secretary, to make of the Sacrament a Figure?

Sir, quoth I, ye know (I think) that Tertullian in plain words speaketh thus; Hoc est corpus meum, id est, figura corporis mei. i. This is my Body, that is to say, a figure of my Body. And Gelasius faith plainly, That Substantia panis manet, i. The Substance of Bread remaineth. And Origen faith likewise, Quod sanctificatur secundum materiam, ingreditur stomachum, & vadit in feculum, i. That which is sanctified, as touching the Matter or Substance, passeth away into the draught. This when I had Englished, Mr. Secretary said to me, You know very well as any man, &c. And here, if I would I might have been set in a foolish Paradise of his commendation of my Learnings, and quod estem vir multis lectior, i. A man of much Reading. But this I would not take at his hand. He set me not up so high, but I brought my self as low again; and here was much ado.

As for Melancthon (quoth I) whom Mr. Fecknam spake of, I marvel that ye will alledge him, for we are more nigh an agreement here in England, than the Opinion of Melancthon is to you: for in this point we all agree here, that there is in the Sacrament but one material Substance; and Melancthon, as I ween, faith there are two.

Ye say truth, quoth Mr. Secretary; Melancthon's Opinion is so. But I pray you, ye have heard that the Sacrament was in old time so revered, that many were then forbidden to be present at the ministrations thereof; Catechumini, quoth he, and many mo.

Truth Sir, quoth I, there were some called Audientes, some Penitentes, some Catechumini, and some Evergumini, which were commanded to depart.

Now, quoth he, then; And how can ye then make but a figure or a sign of the Sacrament, as that Book doth which is set forth in my Lord of Cambridge's name? I wist, ye can tell who made it. Did not ye make it? and here was much murmuring of the rest, as though they would have given me the glory of the writing of that Book; which yet was full of some there to contain the most humble Heretic that ever was.

Master Secretary, quoth I, that Book was made of a great Learned Man, and him which is able to do the like again: as for me, I ensure you, be not deceived in me; I was never able to do or write any such like thing, he putteth me no less than the Learned Master is a young Scholar.

Now, here every man would have his saying, which I pass over, not much matter for to tell. But Sir, quoth I, methinks it is not charitably done, to bear the People in hand that any man doth lightly esteem the Sacrament, as to make of it a figure. For that huc maketh is a bare figure without any more propriety, which that Book doth often deny, as appeareth to the Reader most plainly.

Yes, quoth he, that they do.

Sir, no quoth I, of a truth; and as for me, I ensure you I make no less of the Sacrament than thus: I say, who-soever receiveth the Sacrament, he receiveth therewith either life or death.

No, quoth Mr. Secretary, Scripture saith not so.

Sir, quoth I, although not in the same found of words, yet it doth in the same sense, and St. Augustine faith, in the found of words also: for Paul faith, The Bread which we break, is it not the partaking or fellowship of the Body of Christ? And St. Augustine, Manduca vitam, Bibite vitam, i. Eat life, Drink life.

Then said Mr. Pope, what can ye make of it when ye say, There is not the real Body of Christ, which I do believe, &c. and I pray God I may never believe other. How can it bring (as ye say) either Life or Death, when Christ's Body is not there?

Sir, quoth I, when you hear Gods Word truly preached, if you do believe it, and abide in it, ye shall and do receive life withal; and if ye do not believe it, it doth bring unto you death: and yet Christ's Body is still in Heaven, and not carnal in every Preachers mouth.

I pray you tell me, quoth he, how can you answer to this, Quod pro vobis traditur, Which shall be given for you. Was the figure of Christ's Body given for you?

No Sir, quoth I, but the very Body it self, whereof the Sacrament is a Sacramental figure. How say you then, quoth he, to Quod pro vobis traditur, Which shall be given for you?

Forsooth, quoth I, Tertullian's Exposition maketh it plain, for he faith, Corpus est figura corporis, i. The Body is a figure of the Body. Now put to Quod pro vobis traditur, Which shall be given for you, and it agreeth exceeding well.

In faith, quoth he, I would give forty pound that ye were of a good Opinion. For I ensure you, I have heard you, and had an affection to you.

I thank you Mr. Pope for your heart and mind, and ye know, quoth I, I were a very Fool if I would in this matter dissent from you, if that in my Conscience the truth did not inforce me so to do. For I wist (as ye do perceive I trow) it is somewhat out of my way, if I would esteem Worldly gain.

What say ye, quoth he; to Cyprian? Doth he not say plainly, Panis quem dedit Dominus non effugit, sed natura mutatur, omnipotentia verbi factus est caro, i. The Bread which the Lord did deliver being changed, not according to the form, but according to the nature thereof, by the Omnipotent Word is made Flesh.

True Sir, so he doth say, and I answer even the same which once by chance I preached at Paul's-Cross in a Sermon, for the which I have been as unjustly and as untruly reported of, as any poor man hath been. For the speaking of the Sacrament, and inveigling against them that esteemed it no better than a piece of Bread: told even the same thing of Penitentes, Andentes, Catechumini, Evergumini, that I spake of before; and I had them depart as unworthy to hear the mystery; and then I said to those that be Sandys, Cyprian the Martyr shall tell you how it is that Christ calleth it, saying, Panis est corpus, calix, potus, caro, &c. i. Bread is the Body, Meant, Drink, Flesh, because that unto this material Substance is given the property of the thing whereof it beareth the name: and this place then took I to utter as the time would then suffer. But the material Substance of Bread doth remain in Mr. Fecknam's which, as is reported to me, did bely me openly in the same matter.

at Pauls Croft) heard all this my talk, as red as Scarlet in his Face, and herein answered me not a word.

You do well, quoth Mr. Secretary, that Origen and Tertullian were not Catholick, but erred.

Sir, quoth I, there is none of all the Doctors that are holden in all points, but are thought to have erred in some things. But yet I never heard that it was either laid to Origens charge or to Tertullian, that ever they were thought to have erred in this matter of the Sacrament.

What, quoth Mr. Cholmley late Chief Justice, doth not Christ plainly say, that it is his very Flesh, and his very Blood, and we must needs eat him, or else we can have no life? Sir, quoth I, if you will hear how St. Augustine expoundeth that place, you shall perceive that you are in a wrong Box. And then I began to tell St. Augustine's mind in his Book De Doctrina Christiana; Yea, yea, quoth Mr. Secretary, that is true, St. Augustine doth it figuratively indeed.

Forty years ago, quoth Mr. Fecknam, all were of one Opinion in this matter.

Forty years ago, quoth I, all held that the Bishop of Rome was Supreme Head of the Universal Church.

What then? was Mr. Fecknam beginning to say, &c. but Mr. Secretary took the tale, and said, that was but a positive Law.

A positive Law? quoth I; No Sir, he would not have it so: for it is in his Decrees, that he challenged it by Christ's own word. For his Decree faith: Nullus Synodus constituit, neque censuit, sed viva voce Domini prelati est Ecclesia Romana omnibus Ecclesiis in toto mundo; dicente Domino Petro, tu es Petrus, &c. The Church of Rome was advanced above all other Churches in the World, not by any Synodical Constitutions, nor any Councils, but by the lively voice of the Lord, according as the Lord said to Peter, Thou art Peter, &c. And in another place he intreateth, Tu es Cephas, id est, Caput. i. Thou art Cephas, that is to say, the Head.

Truly, it was not counted an Article (quoth Mr. Secretary) of our Faith.

Yes, said I, if we call that an Article of our Faith, which is believed under pain of damnation. For he faith; Omnino definimus, declaramus, pronunciamus, omnem Creaturam subijcto Romano Pontifici, de necessitate salutis, i. We do absolutely determine, declare, and pronounce, that every Creature is subject to the obedience of the Bishop of Rome upon necessity of Salvation.

And here when we spoke of Laws and Decrees, Mr. Roger Cholmley thought himself much wronged, that he could not be suffered to speak, the rest were so ready to interrupt him: and then he up and told a long Tale, what Laws were of Kings in England made against the Bishop of Rome, and was vehement to tell how they always of the Clergy did fly to him. And here, because he seemed to speak of many things beside our purpose, whereof we spake before, he was answered of his own Fellows, and I let them talk.

Finally, We departed in peace, and Mr. Secretary promised in the end, that of their talk there should come to me no harm. And after I had made my moan for lack of my Books, he said, they were all once given him: but with I know (said he) who hath them now, write me the Names of such as you would have, and I will speak for you the best I can.

Upon the Articles above-mentioned, and Inquisition made upon the same, divers Ministers were divorced from their Wives. Amongst whom was one John Draper, and Joan Gold his Wife, in the Diocess of London, troubled and vexed for the same by Bene Bishop of London, who sent forth a Commission with a Process to sequester and separate them, enjoying also penance to the poor Woman.

Besides this John Draper, divers others also were divorced the same time against their wills; and some were contented of their own unconstant accord, to be separated from their Wives: as of Chichester one, (who, because he soon recovered again, shall be here nameless) another named Edmund Aylstone, another Alexander Bul, another I whom I will not name, with many other; whose Names I shall in the end of this story of Queen Mary, when I have proceeded by Gods Grace in a general Catalogue, repeat, and publish.

March 1554.

The 10th of March a Letter was sent to the Lieutenant of the Tower to deliver the bodies of Mr. Doctor Cranmer the Archbishop of Canterbury, Mr. Doctor Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, to Sir John Williams, to be conveyed by him unto Oxford.

The 26th of March there was a Letter directed to Sir Henry Doel, and one Foster, to attach the bodies of Doctor Taylor Parson of Hadley, and of Henry Askew, and to send them up to the Council.

How Thomas Cranmer Archbishop, Bishop Ridley, and Master Latimer, were sent down to Oxford to dispute, with the order and manner, and all other circumstances unto the said Disputation, and also to their Condemnation appertaining.

About the 10th of April, Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Ridley Bishop of London, and Hugh Latimer Bishop also sometime of Worcester, were conveyed as Prisoners from the Tower to Windsor; and after from thence to the University of Oxford, there to Dispute with the Divines and Learned Men of both the Universities, Oxford and Cambridge, about the Presence, Substance, and Sacrifice of the Sacrament. The Names of the University Doctors and Graduates appointed to Dispute against them, were these; of Oxford, Doctor Weston Prolocutor, Doctor Tresham, Doctor Cole, Doctor Oglethorpe, Doctor Pie, Master Harpfield, Master Fecknam Of Cambridge, Doctor Young Vice-Chancellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Seaton, Doctor Watson, Doctor Sedgewick, Doctor Atkinson, &c. The Articles or Questions whereupon they should Dispute were these:

1. Whether the Natural Body of Christ be really in the Sacrament, after the words spoken by the Priest, or no?
2. Whether in the Sacrament, after the words of Consecration, any other Substance do remain, than the Substance of the Body and Blood of Christ?
3. Whether in the Mass be a Sacrifice Propitiatory for the Sins of the quick and the Dead?

Touching the order and manner of all which things there done, with the Notes, Arguments, and all Circumstances thereunto pertaining, to deduce the matter from the beginning, leaving out nothing (as near as we may) that shall seem necessary to be added: First, Here is to be understood, that upon Saturday the 7th day of April, the Heads of the Colleges in Cambridge being congregate together, Letters coming down from Stephen Gardiner Lord Chancellor, were read with Articles therewith annexed, that should be disputed upon at Oxford: the contents of which three Articles are sufficiently expressed before. Whereupon in the said Congregation of the aforesaid University of Cambridge, there was granted first a Grace in this Form, proposed by the Senior Proctor; *Placet vobis ut instrumentum fiat, quod horum jam prelatum Articulorum doctrina sana sit & Catholica, atque cum veritate Orthodoxae fidei consentiens, & vestro consensu, & suffragio comprobetur? that is, May it please you to have an Instrument made, that the Doctrine of these foresaid Articles is sound and Catholick, and consonant with the verity of the right meaning Faith, and that the same may be approved by your consent and voices? Secondly, In the said Congregation, another Grace was given and granted, that Doctor Young being Vice-Chancellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Atkinson, Doctor Seaton, and Master Sedgewick, should go to Oxford to defend the said Articles against Canterbury, London, and Latimer: Also to have Letters to the Oxford Men, sealed with their Common Seal. Item, Another Grace granted to Master Sedgewick to be actual Doctor, being thereupon immediately admitted. The foresaid Letters being then drawn out, the third day after (which was the 11th day of April) were read in the foresaid Congregation-House, and there read.*

Whereupon the next day after (the 12th of the said Month) the foresaid Doctors, with the full Grace of that University, set forward to Oxford: and coming thither the next day after (being Friday, the 13th of April) were lodged all at the Cross-Ten, with one Wakeclime, being sometime Servant to Bishop Bene.

Anon after their coming, Dr. Crooke presented them with Wine for their Welcom; and shortly after two of the Beadles came from the Vice-Chancellor of Oxford, and presented the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge with a Dish of Apples and a Gallon of Wine. After whom, next came Mr. Pie and Peckham to welcom them. Then after consultation concerning the delivery of their Letters, and Instrument of Grace (which was in Dr. Seton & Dr. Watsons keeping) they went all to Lincoln Colledge to Dr. Weston the Prolocutor, and to the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Trefham: And there they delivered their Letters and declared what they had done touching the Articles, Letters, and Graces. Half an hour after Eight they returned to their Inn again: but first they concluded of a Proceffion, Sermon, and Convocation to be had the Morrow following, and that the Doctors of Cambridge should be incorporate in the University of Oxford, and likewise that the Doctors of Oxford should be incorporate in the University of Cambridge. The same Day the fore-named Prisoners were discovered, as was said afore; Dr. Ridley to Alderman Irfhes Houfe, Mr. Luttrell to another, and Doctor Cranmer remained still in Bocardo.

On Saturday, being the 14th of April, at Eight of the Clock, the forefaid Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge with the other Doctors of the fame University, repaired to Lincoln Colledge again, and found the Prolocutor above in a Chappel, with a Company of the Houfe fing- ing Requiem Maff, and tarried there until the end. Then they, consulting all together in the Masters lodgings, about Nine of the Clock came all to the University Church called St. Maries: and there, after a short Consultation in a Chappel, the Vice-Chancellor, the Prolocutor, &c. of Oxford, caused the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, and the rest of the Doctors of that University, to fend for their Scarlet-Robes, brought from Cambridge, save that Doctor Seton and Watson borrowed of the Oxford Men. And in this time, the Regents in the Congregation-Houfe had granted all the Cambridge Doctors their Graces, to be incorporate there; and so they went up, and were admitted immediately, Dr. Oglesborpe presenting them, and the Proctor reading the Statute and giving them their Oaths.

That done, they came all into the Quire, and there held the Convocation of the University. They had Maff of the Holy Ghost solemnly fung in Prick-fong by the Quire-men of Christ-Church. But first the Cause of the Convocation was opened in English, partly by the Vice-Chancellor, and partly by the Prolocutor, declaring that they were sent by the Queen, and wherefore they were sent, and caused Mr. Say the Register openly to read the Commission. That done, the Vice-Chancellor read Cambridge Letters openly, and then concluded, that three Notaries, Mr. Say for the Convocation, a Beadle of Cambridge for that University, and one Mr. White for Oxford, should testifie of their doing, and then willed the said Notaries to provide Parchment, that the whole Assembly might subscribe to the Articles, save those that had subscribed before in the Convocation-Houfe at London and Cambridge; and so the Vice-Chancellor began first, after him the rest of the Oxford Men, as many as could in the Maff time.

The Maff being done, they went in Proceffion: First, The Quire in their Surplices followed the Crofs; then the first-year Regents and Proctors; then the Doctors of Law, and their Beadles before them; then the Doctors of Divinity of both Universities intermingled, the Divinity and Arts-Beadles going before them, the Vice-Chancellor and Prolocutor going together. After them Bachelors of Divinity, Regents, & non Regents, in their array; and last of all, the Bachelors of Law and Arts. After whom followed a great company of Scholars and Students not graduate. And thus they proceeded through the Street to Christ-Church, and there the Quire fung a Palma, and after that a Collect was read. This done, departed the Commissioners, Doctors, and many other to Lincoln Colledge, where they dined with the Mayor of the Town, one Alderman, four Beadles, Mr. Say and the Cambridge Notary. After Dinner they went all again to St. Maries Church; and there after a short consultation in a Chappel, all the Commissioners came into the Quire, and fate all on Seats before the Altar, to the number of 33 Persons: And first they sent to the Mayor, that he should bring in Dr. Cranmer, which within a while was brought to them with a number of rusty Bill-men.

Thus the Reverend Archbishop, when he was brought before the Commissioners, reverenced them with much humility, and stood with his Staff in his hand, who notwithstanding, having a Stool offered him, refused to sit. Then the Prolocutor sitting in the midst in a Scarlet Gown, began with a short Preface or Oration in praise of Unity, and especially in the Church of Christ: declaring withal his bringing up, and taking Degrees in Cambridge, and also how he was promoted by King Henry, and had been his Counsellor and a Catholick Man, one of the same Unity, and a Member thereof in times past, but of late years did separate and cut off himself from it, by teaching and feting forth of erroneous Doctrine, making every year a new Faith: and therefore it pleased the Queens Grace, to fend them of the Convocation and other Learned men, to bring him to this Unity again, if it might be. Then shewed he him how they of the Convocation-Houfe had agreed upon certain Articles, whereunto they willed him to subscribe.

The Archbishop answered to the Preface very wittily, modestly, and Learnedly, shewing that he was very glad of an Unity, forasmuch as it was Conferuare omnium rerum publicarum, tam Ecclesiarum quam Christianorum, i. The preserver of all Common-wealths, as well of the Heathen as of the Christians; and so he dilated the matter with one or two Stories of the Romans Common-wealth. Which thing when he had done, he said, That he was very glad to come to an Unity, so that it were in Christ, and agreeable to his holy Word.

When he had thus spoken his full mind, the Prolocutor caused the Articles to be read unto him, and asked if he would grant and subscribe unto them. Then the Bilhp of Canterbury did read them over three or four times, and touching the first Article, he asked what they meant by these terms, Verum & Naturale, i. True and Natural. Do you not mean, said he, Corpus organicum, i. A sensible Body? Some answered, Idem quod natum est ex Virgine, i. The same that was born of the Virgin; and so confusedly, some said one thing, some another. Then the Bilhp of Canterbury denied it utterly, and when he had looked upon the other two, he said they were all false, and against Gods holy Word: And therefore he would not agree, he said, in that Unity with them. Which done, the Prolocutor first willing him to write his mind of them that Night, said moreover that he should dispute in them, and caused a Copy of the Articles to be delivered him, assigning him to answer thereunto on Monday next, and so charged the Mayor with him again, to be had to Bocardo, where he was kept before; offering moreover unto him, to name what Books he would occupy, and should have them brought unto him. The Archbishop was greatly commended of every body for his modesty: inasmuch, that some Masters of Art were seen to weep for him, which in Judgment were contrary to him.

Then was Dr. Ridley brought in, who, hearing the Articles read unto him, answered without any delay, saying, They were all false; and said further, That they sprang out of a bitter and fowr Root. His Answers were sharp, witty, and very earnest. Then did they lay to his charge a Sermon that he made when he was Bilhp of Rochester, wherein (they said) he spake with Transubstantiation. He denied it utterly, and asked whether they could bring out any that heard him, which would say and affirm with them the same. They could bring no proof of it at all. After that, he was asked of one whether he desired not my Lord Chancellor that now is, to stick to the Maff, and other things? He said, That my Lord would say no such things of words of him; for if he did he reported not the truth of him.

Then he was asked, whether he would Dispute or no? He answered, That as long as God gave him life, he should not only have his Heart, but also his Mouth and Pen to defend his Truth; but he required time and Books. They said he could not, and that he should Dispute on Thursday, and till that time he should have Books. He said it was not reason, that he might not have his own Books, and time also to look for his Disputations. Then

Mr Latimer brought in

Loth of all came in Mr. Latimer in like sort, with a Kerchief, and two or three Caps on his Head, his Spectacles hanging by a string at his Brest, and a Staff in his hand, and was set in a Chair; for so was he suffered by the Prolocutor. And after his denial of the Articles, when he had Wednesday appointed for Disputation, he alleged Age, Sicknes, Dis-use, and lack of Books, saying, That he was almost as meet to dispute as to be a Captain of Calice; but he would, he said, declare his mind either by Writing or Word, and would stand to all they could lay upon his back; complaining moreover, That he was permitted to have neither Pen nor Ink, nor yet any Book but only the New Testament there in his hand, which he said he had read over seven times deliberately, and yet could not find the Masi in it, neither the Marrow-bones nor Sinews of the same. At which words the Commissioners were not a little offended; and Dr. Weston said, That he would make him grant that it had both Marrow-bones and Sinews in the New Testament. To whom Mr. Latimer said again, That you will never do, Mr. Doctor, so forthwith they put him to silence; so that where he was desirous to tell what he meant by those Terms, he could not be suffered: there was a very great press and throng of People, and one of the Beadles frowned by reason thereof, and was carried into the Vestry. After this, bringing home the Prolocutor first, the Cambridge Men, viz. Doctor Tunng Vice-Chancellor, Savon, Glin, Atkinson, Scott, Watton, and Sedgewick, went to the Croft-Inne to Supper. And this was on Saturday being the 14th day of April.

April 14.

On Sunday after, Mr. Harpsfield preached at St. Maries the University Church, at Nine of the Clock, where were divers of the Doctors of the University in their Robes, and placed accordingly. After the Sermon they went all to Dinner to Magdalen Colledge, and there had a great Dinner. They Supped at Lincoln Colledge with the Prolocutor, whether Dr. Cranmer sent answer of his mind upon the Articles in Writing.

April 16.

Subscription.

On Monday, being the 16th of April, Mr. Sey, and Mr. White, Notaries, were about in the Morning to the Colleges, to get Subscriptions to the Articles. And about 8 of the Clock the Prolocutor, with all the Doctors and the Vice-Chancellor, met together at Exeter Colledge, and so they went into the Schools, and when the Vice-Chancellor, the Prolocutor and Doctors were placed, and four appointed to be Exceptores Argumentorum, set at a Table in the midst, and four Notaries sitting with them, Dr. Cranmer came to the Answerers place, the Mayor and Aldermen sitting by him, and so the Disputation began to be set a work by the Prolocutor with a short Prælium. Dr. Chesley began to argue first, and ere he left, the Prolocutor divers times, Dr. Tresham, Ogletborpe, Marshal, Vice-Chancellor, Pys, Cole, and Harpsfield did interrupt and press him with their Arguments, so that every man said somewhat, as the Prolocutor would suffer, disorderly, sometime in Latin, sometime in English, so that three hours of the time was spent ere the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge began; who also was interrupted as before. He began with three or four Questions subtilly. Here the Beadles had provided Drink, and offered the Answerer; but he refused with Thanks. The Prolocutor offered him, if he would make Water, or otherwise ease himself, he should. Thus the Disputation continued until almost two of the Clock, with this Applause Audientium; vicit versari. Then were all the Arguments written by the Four appointed, delivered into the hand of Mr. Sey Register. And as for the Prisoner, he was had away by the Mayor; And the Doctors Dined together at the University Colledge.

Dr Cranmer after disputation returned again to the Croft.

And thus much concerning the general order and manner of these Disputations, with such Circumstances as there happened, and things there done, as well before the Disputation, and in the preparation thereof, as also in the time of their Disputing. Now followeth to infer and declare the Orations, Arguments, and Answers, used and brought forth in the said Disputations on both parts.

The Arguments, Reasons, and Allegations used in this Disputation. Anno 1554.

ON Monday, Doctor Weston, with all the residue of the Visitors, Censors, and Opponents, repairing to the Divinity School, each one called themselves in their places. Dr. Cranmer with a rout of Ruffly Bills was brought thither, and set in the Answerers place, with the Mayor and Aldermen sitting by him. Where Dr. Weston Prolocutor, apparelled in a Scarlet-Gown, after the Custom of the University, began the Disputation with this Oration. His Words in Latin, as he spake them, were these.

Convenistis hodie, fratres, profigituri detestandum illam hæresim de veritate corporis Christi in Sacramento, &c. that is, Ye are assembled hither, Brethren, this day, to confound the detestable Heresie of the Verity of the Body of Christ in the Sacrament, &c. At which Words thus pronounced of the Prolocutor unawares, divers of the Learned Men there present, considering and well weighing the words by him uttered, burst out into a great Laughter, as though, even in the entrance of the Disputations, he had betrayed himself and his Religion, that termed the Opinion of the Verity of Christs Body in the Sacrament a detestable Heresie. The rest of his Oration tended all to this effect, That it was not lawful by Gods Word to call these Questions into Controversie: for such as doubted of the words of Christ, might well be thought to doubt both of the Truth and Power of God. Whereunto Dr. Cranmer desiring license, answered in this wise.

We are assembled (saith he) to dispute these doubtful Controversies, and to lay them open before the eyes of the World; whereof ye think it unlawful to dispute. It is indeed no reason (saith he) that we should dispute of that which is determined upon, before the Truth be tried. But if these Questions be not called into Controversie, surely mine Answer then is looked for in vain. This was the sum and effect of his Answer; and this done he prepared himself to Disputation.

Then Chesley the first Opponent began in this wise to Dr. Cranmer's Disputation.

Reverend Mr. Doctor, these three Conclusions are put forth unto us at present to Dispute upon;

1. In the Sacrament of the Altar is the Natural Body Arden of Christ, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and also his Blood present really under the forms of Bread and Wine, by virtue of Gods Word pronounced by the Priest.

2. There remaineth no Substance of Bread and Wine after the Consecration, nor any other Substance, but the Substance of God and Man.

3. The lively Sacrifice of the Church is in the Mass Propitiatory, as well for the quick as the dead.

These be the Conclusions propounded, whereupon this our present Controversie doth rest. Now to the end we might not doubt how you take the fame, you have already given up unto us your Opinion thereof. I term it your Opinion, in that it disagreeeth from the Catholic. Wherefore I thus argue.

Ched. Your Opinion differeth from the Scripture.

Ergo. You are deceived.

Cran. I deny the Antecedent.

Ched. Christ when he instituted his last Supper, spake to his Disciples, Take, eat, this is my Body which shall be given for you.

But his true Body was given for us:

Ergo. His true Body is in the Sacrament.

The right form of this Argument is thus to be framed.

De. The fame which was given for us is in the Sacrament.

Ched. But his true Body was given for us:

Ergo. His true Body is in the Sacrament.

Cran. His true Body is truly present to them that truly receive him; but spiritually. And so it is taken after a Spiritual sort. For when he said, This is my Body, it is all one as if he had said, This is the breaking of my Body, This is the shedding of my Blood. As oft as you shall do this, it shall put you in remembrance of the breaking of my Body, and the shedding of my Blood; that as truly as you receive this Sacrament, so truly shall you receive the benefit promised by receiving the same worthily.

Dr. Weston speaks thus that he will.

Answer How Christs Body is present in the Sacrament.

Anno 1554. Ched. Your Opinion differeth from the Church, which faith that the true Body is in the Sacrament.

Ergo, Your Opinion therein is false. Cran. I say and agree with the Church, that the Body of Christ is in the Sacrament effectually, because the Passion of Christ is effectual.

Ched. Christ when he spake these words, This is my Body, spake of the Substance, but not of the effect.

Cran. I grant he spake of the Substance, and not of the Effect after a fort: and yet it is most true that the Body of Christ is effectually in the Sacrament. But I deny that he is there truly present in Bread, or that under the Bread is his organical Body. And because it should be too tedious (he said) to make discourse of the whole, he delivered up there his Opinion thereof to Doctor Weston written at large; which answers to every one of their three Propositions: which he desired Dr. Weston, sitting there on high, to read openly to the People; which he promised to do. But it was not the first Promise that such Papists have broken.

The Copy of this Writing although it were not there read, yet the Contents thereof we have drawn out as follows.

An Explication of Cranmer upon the foresaid Conclusions exhibited in Writing.

Cranmer. In the Assertions of the Church and of Religion, trifling and new fangled Novelities of words, so much as may be, are to be eschewed, whereof ariseth nothing but contention and brawling about words, and we must follow, so much as we may, the manner of speaking of the Scripture.

In the first Conclusion, if ye understand by this word (Really) Re ipsa, i. in very deed and effectually, so Christ by the grace and efficacy of his Passion, is in deed and truly present to all his true and holy Members.

But if ye understand by this word (Really) Corporaliter, i. Corporally; so that by the Body of Christ is understood a Natural Body and Organical; so the first Proposition doth vary, not only from the usual Speech and Phrase of Scripture, but also is clean contrary to the holy Word of God, and Christian Profession: when as both the Scripture doth testify by these words, and also the Catholick Church hath professed from the beginning, Christ to have left the World, and to sit at the right hand of the Father till he come to Judgment.

And likewise I answer to the second Question; that is, That it suer-verb from the accustomed manner and speech of Scripture.

The third Conclusion, as it is intricate and wrapped in all doubtful and ambiguous words, and differing also much from the true speech of the Scripture, so as the Words thereof seem to import no open sense, is most contumelious against our only Lord and Saviour Christ Jesus, and a violating of his precious Blood, which upon the Altar of the Cross is the only Sacrifice and Oblation for the Sins of all Mankind.

Ched. By this your Interpretation which you have made upon the first Conclusion, this I understand, the Body of Christ to be in the Sacrament only by the way of Participation: inasmuch as we communicating thereof, do participate the Grace of Christ, so that you mean hereby only the effect thereof. But our Conclusion standeth upon the Substance, and not the Efficacy only, which shall appear by the testimony both of Scriptures, and of all the Fathers a Thousand years after Christ.

And first to begin with the Scripture, let us consider what is written in Matt. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22. and 1 Cor. 11. Matthew saith, As they sat at Supper, Jesus took Bread, &c. In Mark there is the same sense, although not the same words, who also for one part of the Sacrament speaketh more plainly, Jesus taking Bread, &c. After the same sense also writeth Luke 22. And when Jesus had taken Bread, &c. In the mouth of two or three Witnesses, faith the Scripture, standeth all Truth. Here we have three Witnesses together, that Christ said that to be his Body which was given for many, and that to be his Blood which should be shed for many; whereby is declared the Substance, and not only the Efficacy alone thereof. Ergo, It is not true that that you say, there to be not the Substance of his Body, but the Efficacy alone thereof.

Cran. Thus you gather upon mine Answer, as though I did mean of the Efficacy, and not of the Substance of the Body; but I mean of them both, as well of the Efficacy as of the Substance. And forasmuch as all things come not readily to memory, to a man that shall speak extempore, therefore for the more ample and fuller Answer in this matter, this Writing here I do exhibit.

An Explication exhibited by Cranmer.

Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, at the time of his Maundy, preparing himself to dye for our Cause, that he might redeem us from Eternal death, to forgive us all our Sins, and to cancel out the Hand-writing that was against us; that we through ungrateful Oblivion should not forget his Death, therefore at the time of his Holy Supper did institute a perpetual memory of this his Death, to be celebrated among Christians in Bread and Wine, according as it is said: Do this in remembrance of me. And so often as you eat this Bread and drink this Cup, you shall shew forth the Lords death till he come. And this Remembrance or Sacrament of his holy Passion, that is, of his Body slain, and Blood shed, he would all Christians to frequent and celebrate in Bread and Wine, according as he said, Take eat, and drink ye all of this. Therefore whosoever for mans Tradition denieth the Cup of Christs Blood to Lay men, they manifestly repugn against Christ, forbidding that which Christ commandeth to be done, and be like to those Scribes and Pharisees of whom the Lord spake; Ye hypocrites, ye have rejected the Commandments of God for your Traditions. Well did Elay prophesie of you, saying, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Without cause do they worship me, teaching the Doctrine, and Precepts of men. The Sacrament and mystical Bread being broken and distributed after the Institution of Christ, and the mystical Wine being likewise taken and received, be not only Sacraments of the Flesh of Christ wounded for us, and of his Blood-shedding, but also be most certain Sacraments for us, and (as a man would say) Seals of Gods Promises and Gifts, and also of that holy Fellowship which we have with Christ and all his Members. Moreover, they be to us Memorials of that Heavenly food and nourishment, whereby we are nourished unto Eternal life, and the thirst of our boyling Conscience quenched, and finally, whereby the hearts of the Faithful be replenished with unspeakable Joy, and be corroborated and strengthened unto all works of godliness. We are many (saith St Paul) one Bread, and one Body, all we which do participate of one Bread, and one Cup. And Christ saith: Eat ye this is my Body. And, Drink ye, this is my Blood. And, I am the living Bread which came down from Heaven. He that eateth me, shall also live for ever. Not as your Fathers did eat Manna in the Desert, and are dead: He that eateth me, shall also live for ever.

Thus therefore true Bread and true Wine remain still in the Eucharist, until they be consumed of the Faithful, to be Signs, and as Seals unto us annexed unto Gods Promises, making us certain of Gods Gifts towards us. Also Christ remaineth in them, and they in Christ, which eat his Flesh and drink his Blood, as Christ himself hath promised: They that eat my Flesh, and drink my Blood, abide in me, and I in them. Moreover, he abideth also in them which worthily receive the outward Sacrament, neither doth he depart so soon as the Sacrament is consumed, but continually abideth, feeding and nourishing us so long as we remain Bodies of that Head, and Members of the same. I acknowledge not here the Natural Body of Christ, which is only Spiritual, unintelligible, and Ineffable, having no distinction of Members and Parts in it: But that Body only I acknowledge and worship, which was born of the Virgin, which suffered for us, which is visible, palpable, and hath all the Form, and Shape, and Parts of the true Natural Body of Man. Christ spake not these words of any uncertain Substance, but of the certain Substance of Bread, which he then held in his Hands, and shewed his Disciples when he said, Eat ye, this is my Body: And likewise when he said, Drink ye, this is my Blood of the Cup, when he said, Drink ye, this is my Blood Substance and efficacy both grace and substance.

Another Explication for Answer, exhibited in writing by the Arch-bishop.

Matth. 23. Luke 7.

Sacraments Seals of Gods Free- miltia.

1 Cor. 10.

Matth. 26.

John 6.

Bread and Wine remain still in the Eucharist, and be Seals to us annexed with Gods Promises.

Christs words are spoken not of an uncertain Substance, but of a certain Substance of Bread.

meaning verily of that Bread which by nature is usual and common with us, which is taken out of the Fruit of the ground, compacted by the uniting of many Grains together made by Man, and by Mans hand brought to that visible shape, being of round compass, and without all fennel or life, which nourisheth the Body, and strengtheneth the Heart of Man: Of this same Bread (I say) and not of any uncertain and wandering Substante, the Old Fathers say that Christ spake these words, Eat ye, this is my Body. And likewise also of the Wine, which is the Creature and Fruit of the Vine pressed out of many Clusters of Grapes, and maketh Mans Heart merry, of the very same Wine (I say) Christ spake, Drink ye, this is my Blood. And so the Old Doctors do call this taking of Christ Tropical, Figurative, Analogical, Allegorical, which they do interpret after this sort, that although the Substance of Bread and Wine do remain, and be received of the Faithful, yet notwithstanding Christ changed the appellation thereof, and called the Bread by the name of his Flesh, and the Wine by the name of his Blood, Non rei veritate, sed significante mysterio, i. Not that it is so in very deed, but signified in a mystery. So that we should consider, not what they be in their own nature, but what they import to us and signify, and should understand the Sacrament not carnally, but spiritually, and should attend not to the Visible nature of the Sacraments, neither have respect only to the outward Bread and Cup, thinking to see there with our Eyes no other things but only Bread and Wine, But that lifting up our Minds we should look up to the Blood of Christ with our Faith, should touch him with our Mind, and receive him with our Inward man, and that being like Eagles in this life, we should fly up into Heaven in our Hearts, where that Lamb is resident at the Right hand of his Father, which taketh away the Sins of the World, by whose Stripes we are made whole; by whose Passion we are filled at his Table, and whose Blood we receiving out of his holy Side, do live for ever, being made the Guests of Christ, having him dwelling in us through the Grace of his true Nature, and through the virtue and efficacy of his whole Passion, being no less assured and certified, that we are fed Spiritually unto Eternal life by Christs Flesh crucified, and by his Blood shed, the true Food of our Minds, than that our Bodies be fed with Meat and Drink in this life: and hereof this said mystical Bread on the Table of Christ, and the mystical Wine, being administered and received after the Institution of Christ, be to us a Memorial, a Pledge, a Token, a Sacrament, and a Seal.

Eph. 5.

And thereof it is that Christ saith not thus; This is my Body, eat ye: but after he had bidden them eat, then he said, This is my Body, which shall be given for you, which is to mean, as though he should say, In eating of this Bread, consider you that this Bread is no common thing, but a Mystical matter; neither do you attend that which is set before your bodily Eyes, but what feedeth you within: Consider and behold my Body crucified for you, that eat and digest in your Minds, Chew you upon my Passion, be fed with my Death, this is the true Meat, this is the Drink that moisteneth, wherewith you being truly fed, and mebrate, shall live for ever. The Bread and Wine which be set before your Eyes are only Declarations of Me, but I my self am the Eternal Food. Wherefore whensoever at this my Table you shall behold the Sacraments, have not regard so much to them, as consider ye what I promise to you by them, which is my Self to be Meat for you of Eternal life.

The only Oblation of Christ (wherewith he offered himself to God the Father once to death upon the Altar of the Cross for our Redemption) was of such Efficacy, that there is no more need of any Sacrifice for the Redemption of the whole World, but all the Sacrifices of the Old Law he took away, performing that in very deed, which they did signify and promise. Whosoever therefore shall fix the hope of his Salvation in any other Sacrifice, he falleth from the Grace of Christ, and is contumacious against the Blood of Christ. For He was wounded for our Transgressions, and was broken for our Iniquities. All we like sheep have wandered astray. Every man hath turned after his own way, and the Lord hath laid all our Iniquities upon him. For he hath entered once for all into the Holy place by the Blood, not of Goats or Calves, but by his own Blood, finding eternal Redemption: And hath entered into Heaven, to appear now in the sight of God for us, to offer himself oftentimes (for so should he have suffered many times,) but now hath he appeared once to put away sin, through his own Oblation. And as it is appointed to all men once to dye, so also Christ once was offered: Who offering up one Oblation for Sins, sitteth now for ever on the right hand of God. For by one Oblation hath he made perfect for ever those that be sanctified. For where is remission of Sins, there is now no Oblation for Sin, but this only Sacrifice of Christ; whosoever shall seek any other Sacrifice Propitiatory for Sin, maketh the Sacrifice of Christ of no validity, force, or efficacy. For if it be sufficient to remit Sins, what need is there of any other? For the necessity of another argueth and declareth this to be insufficient. Almighty God grant that we may truly lean to one Sacrifice of Christ, and that we to him again may repay our Sacrifices of Thanksgiving, of Praise, of Confessing his Name, of true Amendment, of Repentance, of Mercifulness towards our Neighbours, and of all other good Works of Charity. For by such Sacrifices we shall declare our selves neither ingrateful to God, nor altogether unworthy of this holy Sacrifice of Christ. And thus you have out of the Testimonies of holy Scripture, and of the Ancient Doctors of the Church, the true and sincere use of the Lords holy Supper, and the fruit of the true Sacrifice of Christ. Which whosoever through captious or wrested Interpretations, or by mens Traditions, shall go about, otherwise than Christ ordained them, to alter or Transubstantiate, he shall answer to Christ in the latter Day, when he shall understand (but then too late) that he hath no participation with the Body and Blood of Christ, but that out of the Supper of Eternal life he hath eaten and drunken eternal Damnation to himself.

Welf. Because we will not consume and spend the time in waste, this your Writing which you exhibit, hereafter shall be read in this place. In the mean season let us now fall to the Arguments.

Ched. The Scriptures in many places do affirm, that Christ gave his Natural Body, Matth. 26. Mark 14. Luke 22.

Ergo, I do conclude that the Natural Body is in the Sacrament.

Cran. To your Argument I answer: If you understand by the Body Natural (Organicum), that is, having flesh proportion and members as he had living here, then I Answer Negatively.

Furthermore, Concerning the Evangelists, thus I say and grant, that Christ took Bread, and called it his Body.

Ched. The Text of the Scripture maketh against you, for the Circumstance thereto annexed doth teach us, not only there to be the Body, but also teacheth us what manner of Body it is, and saith, The same Body which shall be given.

Ans. That thing is here contained, that is given for us. But the Substance of Bread is not given for us.

Ergo, The Substance of Bread is not here contained.

Cran. I understand not yet what you mean by this word Contained: If ye mean Really, then I deny your Major.

Ched. The Major is the Text of Scripture. He that denieth the Major, denieth the Scripture. For the Scripture saith, This is my Body which is given for you.

Cran. I grant he said it was his Body which should be given, but he said it was not his Body which is here contained; but the Body (saith he) that shall be given for you. As though he should say, This Bread is the breaking of my Body, and this Cup is the shedding of my Blood. What will ye say then? Is the Bread the breaking of his Body, and the Cup the shedding of his Blood really? if you say so, I deny it.

Ched. If you ask what is the Thing therein contained; because his Apostles should not doubt what Body it was that should be given, he saith, This is my Body which shall be given for you, and my Blood which shall be shed for many. Ergo, Here is the same Substance of the Body, This is my Body which the day after was given, and the same Blood which was shed. And here I urge the Scripture, which teacheth that it was no phantasmal, no feigned, no Spiritual Body, nor Body in Faith, but the Substance of the Body.

Cran.

Anno 1554. Cran. You must prove that it is contained, but Christ said not which is contained. He gave Bread, and called that his Body. I stick not in the words of the Scripture, but in your word, which is figined and imagined of your self.

Ched. When Christ took Bread and brake it, what gave he?

Cran. He gave Bread. The Bread Sacramentally, and his Body Spiritually, and the Bread there he called his Body.

Ched. This Answer is against the Scripture, which saith, that he gave his Body.

Cran. It did signifie that which he did eat.

Ched. They did not eat the Body as the Capernaite did understand it, but the self same Body which was given for the Sins of the World. Ergo, It was his Body which should be given, and his Blood which should be shed.

In some other Copies I find this Argument to be made by Chedley.

Argument. Ba. The same Body is in the Sacrament, which was given for us on the Crofs.

ra. But Bread was not given on the Crofs for us:

co. Ergo, Bread is not given in the Sacrament.

Answer. Cran. I deny the Major, which is, that the same Natural Body is given in the Sacrament, which was given on the Crofs, except you understand it Spiritually. And after he denied also the Argument as utterly naught, as he might well do, the Major in the second Figure being not universal.

When Mr. Chedley had put forth his Argument, and professed the same, and Dr. Cranmer answered as before, as shewed, Dr. Oglethorpe, one of those Doctors which the Prolocutor called Centores (belike to be Arbiters to order the Disputations) said on this wise.

D. Ogle. You come in still with one evasion or starting hole to flee to. He urgeth the Scriptures, saying that Christ gave his very Body. You say, that he gave his Body in Bread. Quomodo predicatur corpus? qualis est corpus? qualis est predicatio? panis est corpus.

Cran. You should say, Quale corpus. I answer to the Question: It is the same Body which was born of the Virgin, was crucified, ascended; but tropically, and by a figure. And so I say, Panis est corpus, is a figurative Speech, speaking Sacramentally, for it is a Sacrament of his Body.

Ogle. This word Body, being predicatum, doth signifie Substantia.

But Substantia is not predicated denominatively. Ergo, It is an Essential predication, and so it is his true Body, and not the figure of his Body.

Cran. Substantia may be predicated denominatively in an Allegory, or in a Metaphor, or in a Figurative locution.

Ogle. It is not a likely thing that Christ hath less care for his Spouse the Church, than a wife Houfholder hath for his Family in making his Will or Testament.

Your Reason is drawn out of the affairs of Men, and not taken out of the holy Scriptures.

Ogle. But no Houfholder maketh his Testament after that sort.

Cran. Yes, there are many that so do. For what matter is it so it be understood and perceived? I say Christ did use figurative Speech in no place more than in his Sacraments, and especially in this of his Supper.

Ogle. No man of purpose doth use Tropes in his Testament, for if he do, he deceiveth them that he comprehendeth in his Testament: therefore Christ useth none here.

Cran. Yes, He may use them well enough. You know not what Tropes are.

Ogle. The good Man of the house hath respect that his Heirs, after his departure, may live in quiet and without brabbling.

But they cannot be in quiet if he do use Tropes: Therefore (I say) he useth no Tropes.

Cran. I deny your Minor.

West. Augustine in his Book intituled De unitate Ecclesie, the 10th Chapter, hath these words following:

Quid hoc est ergo? cum verba novissima hominis morientis audiantur iuxta ad inferos, nemo cum dicit esse mentum, & illius non iudicatur heres qui forte ea contemplerat. Quomodo ergo effugiamus verum Dei, si vel non credentes, vel contententes, expulsumus verba novissima, & unici filii Dei & Domini nostri Salvatoris, & duri in calum, & inde profecturi, quis ea negligat, quis non observet, & inde venturi ut de omnibus iudicet?

That is to say,

What a thing is this I pray you, when the last words of one lying upon his Death-bed are heard which is ready to go to his Grave, no man saith that he hath made a Lie, and he is not accounted his Heir which regardeth not those Words. How shall we then escape Gods Wrath, if either not believing or not regarding we shall reject the last Words both of the only Son of God, and also of our Lord and Saviour, both ascending into Heaven, and beholding from thence, who despoiled, who observeth them not, and so shall come from thence to judge all Men.

The Argument is thus formed:

Bar. Whosoever saith that the Testator lyeth, is a wicked Heir.

ba. But whosoever saith that Christ spake by figures, saith that he did lye.

ra. Ergo, Whosoever saith that Christ here spake by Figures, is a wicked Heir.

Cran. I deny the Minor. As who say it is necessary, Answer, that he which useth to speak by Tropes and Figures should lye in so doing.

Ogle. Your Judgment is disagreeing with all Churches. Cran. Nay, I disagree with the Papistical Church.

Ogle. This you do through the ignorance of Logick. Cran. Nay, this you say through the Ignorance of the Doctors.

Weston. I will go plainly to work by Scriptures. What took he?

Cran. Bread.

West. What gave he?

Cran. Bread.

West. What brake he?

Cran. Bread.

West. What did he eat?

Cran. Bread.

West. He gave Bread, therefore he gave not his Body. Argument? He gave not his Body, therefore it is not his Body verily, and in deed and in truth.

Cran. I deny the Argument.

Cole. This Argument holdeth, a disparatis: It is disparatis is Bread, Ergo, It is not the Body; and it is such an Argument a School or Reason, as cannot be dissolved. argum, mouing diverse

Cran. The like Argument may be made. He is a Rock, Substantia, being so

Ergo, He is not Christ. fundred in nature, that

Cole. It is not alike. one can never be said to be the other.

West. He gave not his Body indeed: Ergo, It was not his Body indeed. The Sacrament, being the figure Cran. He gave his Death, his Passion, and the Sacrament of his Passion. And in very deed, setting the Figure aside, formally it is not his Body. aside, formally it is not Christ's body.

West. Why? then the Scripture is false. dy.

Cran. Nay, the Scripture is most true. Christ.

West. This saith Chrysostom, Homil. 61. ad Pop. Antioch. Necessarium est, dilectissimi, mysterium dicere miraculum quid tandem sit, & quare sit datum, & quare rei utilis, &c.

That is to say,

Needful it is (Dear Friends) to tell you what the miracle of the Mysteries is, and wherefore it is given, and what profit there is of the thing. We are one Body, and Members of his Flesh and of his Bones. We that be in the Mystry, let us follow the thing which was spoken. Wherefore that we may become this thing, not only by love, but also that we may become one with that Flesh indeed, that is brought to pass by this food, which he gave unto us, minding to shew his great good will that he hath towards us: and therefore he mixed himself with us, and united his own Body with us, that we should be made all as one thing together, as a Body joyued and annexed to the Head, for this is a token of most ardent and perfect love. And the same thing Job also insinuating, said of his Servants, of whom he was desired

D. Oglethorpe breaketh the first of the head, and speaketh false Latin. Cranmer answers to Oglethorpe. Dr. Cranmer might have found fault with this Argument as well as with his Latin, being made in too much of figure.

Tropes may be used in mens Testaments: why not?

A. A. de Unitate Ecclesie

above measure, inasmuch that they; shewing their great desire toward him, said, who shall give unto us to be filled with his Flesh? Therefore also Christ did the same, who, to induce us into a great love toward him, and to declare his desire towards us, did not only give himself to be eaten of them that would, but also to be handled and eaten, and suffered us to fatten our Teeth in his Flesh, and to be united together, and so to fill all our desire. Like Lions therefore, as breathing fire, let us go from that Table, being made terrible to the Devil, remembering our Head in our mind, and his Charity which he shewed unto us. For Parents many times give their Children to other to be fed, but I do not so (saith he) but feed you with mine own Flesh, and set my self before you, desiring to make you all jolly People, and pretending to you great hope and expectation to look for things to come, who here give my self to you, but much more in the World to come. I am become your Brother, I took Flesh and blood for you. Again, my Flesh and Blood, by the which I am made your Kinsman, I deliver unto you.

Thus much out of Chrysofom. Out of which words I make this Argument.

The same Flesh whereby Christ is made our Brother and Kinsman, is given of Christ to us to be eaten.

Christ is made our Brother and Kinsman, by his true, natural, and organical Flesh.

Ergo, His true, natural, and organical Flesh, is given to us to be eaten.

Cran. I grant the consequence; and the consequent.

West. Therefore we eat it with our mouth.

Cran. I deny it. We eat it through Faith.

West. He gave us the same Flesh to eat whereby he became our Brother and Kinsman.

But he became our Brother and Kinsman by his true, natural, and organical Flesh.

Therefore he gave his true, natural, and organical Flesh to be eaten.

Cran. I grant he took and gave the same true, natural, and organical Flesh wherein he suffered, and yet he feedeth us spiritually, and that Flesh is received spiritually.

West. He gave us the same Flesh which he took of the Virgin.

But he took not the true Flesh of the Virgin spiritually, or in a figure.

Ergo, He gave his true natural Flesh, not spiritually.

Cran. Christ gave to us his own natural Flesh, the same wherein he suffered, but feedeth us spiritually.

West. Chrysofom is against you, Hom. 83. in 26. cap. Matth. where he saith; Veniat tibi in mentem quo sis honore honoratus, qua mensa fruatur. Ea namque re nos alimur, quam Angeli, &c.

That is to say;

Let it come into thy remembrance with what honour thou art honoured, and what Table thou sittest at: for with the same thing we are nourished, which the Angels do behold and tremble at: neither are they able to behold it without great fear, for the brightness which cometh thereof; and we be brought and compact into one heap or mass with him, being together one Body of Christ, and one Flesh with him. Who shall speak the powers of the Lord, and shall declare forth all his Praises? What Pastor hath ever nourished his Sheep with his own Members? Many Mothers have put forth their Infants after their birth to other Nurses: which he would not do, but feedeth us with his own Body, and conjoyneth and uniteth us to himself.

Whereupon I gather this Argument.

Like as Mothers nurse their Children, with Milk, so Christ nourisheth us with his Body.

But Mothers do not nourish their Infants spiritually with their Milk:

Therefore Christ doth not nourish those that be his spiritually with his Blood.

Cran. He gave us the Wine for his Blood.

West. If he gave the Wine for his Blood (as you say) then he gave less than Mothers do give.

But Chrysofom affirmeth, that he gave more than Mothers give.

Therefore he gave not the Wine for his Blood.

Cran. You pervert mine Answer. He gave Wine, yet the Blood is considered therein. As for Example: When he giveth Baptism, we consider not the Water, but the Holy Ghost, and Remission of Sins. We receive with the mouth the Sacrament; but the thing and the matter of the Sacrament we receive by Faith.

West. When Christ said, Eat ye, whether meant he by the Mouth or by Faith?

Cran. He meant that we should receive the Body by Faith, the Bread by the Mouth.

West. Nay, the Body by the Mouth.

Cran. That I deny.

West. I prove it out of Chrysofom, writing upon the 50th Psalm.

Erubescit fieri nutrix, quæ facta est mater. Christus autem non ita ipse nutritor est noster: idcirco pro cibo carne propria non pascit, & pro potu suum sanguinem nobis propinavit. Item in 26. Matthæi, Homil. 83. Non enim sufficit ipsi hominem fieri, flagellis interim cedi: sed nos secum in unam, ut ita dicam, massam reducit, neque id fide soluit, sed re ipsa nos corpus suum efficit.

That is to say;

She that is a Mother, shameth sometime to play the Nurse. But Christ our Nurse doth not so play with us. Therefore instead of Meat he feedeth us with his own Flesh, and instead of Drink he feedeth us with his own Blood. Likewise, upon the 26th Chapter of Matthew, the 83 Homily, he saith: for it shall not be enough for him to become Man, and in the mean while to be whipped; but he doth bring us into one mass or lump with himself (as I may so call it) and maketh us his Body, not by Faith alone, but also in very deed.

Cran. I grant, we make one Nature with Christ. But that to be done with Mouth I deny.

West. Chrysofom. 2. Cor. cap. 13. Hom. 29. hath these words, Chrysofom alleged by D. W. Hom. 29. in Epist. 3. Cor. cap. 13. Non vulgarem honorem consequutum est os nostrum, accipiens corpus Dominicum, i. No little honour is given to our Mouth, receiving the Body of the Lord.

Cran. This I say, that Christ entrench into us both by our Ears and by our Eyes. With our Mouth we receive the Body of Christ, and tear it with our Teeth, that is to say, the Sacrament of the Body of Christ. Wherefore I say and affirm, that the virtue of the Sacrament is much: and therefore Chrysofom many times speaketh of Sacraments no otherwise, than of Christ himself, as I could prove, if I might have liberty to speak, by many places of Chrysofom, where he speaketh of the Sacrament of the Body of Christ.

With which word of the Sacrament of the Body, &c. D. Cole being highly offended, denied it to be the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, save only of the Mystical Body which is the Church.

Cran. And why should we doubt to call it the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, offered upon the Cross, seeing both Christ and the Ancient Fathers do so call it?

Cole. How gather you that of Chrysofom?

Cran. Chrysofom declareth himself, Lib. 3. de Sacram. cap. 3. O miraculum, O Dei in nos benevolentia, Chrysofom alleged by D. W. Hom. 29. in Epist. 3. Cor. cap. 13. qui sursum sedet ad dextram Patris, sacrificii tamen tempore hominum manibus continetur, traditurque lambere cupientibus eum! Fit autem id nullis præstigiis, sed a deo. peris & circumspicientibus circumstantium omnium oculis.

That is to say;

O Miracle, O the good Will of God towards us, which sitteth above at the Right hand of the Father, and is holden in mens hands at the Sacrifices time, and is given to feed upon, to them that are desirous of him: And that is brought to pass by no subtilty or craft, but with the open and beholding Eyes of all the Standers-by.

Thus you hear Christ is seen here in Earth every day, is touched, is torn with the Teeth, that our Tongue is red with his Blood; which no Man having any Judgment will say or think to be spoken without Trope or Figure.

West. What Miracle is it if it be not his Body, and if he spake only of the Sacrament, as though it were his Body?

Dr. Westons Argument without error or figure.

Dr. Westons Argument denied: we are the true Body of Christ: Ergo, we eat it with our Mouth. A figurative Argument.

Anno 1554. But hearken what Chrysoſtom ſaith, Hom. 34. Quod ſummo honore dignum eſt, id tibi in terra oſtendo. Nam quemadmodum in Regis non parietes, non lectus aureus, ſed regium corpus in throno ſedens omnium preſantiſſimum eſt: Ita quoque in celis Regium corpus, quod nunc in terra proponitur. Non Angelus, non Archangelus, non celos colorum, ſed ipſum horum omnium Dominum tibi oſtendo. Animadvertis quoniam paſſio, quod omnium maximum eſt, atque præcipuum in terra, non conſpicitur tantum ſed tangis, neque ſolum tangis, ſed comedis; atque eo accepto domum redis. Abſterge igitur ab omni ſorde animam tuam.

That is to ſay.

I ſhew forth that thing on the Earth unto thee, which is worthy the greateſt Honour. For like as in the Palace of Kings, neither the Walls, nor the ſumptuous Bed, but the Body of Kings ſitting under the cloth of Eſtate, and Royal Seat of Maſteſty, is of all things elſe the moſt Excellent: ſo is in like manner the Kings Body in Heaven, which is now ſet before us on Earth. I ſhew thee neither Angels nor Archangels, nor the Heaven of Heavens, but the very Lord and Maſter of all theſe things. Thou perceivelt after what ſort thou doelt not only behold, but touchelt, and not only toucheſt, but eatelt that which on the Earth is the greateſt and chiefelt thing of all others, and when thou haſt received the ſame, thou goeſt home; wherefore cleanſe thy Soul from all Uncleaneſſe.

Upon this, I conclude that the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed us upon the Earth.

Cran. What? upon the Earth? no Man ſeeth Chriſt upon the Earth: He is ſeen with the Eyes of our Mind, with Faith and Spirit.

Wylſ. I pray you, what is it that ſeemeth worthy hiſt Honour on the Earth? Is it the Sacrament, or elſe the Body of Chriſt?

Cran. Chryſoſtom ſpeaketh of the Sacrament, and the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth in the Sacrament.

Wylſ. Ergo, Then the Sacrament is worthy greateſt Honour.

Cran. I deny the Argument.

Wylſ. That thing is ſhewed forth, and is now in the Earth (oſtenditur) & (a) (eſt) which is worthy hiſt Honour.

But only the Body of Chriſt is worthy hiſt Honour. Ergo, The Body of Chriſt is now on the Earth.

Cran. I anſwer, the Body of Chriſt to be on the Earth, but ſo as in the Sacrament, and as the Holy Ghoſt is in the Water of Baptiſm.

Wylſ. Chryſoſtom ſaith (oſtendo) I ſhew forth, which noteth a Subſtance to be preſent.

Cran. That is to be underſtood Sacramentally.

Wylſ. He ſaith (oſtendo in terra) I ſhew forth on Earth, declaring alſo the place where.

Cran. That is to be underſtood Figuratively,

Wylſ. He is ſhewed forth, and is now on the Earth, &c. as before.

Cran. Your Major and Conclusion are all one.

Wylſ. But the Major is true: Ergo, the Conclusion ſhould be true.

That thing is on the Earth, which is worthy of moſt high Honour.

But no Figure is worthy of hiſt Honour.

Ergo, That which is on the Earth, is no Figure.

Cran. I anſwer, that is true Sacramentally.

Here Wylſon crieth to him, that he ſhould anſwer to one part, bidding him repeat his Words. Which when he went about to do, ſuch was the Noiſe and crying out in the School, that his mild Voice could not be heard. For when he went about to declare to the People how the Prolocutor did not well Engliſh the Words of Chryſoſtom, uſing for oſtenditur in terra, He is ſhewed forth on the Earth, eſt in terra, He is on the Earth, whereas Chryſoſtom ſaith not (eſt) nor any ſuch word of being on the Earth, but only of ſhewing, as the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt, in Baptiſmo oſtenditur, i. is ſhewed forth in Baptiſm: and oftentimes he did inculcate the word oſtenditur. Then the Prolocutor, ſtretching forth his hand, ſet on the rude People to cry out at him, filling all the School with hiſſing, clapping of hands, and noiſe, calling him indoctum, imperitum, impudentem, i. unlearned, unſkilful, impudent. Which impudent and reproachful words this Reverend Man moſt patiently and meekly did abide, as one that had been inured with the ſuffering of ſuch-like reproaches. And when the Prolocutor, not yet ſatiſfied with this rude and unſenſibly demeanour, did urge and call upon him to anſwer the Argument: Then ſic bad the Notary repeat his Words again.

Notary. That which is worthy moſt high Honour, here I ſhew forth to thee on Earth.

The Body of Chriſt is worthy hiſt Honour.

Ergo, He ſheweth forth the Body of Chriſt here in Earth. Cran. That is ſhewed forth here on the Earth which may be ſeen, which may be touched, and which may be eaten, but theſe things be not true of the Body.

Cole. Why ſhould not theſe things be true of the Body of Chriſt?

Cran. The Major out of Chryſoſtom is true, meaning of the Sacraments. For in the Sacrament the true Body of Chriſt, and not the Figurative Body, is ſet forth:

Wylſ. Shew me ſomewhat in Earth worthy greateſt Honour.

Cran. I cannot, but in the Sacrament only.

Wylſ. Ergo, The Sacrament is worthy greateſt Honour.

Cran. So it is.

Judges. Let it be written.

Cran. I pray you let my Anſwer be written likewiſe: I affirm, that the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth unto us. It is our Faith that ſeeth Chriſt.

Wylſ. Oſtendo tibi, i. I ſhew it to thee, ſaith Chryſoſtom, not to thy Faith.

Cran. He ſpeaketh Sacramentally.

Wylſ. Ergo, Chryſoſtom lieth. For he ſpeaketh of ſhewing, ſaith: Ego Chryſoſtomus oſtendo, i. I Chryſoſtom do ſhew. But he can ſhew nothing Sacramentally.

Cred. By force of Argument we are brought to this Point, That the Body of Chriſt is proved to be on Earth, not only Sacramentally, but in very deed alſo, by this reaſon, that it is worthy hiſt Honour. The reaſon is indiſſoluble.

Cran. I never heard a more vain Argument, and it is moſt vain; alſo it hath mine Anſwer unto it.

Cred. Will you affirm, that it is abſurd which Chryſoſtom ſaith, that the Body of Chriſt is touched?

I touch the Body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as Thomas touched Chriſt.

Thomas touched Chriſt, and ſaid, Dominus meus; Deus meus, my Lord, my God.

Ergo, That which he touched was the Lord, the God.

¶ This Argument, as I received it out of the Notaries Book, is not formal; but rather he ſhould conclude in the third Figure thus:

Da. As Thomas touched the Body of Chriſt, ſo we touch it in the Sacrament.

ti. Thomas touched the Body of Chriſt Corporally.

ſi. Ergo, We touch the Body of Chriſt Corporally in the Sacrament.

Cran. I deny your Argument. He touched not God, but him which was God. Neither is it found Doctrine to affirm, that God is touched.

Cred. This is becauſe of the Union; jo that God is ſaid to be touched, when Chriſt, which is both God and Man, is touched.

Tertullian de carnis Reſurrectione, ſaith, Videamus de propria Chriſtiani hominis forma, quam a huius ſubſtantiæ ſtrivola & ſordida apud Deum prerogativa ſit. Eſt iuſſerit illi, quod nulla omnino anima ſalutem poſſet adipiſci, dum eſt in carne, crediderit: adeo caro ſalutis caro eſt, de qua cum anima Deo alligatur, ipſa eſt qua eſſicit ut anima alligari poſſit; ſed & caro abſolvitur, ut anima emanculeſcit; caro ungitur, ut anima conſecratur; ſignatur, ut anima muniatur; caro manibus impoſitione adumbratur; ut anima Spiritu illuminetur; caro corpore & ſanguine Chriſti reſcitur, ut anima de Deo ſignetur.

That is to ſay.

Let us conſider as concerning the proper form of the Chriſtian Man, what great Prerogative this vain and foul ſubſtance of ours hath with God. Although it were ſufficient to it, that no Soul could ever get Salvation, unleſs it believe while it is in the fleſh: ſo much the fleſh availeth to Salvation; by the which fleſh it cometh, that whereas the Soul ſeis linked unto God, it is the ſaid fleſh that cauſeth the Soul to be linked: Yet the Fleſh moreover is waſhed that

How the Body of Chriſt is ſhewed us upon the Earth.

(c) This word (eſt) is not in Chryſoſtom. This Argument of Wylſon, ſtanding only upon affirmatives in the ſecond figure, hath no perfect form in Logic.

Cranmer anſwereth to the place of Chryſoſtom, how Chriſt is ſhewed forth on the earth, not bodily, but in a Sacrament, that is Sacramentally and figuratively.

Wylſon ſaith, ſeeth the words of Chryſoſtom.

There were words uſed in the ſchool againſt Dr. Cranmer.

The Argument of Chryſy is not formal.

God cannot be touched.

D. Tresham disputech.

Anno 1554. him, did (as you do now) elude the right meaning of it by his false Interpretations. But the Catholick Church hath always believed and ever maintained, That Christ is one with the Father in Nature, and not by consent of Will only. To the proof whereof, when the Catholicks vouched this Testimony of John, Pater & Ego unum sumus, i. The Father and I are one: The Arrians Answered, that (unum sumus) was to be understood by the assent of their Wills, and agreement of their Minds, not by Unity of their Natures. Thus it happeneth now adays, where Men do doubt of the Sacrament. But Hilary going on, and proving the Natural conjunction between the Father and the Son à fortiori, questioneth with his Adversaries after this manner. I demand of them now which will needs have the Unity of Will only between the Father and the Son, whether Christ be now in us truly by Nature, or only by the agreement of Wills. If (saith he) the word be incarnate in very deed, and we receive at the Lords Table the Word made flesh, how then is he to be thought not to dwell in us naturally, who being born Man, hath both taken the nature of our Flesh upon him that is now inseparable, and hath also mingled that nature of his own Flesh unto the nature of Eternity under the Sacrament of his Flesh, to be communicated unto us? Thus much hath Hilary. Whereupon I ask of you this question: How Christ dwelleth now in us? according to Faith, or according to Nature?

Cran. I say that Christ dwelleth verily in us Carnally and Naturally, for that he hath taken of the Virgin our Flesh upon him, and because he hath communicated his Nature unto us.

Tresh. Bucer contra Abrincensem, referreth these words only to the Eucharist, saying, Christ doth exhibit all this unto us in his holy Supper, and according to the holy Fathers (saith he) Christ liveth thereby in us, not only by faith and love, as absent, but naturally, corporally, and carnally. Therefore he is not absent, neither are we joynted to Christ only by a spiritual Union (as you suppose) but also by a corporal and carnal Union.

Cran. I know that Mr. Bucer was a Learned man. But your Faith is in good case, which leaseth upon Bucer. Tresh. I do not bring Bucer as a Patron of our Faith, but because he is a man of your sort, and yet bringeth this place of Hilary for that Union which we have by the Sacrament, and confesseth, that by it we are Carnally united to Christ, whereas you think we are joynted by it only through Faith and Love.

Cran. I say that Christ was communicated unto us, not only by Faith, but in very deed also when he was born of the Virgin. We have fellowship with Christ, when we are united in the Unity of the Church, when we are made flesh of his Flesh, and bones of his Bones, and so we are united in the Communion, in Baptism, and in Faith.

Tresh. I pray you what fellowship have we with Christ, in that he is made Man? Are not the Turks and Jews therein joynted with him? For they are Men as we are, and are joynted with him in Mans nature, in that he was born of a Woman. I speak now of a more near Unity. We are made one with Christ by the Communion in a perfect Unity.

Cran. We are made so, I grant: but we are made so also by Baptism; and the Unity in Baptism is perfect.

Tresh. We are not made one by Baptism in a perfect Unity, as Hilary there speaketh, but by the Communion, by which we are carnally made one, but not likewise by Baptism: wherefore you understand not Hilary. You shall hear his words, which are these: He had now declared before the Sacrament of his perfect Union, saying: As the living Father sent me, so do I also live by the Father. And he that eateth my Flesh, shall also live through me. And a little after that he writeth thus: This truly is the cause of our Life, that we have Christ dwelling by his Flesh in us that are fleshy, which also by him shall live in flesh (for as he liveth by his Father). Wherefore of these Words it is manifest, that we obtain this perfect Unity by means of the Sacrament, and that Christ by it is Carnally united unto us.

Cran. Nay, Hilary in that same place doth teach, that it is done by Baptism: and that Doctrine is not to be fulfilled in the Church, which teacheth, that we are not joynted to Christ by Baptism.

West. Repeat the Argument.

Cran. You must first make an Argument.

Tresh. It is made already, but it shall be made again in this form:

Da. As Christ liveth by his Father, so they that eat Christ's Flesh live by the same flesh.

ti. But Christ liveth by the Father, not only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

fi. Ergo, We live not through the eating of Christ's flesh, by Faith and Love only, but Naturally.

Cran. We live by Christ, not only by Faith and Love, but Eternally indeed.

Tresh. Nays (b) Naturally; I prove it thus:

As Christ liveth by the Father, so live we by his Flesh eaten of us.

But Christ liveth not by his Father, only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

Therefore we do not live by eating of Christ's Flesh only by Faith and Love (as you suppose), but Naturally.

Cran. The Minor is not true.

Tresh. This is the Opinion of Arrius. That Christ is united to his Father by conjunction of Mind, and not Naturally.

Cran. I say not so yet, neither do I think so. But I will tell you what I like not in your Minor. You say, That Christ doth not live by his Father only by Faith and Love: but I say, That Christ liveth not at all by his Faith.

West. Mark and consider well this word (by Faith) left any occasion of Cavilling be given.

Tresh. Let that word (by Faith) be omitted. Neither did I mean, that Christ liveth by his Father through Faith. Yet the strength of the Argument remaineth in force; for else Hilary doth not confute the Arrians, except there be a greater conjunction between us and Christ, when he is eaten of us, than only a Spiritual conjunction. You do only grant an Union. As for a Carnal or Natural Union of the Substance of Flesh, by which we are joynted more than Spiritually, you do not grant. But our Lord Jesus give you a better Mind, and shew you the light of his Truth, that you may return into the way of Righteousness.

West. We came hither, to dispute, and not to Pray.

Tresh. Is it not lawful to pray for them that Err?

West. It is not lawful yet. But proceed.

Tresh. Again, I reason thus: As Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner do we live by the eating of his Flesh.

But Christ liveth not by his Father, only in unity of Will, but Naturally.

Ergo, We do not live when we eat the Flesh of Christ, only by Faith and Unity of Will, but Naturally.

Cran. This is my Faith, and it agreeth with the Scripture, Christ liveth by his Father Naturally, and maketh us to live by himself indeed Naturally, and that not only in the Sacrament of the Eucharist, but also in Baptism. For Infants, when they are baptized, do eat the Flesh of Christ.

West. Answer either to the whole Argument, or to the parts thereof. For this Argument is strong, and cannot be dissolved.

Cran. This is the Argument.

As Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner do we live by his Flesh, being eaten of us.

But Christ liveth not by his Father only in Unity of Will, but Naturally.

Ergo, We eating his Flesh do not live only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

But the Major is false; namely, That by the same manner we live by Christ, as he liveth by his Father.

West. (a) Hilary saith, After the same manner, upon these words, He that eateth my Flesh shall live by me. Ergo, Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner we shall live by his Flesh. Here you see, that Hilary saith, After the same manner.

So our Spirit and Soul, receiving the Natural body of Christ in the Mystere, by Faith do receive also the nature of his Body, that is, the Power, Indification, and Life: the operation whereof re-feeding like aye unto our Bodies, which make the same allowable of the same Glory and Immortality. And that it is so, that as Christ liveth Naturally by his Father, so we live Naturally by the Body of Christ eaten in the Sacrament, having received both to the Manhood of him and us. So as the Flesh of Christ is respect of bare Flesh, liveth not Naturally by the Father, but for us it is joynted to his Immortality: So our Flesh liveth not naturally by Christ's body eaten in the Sacrament, but for every wicked Man eating the Sacrament should live Naturally by him, but for that our flesh is joynted to the Spirit and Soul, which naturally eateth the body of Christ by faith, and only the bodies of the faithful do live by eating the Body of Christ naturally, and not the bodies of the wicked.

Hilary.

Cran. After the same manner, doth not signifie alike in all things, but in deed and eternally: for so do we live by Christ, and Christ liveth by his Father. For in other respects Christ liveth otherwise by his Father, than we live by Christ.

Welf. He liveth by his Father naturally and eternally.

Cran. We live by Christ naturally and eternally. We do not live naturally, but by Grace, if you take Naturally for the manner of Nature; as Christ hath Eternal life of his Father, so have we of him.

Welf. I stick to this word Naturally.

Cran. I mean it touching the truth of Nature. For Christ liveth otherwise by his Father, than we live by Christ.

Naturally
expounded.

Welf. Hilary in his Eighth Book De Trinitate, denyeth it, when he saith: He liveth therefore by his Father, and as he liveth by his Father, after the same manner we shall live by his Flesh.

Cran. We shall live after the same manner, as concerning the Nature of the Flesh of Christ: For as he hath of his Father the Nature of Eternity, so shall we have of him.

Welf. Answer unto the Parts of the Argument.

The Argument the third time repeated.

As Christ liveth by his Father, after the same manner shall we live by his Flesh.

But Christ doth not live by his Father only in Unity of Will, but Naturally.

Ergo. We eating of his Flesh, do not live only by Faith and Love, but Naturally.

Cran. I grant (as I said) we live by Christ naturally: but I never heard that Christ liveth with his Father in Unity of Will only.

Welf. Because it seemeth a Marvel unto you, hear what Hilary saith: These things are recited of us to this end, because the Hereticks, feigning an Unity of Will only between the Father and the Son, did use the Example of our Unity with God, as though we being United to the Son, and by the Son to the Father only by Obedience and Will of Religion, had no propriety of the Natural Communion by the Sacrament of the Body and Blood.

Put answer to the Argument. Christ liveth by his Father Naturally and Eternally: Therefore do we live by Christ Naturally and Eternally.

Ex ample of man Cranmer descript.

Cran. Cyril and Hilary do say, that Christ is united to us not only by Will, but also by Nature: He doth communicate to us his own Nature, and so is Christ made one with us Carnally and Corporally, because he took our Nature of the Virgin Mary. And Hilary doth not say only that Christ is naturally in us, but that we also are naturally in him, and in the Father; that is, that we are Partakers of their Nature, which is Eternity, or Everlastingness. For as the Word, receiving our Nature, did joynt in Unity of Person, and did communicate unto that our Nature, the Nature of his Eternity, that like as he, being the Everlasting Word of the Father, had everlasting Life of the Father; even so he gave the same Nature to his Flesh. Likewise also did he communicate with us the same Nature of Eternity, which he and the Father have, and that we should be one with them, not only in Will and Love, but that we should be also Partakers of the nature of everlasting Life.

Naturally
expounded, that is, our Bodies to participate the nature and property of Christ's Holy Immortal Body.

Welf. Hilary, where he saith, Christ communicated to us his Nature, meaneth that not by his Nativity, but by the Sacrament.

Cran. He hath communicated to us his Flesh by his Nativity.

Welf. We have communicated to him (b) our Flesh when he was born.

Then had Christ a sin-nall Flesh.

Cran. Nay, he communicated to us his Flesh, when he was born, and that I will shew you out of Cyril upon this place, Et homo factus est.

Welf. Ergo, Christ being born, gave us his Flesh.

Cran. In his Nativity he made us (c) Partakers of his Flesh.

That is,
made us partakers of the properties, life, immortality, and resurrection of his Body.

Ched. This place of Hilary is so dark, that you were compelled to falsifie it in your Book, because you could not draw it to confirm your Purpose.

If Christ have taken verily the Flesh of our Body, and the Man that was verily born of the Virgin Mary is Christ, and also we receive under the true Mystery the Flesh of his Body, by means whereof we shall be one (for the Father is in Christ, and Christ in us) how shall that be called the Unity of Will, when the natural Property, brought to pass by the Sacrament, is the Sacrament of Unity. We must not speak in the sense of Man, or of the World in matters concerning God: Neither must we perversely wrest any strange or wicked Sense out of the wholesome Meaning of the Holy Scripture, through impudent and vile Contention. Let us read those things that are written, and let us understand those things that we read, and then we shall perform the Duty of perfect Faith. For as touching that Natural and True Being of Christ in us, except we learn of him, we speak foolishly and ungodly that thing that we do speak. For he saith, My Flesh is Meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed: He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Blood, abideth in me, and I in him. As touching the Verity of his Flesh and Blood, there is left no place of doubt: For now, both by the Testimony of the Lord, and also by our Faith, it is Verily Flesh, and Verily Blood.

Here you have falsified Hilary, for you have set vero sub mysterio, for vere sub mysterio, we receive truly under a Mystery. Hilary twice reporteth vere sub mysterio, and you interpret it twice vero sub mysterio, but the third time you have vero for vere.

Thus far will their talk be English.
Being Mr.
Cranmer had twice vere, and but once vero, they had no cause to be grieved, but that they were disposed to

in a Eagle

Cran. Affuredly, I am not guilty of any deceit herein. It may be that the Copy which I followed had sub vero mysterio, i. under a True Mystery; although touching the Sense it differeth little. God I call to witness, I have always hated falsifying, and if you had leisure and lust to hear false Citations, I could recite unto you fix hundred.

Welf. Here shall be shewed you two Copies of Hilary, the one printed at Basil, the other at Paris.

Cran. I suppose that Dr. Smith's Book hath vero.

Welf. Here is Dr. Smith; let him answer for himself. Mr. Smith, Mr. Doctor, what say you for your self? speak, if you know it.

¶ Here Dr. Smith, either for the Truth in his Book alleged, or else affronted with Dr. Welf's hasty calling, staid to answer: For he only put off his Cap, and kept silence.

Welf. But your own Book, printed by Welf your own Printer, hath vero.

Cran. That Book is taken from me, which easily might have ended this Controverfie. I am sure, the Book of Decrees, hath vero.

Cole. Now you admit the Book of Decrees, when it maketh for you.

Here Dr.
Cole beginneth to charge

Cran. Touching the sense of the matter there is little difference. The change of one Letter for another, is but a small matter.

Welf. No? Yes; Pastor (as you know) signifieth a Bishop, and Pistor signifieth a Baker. But Pastor shall be Pistor, a Bishop shall be a Baker by this your change of one Letter, if vere and vero do nothing change the sense.

Cran. Let it be so, that in Pistor and Pastor one Letter, maketh some difference: Yet let Pistor be either a Maker or Baker of Bread, ye see here the change of a Letter, and yet no great difference to be in the sense.

Tong. This Disputation is taken in hand, that the Truth might appear. I perceive that I must go another way to work than I had thought. It is a common saying, Against them that deny Principles, we must not dispute. Therefore, that we may agree of the Principles, I demand, Whether there be any other Body of Christ, than his Instrumental Body?

Cran. There is no Natural Body of Christ, but his Organical Body.

Tong. Again, I demand, whether Sense and Reason ought to give place to Faith?

Cran. They ought.

Tong. Thirdly, Whether Christ be True in all his Words?

Cran. Yea, he is most True, and Truth it self.

Tong. Fourthly, Whether Christ at his Supper minded to do that which he spake, or no?

Cran. Dicendo dixit, non fecit dicendo; sed fecit Disce- pulis Sacramentum. i. In saying he spake, but in saying he made not, but made the Sacrament to his Disciples.

Tong. Answer according to the Truth, Whether did Christ that as God and Man which he spake, when he said, This is my Body?

D. Tonge Sophistical Interrogato-ries.

Cran.

Anno 1554. Cran. This is a Sophistical Cavillation; go plainly to work. There is some deceit in these Questions. You seek subtilties, leave your crafty fences.

Tong. I demand, Whether Christ by these Words wrought any thing or no?

Cran. He did institute the Sacrament.

Tong. But answer, whether did he work any thing?

Cran. He did work in instituting the Sacrament.

Tong. Now I have you; for before you said, it was a Figurative Speech.

But a Figure worketh nothing.

Ergo, it is not a Figurative Speech. A Lyar ought to have a good Memory.

Cran. I understood your Sophistry before. You by Working understand Converting into the Body of Christ; But Christ wrought the Sacrament, not in Converting, but in Instituting.

Tong. Wo be to them that make Christ a Deceiver. Did he work any other thing than he spake, or the self same thing?

Cran. He wrought the Sacrament, and by these Words he signified the Effect.

Tong. A Figurative Speech is no working thing;

no But the Speech of Christ is Working:

no. Ergo, It is not Figurative.

Cran. It worketh by Instituting, not by Converting.

Tong. The thing signified in the Sacrament, is it not that Sacrament?

Cran. It is. For the thing is ministred in a Sign. He followeth the Letter that taketh the thing for a Sign. Augustine separateth the Sacrament from the thing. The Sacrament (saith he) is one, and the thing of the Sacrament another.

Wesl. Stick to this Argument;

It is a Figurative Speech.

Ergo, It worketh nothing.

Tong. But the Speech of Christ is a Working thing;

Ergo, It is not Figurative.

Cran. Oh how many Crafts are in this Argument? they are meer Fallacies; I said not, That the Words of Christ do work, but Christ himself; and he worketh by a Figurative Speech.

Wesl. If a Figure works, it maketh of Bread the Body of Christ.

Cran. A Figurative Speech worketh not.

Wesl. A Figurative Speech, by your own Confession, worketh nothing.

But the Speech of Christ in the Supper (as you grant) wrought somewhat.

Ergo, The Speech of Christ in the Supper was not Figurative.

Cran. I answer, These are meer Sophisms: The Speech doth not work, but Christ by the Speech doth work the Sacrament.

I look for Scriptures at your Hands, for they are the Foundation of Disputations.

Tong. Are not these Words of Scripture, This is my Body? The Word of Christ is of strength; and by the Lords Words the Heavens were made. He said, This is my Body: Ergo, he made it.

Cran. He made the Sacrament, and I deny your Argument.

Tong. If he wrought nothing, nothing is left there. He said, This is my Body. You say contrary to the Scriptures, it is not the Body of Christ, and fall from the Faith.

Cran. You interpret the Scriptures contrary to all the Old Writers, and sign a strange Sense.

Tong. Ambrose, De iis qui initiantur Sacris, cap. 9. saith: De totius mundi operibus legisti, quia ipse dixit, & facta sunt, ipse mandavit & creata sunt. Sermo Christi qui potuit ex nihilo facere quod non erat, non potest ea quae sunt in id mutare quae non erant? Non enim minus est novus rei dare, quam mutare naturam. Sed quid argumentis utimur? Ipsi utamur exemplis, incarnationis; quae exemplo astruamus mysterii veritatem. Nunquid naturae usus praecessit cum Dominus Jesus ex Maria nasceretur? Si ordinem querimus, vitro mixta femina generare consuevit; Liqueat igitur quod praeter naturae ordinem virgo generavit: & hoc quod conficimus corpus ex virgine est. Quid hic queris naturae ordinem in Christi corpore, cum praeter naturam sit ipse Dominus Jesus partus ex Virgine? Vera utique caro Christi quae crucifixa est, quae sepulta est: Verè ergo illius Sacramentum est. Clamat Dominus Jesus; Hoc est corpus meum. Ante benedictionem corporum caelestium alia species nominatur, post consecrationem corpus significatur. Ipse dicit sanguinem suum. Ante consecrationem aliud dicitur: post consecrationem sanguis nuncupatur. Et in dicit, Amen, hoc est, verum est. Quod os loquitur, mens interna fateatur: quod sermo sonat, affectus sentiat.

That is:

Thou hast read of the Works of all the World; That he spake the Word, and they were made; he commanded, and they were created. Cannot the Word of Christ, which made of nothing that which was not, change those things that are, into that they were not? For it is no less matter to give new things, than to change Natures. But what use Arguments? let us use his own Examples, and let us confirm the Verity of the Mystery by Example of his Incarnation. Did the Use of Nature go before, when the Lord Jesus was born of Mary? If you seek the Order of Nature, Conception is wont to be made by a Woman joyned to a Man. It is manifest therefore, that contrary to the "order of Nature, a Virgin did conceive: " As Christ And this Body that we make, is of the Virgin. What Jesus was conceived against the order of nature; so in this is the thing of this it is truly the Sacrament of him. The Lord Jesus himself crieth; This is my Body. Before the Blessing of the Heavenly Words, it is named another kind: but after the Consecration the Body of Christ is signified. He calleth it his Blood. Before Consecration it is called another thing: After Consecration it is called Blood; and thou saist, Amen; that is, It is true. That the Mouth speaketh, let the inward Mind confess; that the Word foundeth, let the Heart perceive.

The same Ambrose in his Fourth Book of Sacraments the Fourth Chapter, saith thus: Panis iste panis est ante consecrationem; ubi accesserit consecratio, de panis verba Sacramentorum; ubi accesserit consecratio, de panis fit caro Christi. Hoc igitur astruamus; quomodo patet, qui panis est, corpus esse Christi, & cuius sermonibus Dominus Jesus. Nam ad reliqua omnia quae dicuntur, laus Deo deferatur, oratione potius pro Populo, pro Regibus, pro ceteris; ubi venit ut consecraret venerabile Sacramentum, jam non suis sermonibus Sacerdos utitur, sed sermonibus Christi. Ergo sermo Christi hoc conficit Sacramentum. Quis sermo? Nemo est quo facta sunt omnia. Fuit Dominus & factum est caelum; fuit Dominus & facta est terra; fuit Dominus & facta sunt Maria, &c. Vides ergo quam operatorius sit sermo Christi. Si ergo tanta vis est in sermone Domini, ut inciperent esse quae non erant, quanto magis operatorius est, ut sint quae erant, & in aliud commutentur.

That is to say,

This Bread is Bread before the Words of the Sacraments; when the Consecration cometh to it, of Bread it is made the Flesh of Christ. Let us confirm this therefore; How can that which is Bread, by Consecration be the Body of Christ? By what words then is the Consecration made, and by whose Words? By the Words of our Lord Jesus. For touching all other things that are said, Praise is given to God, Prayer is made for the People, for Kings, and for the rest: When it cometh that the Reverend Sacrament must be made, then the Priest useth not his own Words, but the Words of Christ: Therefore the Word of Christ maketh this Sacrament. What Word? That Word, by which all things were made: The Lord "commanded, and Heaven was made; the Lord commanded, and the Earth was made; the Lord commanded, and the Seas were made; the Lord commanded, and all Creatures were made. Dost thou not see then how strong in working the Word of Christ is? If therefore so great Strength be in the Lords Word, that those things should begin to be which were not before, how much the rather is it of Strength to work, that these things which were, should be changed into another thing? Ambrose saith, that the Words are of Strength to work.

Wesl. con.

Answer to D. Yong. by Wesl.

The figurative speech worketh not but Christ by the figurative speech worketh the Sacrament.

Amb. de iis qui initiantur, &c. cap. 9.

The words of Ambrose in English.

But the Lord Jesus here useth not such words of consecrating in the Sacrament as in the Creation; for we read not, Let us create &c.

Weston. You omit those Words which follow, which maketh the Sense of Ambrose plain: Read them.

Amb. de Sacram. cap. 1.

"Almonds return & furboloweth."

Tong. Calam non erat, mare non erat, terra non erat. Sed quid dicentem, ipse dixit & facta sunt; ipse mandavit & creata sunt. Ergo tibi ut respondeam, non erat corpus Christi ante consecrationem, sed post consecrationem dico tibi quod jam corpus Christi est. That is, Heaven was not, the Sea was not, the Earth was not, but hear him that said: He spake the word, and they were made; he commanded, and they were created. Therefore to answer thee, it was not the Body of Christ before Consecration, but after the Consecration, I say to thee, that now it is the Body of Christ.

Cran. All these things are common. I say, that God doth chiefly work in the Sacraments.

Tong. How doth he work?

Cran. By his Power, as he doth in Baptism.

Tong. Nay, by the Word he changeth the Bread into his Body, This is the Truth, acknowledge the Truth, give place to the Truth.

Cran. O Glorious Words! You are too full of words.

Tong. Nay, O Glorious Truth! You make no Change at all.

Cran. Not so, but I make a great change; as in them that are baptized, is there not a great change, when the Child of the Bondslave of the Devil, is made the Son of God? so it is also in the Sacrament of the Supper, when he receiveth us into his Protection and Favour.

Tong. If he work in the Sacraments, he worketh in this Sacrament.

Cran. God worketh in his Faithful, not in the Sacraments.

West. In the Supper the Words are directed to the Bread; in Baptism to the Spirit. He said not, the Water is the Spirit, but of the Bread he said, This is my Body.

As the Dove is called the Spirit, so the Bread is called the Body.

Cran. He called the Spirit a Dove, when the Spirit descended in likeness of a Dove.

West. He doth not call the Spirit a Dove; but he saith, that he descended as a Dove. He was seen in the likeness of a Dove. As in Baptism the words are directed to him that is baptized, so in the Supper the words are directed unto the Bread.

John 1. August. in John cap. 1.

Cran. Nay it is written, Upon whomsoever thou shalt see the Spirit descending. He calleth that which descended the Holy Spirit. And Augustine calleth the Dove, the Spirit. Hear what Augustine saith in 1 Joh. Quid voluit per Columbam, id est, per Spiritum Sanctum docere, qui miserat eum. That is, What meant he by the Dove, that is, by the Holy Ghost? forsooth to teach, who sent him.

Ambrosius again repeated. De Sacram. cap. 4.

Tong. He understandeth of the Spirit descending as a Dove: The Spirit is invisible. If you mind to have the Truth heard, let us proceed. Hear what Ambrose saith: Vides quam operarius sit Sermo Christi. Si ergo tanta vis in sermone Domini, &c. ut supra. That is, You see what a working Power the Word of Christ hath. Therefore if there be so great Power in the Lords Word, that those things which were not, begin to be, how much more of strength is it, to work, that those things that were, should be changed into another thing?

Idem cap. 1.

And in the fifth Chap. Antequam consecratur panis est: ubi autem verba Christi accesserint, corpus est Christi, i. Before it is consecrated, it is Bread: but when the Words of Christ come to it, it is the Body of Christ.

But hear what he saith more; Accipite, edite, hoc est corpus meum; Take ye, eat ye, this is my Body. Ante verba Christi calix est vini & aqua plenus: ubi verba Christi operata fuerint, ibi sanguis efficitur, qui redemit plebem. Before the Words of Christ, the Cup is full of Wine and Water; when the Words of Christ have wrought, there is made the Blood of Christ which redeemed the People.

It followeth to Ambrose.

Cran. Nay, what can be left to the purpose? The words are of strength to work in this Sacrament, as they are in Baptism.

Pie. The Words of Christ (as Ambrose saith) are of strength to work. What do they work? Ambrose saith, they make the blood which redeemed the People.

Ergo. The Natural Blood is made.

Cran. The Sacrament of his Blood is made. The words make the Blood to them that receive it: Not that the Blood is in the Cup, but in the Receiver.

Pie. There is made the Blood which redeemed the People.

1554

Cran. The Blood is made, that is, the Sacrament of the Blood, by which he redeemed the People. (For) it is made, that is to say, (offenditur) it is shewed forth there. And Ambrose saith, we receive in a Similitude. As thou hast received the Similitude of his death, so also thou drinkest the Similitude of his precious Blood.

West. He saith, in a Similitude, because it is ministered under another likeness. And this is the Argument:

"There is made the Blood which redeemed the People. But the Natural Blood redeemed the People.

Ergo. There is the Natural Blood of Christ.

You answer, that words make it Blood to them that receive it; not that Blood is in the Cup, but because it is made Blood to them that receive it. That all men may see how fully you would avoid the Fathers, hear what Ambrose saith in the sixth Book and first Chapter.

Forté dicas, quomodo vera? qui similitudinem vides, non video sanguinis veritatem. Primum omnium dixi tibi de sermone Christi, qui operatur, ut possit mutare & convertere genera instituta nature. Deinde ubi non tulerunt sermonem Discipuli ejus, sed audientes, quod carnem suam dedit manducari, & sanguinem suum dedit bibendum, recedebant. Solus tamen Petrus dixit, Verba vite eterne habes, & ego a te quod recedam? Ne igitur plures hoc dicerent, veluti quidam esset horror crucis, sed maneret gratia redemptionis, ideo in similitudinem quidem accipis sacramentum, sed verè naturæ gratiam virtutemque consequeris.

Mark how D. Weston expoundeth to eat in a Similitude. "It is his Syllogism be in the second Figure (as by finding of the Terms appereth) then is it false, because it concludeth affirmatively. Ambrosius cap. 1. de Sacramentis Operari. Mitare."

That is to say.

Peradventure thou wilt say, How be they true? I which see the Similitude, do not see the truth of the Blood. First of all I told thee of the Word of Christ, which so worketh, that it can change and turn kinds ordained by nature. Afterward, when the Disciples could not abide the Words of Christ, but hearing that he gave his Flesh to eat, and his Blood to drink, they departed. Only Peter said, Thou hast the Words of Eternal Life, Whether should I go from thee? Left therefore more should say this thing, as though there should be a certain horror of Blood, and yet the Grace of Redemption should remain: Therefore in a Similitude thou receivest the Sacrament, but indeed thou obtainest the Grace and Power of his Nature.

Cran. These words of themselves are plain enough. And he read this place again, Thou receivest the Sacrament for a Similitude. But what is that he saith, Thou receivest for a Similitude? I think he understandeth the Sacrament to be the similitude of his Blood.

Answer to Ambrose.

Ched. That you may understand that Truth dissenteth not from Truth, to overthrow that which you say of that similitude; hear what Ambrose saith, lib. 4. de Sacrament.

Si operatus est sermo calefactis in aliis rebus, non operatur in Sacramentis calefactis? Ergo didicisti quod & pane corpus fiat Christi, & quod vinum & aqua in calicem miratur, sed sit sanguis consecratione verbi calefactis. Sed forte dices, speciem sanguinis non videri. Sed habet similitudinem. Sicut enim mortis similitudinem sumpsisti, ita etiam similitudinem preciosi sanguinis bibis, ut nullus horror crucis sit, & pretium tamen operetur redemptionis. Didicisti ergo, quia quod accipis corpus est Christi.

Ambrosius de Sacrament. lib. 4.

That is to say.

If the Heavenly Word did work in other things, doth it not work in the Heavenly Sacraments? Therefore thou hast learned, that of Bread is made the Body of Christ, and that Wine and Water is put into that Cup, but by consecration of the Heavenly Word it is made Blood. But thou wilt say peradventure, that the likeness of Blood is not seen. But it hath a Similitude. For as thou hast received the similitude of his death, so also thou drinkest the similitude of his precious Blood, so that there is no horror of Blood, and yet it worketh the price of Redemption. Therefore thou hast learned, that that which thou receivest is the Body of Christ.

Cran. He speaketh of Sacraments sacramentally. He calleth the Sacraments by the Names of the Things; Sacraments for he useth the Signs for the Things signified: And therefore the Bread is not called Bread, but his Body, for the Things the

Note, that Ambrose saith, we drink a similitude of Christs Blood. Answer to the place of Ambrosius. Sacraments are called by the name of the things for the Things the West. Now then take this Argument.

Wherefore Gods authority is, there is Christs Body.
But Gods authority is in every place,
Ergo, What letteth the Body of Christ to be in every place?

Moreover you have also corrupted Duns.

Cran. That is a great offence, I promise you.

West. For you have omitted secundum apparentiam, i. as it appeareth. Where his words are these, Et si queras quare voluit Ecclesia eligere istum intellectum ita difficilem huius articuli, cum verba Scripturæ possint salvari secundum intellectum facilem & veriores, secundum apparentiam, de hoc articulo, &c. That is, if you demand why the Church did chuse this so hard an understanding of this Article, whereas the words of Scripture may be saved after an easie and true understanding (as appeareth) of this Article, &c.

Cran. It is not so.

West. Also you have set forth a Catechism in the name of the Synod of London, and yet there be 50. which witnessing that they were of the number of the Convocation, never heard one word of this Catechism.

Cran. I was ignorant of the setting of that Title; and as soon as I had knowledge thereof, I did not like it: Therefore when I complained thereof to the Council, it was answered me by them, that the Book was so entitled because it was set forth in the time of the Convocation.

West. Moreover, you have in Duns translated In Romana Ecclesia, pro Ecclesia Catholica. In the Church of Rome, for the Catholick Church.

Cran. Yea, but he meant the Romish Church.

West. Moreover you have depraved S. Thomas, namely, where he hath these words; In quantum vero est sacrificium, habet vim satisfactoriam: Sed in satisfatione attenditur magis effectus offerentis, quam quantitas oblationis. Unde Dominus dicit apud Lucam de vidua quæ obtulit duo æra, quod plus omnibus misit. Quamvis ergo hæc oblatio ex sui quantitate sufficiat ad satisfaciendum pro omni peccata: tamen fit satisfactoria illis pro quibus offeritur, vel etiam offerentibus, secundum quantitatem suæ devotionis, & non pro tota peccata. That is, Inasmuch as it is a Sacrifice, it hath the power of satisfaction: But in satisfaction the affection of the offerer is more to be weighed than the quantity of the oblation. Wherefore the Lord said in Lukes Gospel, of the widow which offered two mites, that she cast in more than they all. Therefore although this oblation of the quantity of it self will suffice to satisfy for all pain, yet it is made satisfactory to them, for whom it is offered, or to the offerers, according to the quantity of their devotion, and not for all the pain.

You have thus turned it, Quod sacrificium Sacerdotis habet vim satisfactoriam, &c. That is, That the Sacrifice of the Priest hath power of satisfaction, &c. And therefore in this place you have chopped in this word (Sacerdotis) of the Priest, whereas in the translation of all the New Testament you have not set it, but where Christ was put to death. And again, where S. Thomas hath (pro omni peccata) for all pain, your Book omitteth many things there.

Thus you see, Brethren, the Truth steadfast and invincible; you see also the craft and deceit of Heretics; the Truth may be pressed, but it cannot be oppressed: therefore cry altogether; Vincit veritas, i. The Truth overcometh.

This disordered disputation sometime in Latin, sometime in English, continued almost till two of the Clock. Which being finished, and the Arguments written and delivered to the hands of M. Sey, the Prisoner was had away by the Mayor, and the Doctors dined together at the University Colledge.

Disputation at Oxford between Doctor Smith, with his other Collegues and Doctors, and Bishop Ridley.

The next day following, which was the 12. of April, was brought forth Doctor Ridley to dispute, against whom was set D. Smith to be principal Opponent. Touching which D. Smith, inasmuch as mention here happeneth of his name, first the Reader is to be adverted what is to be attributed to his judgment in Religion, which so oftentimes before had turned and returned to and fro, grounded (as it seemeth) upon no firm conscience of Doctrine, as both by his Articles by him recited may appear, and also by his own Letter sent a little before in K. Edwards days to the Archbishop of Canterbury from Scotland. Which Letter I thought here to exhibit as a certain Preface before his own Arguments, or rather as a Testimony against himself, whereby the Reader may understand how devoutly he magnified them and their Doctrine a little before, against whom he now disputeth so busily. Read I beseech thee his Epistle, and judge.

The true Copy of a certain Epistle of D. Richard Smith, declaring his affection to the setting forth of Gods sincere Word.

Most honourable, I commend me unto your Lordship, doing the same to understand, that I wrote Letters to your Grace in January last and the tenth day of February, declaring the causes of my sudden and unadvised departing from your Grace over the Sea; and desiring your good Lordship of your Charity toward them that repent of their ill Acts, to forgive me your self all the wrong I did towards your Grace, and to obtain in writing the Kings Majesty's Pardon for me in all points concerning his Laws: upon the receipt whereof I would return again home, and within half a year (as the uttermost) afterwards write de Sacerdotum communibus, &c. a Latin Book that should be a just satisfaction for any thing that I have written against the same. Reliqua; omnia dogmata vestra tum demum libenter amplecturum, ubi Deus mentem meam, ut ea citra conscientie læsionem agnoscam, doceamque. I wrote not this that I want any good living here, but because mine absence out of the Realm, is dishonour to the Kings Highness and Realm, and because I must needs (if I tarry here a quarter of a year longer) write an answer to your Graces Book of the Sacrament, and also a Book of Common Places against all the Doctrine set forth by the Kings Majesty, which I cannot do with a good conscience. Wherefore I beseech your Grace help me home, as soon as you may conveniently, for Gods sake, and ye shall never, I trust in God, repent that fast.

Exorte divi Andrea. 14. Feb.
Rich. Smithus.

And thus much touching the forenamed Doctor Richard Smith, being set here (as is said) to dispute against Bishop Ridley, who was brought now the next day after the Archbishop to answer in the Divinity School. Against whom also, besides D. Smith, disputed D. Westron, D. Tretham, D. Ogilby, D. Glin, D. Seton, and D. Cole, M. Ward, M. Harpsfield, D. Watson, M. Pits, M. Harding, M. Curton, M. Facknam: To all them he answered very learnedly. He made a Preface to these questions, but they would not let him go forth in it, but caused him to make an end of the same, and said it was Blasphemy; and some said he drove off the time in ambiguous things, nothing to the purpose, and so they would not suffer him to say his mind. D. Smith could get nothing at his hand; inasmuch that other did take his Arguments and prosecuted them. He shewed himself to be learned, and a great Clerk. They could bring nothing, but he knew it as well as they.

The Disputation beginneth.

West. Prolocutor. Good Christian People and Brethren, we have begun this day our School, by Gods good speed I trust, and are entering into a controversy, whereof no question ought to be moved concerning the verity of the Body of our Lord Jesu Christ in the Eucharist. Christ is true, which said the words. The words are true which he spake, yea, Truth it self that cannot fail. Let us therefore pray unto God to send down unto us his holy Spirit, which is the true Interpreter of his Word; which may purge away Errors, and give light, that verity may appear. Let us also ask leave and liberty of the Church, to permit the Truth received to be called this day in question, without any prejudice to the same. Your parts thereof shall to be implore the assistance of Almighty God, to pray for the prosperity of the Queens Majesty, and to give us quiet and attentive ears. Now go to your question.

Dof. Smith. This day (right learned Mr. Doctor) three questions are propounded, whereof no controversy among Christians ought to be moved, to wit:

1. Whether

Cranmer charged with mis-translating Duns.

D. Cranmer challenged for setting forth the Catechism in the name of the Convocation. D. Cranmer purgeth himself concerning the Catechism.

D. Cranmer charged with mis-translating Trin. Agnus Dei.

Weston triumpheth because the victory.

April 19. D. Smith set to dispute against Bishop Ridley.

Anno 1554

A Letter of D. Smith to D. Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury.

D. Smith purposing to write for the marriage of Priests.

Disputes against D. Smith.

1554.
The question.

1. Whether the Natural Body of Christ our Saviour, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and offered for Mankind's redemption upon the Cross, is verily & really in the Sacrament by virtue of Gods Word spoken by the Priest, &c.
2. Whether in the Sacrament, after the Words of Consecration, be any other Substance, &c.
3. Whether in the Mass be a Sacrifice Propitiatory, &c.

Touching the which questions; although you have publicly and partly professed your judgment and opinion on Saturday last: Yet being not satisfied with that your answer, I will assay again to demand your sentence in the first question; Whether the true Body of Christ after the words pronounced, be really in the Eucharist, or else only the figure. In which matter I stand here now to hear your answer.

The Preface or Protestation of Dr. Ridley before his Disputation.

The Protestation of Bishop Ridley.

I Received of you the other day, right worshipful Mr. Prolocutor, and ye my reverend Masters, Commissioners from the Queens Majesty and her Honourable Council, three Propositions; whereunto ye commanded me to prepare against this day, what I thought good to answer concerning the same.

Now whilst I weighed with my self how great a charge of the Lords Flock was of late committed unto me, for the which I am certain I must once render an account to my Lord God (and that how soon he knoweth) and that moreover, by the commandment of the Apostle Peter I ought to be ready alway to give a reason of the hope that is in me with meekness and reverence, unto every one that shall demand the same: besides this, considering my duty to the Church of Christ, and to your Worship being Commissioners by Publick Authority: I determined with my self to obey your commandment, and so openly to declare unto you my mind touching the foregoing Propositions. And albeit, plainly to confesse unto you the truth in these things which ye now demand of me, I have thought otherwise in times past than now I do, yet (God I call to record unto my Soul, I lie not) I have not altered my Judgement, as now it is, either by constraint of any man, or laws, either for the dread of any dangers of this World, either for any hope of commodity; but only for the love of the Truth revealed unto me by the Grace of God (as I am undoubtedly persuaded) in his holy Word, and in the reading of the Ancient Fathers.

These things I do rather recite at this present, because it may happen to some of you hereafter, as in times past it hath done to me: I mean, if ye think otherwise of the matters propounded in these Propositions than I now do, God may open them unto you in time to come.

But howsoever it shall be, I will in few words do that which I think ye all look I should do; that is, as plainly as I can, I will declare my Judgment herein. Whicche of this I would ye were not ignorant, that I will not indeed wittingly and willingly speak in any point against Gods Word, or be different in any one yot from the same, or from the rules of Faith, or Christian Religion: which rules that same most sacred Word of God prebicheth to the Church of Christ, whereunto I now and for ever submit my self, and all my doings. And because the matter I have now taken in hand is weighty, and ye all well know how unready I am to handle it accordingly, as well for lack of time, as also lack of Books: therefore here I protest, that I will publickly this day require of you, that I may be lawful for me concerning all mine answers, explanations, and confirmations, to add or diminish whatsoever shall seem hereafter more convenient and meet for the purpose, through more sound Judgment, better deliberation, and more exact Trial of every particular thing. Having now, by the way of Preface and Protestation, spoken these few words, I will come to the answer of the Propositions propounded unto me, and so to the most brief explanation and confirmation of mine answers.

West. Reverend Mr. Doctor, concerning the lack of Books, there is no cause why you should complain. What Books soever you will name, you shall have them: And as concerning the Judgment of your answers to be had of your self with farther deliberation; it shall (I say) be lawful for you until Sunday next to add unto them what you shall think good your self. My mind is, that we should use short Arguments; lest we should make an infinite process of the thing.

Rid. There is another thing besides, which I would gladly obtain at your hands. I perceive that you have Writers and Notaries here present. By all likelihood our Disputations shall be published, I beseech you for Gods sake let me have liberty to speak my mind freely, and without interruption, not because I have determined to preface the time with a solemn Preface, but lest it may appear that some be not satisfied. God wot I am no Orator; nor have I learned Rhetorick to set colours on the matter.

West. Among this whole company; it shall be permitted you to take two for your part.

Rid. I will chuse two, if there were any here with whom I were acquainted.

Welf. Here are two which Mr. Cranmer had yesterday.
Take them if it please you.

Rid. I am content with them; I trust they are honest Men:

The first Proposition.
In the Sacrament of the Altar; by the vertue of Gods Word spoken of the Priest, the Natural Body of Christ born of the Virgin Mary, and his Natural Blood is really present under the Forms of Bread and Wine.

The Answer of N. Ridley.

In matters appertaining to God we may not speak according to the sense of Man, nor of the World: Therefore this Proposition or Conclusion is framed after another manner of phrase or kind of speech than the Scripture useth. Again, it is very obscure and dark, by means of such dry words of doubtful signification. And being taken in the sense which the Schoolmen teach, and at this time the Church of Rome doth defend, it is false and erroneous and plain contrary to the Doctrine which is according to Godliness.

The Explication.

How far the diversity and newness of the phrase in all this first Proposition is from the phrase of the holy Scripture, and that in every part almost, it is so plain and evident to any that is but meanly exercised in holy Writ, that I need not now (especially in this company of learned men) to spend any time therein, except the same shall be required of me hereafter.

Firſt, there is a double ſenſe in theſe words (by vertue of Gods Word) for it is doubtful what Word of God this iſſyeth whether it be that which is read in the Evangelists, or in Paul, or any other. And if it be that which is in the Evangelists, or in S. Paul, what that is. If it be in none of them, then how it may be known to be Gods Word, and of ſuch vertue that it ſhould be able to work ſo great a matter.

Again there is a doubt of these words (of the Priest) whether no Man may be called a Priest, but he which hath Authority to make a Propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead; and how it may be proved that this Authority was committed of God to any Man, but to Christ alone.

It is likewise doubted, after what Order the Sacrificing Priest shall be, whether after the Order of Aaron, or else after the Order of Melchisedech. For as far as I know, the holy Scripture doth allow no more.

West. Let this be sufficient.

Rid. If we lack time at this present, there is time enough hereafter.

West. These are but evasions or starting holes; you consume the time in vain.

Rid. I cannot start far from you, I am captive and bound.

West, Fall to it my Masters,

Smith. That which you have spoken may suffice at this present.

Red. Let me alone I pray you, for I have not much to say behind.

West. Go forward.

Red. Moreover, there is ambiguity in this word really, & Doib: is whether it be taken as the Logicians term it, transcendent, the word really.

ter, that is, most generally: and so it may signify any manner of thing which belongeth to the Body of Christ, by any means after which sort we also grant Christs Body to be really in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, (as in disputation, if occasion be given shall be declared) or whether it be taken to signify the very same thing, having Body, Life, and Soul, which was assumed and taken of the Word of God, into the Unity of Person. In which sense, with the Body of Christ is really in Heaven, because of the true manner of his Body, it may not be said to be here in the earth. There is yet a further doubtfulness in these words, under the forms of Bread and Wine, whether the forms be there taken to signify the only accidental and outward shews of Bread and Wine; or therewithal the substantial natures thereof, which are to be seen by their qualities, and perceived by exterior senses.

† Doubt in the words (terms of Bread and Wine.)

† The Propositions after the sense of the Romish Church. Transubstantiation not founded in Scripture.

† The Analogy of the Sacrament to the familiar use and likeness which they have with the things they represent.

Now the Error and fallaciousness of the Proposition after the sense of the Roman Church and Schoolmen, may hereby appear, in that they affirm the Bread to be transubstantiated and changed to the Flesh assumed of the Word of God; and that (as they say) by virtue of the word, which they have devised by a certain number of words and cannot be found in any of the Evangelists, or in Paul, and so they gather that Christs Body is really contained in the Sacrament of the Altar. Which position is grounded upon the Foundation of the Transubstantiation; which Foundation is monstrous, against reason, and destroyeth the Analogy or proportion of the Sacraments: and therefore this Proposition also, which is built upon this rotten Foundation, is False, Erroneous, and to be counted as a detestable Herefie of the Sacramentaries.

West. We lose time.

Rid. You shall have time enough.

West. Fall to reasoning. You shall have some other day for this matter.

Rid. I have no more to say concerning my explication. If you will give me leave and let me alone, I will but speak a word or two for my confirmation.

West. Go to; say on,

The Confirmation of the aforesaid Answer.

Fe. Here ought no Doctrine to be established in the Church of God, which dissenteth from the word of God, from the rule of Faith, and draweth with it many absurdities that cannot be avoided. ti. But this Doctrine of the first Proposition is such.

no. Ergo. It ought not to be established and maintained in the Church of God.

Argument. The Major or first part of my Argument is plain and the Minor or second part is proved thus.

The Doctrine maintaineth a real, corporal, and carnal Presence of Christs Flesh, assumed and taken of the Word, to be in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and that not by virtue and Grace only, but also by the whole Essence and substance of the Body and Flesh of Christ.

But such a Presence disagreeeth from Gods word, from the rule of Faith, & cannot but draw with it many absurdities.

Ergo. The second part is true.

The first part of this Argument is manifest, and the second may yet further be confirmed thus.

West. Thus you consume time, which might be better bestowed on other matters. Master Opponent, I pray you to your Arguments.

Smith. I will here reason with you upon Transubstantiation, which you say is contrary to the Rule and Analogy of Faith. The contrary whereof I prove by the Scriptures and the Doctors. But before I enter Argumentation with you, I demand first, whether in the sixth Chapter of John there be any mention made of the Sacrament, or of the real Presence of Christ in the Sacrament?

Rid. It is against reason that I should be impeached to prosecute that which I have to speak in this Assembly, being not so long, but that it may be comprehended in few words.

West. Let him read on.

Rid. First of all is Presence contrary to many places of the holy Scriptures. Secondly, it varieth from the Articles of the Faith.

Thirdly, it destroyeth and taketh away the Institution of the Lords Supper.

† Inconvenience cause of the Real Presence.

Fourthly, it maketh precious things common to prophane and ungodly persons; for it calleth that which is holy unto dogs, and pearls unto swine.

Fifthly, it forceth men to maintain many monstrous Miracles without necessity and Authority of Gods word.

Sixthly, it giveth occasion to the Heretics which erre concerning the two natures in Christ, to defend their Heresies thereby.

Seventhly, it falsifieth the sayings of the Godly Fathers; it falsifieth also the Catholick Faith of the Church, which the Apostles taught, the Martyrs confirmed, and the Faithful (as one of the Fathers saith) do retain and keep until this day. Wherefore the second part of mine Argument is true.

The probation of the antecedent or former part of this Argument by the parts thereof.

His carnal Presence is contrary to the word of God, as appeareth, John 16, I tell you the truth. It is profitable to you that I go away, for if I go not away, the Comforter shall not come unto you. Acts 3. Whom the Heavens must receive until the time of refreshing of all things which God hath spoken, Math. 9. The Children of the Bridegroom cannot mourn so long as the Bridegroom is with them: But now is the time of mourning. John 16. But I will see you again, and your hearts shall rejoice. John 14. I will come again and take you to my self. Mar. thew 24. If they shall say unto you, Behold here is Christ, or there is Christ, believe them not: for whosoever the dead carcase is, thither the Eagles will resort.

It varieth from the Articles of the Faith; He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, from whence (and not from any other place, saith S. Augustine) he shall come to judge both the quick and the dead.

It destroyeth and taketh away the Institution of the Lords Supper, which was commanded only to be used and continued until the Lord himself should come. If therefore he be really present in the Body of his Flesh, then must the Supper cease: For a remembrance is not of a thing present, but of a thing past and absent. And there is a difference between remembrance and presence, and (as one of the Fathers saith) A figure is in vain where the thing figured is present.

It maketh precious things common to prophane and ungodly persons, and constraineth men to confess many absurdities. For it affirmeth, that Whoremongers and Murderers, yea, and (as some of them hold opinion) the wicked and faithles Mice, Rats, and Dogs, also may receive the very real and corporal Body of the Lord, wherein the fulness of the Spirit of Light and Grace dwelleth; contrary to the manifest words of Christ in six places and sentences of the sixth Chapter of S. John.

It confirmeth also and maintaineth that beastly kind of cruelty as the Antrophophagi, that is, the devourers of mans Flesh: For it is a more cruel thing to devour a quick man, than to slay him.

Pie. He requirith time to speak Blasphemies. Leave your Blasphemies.

Rid. I had little thought to have had such reproachful words at your hands.

West. All is quiet. Go to your Arguments Mr. Doctor.

Rid. I have not many things more to say.

West. You utter Blasphemies with a most impudent Face: leave off (I say) and get you to the Argument.

Rid. It forceth men to maintain many monstrous Miracles, without any necessity and authority of Gods word. For at the coming of this Presence of the Body and Flesh of Christ, they thrust away the Substance of Bread, and affirm that the Accidents remain without any Subject, and in stead thereof they place Christs Body without his qualities and the true manner of a Body. And if the Sacrament be referred so long until it mould, and worms breed, some say that the substance of Bread miraculously returneth again, and some deny it. Other some affirm the real Body of Christ goeth down into the stomach of the receivers, and doth there abide so long only as they shall continue to be good: but another sort hold, that the Body of Christ is carried into Heaven, so soon as the forms of Bread be bruised with the teeth. O works of miracles!

Altho the rest which was not read because the Prolocutor made post haste to the Arguments.

Truly,

ANNO 1554.

Anno Truly, and most truly I see that fulfilled in these men, whereof S. Paul prophesied, 2. Thess. 2. Because they have not received the love of the truth, that they might be saved, God shall send them strong delusions, that they should believe lies, and be all damned which have not believed the truth. This gross Preference hath brought forth that fond phantasmie of concomitance, whereby is broken at this day and abrogated the commandment of the Lord for distributing of the Lords Cup to the Laity.

It giveth occasion to Hereticks to maintain and defend their Errors; as to Marcion, which said that Christ had but a Phantastical Body; and to Eniches, which wickedly confounded the two Natures in Christ.

Finally, It fulfilleth the sayings of the Godly Fathers and the Catholick Faith of the Church, which Vigilius a Martyr and grave writer faith, was taught of the Apostles, confirmed with the Blood of Martyrs, and was continually maintained by the faithful, until his time. By the sayings of the Fathers, I mean of Justine, Irene, Tertullian, Origen, Eusebius, Emilene, Athanasius, Cyrius, Epiphanius, Hierome, Chrysostom, Augustine, Vigilius, Fulgensius, Bertram, and others most ancient Fathers. All those places, as I am sure, have read making for my purpose, so am I well assured that I could shew the same. If I might have the use of mine own Books, which I will take me to do, even upon the peril of my Life, and loss of all that I may lose in this World.

But now (my Brethren) think not, because I disallow that Preference which the first Proposition maintaineth (as a Preference which I take to be forged, Phantastical, and besides the authority of Gods Word, perniciously brought into the Church by the Romanists) that I therefore go about to take away the true Preference of Christs Body in his Supper rightly and duly ministered, which is grounded upon the Word of God, and made more plain by the commentaries of the Faithful Fathers. They that think so of me, the Lord knoweth how far they are deceived. And to make the same evident unto you, I will in few words declare what true Preference of Christs Body in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper I hold and affirm, with the Word of God and the ancient Fathers.

I say and confesse with the Evangelist Luke, and with the Apostle Paul, that the Bread on the which thanks are given, is the Body of Christ in the remembrance of him and his death, to be set forth perpetually of the faithful until his coming.

I say and confesse the Bread which we break to be the communion and partaking of Christs Body, with the Ancient and the Faithful Fathers.

I say and believe that there is not only a signification of Christs Body set forth by the Sacrament, but also that therewith is given to the Godly and Faithful the Grace of Christs Body, that is, the Food of Life and Immortality. And this I hold with Cyprian.

I say also with S. Augustine, that we eat Life and we drink Life; with Emilene, that we eat the Lord to be present in Grace; with Athanasius, that we receive Celestial Food, which cometh from above; the propriety of natural Communion, with Hilarius; the nature of Flesh and Benediction which giveth Life in Bread and Wine, with Cyrius; and with the same Cyrius, the virtue of the very Flesh of Christ, Life and Grace of his Body, the property of the only begotten, that is to say, Life, as he himself in plain words expoundeth it.

I confesse also with Basil, that we receive the Mystical Advent and coming of Christ, Grace and virtue of his very Nature; the Sacrament of his very Flesh, with Ambrose; the Body by Grace, with Epiphanius; spiritual Flesh, but not that which was crucified, with Hierome; Grace flowing into a Sacrifice, and the Grace of the Spirit, with Chrysostom; Grace and invisible verity, Grace and society of the Members of Christs Body, with Augustine.

Finally, with Bertram (which was the last of all these) I confesse that Christs Body is in the Sacrament in this respect; namely (as he writeth) because there is in it the Spirit of Christ, that is, the power of the Word of God, which not only feedeth the Soul, but also cleanseeth it. But of this I suppose it may clearly appear unto all men, how far we are from that opinion, whereof some go about falsely to slander us to the World saying, we teach that the Godly and Faithful should receive nothing else at the Lords Table, but a figure of the Body of Christ.

The second Proposition.

After the consecration there remaineth no substance of Bread and Wine, neither any other substance, than the substance of God and Man.

The Answer.

The second conclusion is manifestly false, directly against the Word of God, the nature of the Sacrament, and the most evident testimonies of the Godly Fathers; and it is the rotten Foundation of the other two conclusions propounded by you, both of the first, and also of the third. I will not therefore now tarry upon any further explication of this answer, being contented with that which is already added afore to the answer of the first Proposition.

The first Argument for the confirmation of this Answer.

It is very plain by the Word of God, that Christ did give Bread unto his Disciples, and called it his Body. But the substance of Bread is another manner of substance, than is the substance of Christs Body, God and Man: Therefore the conclusion is false.

The second part of mine Argument is plain, and the first is proved thus:

The second Argument.

Da- That which Christ did take, on the which he gave thanks, and the which he brake, he gave to his Disciples, and called it his Body:

ti- But he took Bread, gave thanks on Bread, and brake Bread; si- Ergo, The first part is true. And it is confirmed with the Authorities of the Fathers, Irene, Tertullian, Origen, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Hierome, Augustine, Theodore, Cyrius, Rabanus, and Bede. Whole places I will take upon me to shew most manifest in this behalf, if I may be suffered to have my Books, as my request is.

Bread is the Body of Christ:

Ergo, It is Bread.

* A tertio adiacente ad secundum adiacenti cum verbi substantivorum para copula.

The third Argument.

Ba- As the Bread of the Lords Table is Christs natural Body, so is his Mystical Body.

ro- But it is not Christs Mystical Body by Transubstantiation.

co- Ergo, It is not his natural Body by Transubstantiation.

The second part of my Argument is plain, and the first is proved thus: As Christ who is the verity, spake of the Bread, This is my Body which shall be betrayed for you, speaking there of his Natural Body: even so Paul, moved with the same Spirit of Truth, said, We, though we be many, yet are we all one Bread, and one Body, which be partakers of one Bread.

The fourth Argument.

We may no more believe Bread to be Transubstantiated into the Body of Christ, than the Wine into his Blood.

But the Wine is not Transubstantiated into his Blood:

Ergo, Neither is that Bread, therefore, Transubstantiated into his Body.

¶ The first part of this Argument is manifest, and the second part is proved out of the Authority of Gods Word in Matthew and Mark, I will not drink of the fruit of the Vine, &c. Now the fruit of the Vine was Wine, which Christ drank and gave to his Disciples to drink. With this sentence agreeth plainly the place of Chrysostom on the 20. Chapt. of Mat. As Cyprian doth also, affirming that there is no Blood, if Wine be not in the Cup.

The fifth Argument.

Ba- The words of Christ spoken upon the Cup and upon the Bread, have like effect and working.

ro- But the words spoken upon the Cup have not virtue to Transubstantiate:

co- Ergo, It followeth, that the words spoken upon the Bread have no such virtue.

Answer to the second Proposition: The second Proposition of Transubstantiation denied.

Confirmation of his answer.

* The rule of Logick is this: A proposition of tertio adiacenti ad secundum adiacenti cum verbi substantivorum para copula. The Major proved. 1 Cor. xxi

The Argument holdeth. A destrudione amec denit, ad destrudione conde quentis. Mat. x.6. Mark 14.2

Chrysostom; Cyprian.

The second part of the Argument is proved; because they would then Transubstantiate the Cup, or that which is in the Cup into the New Testament. But neither of these things can be done, and very absurd it is to confesse the same.

The sixth Argument.

De- The Circumstances of the Scripture, the Analogy and proportion of the Sacraments, and the Testimony of the Faithful Fathers ought to rule us in taking the meaning of the Holy Scripture touching the Sacrament.

ti- But the words of the Lords Supper, the Circumstances of the Scripture, the Analogy of the Sacraments, and the Sayings of the Fathers, do most effectually and plainly prove a figurative speech in the words of the Lords Supper.

fi- Ergo, a figurative sense and meaning is specially to be received in these words, This is my Body.

The Circumstances of the Scripture, do this in remembrance of me. As oft as ye shall eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup, ye shall shew forth the Lords death. Let a man prove himself, and so eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup. They came together to break Bread; and they continued in breaking of Bread. The Bread which we break, &c. For we being many, are all one Bread and one Body, &c.

The Analogy of the Sacraments. The Analogy of the Sacraments is necessary: for if the Sacraments had not some similitude or likeness of the things whereof they be Sacraments, they could in no wise be Sacraments. And this similitude in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper is taken three manner of ways.

1. The first consisteth in nourishing, as ye shall read in Rabana, Cyprian, Augustine, Irene, and most plainly in Isidore out of Bertram.
2. The second in the uniting and joyning of many into one, as Cyprian teacheth.
3. The third is a similitude of unlike things: Where, like as the Bread is turned into one Body; so we, by the right use of this Sacrament, are turned through Faith into the Body of Christ.

The sayings of the Fathers declare it to be a figurative speech, as it appeareth in Origen, Tertullian, Chrysostom in opere imperitissimo, Augustine, Ambrose, Basil, Gregory, Nazianzen, Hilary, and most plainly of all in Bertram. Moreover, the sayings and places of all the Fathers, whose names I have before recited against the assertion of the first Proposition, do quite overthrow Transubstantiation. But of all most evidently and plainly, Irene, Origen, Cyprian, Chrysostom to Celsarius the Monk, Augustine against Adamantius, Gelasius, Cyril, Epphanus, Chrysostom again one the 20. of Matthew, Rabana, Damasce and Bertram.

Here right worshipful Mr. Prolocutor and ye the rest of the Commissioners, it may please you to understand, that I do not lean to these things only, which I have written in my former Answers and Confirmations, but that I have also for the proof of that I have spoken, whatsoever Bertram, a man learned, of found and upright judgment, and ever counted a Catholic for these seven Hundred years until this our age, hath written. His Treatise, whosoever shall read and weigh, considering the time of the Writer, his Learning, Godliness of life, the Allegations of the ancient Fathers, and his manifold and most grounded Arguments, I cannot (doubtless) but much marvel, if he have any fear of God at all, how he can with good Conscience speak against him in this matter of the Sacrament. This Bertram was the first that pulled me by the Ear, and that first brought me from the common Error of the Romish Church, and caused me to search more diligently and exactly both the Scriptures and the Writings of the Old Ecclesiastical Fathers in this matter. And this I protest before the face of God, who knoweth I live not in the things I now speak.

The third Proposition.

In the Mass is the lively Sacrifice of the Church, propitiatory and available for the sins as well of quick as of the dead.

The answer to this Proposition.

I answer to this third Proposition as I did to the first.

And moreover I say, that being taken in such sense as the words seem to import, it is not only erroneous, but withal so much to the derogation and defacing of the Death and Passion of Christ, that I judge it may and ought most worthily to be counted wicked and blasphemous against the most precious Blood of our Saviour Christ.

The Explication.

Concerning the Romish Mass which is used at this day, or the lively Sacrifice thereof, propitiatory and available for the sins of the quick and the dead, the holy Scripture hath not so much as one syllable.

There is Ambiguity also in the name of Mass: what it signifyeth, and whether at this day there be any such indeed as the ancient Fathers used; seeing that now there be neither Catechists nor Parientes to be sent away.

Again, touching these words (The lively Sacrifice of the Church.) There is doubt whether they are to be understood figuratively and sacramentally, for the Sacrament of the lively Sacrifice (after which sort we deny it not to be in the Lords Supper) or properly and without any figure: of the which manner there was but one only Sacrifice, and that once offered, namely upon the Altar of the Cross.

Moreover, in these words (as well as) it may be doubted whether they be spoken in mockery, as men are wont to say in sport, of a foolish and ignorant person, that he is apt as well in conditions as in knowledge; being apt indeed in neither of them both.

There is also a doubt in the word (Propitiabile) whether it signifye here that which taketh away sin, or that which may be made available for the taking away of sin; that is to say, whether it is to be taken in the active or in the passive signification.

Now the falseness of the Proposition, after the meaning of the Schoolmen and the Romish Church, and Impiety in that sense which the words seem to import, is this: that they, leaning to the foundation of their fond Transubstantiation, would make the quick and lively Body of Christs Flesh (united and knit to the Divinity) to lye hid under the accidents, and outward shew of Bread and Wine. Which is very false, as I have said afore: and they, building upon this Foundation, do hold that the same Body is offered unto God by the Priest in his daily Massingsto put away the sins of the quick and the dead, whereas by the Apostle to the Hebrews it is evident, that there is but one Oblation, and one true and lively Sacrifice of the Church offered upon the Altar of the Cross, which was, is, and shall be for ever the propitiation for the sins of the whole World: and where there is Remission of the same; there is (saith the Apostle) no more offering for sin.

Argument confirming his Answer.

Ce- No Sacrifice ought to be done, but where the Priest is meet to offer the same.

la- All other Priests be unmeet to offer Sacrifice propitiatory for sin, save only Christ.
rent. Ergo, no other Priests ought to Sacrifice for sin, but Christ alone.

The second part of my Argument is thus proved.
Fe- No honour in Gods Church ought to be taken where a man is not called, as Aaron.

ri- It is a great honour in Gods Church to Sacrifice for sin. Ergo, No man ought to Sacrifice for sin, but only they which are called.

But only Christ is called to that honour.

Ergo, No other Priest but Christ ought to Sacrifice for Sin. That no man is called to this degree of Honour but Christ alone, it is evident. For there are but two only orders of Priesthood allowed in the word of God: Namely, the order of Aaron, and the order of Melchisedech. But now the order of Aaron is come to an end, by reason that it was unprofitable, and weakend of the order of Melchisedech there is but one Priest alone, even Christ the Lord, which hath a Priesthood that cannot pass to any other.

An Argument.

Ba- That thing is in vain, and to no effect, where no necessity is wherefore it is done.

ro- To offer up any more Sacrifice Propitiatory for the quick and the dead there is no necessity, for Christ our Saviour

Explication of the same. Doubts in the third Proposition. In the Primitive Church the newly instructed in the Faith and unworthy were put away from the Communion

The third doubt.

The fourth doubt.

The falseness of the third Proposition proved.

But offe Sacrifice in the Scriptures.

The first Argument. Heb. 5.

Heb. 7.

Anno 1554. Saviour did that fully and perfectly once for all.
co. Ergo, To do the same in the Mass it is vain.

Another Argument.

Feb. 9. After that Eternal Redemption is found and obtained, there needeth no more daily Offering for the same. But Christ coming an High Bishop, &c. found and obtained for us Eternal Redemption.
ri- Ergo, Their needeth now no more daily Oblation for the sins of the quick and the dead.

Another Argument.

Ca. All Remission of Sins cometh only by shedding of Blood.
mef. In the Mass there is no shedding of Blood.
tres. Ergo, In the Mass there is no Remission of Sins and so it followeth also that there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice.

Another Argument.

In the Mass the Passion of Christ is not in Verity, but in a Mystry representing the same: Yea, even there where the Lords Supper is duly ministrif.

Feb. 9. But where Christ suffereth not, there is he not offered in Verity: For the Apostle saith, Not that he might offer up himself often times (for then must he have suffered often times since the beginning of the world.) now where Christ is not offered, there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice:

Ergo, In the Mass there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice: For Christ appeared once in the later end of the world, to put sin to flight by the offering up of himself. And as it is appointed to all men that they shall once dye, and then cometh the Judgment: even so Christ was once offered to take away the sins of many. And unto them that look for him shall be appear again without sin unto Salvation.

Another Argument.

Da. Where there is any Sacrifice that can make the comers thereunto perfect, there ought men to cease from offering any more Expiatory and Propitiatory Sacrifices.

ri- But in the New Testament there is one only Sacrifice now already long since offered, which is able to make the comers thereto perfect for ever.

i. Ergo, In the New Testament they ought to cease from offering any more Propitiatory Sacrifices.

Sentences of the Scripture tending to the same end and purpose, out of which also may be gathered other manifest Arguments for more confirmation thereof.

Feb. 10. By the which will (saith the Apostle) we are sanctified, by the offering up of the Body of Jesus Christ once for all. And in the same place, But this man, after that he had offered one Sacrifice for sins, sitteth for ever at the right hand of God, &c. For with one offering hath he made perfect for ever them that are sanctified, and by himself hath he purged our sins. I beseech you to mark these words (by himself) the which well weighed, will without doubt cease all Controversie.

The Apostle plainly denieth any other Sacrifice to remain for him that treadeth under his feet the Blood of the Testament, by the which he was made holy. Christ will not be crucified again, he will not his Death to be had in derision.

Calof. 1. He hath reconciled us in the Body of his Flesh. Mark, I beseech you, he saith not, in the Mystry of his Body; but in the Body of his Flesh.

1 John 2. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins, not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world.

I know that all these places of the Scripture are avoided by two manner of subtil shifts: The one is by the distinction of the bloody and unbloody Sacrifice, as though our unbloody Sacrifice of the Church were any other than the Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving, than a Commemoration, a shewing forth, and a Sacramental Representation of that one only bloody Sacrifice, offered up once for all.

The other is by depraving and wresting the sayings of the ancient Fathers unto such a strange kind of sense, as the Fathers themselves indeed never meant. For what the meaning of the Fathers was, it is evident by that which S. Augustine writeth in his Epistle to Boniface, and in the 83. Chapter of his Ninth Book against Faustus the Manichee; besides many other places; likewise by Eusebius, Emifene, Cyprian, Chrysostom; Fulgentius, Bertram, and others, which do wholly concord and agree together in this Unity in the Lord, that the Redemption, once made in verity for the Salvation of man, continueth in full effect for ever, and worketh without ceasing unto the end of the World, that the Sacrifice once offered cannot be continued; That the Lords Death and Passion is as effectual, the virtue of that Blood once shed, as fresh at this day for the washing away of sins, as it was even the same day that it flowed out of the blessed side of our Saviour: And finally, That the whole substance of our Sacrifice, which is frequented of the Church in the Lords Supper, consisteth in Prayers, Praise, and giving of Thanks, and in remembering and shewing forth of that Sacrifice once offered upon the Altar of the Cross; that the same might continually be had in reverence by Mystry; which one only, and no more, was offered for the Price of our Redemption.

These are the things (right worshipful Mr. Prolocutor, and ye the rest of the Commissioners) which I could presently prepare to the answering of your three fore-said Propositions being destitute of all help in this shortness of time, sudden warning, and want of Books. Wherefore I appeal to my first Protestation, most humbly desiring the help of the same (as much as may be) to be granted unto me. And because ye have lately given most unjust and cruel Sentence against me, I do here Appeal (so far forth as I may) to a more indifferent and just Censure and Judgment of some other Superior, competent, and lawful Judge, and that according to the approved state of the Church of England. Howbeit, I confess, that I am ignorant what that is at this present, through the trouble and alteration of the state of the Realm. But if this Appeal may not be granted to me upon Earth, then do I fly (even as to my only Refuge and alone Haven of Health) to the Sentence of the Eternal Judge, that is, of the Almighty God, to whose most merciful Justice towards us, and most just Mercifulness, I do wholly commit my self and all my Cause, nothing at all despairing of the Defence of mine Advocate and alone Saviour Jesus Christ, to whom, with the Everlasting Father, and the Holy Spirit, the Sanctifier of us all, be now and for ever all Honour and Glory. Amen.

Albeit this Learned Bishop was not suffered to read all that is above prefixed before the Disputations, yet because he had it then ready, and offered it up to the Prolocutor after the Disputations and Sentence pronounced: I thought here the place not unmeet to annex the same together with the rest. Now let us hear the Arguments and Answers between Dr. Smith and him.

Dr. Smith beginneth to Oppose.

Smith. You have occasioned me to go otherwise to work with you, than I had thought to have done. Me seemed you did in your Supposition abuse the Testimonies of Scripture concerning the Ascension of Christ, to take away his Presence in the Sacrament, as though this were a strong Argument to enforce your matter withal.

Christ did ascend into Heaven:
Ergo, He is not in the Sacrament.

Now therefore I will go about to disprove this reason of yours.

Christs Ascension is no let to his Real Presence in the Sacrament.

Ergo, you are deceived, whereas you do ground your self upon those places.

Rid. You import as though I had made a strong Argument by Christs going up into heaven. But howsoever mine Argument is made, you collect it not rightly. For it doth not only stay upon his Ascension, but upon his Ascension and his abiding there also.

Smith. Christs going up to Heaven, and his abiding there, hinder not his Real Presence in the Sacrament.

This Papist and vain their Sacrifice by the old Doctors fully witness.

Doctors making against the Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Mass.

The whole substance of the Sacrifice, wherein it consisteth.

R. Ridley appeals from the unjust Sentence of his Advocates, to some other Superior competent Judge.

R. Ridley, for lack of equal indifference, appeals to Almighty God.

Smiths Argument.

Answer.

The Popish distinction between bloody and unbloody Sacrifice.

* The verity of Mr. Tullys answer touching the real being of Christ in Earth to be retained by his Ascending and abiding in Heaven, standeth upon the necessity, which we call (Necessitas consequentiae) by this demonstration.

Ergo,

Da. Every Natural Body most necessarily be contained in his peculiar and certain place.
 R. Christ's Body is a Natural Body.
 i. Ergo, Christ's Body not to be in one certain place at once contained, it is impossible, according to the Rule, Omnes propositiones de impossibili & de necesse æquipollent dictis dissimiliter se habent, & modo similiter.

Ergo, You are deceived.
 Rid. Of Christ's Real Presence there may be a double understanding: If you take the Real Presence of Christ according to the Real and Corporal Substance which he took of the Virgin, that Presence being in Heaven, cannot be on the Earth also. But if you mean a Real Presence, secundum rem aliquam quæ ad Corpus Christi pertinet; i. according to some thing that appertaineth to Christ's Body, certes the Ascension and abiding in Heaven are no let at all to that Presence. Wherefore Christ's Body after that sort is here present to us in the Lords Supper; by Grace I say, as Epiphanius speaketh it.

Wesl. I will cut off from henceforth all equivocation and doubt. For whensoever we speak of Christ's Body, we mean that which he took of the Virgin.

Rid. Christ's Ascension and abiding in Heaven cannot stand with his Presence.

Argument. Smith. Christ appeared corporally and really on the Earth, for all his Ascension and continual abode in Heaven unto the Day of Doom.

Ergo, His Ascension and abiding in Heaven, is no let to his Real Presence in the Sacrament.

Answer. Rid. Mr. Doctor, this Argument is nothing worth. I do not so freightly tie Christ up in Heaven, that he may not come into the Earth at his Pleasure. For when he will, he may come down from Heaven, and be on the Earth as it liketh himself: howbeit I do affirm, That it is not possible for him to be both in Heaven and Earth at one time.

Smith. Mark, I pray you my Masters, that be here diligently, what he answereth. First he saith, That the sitting of Christ at the right Hand of his Father, is a let to the Real Presence of his Body in the Sacrament, and then afterward he flieth from it again.

Rid. I would not have you think that I do imagine or dream upon any such manner of sitting, as these men here sit in the School.

Smith. Ergo, It is lawful for Christ then to be here present on the Earth, when he will himself.

Rid. Yes, when he will, it is lawful indeed.

Smith. Ergo, He ascending into Heaven, doth not restrain his Real Presence in the Sacrament.

Rid. I do not gainsay, but that it is lawful for him to appear on the Earth when he will; but prove you that he will.

Smith. Then your Answer dependeth upon the will of Christ, I perceive: Therefore I will joyn again with you in that short Argument.

Christ, albeit he doth always abide in Heaven after his Ascension, was seen really and corporally on Earth.

Ergo, Notwithstanding his Ascension and continual sitting at the right hand of his Father, he may be really and corporally in the Sacrament.

Rid. If the Notaries should so Record your Argument, as you have framed it, you peradventure would be ashamed of it hereafter.

Smith. Christ after his Ascension was seen really and corporally upon the Earth.

Ergo, Notwithstanding his Ascension and abiding with his Father, he may be corporally in the Sacrament.

Rid. I grant the Antecedent, but I deny the Consequence.

Smith. Do you grant the Antecedent.

Rid. Yes, I grant the Antecedent. I am content to let you have so much. Because I know that there be certain ancient Fathers of that opinion, I am well content to let you use that Proposition as true. And I will frame the Argument for you.

He was seen on Earth after his Ascension, Ergo, &c.

Smith. Nay, nay, I will frame it myself.

Christ after his Ascension was seen really and corporally on Earth, albeit he do abide in Heaven continually.

Ergo, Notwithstanding his Ascension and continual abiding at the right hand of the Father, he may be really and corporally on the Earth.

Rid. Let us first agree about the continual sitting at the right hand of the Father.

Smith. Doth he so sit at the right hand of his Father, that he doth never forsake the same?

Rid. Nay, I do not bind Christ in Heaven to straight-

ly. I see you go about to beguile me with your Equivocations. Such Equivocations are to be distinguished. If you mean by his sitting in Heaven, to reign with his Father, he may be both in Heaven and also in Earth. But if ye understand his sitting to be after a corporal manner of sitting, so is he always permanent in Heaven. For Christ to be corporal here on Earth, when corporally he is resident in Heaven, is clean contrary to the Holy Scriptures, as Augustine saith; Corpus Christi est in Cælo, sed veritas ejus ubique diffusa est; i. The Body of Christ is in Heaven, but his Truth is dispersed in every place.

Now if continually he abide in Heaven after the manner of his Corporal Presence, then his perpetual abiding there stoppeth or letteth that the same Corporal Presence of him cannot be in the Sacrament.

Smith. Añs. 3. We read that Christ shall sit perpetually at the right hand of God, unto the consumption of the World.

Wesl. I perceive you are come here to this Issue, whether the Body of Christ may be together both in Earth and in Heaven. I will tell you that Christ in very deed is both in Earth and in Heaven together, and at one time, both one and the same Natural Christ, after the Verity and Substance of his very Body: Ergo, &c.

Rid. I deny the Antecedent.

Wesl. I prove it by two Witnesses. First by Chrysostom. Hom. 17. ad Hebr. Nonne per singulos dies offerimus? Offerimus quidem, sed recordationem facientes mortis ejus. Et una est hæc hostia, non multe. Et quomodo una, & non multe, quæ semel oblata est in sancto sanctorum? Hoc autem sacrificium exemplar est illius; id ipsum semper offerimus, nec nunc quidem alium agnum, crastina alium, sed semper eundem ipsum. Proinde unum est hoc sacrificium; alioqui hæc ratio, quoniam in multis locis offertur, multi Christi sunt? Nequaquam, sed unus ubique est Christus; & hic plenus existens, & illic plenus, unum corpus, i. Do we not offer every day? We do so indeed; but doing it for the remembrance of his Death. And this offering is one, and not many. And how is it one, and not many, which was offered in the holy place: This Sacrifice is a pattern of that: The self same we always offer; Not now as offering one Lamb to day, and another to morrow, but always one and the same Lamb. Wherefore here is but one Sacrifice; for else by this means, seeing there be many Sacrifices in many places, be there many Christs? Not so; but one Christ in all places, both perfect here and perfect there, one only Body. Now thus I argue.

We offer one thing at all times.

There is one Christ in all places, both here compleat and there compleat.

Ergo, By Chrysostom there is one Body both in Heaven and Earth.

Rid. I remember the place well. These things make nothing against me.

Wesl. One Christ is in all places, here full and there full.

Rid. One Christ is in all places; but not one Body in all places.

Wesl. One Body saith Chrysostom.

Rid. But not after the manner of bodily Substance but in all places, not by circumscription of place. For (hic) and (illic) here and there, in Chrysostom do assign no place, as Augustine saith; Sursum est Dominus, sed ubique est veritas Domini; i. The Lord is above, but the Truth of the Lord is in all places.

Wesl. You cannot so escape. He saith not the Verity of Christ is one; but one Christ is in all places, both here and there.

Rid. One Sacrifice is in all places, because of the Unity of him whom the Sacrifice doth signify: Not that the Sacrifices be all one and the same.

Wesl. Ergo, By your saying it is not Christ, but the Sacrifice of Christ.

But Chrysostom saith, One Body and one Christ is there, and not one Sacrifice.

Rid. I say, that both Christ and the Sacrifice of Christ is there: Christ by Spirit, Grace, and Verity; the Sacrifice by signification.

* Thus I grant with Chrysostom, that there is one Host or Sacrifice, and not many: And this our Host is called one, by reason of the Unity of that one, which one only Christ's body in Heaven is no let for him to appear on Earth when he will; but whether he will, that must be proved. Again, it is something to appear on Earth, and then still in the Sacrament, and to be present the same time with his Body in Heaven, when he is bodily present in Earth.

Christ continually sitting in Heaven expanded.

Anno 1554. Christ cannot be both corporally here, and corporally also in Heaven at one time.

Chrys. Hom. 17. ad Hebræos.

Argument. Answer.

One Christ and one Sacrifice in all places, and how? to wit, Christ by Verity, the Sacrifice by signification. * Ex libro Ridley ipsius manu descripto. Sacrifices, why it is called one.

Anno 1554. all our Hosts do represent. That only Host was never other, but that which was once offered on the Altar of the Cross, of which Host all our Hosts are but Sacramental Examples.

How one Christ is offered in many places at once. And where you alledge out of Chrysostom, that Christ is offered in many places at once, both here full Christ, and there full Christ: I grant it to be true, that is, that Christ is offered in many places at once, in a Mystery and Sacramentally, and that he is full Christ in all those places, but not after the Corporal Substance of our Flesh which he took, but after the Benediction which giveth life; and he is given to the godly Receivers in Bread and Wine, as Cyril speaketh concerning the Oblation of Christ, whereof Chrysostom here speaketh, he himself doth clearly shew what he meaneth thereby, in saying by the way of correction, We always do the self same bowbeit by the re-creation or remembrance of his Sacrifice.

Sarnard.

West. The second Witness is Bernard in a Sermon that he made of the Supper of the Lord, who saith; Unde hoc nobis, piissime Iesu, ut nos vermiculi, reptantes super faciem terre, nos, inquam, qui pulvis & cinis sumus, te præsentem habere mereamur præ manibus, præ oculis, qui totus & integer sedes ad dextram Patris, qui etiam unus bore momento, ab ortu solis usque ad occasum, ab Aquilone usque ad Austrum præsto es, unus in multis, idem in diversis locis? That is to say, How cometh this to us, most gentle Jesus, that we silly Worms creeping on the face of the Earth, that we I say, which are but dust and ashes, may deserve to have thee present in our hands, and before our eyes, who both together, full and whole, dost sit at the right hand of the Father, and who also in the moment of one hour, from the rising of the Sun to the going down of the same, art present one and the self same in many and divers places?

The time of

Rid. These words of Bernard make for you nothing at all. But I know that Bernard was in such a time, that in this matter he may worthily be suspected. He hath many good and fruitful sayings; as also in the same foresaid place by you alledged. But yet he followed in such an Age, whereas the Doctrine of the Holy Supper was fore perverted. Notwithstanding yet I will so expound him, rather than reject him, that he shall make nothing for you at all. He saith, That we have Christ in a Mystery, in a Sacrament, under a veil or cover, but hereafter shall have him without veil or cover. In the mean time, here now he saith, That the verity of Christ is every where. The verity of Christ is both here and there, and in all places.

Bernard rejected.

West. What do you call Verity? He saith not the Verity of Christ, but the Verity of the Body of Christ.

What is the Verity of the Body of Christ.

Rid. The Verity of the Body of Christ is the true Faith of the Body of Christ: after that Verity he is with them which truly believe upon him.

West. Christ is one and the same in divers places. I urge these words [in diversis locis] in divers places, and yet I am not satisfied.

Smith. Christ was seen Really and Corporally on the Earth after his Ascension, and continually sitting at the right hand of the Father.

Ergo. The Ascension and perpetual sitting in Heaven hinder nothing, but that he may be Really and Corporally in the Sacrament.

Rid. If by perpetual sitting you mean the Residence of his Body in Heaven, your Reason containeth manifest contradiction.

Smith. These two have no contradiction in them at all, both fit continually at his Fathers right hand, and also to be seen here really in Earth after his Ascension. First, You will give me, that Christ sitteth in Heaven at the right hand of his Father. For so it is written, Acts 5. Heaven must needs receive him unto the time of the restoring of all. Secondly, He was also seen of Paul here Corporally on Earth.

Wherefore these two do import, as ye see, no contradiction.

Rid. What letteth, but that Christ, if it please him, and when it pleaseth him, may be in Heaven and in Earth, and appear to whom he will? And yet notwithstanding you have not yet proved that he will so do. And though Christ continually shall be resident in Heaven unto the Judgment, yet there may be some intermission, that notwithstanding. But this Contraversion, as I said, is amongst all the ancient Doctors and Writers. And that Christ hath been here seen, that they grant all: but whether then he being in Earth or in Heaven, that is doubtful.

Smith. I will prove that he would appear in Earth.

He so would, and also did appear here in Earth after his Ascension: Ergo, &c.

Rid. He appeared, I grant; but how he appeared, whether then being in Heaven or in Earth, that is uncertain. So he appeared to Steven, being then Corporally sitting in Heaven. For speaking after the true manner of mans Body, when he is in Heaven, he is not the same time in Earth; and when he is in Earth, he is not the same time Corporally in Heaven.

Smith. Christ hath been both in Heaven and in Earth all at one time.

Ergo. You are deceived in denying that.

Rid. I do not utterly deny Christ here to have been seen in Earth. Of uncertain things I speak uncertainly.

Smith. He was seen of Paul, as being born before his time, after his ascending up to Heaven, 1 Cor. 15:

But his Vision was a Corporal Vision:

Ergo. He was seen Corporally upon the Earth after his ascending into Heaven.

Rid. He was seen Really and Corporally indeed, but whether being in Heaven or Earth, is a doubt. And of doubtful things we must judge doubtfully. Howbeit you must prove that he was in Heaven at the same time, when he was Corporally on Earth.

Smith. I would know of you, whether this vision may enforce the Resurrection of Christ?

Rid. I account this a sound and firm Argument to prove the Resurrection. But whether they saw him in Heaven or in Earth, I am in doubt: to say the truth, it maketh no great matter. Both ways the Argument is of like strength. For whether he were seen in Heaven, or whether he were seen on Earth, either of both maketh sufficiently for the matter. Certain it is, he rose again: for he could not have been seen, unless he had risen again.

Smith. Paul saw him as he was here conversant on Earth, and not out of Heaven, as you affirm.

Rid. You run to the beginning again: That you take for granted, which you should have proved.

Smith. You make delays for the nonce.

Rid. Say not so, I pray you. Those that hear us learned: They can tell both what you oppose, and what I answer well enough, I warrant you.

Tresh. He was seen after such sort, as that he might be heard.

Ergo. He was Corporally on the Earth, or else how Argument could he be heard?

Rid. He that found the means for Steven to behold him in Heaven, even he could bring to pass well enough, that Paul might hear him out of Heaven.

Da- Smith. As other saw him, so Paul saw him.

ti. Other did see him Visibly and Corporally on Earth.

fi. Ergo. Paul saw him Visibly and Corporally on Earth.

Rid. I grant he was seen Visibly and Corporally: but yet have you not proved that he was seen in Earth.

Smith. He was seen of him as of other:

But he was seen of other being on Earth, and appeared visibly to them on Earth:

Ergo. he was seen of Paul on Earth.

Rid. Your Contraversion is about (existens in terra) that is, being on Earth: If existere so be, referred as unto the place, I deny that Christ after that sort was on Earth. But if it be referred as to the Verity of the Body, then I grant it. Moreover, I say that Christ was seen of men in Earth after his Ascension, it is certain: For he was seen of Steven; he was seen also of Paul. But whether he descended unto the Earth, or whether he being in Heaven did reveal or manifest himself to Paul, when Paul was wrapt into the third Heaven, I know that some contend about it: And the Scripture, as far as I have read or heard, doth not determine it. Wherefore we cannot but judge uncertainly of those things which be uncertain.

Smith. We have Egeppus and Linus against you, which testify, that Christ appeared Corporally on the Earth to Peter after his Ascension, lib. 3. cap. 3. Peter overcome with the requests and mournings of the People, which desired him to get him out of the City because of Nero's lying in wait for him, began without Company to convey himself away from thence: And when he was come to the Gate, he seeth Christ come to meet him, and worshipping him, he said, Master, whether walk you? Christ answered, I am come again to be crucified. Linus writing of the Passion of Peter, hath the self same story. Ambrose hath the same likewise, and also Abdias, Scholar to the Apostles, which saw Christ before his Ascending into Heaven. With what face therefore dare you affirm it to be a thing uncertain, which these men do manifestly witness to have been done?

Rid. I said before that the Doctors in that matter did vary.

Smith. Do you think this story is not certain, being approved by so ancient and probable Authority?

Rid. I do so think, because I take and esteem not their words for the words of Scripture. And though I did grant you that story to be certain, yet it maketh not against me.

Smith. Such things as be certain, and approved of them, you do reject as things uncertain.

Rid. The story of Linus is not of so great authority; although I am not ignorant that Eusebius so writeth also in the story of the Church. And yet I account not these mens Reports so sure as the Canonical Scriptures. Albeit if at any time he had to any man appeared here on the Earth after his Ascension, that doth not disprove my saying. For I go not about to tie Christ up in fetters (as some do untruly report of us) but that he may be seen upon the Earth according to his Divine Pleasure, whensoever it liketh him. But we affirm, That it is contrary to the Nature of his Manhood, and the true manner of his Body, that he should be together and at one instant both in Heaven and Earth, according to his Corporal Substance. And the perpetual sitting at the right hand of the Father, may (I grant) be taken for the stability of Christs Kingdom, and his continual or everlasting Equality with his Father in the Glory of Heaven.

Smith. Now whereas you boast that your Faith is the very Faith of the Ancient Church; I will shew here that it is not so, but that it doth directly strive against the Faith of the old Fathers, I will bring in Chrysostom for this point. *Hom. 2. ad populum Antiochenum. Tanquam maximam hereditatem, Eliseum melorem suscepit. Et enim vere maxima fuit hereditas, omni auro pretiosior: & erat duplex Helias ille: & erat sursum Helias, & deorsum Helias. Novi quod iustum illum beatum putatis, & velleis quisque esse ut ille. Quid igitur, si vobis demonstravero quid aliud, quod illo multo majus omnes sacris mysteriis imbuti recipimus? Helias quidem melorem discipulo reliquit: Filius autem Dei ascendens suam nobis civitatem dimisit. Sed Helias quidem exiit: Christus autem & nobis reliquit, & ipsam habens ascendit. That is, Eliseus received the Mantle, as a right great Inheritance. For it was indeed a right excellent Inheritance, and more precious than any Gold beside. And the same was a double Helias: He was both Helias above, and Helias beneath. I know well you think that just man to be happy, and you would gladly be every one of you as he is. What will you then say if I shall declare unto you a certain other thing, which all we that are indued with these holy Mysteries do receive much more than that? Helias indeed left his Mantle to his Scholar: But the Son of God ascending did leave here his Flesh unto us. Helias left it, putting off the same: but Christ both left it to us, and ascended also to Heaven, having it with him.*

Rid. I grant that Christ did both; that is, both took up his Flesh with him ascending up, and also did leave the same behind him with us, but after a divers manner and respect. For he took his Flesh with him, after the true and Corporal Substance of his Body and Flesh: Again, he left the same in Mytery to the Faithful in the Supper, to be received after a Spiritual Communication, and by Grace. Neither is the same received in the Supper only, but also at other times, by hearing the Gospel, and by Faith. For, the (Bread) which we break, is the communication of the Body of Christ: And generally, unless ye eat the Flesh of the Son of man, and drink his Blood, ye shall have no life in you.

Smith. Chrysostom in his Book De Dignitate Sacerdotij, lib. 2. cap. 3. saith, O miraculum, O Dei benevolentiam! Quod in sum sedet tempore sacrificij, hominum manibus continetur. Or as other have translated it, O miraculum, O Dei benignitatem! Qui cum parte sursum sedet, in illo ipse temporis articulo, omnium manibus pertrahatur, ac se ipse tradit volentibus ipsum accipere & compleri: i. O Miracle, O good will of God! He that sitteth above at the Sacrifice time, is contained in the hands of men. Or else as other have translated it, thus: O Miracle, O the gentleness of God! He that sitteth above with the Father, is handled with the hands of all men at the very same moment of time, and doth himself deliver himself to them that are desirous to take him and embrace him.

Rid. He that sitteth there is here present in Mytery and by Grace, and is holden of the godly, such as communicate him, not only Sacramentally with the Hand of the Body, but much more wholly with the Hand of the Heart, and by inward drinking is received; but by the Sacramental signification he is holden of all men.

Smith. Where is then the Miracle if he be only present through his Grace and Mytery only?

Rid. Yes, there is a Miracle, good Sir, Christ is not idle in his Sacraments. Is not the Miracle great, to throw you, when Bread, which is wont to sustain the Body, becometh Food to the Soul? He that understandeth not that Miracle, he understandeth not the force of that Mytery. God grant we may every one of us understand his Truth, and obey the same.

Smith. Chrysostom calleth it a Miracle, that Christ sitteth at the right hand of God in Heaven, and at the same time is held in the hands of men: Not that he is handled with the hands of men: Only in a Mytery, and is with them through Grace. Therefore while you deny that, you are altogether deceived, and stray far from the Truth.

Harps. The former part of Chrysostom is not to be let slip. Let me, before I begin, ask this one question of you. Is it not a great matter that Eliseus left his Cloak or Mantle, and the Gift of his Prophecy to his Scholar?

Rid. Yes surely, it is a great matter.

Harps. Did not Eliseus then leave great Grace?

Rid. He did so.

Harps. But Christ left a far greater Grace than Eliseus: For he could not both leave his Cloak and take it with him; Christ doth both in his Flesh.

Rid. I am well content to grant, that Christ left much greater things to us than Eliseus to Eliseus, albeit he be said to have left his double Spirit with him: For that the Strength and Grace of the Body of Christ, which Christ ascending up here left with us, is the only Salvation and Life of all men which shall be saved: Which Life Christ hath here left unto us, to be received by Faith through the hearing of the Word, and the right Administration of the Sacraments. This Virtue and Grace Chrysostom, after the phrase and manner of John the Evangelist, calleth Christs Flesh.

Harps. But Christ performed a great matter. He carried up, and left behind. You understand not the Comparison. The Comparison is in this, That Eliseus left his Mantle, and carried it not with him; Christ left his Flesh behind him, and carried it with him also.

Rid. True it is, and I my self did affirm no less before. Now where you seem to speak many things, indeed you bring no new things at all. Let there be a Comparison between Grace and Grace, then Christ gave the far greater Grace, when he did infuse or graft us into his Flesh.

Harps. If you will give me leave, I will ask you this question. If Chrysostom would have meant so, that Christ left his Body in the Eucharist, what plainer words think you, or more evident could he have used than these?

Rid. These things be not of so great force as they bear a great shew outwardly. He might also have used groffer words if he had listed to have uttered his mind so grossly: For he was an eloquent man. Now he speaketh after the manner of other Doctors, which of mystical matters speak mystically, and of Sacraments sacramentally.

Har. The Comparison lieth in this; That which was impossible to Eliseus, is possible with Christ.

Rid. I grant it was possible to Christ, which was to the other impossible. Eliseus left his Cloak: Christ both left his Flesh and took it with him.

Harps. Eliseus left behind him, and could not take with him: Christ both left behind him, and also took with him: Except you will say the Comparison here made to be nothing.

Anno 1554. Rid. He took up his Flesh with him to Heaven, and left here the Communion of his Flesh in Earth.

Wesl. You understand in the first place his Flesh for very true Flesh; and in the second place for Grace, and Communion of his Flesh; and why do you not understand it in the second place also for his true Flesh? I will make it evident how blockish and gross your Answer is.

Rid. These be Taunts and Reproaches, not becoming, as I think, the modesty of this School.

Wesl. Elias left his Cloak to his Disciple; but the Son of God going up to Heaven, left his Flesh. But Elias certainly left his Cloak behind, and Christ likewise his Flesh, and yet ascending he carried the same with him too. By which words we make this Reason:

Christ left his Flesh to his Disciples, and yet for all that he took the same up with him:

Ergo, He is present here with us. Here Dr. Wesl. crying to the People, said unto them; Mr. Doctor answereth it after this fashion:

He carried his Flesh into Heaven, and he left here the Communion of his Flesh behind. Assuredly the Answer is too unlearned.

Rid. I am glad you speak in English. Surely, I wish that all the whole world might understand your Reasons and my Answers. Reliqui nobis carnem suam, i. He left his Flesh. This you understand of his Flesh, and I understand the same of Grace. He carried his Flesh into Heaven, and left behind the Communion of his Flesh unto us.

Wesl. Ye Judges, what think you of this Answer?

Judges. It is ridiculous and a very fond Answer.

Rid. Well, I take your words patiently for Christs cause.

Wesl. Wesl. here citeth a place, Spargimus Sanguine Christi; We are sprinkled with the Blood of Christ.

Rid. Mr. Doctor, it is the same Blood, but yet spiritually received. And indeed all the Prophets were sprinkled with the same Blood, but yet spiritually I say, and by Grace. And whatsoever they be that are not sprinkled with this Blood, they cannot be partakers of the everlasting Salvation.

Wesl. * Here I bring Bernard unto you again, Even from the West unto the East, from the North unto the South, there is one and the self same Christ in many and divers places.

Rid. The Answer is soon made, that one Christ is here and in divers places. For God according to his Majesty, and according to his Providence, as St. Austin saith, is every where with the godly, according to his indivisible and unspeakable Grace. Or else if ye would understand Bernard according to the Corporal Presence, how monstrous, or huge, and Giant-like a Body would you then make Christs Body to be, which should reach even from North to South, from West to East?

Wesl. Nay, nay, you make a monstrous Answer, and unlearned.

Ward. Before I come in with those Reasons which I had purposed to bring against you, I am minded to come again to Mr. Doctors Argument, by which you being brought into the Briars, seemed to doubt of Christs Presence on the Earth. To the proof of which matter I will bring nothing else, then that which was agreed upon in the Catechism of the Synod of London, set out not long ago by you.

Rid. Sir, I give you to wit, before you go any further, that I did set out no Catechism.

Wesl. Yes, you made one Subscribe to it, when you were a Bishop in your Ruff.

Rid. I compelled no man to Subscribe.

Ward. Yes, by rood, you are the very Author of that Herefie.

Rid. I put forth no Catechism.

Cole. Did you never consent to the setting out of those things which you allowed?

Rid. I grant that I saw the Book; but I deny that I wrote it. I perused it after it was made, and I noted many things for it. So I consented to the Book: I was not the Author of it.

Judges. * The Catechism is so set forth, as though the whole Convocation House had agreed to it. Crammer whole Convocation House had agreed to it. Crammer said yesterday, that you made it.

Rid. I think fairly, that he would not say so.

Ward. The Catechism hath this Clause; Si visibiliter in terra, &c. If visibly on the Earth.

Rid. I answer, That those Articles were set out, I both writing and consenting to them. Mine own hand will testify the same, and Mr. Crammer put his hand to them likewise, and gave them to other afterward. Now, as for the place which you alledge out of it, that may easily be expounded, and without any inconvenience.

Ward. Christ is the power and the virtue of his Father.

Ergo, He was not of so little strength, that he could not bring to pass whatsoever he would himself.

Rid. I grant.

Ward. Christ was the wisdom of the Father.

Ergo, That he spake he spake wisely, and so as every man might understand: neither was it his mind to speak one thing instead of another.

Rid. All this I grant.

Ward. Christ was likewise the very Truth: Ergo, he made and performed indeed that which he intended to make. And likewise it is, that he doth neither deceive, nor could be deceived, nor yet would go about to deceive other.

Wesl. Hilarius in Psal. 118. hath these words: Vera omnia sunt, & neque citius, neque inutiliter constituta Deo verba, sed extra omnem ambiguitatem superflua innotant, ignita, & ignita vehementer, ne quid ille ejus, quod non perfectum ac proprium sit, existimetur. All Gods words or sayings are true, and neither idly placed, or unprofitably, but fiery, and wonderful fiery, without all doubtfulness of superfluous vanity, that there may be nothing thought to be there, which is not absolute and proper.

Ward. He is the Truth of the Father: Ergo, He can neither deceive, nor yet be deceived; especially I mean when he spake at his later end, and his Testament.

Rid. Christ is the very Truth of the Father: and I perceive well to what scope you drive your reason. This is but a far fetch compass of words. If that these words of Christ, This is my Body, which you mean, be rightly understood, they are most true.

Ward. He took, he brake, he gave, &c. What took he?

Rid. Bread, his Body.

Ward. What brake he?

Rid. Bread.

Ward. What gave he?

Rid. Bread.

Ward. Gave he Bread made of Wheat, and material Bread?

Rid. I know not whether he gave Bread of Wheat; but he gave true and material Bread.

Ward. I will prove the contrary by Scriptures.

He delivered to them that which he bade them take.

But he bade not them take material Bread, but his own Body.

Ergo, He gave not material Bread, but his own Body.

Rid. I deny the Minor. For he bade them take his Body

Sacramentally in material Bread: and after that sort it was both Bread which he bade them take, because the Substance was Bread, and it was also his Body, because it was the Sacrament of his Body, for the sanctifying and the coming of the Holy Ghost, which is always assitant to those Mysteries which were instituted of Christ, and lawfully administered.

Harps. What is he that so saith, By the coming unto of the Holy Spirit?

Rid. I have Theophilact for mine Author for this manner of speaking. And here I bring him, that ye may understand that phrase not to be mine, upon Matthew 26. Furthermore, the said Theophilact writing upon these words, This is my Body, sheweth, that the Body of the Lord is Bread, which is sanctified on the Altar.

Ogle. That place of Theophilact maketh openly against you. For he saith in that place, that Christ said not, This is the Figure of my Body, but my Body. For, saith he, by an unspeakable operation it is transformed, although it seem to us to be Bread.

Rid. It is not a Figure, that is to say, Non tantum est figura, i. it is not only a Figure of his Body.

Wesl. Where have you that word (tantum) only?

Rid. It is not in that place, but he hath it in another, and Augustine doth so speak many times, & other Doctors more.

Wesl. Here Wesl. repeating the words of Theophilact in English, said, He saith it is no Figure, and you say it is a Figure.

1554

Plurimum convertio me ad Christum, quia ipsum quero hic, & invenio quomodo sine impietate adoratur scabellum pedum ejus. Suscipe enim de terra terramque caro de terra est, & de carne Maria carnem accepit, & quia in ipsa carne hic ambulavit, & ipsum carnem nobis manducandum ad salutem dedisti: nemo autem illam carnem manducat nisi prius adoraverit. Invenitum est quo modo tale scabellum pedum Domini adoratur, ut non solum non peccemus adorando, sed peccemus non adorando ipsum, &c. i. I ask (faith he) what is the footstool of his feet? and the Scripture telleth me, The Earth is the Footstool of my Feet. And so in searching thereof I turn my self to Christ, because I seek him here in the Earth, and find how, without impiety, the footstool of his feet may be worshipped; for he took Earth of Earth, in that he is Flesh and Earth, and of the Flesh of Mary he took Flesh, and because that in the same Flesh here he walked, and also he gave the same Flesh to us to be eaten unto Salvation. But no man catch that Flesh except he have worshipped before. And so it is found, how such a footstool of the feet of the Lord is to be worshipped, so that not only we Sin not in worshipping, but also do Sin in not worshipping the same.

Da. He gave to us his Flesh to be eaten, the which he took of the Earth, in which also here he walked, &c. ti. But he never gave his Flesh to be eaten, but when he gave it at his Supper, saying, This is my Body. si. Ergo, in the Eucharist he gave us his Flesh.

Rid. You do alledge the place of Austin upon the 98. Psalm, where he faith, that Christ gave his Flesh to be eaten which he took of the Earth, and in which here he walked, inferring hereupon that Christ never gave the same his Flesh to be eaten, but only in the Eucharist: I deny your Minor: for he gave it both in the Eucharist to be eaten, and also otherwise, as well in the Word, as also upon the Cross.

Smith. What if Augustine say, that Christ did not only give himself to us in a figure, but gave his own very Flesh indeed and really?

Rid. I never said that Christ gave only a figure of his Body. For indeed he gave himself in a real Communication, that is, he gave his Flesh after a Communication of his Flesh.

Wesl. Here Weslsey read the place of Augustine in English, and afterward said; Ye say, Christ gave not his Body, but a figure of his Body.

Rid. I say not so, I say he gave his own Body verily. But he gave it by a real, effectual, and spiritual Communication.

¶ After this, Doctor Glin began to reason, who notwithstanding Mr. Ridley had always taken him for his old friend made a very venomous Preface against him. This Preface Mr. Ridley therefore did the more take to heart, because it proceeded from him. Howbeit he thought, that Doctor Glin's mind was to serve the time. For afterward he came to the house where Mr. Ridley was kept, and, as far as Mr. Ridley could call to remembrance, before Doctor Young and Doctor Ogleshorpe he desired him to pardon his words. The which Mr. Ridley did even from the very heart, and wished earnestly, that God would give not only to him, but unto all other, the true and evident knowledge of Gods Evangelical Sincerity, that all offences put a part; they being perfectly and fully reconciled, might agree and meet together in the house of the Heavenly Father.

Glin. I see that you elude or shift away all Scriptures and Fathers. I will go to work with you after another sort.

Christ hath here his Church known in Earth, of which you were once a Child, although now you speak contumeliously of the Sacraments.

Rid. This is a grievous contumely, that you call me a shifter away of the Scripture, and of the Doctors. As touching the Sacraments, I never yet spake contumeliously of them. I grant that Christ hath here his Church in Earth: but that Church did ever receive and acknowledge the Eucharist to be a Sacrament of the Body of Christ, yet not the Body of Christ really, but the Body of Christ by Grace.

Glin. Then I ask this question: whether the Catholic Church hath ever or at any time been Idolatrous?

Rid. The Church is the Pillar and stay of the Truth, that never yet hath been Idolatrous in respect of the whole: but peradventure in respect of some part thereof, which sometimes may be seduced by evil Pastors, and through ignorance.

Glin. (a) That Church ever hath worshipped the Flesh of Christ in the Eucharist.

But the Church hath never been Idolatrous:

Ergo, It hath always judged the Flesh of Christ to be in the Eucharist.

Rid. And I also Worship Christ in the Sacrament, but not because he is included in the Sacrament: Like as I Worship Christ also in the Scriptures, not because he is really included in them. Notwithstanding I say, that the Body of Christ is present in the Sacrament, but yet Sacramentally and Spiritually, according to his Grace giving Life, and in that respect really, that is, according to his Benediction giving Life.

Furthermore, I acknowledge gladly the true Body of Christ to be in the Lords Supper, in such sort as the Church of Christ (which is the Spouse of Christ, and is taught of the Holy Ghost, and guided by Gods Word) doth acknowledge the same. But the true Church of Christ doth acknowledge a Presence of Christs Body in the Lords Supper to be Communicated to the Godly by Grace, and spiritually, as I have often shewed, and by a Sacramental signification, but not by the Corporal Presence of the Body of his Flesh.

Glin. Austin contra Faustum, lib. 20. cap. 13. Nemo nulli propter panem & calicem, Cererem & Bacchum nos colere existimabam, &c. i. Some there were which thought us instead of Bread and of the Cup to Worship Ceres and Bacchus.

*Upon this place I gather, that there was an Adoration of the Sacrament among the Fathers, and Ergo, nunc in an Epistle to the Brethren of Low-Germany, faith, that the Worshipping of the Sacrament was before Austin and Cyprian.*

Rid. We do handle the signs reverently: but we Worship the Sacrament as a Sacrament, not as a thing signified by the Sacrament.

Glin. What is the Symbol or Sacrament?

Rid. Bread.

Glin. Ergo, We Worship Bread.

*Rid. There is a deceit in this word (Adornamus) We Worship the Symbols, when reverently we handle them. We Worship Christ whereforever we perceive his benefits. But we understand his benefit to be greatest in the Sacrament.*

Glin. So I may fall down before the Bench here, and Worship Christ: and if any man ask me what I do, I may answer, I Worship Christ.

Rid. We Adore and Worship Christ in the Eucharist. And if you mean the external Sacrament, I say, that also is to be Worshipped as a Sacrament.

Glin. So was the Faith of the Primitive Church.

Rid. Would to God we would all follow the Faith of that Church.

Glin. Think you that Christ hath now his Church?

Rid. I do so.

Glin. But all the Church adoreth Christ, verily, and really in the Sacrament.

Rid. You know your self that the Eastern Church would not acknowledge Transubstantiation, as appeareth in the Council of Florence.

Cole. That is false. For in the same they did acknowledge Transubstantiation, although they would not intreat of the matter, for that they had not in their Commission so to do.

Rid. Nay, they would determine nothing of the matter, when the Article was propounded unto them.

Cole. It was not because they did not acknowledge the same, but because they had no Commission so to do.

*Cantop. Reverend Sir, I will prove and declare, that the Body of Christ is truly and really in the Eucharist: and whereas the Holy Fathers, both of the West and East Church, have written both many things and no less manifest of the same matter, yet will I bring forth only Chrysostom. The place is in *cap. 10. Corinth. 1. Item. 24. (a) That which is in the Cup, is the same that flowed from the side of Christ.

*But true and pure Blood did I flow from the side of Christ. Ergo, His true and pure Blood is in the Cup.*

Rid. It is his true Blood which is in the Chalice, I grant, and the same which is from the side of Christ,

(a) This Argument having the minor a negative, neither is it possible in the third figure, neither doth it conclude rightly, but should conclude thus: Ergo, to Worship the Flesh of Christ is not to be done.

Augustine contra Faustum, lib. 20. cap. 13. Nemo nulli propter panem & calicem, Cererem & Bacchum nos colere existimabam, &c. i. Some there were which thought us instead of Bread and of the Cup to Worship Ceres and Bacchus.

Encomium of this word Worshipping.

We Worship Christ in the Eucharist: but we Worship not the Eucharist for Christ.

This Council of Florence was but of late years in the time of the Council of Basel.

Chrysostom in 1. Cor. 10. 24. (a) The Marjorah of the Church, which is the Body of Christ, is in the Cup, &c. or else the Argument being in the second figure is affirmative, it is true.

If the minor of this Argument (so is said before) be equalled to affirmative, then it cometh next to the Minor. But how Christ gave his Flesh to be eaten, and when.

Christ gave himself not only in a figure, but indeed by a real and effectual communication of his Flesh. D. Glin disputes.

B. Ridley for greiveth D. Glin.

But how? It is Blood indeed; but not after the same manner, after which manner it sprang from his side. For here is the Blood, but by way of a Sacrament.

Again, I say, like as the Bread of the Sacrament and of Thanksgiving is called the Body of Christ given for us: so the Cup of the Lord is called the Blood which sprang from the side of Christ. But that Sacramental Bread is called the Body, because it is the Sacrament of his Body: even so likewise the Cup is called the Blood also which flowed out of Christ's side, because it is the Sacrament of that Blood which flowed out of his side, instituted of the Lord himself for our singular commodity: namely, for our Spiritual nourishment: like as Baptism is ordained in water to Spiritual Regeneration.

Cur. The Sacrament of the Blood is not the Blood.

Rid. The Sacrament of the Blood is the Blood, and that is attributed to the Sacrament, which is spoken of the thing of the Sacrament.

Wyl. Here Wyl. repeated Cur.'s Argument in English.

(b) That which is in the Chalice, is the same which flowed out of Christ's side.

But there came out very Blood:

Ergo, There is Blood in the Chalice.

Rid. The Blood of Christ is in the Chalice indeed, but not in the Real Presence, but by Grace, and in a Sacrament.

Wyl. That is very well. Then we have Blood in the Chalice.

Rid. It is true, but by Grace, and in a Sacrament.

Here the people lifted at him.

Rid. O my Masters! I take this for no Judgment: I will stand to Gods Judgment.

Wat. Good Sir, I have determined to have respect of the time, and to abstain from all those things which may hinder the entrance of our disputation: and therefore first I ask this question; when Christ said in the sixth of John, Qui manducat carnem meam, i. He that eateth my Flesh, &c. doth he signifie in those words the eating of his true and Natural Flesh, or else of the Bread and Symbol?

Rid. I understand that place of the very Flesh of Christ to be eaten, but spiritually: And further I say, that the Sacrament also pertaineth unto the Spiritual Manducation. For without the Spirit to eat the Sacrament is to eat it unprofitably. For who so eateth not Spiritually, he eateth his own Condemnation.

Wat. I ask then whether the Eucharist be a Sacrament? Rid. The Eucharist, taken for a sign or Symbol, is a Sacrament.

Wat. Is it instituted of God?

Rid. It is instituted of God.

Wat. Where?

Rid. In the Supper.

Wat. With what words is it made a Sacrament?

Rid. By the words and deeds which Christ said and did, and commanded us to say and do the same.

Wat. It is a thing commonly received of all, that the Sacraments of the New Law give Grace to them that worthily receive.

Rid. True it is, that Grace is given by the Sacrament, but as by an instrument. The inward vertue and Christ give the Grace through the Sacrament.

Wat. What is a Sacrament?

Rid. I remember there be many definitions of a Sacrament in Augustine: But I will take that which seemeth most fit to this present purpose. A Sacrament is a visible sign of invisible Grace.

Wat. Ergo, Grace is given to the receivers.

Rid. The Society or Conjunction with Christ through the Holy Ghost is Grace, and by the Sacrament we are made the Members of the Mystical Body of Christ, for that by the Sacrament the part of the Body is grafted in the bread.

Wat. But there is difference between the Mystical Body, and Natural Body.

Rid. There is (I grant you) a difference, but the head of them both is one.

Wat. (a) The Eucharist is a Sacrament of the New Testament.

Ergo, It hath a promise of Grace.

But no promise of Grace is made to Bread and Wine:

Ergo, Bread and Wine be not the Sacraments of the New Testament.

Rid. I grant that Grace pertaineth to the Eucharist, Anno according to this saying, The Bread which we Break is it 1554.

Wat. not the Communication or partaking of the Body of Christ? And like as he that eateth, and he that drinketh unworthily the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of the Lord, eateth and drinketh his own Damnation: Even so he that eateth and drinketh worthily, eateth Life, and drinketh Life. I grant also that there is no (b) promise made to Bread and Wine. But inasmuch as they are sanctified, and made the Sacraments of the Body and Blood of the Lord, they have a promise of Grace annexed unto them, namely, of Spiritual partaking of the Body of Christ to be Communicated and given, not to the Bread and Wine, but to them which worthily do receive the Sacrament.

Wat. If the Substance of Bread and Wine do remain, then the society betwixt Christ and us is promised to them that take Bread and Wine.

But that Society is not promised to Bread and Wine, but to the receivers of the Flesh and Blood. Joan 6. Qui manducat, &c.

Ergo, The substance of Bread and Wine remaineth not.

Rid. The promise undoubtedly is made to the Flesh and Blood, but the same is to be received in the Sacrament through Faith.

Wat. Every Sacrament hath a promise of Grace annexed unto it.

Ergo, The Bread and Wine are not Sacraments.

Rid. True it is, every Sacrament hath Grace annexed unto it instrumentally. But there is divers understanding of this word (Haber) hath. For the Sacrament hath not Grace included in it; but to those that receive it well, it is turned to Grace. After that manner the water in Baptism hath Grace promised, and by that Grace the holy Spirit is given, not that Grace is included in Water, but that Grace cometh by Water.

Wat. This promise is made to the Flesh and Blood of Christ, and not to the Bread and Wine.

Ergo, The Sacrament is not Bread and Wine, but the Body and Blood of Christ.

Rid. There is no promise made to him that taketh common bread and common Wine but to him that receiveth the Sanctified Bread, and Bread of the Communion; there is a large promise of Grace made, neither is the promise given to the Symbols, but to the thing of the Sacrament. But the thing of the Sacrament is the Flesh and Blood.

Wat. Every Sacrament of the New Testament giveth Grace, promised of God to those that worthily receive it.

Rid. This Sacrament hath a promise of Grace, made to those that receive it worthily, because Grace is given by it, as by an instrument, not that Christ hath transfused Grace into the Bread and Wine.

Wat. But this promise which is made, is not but to those that worthily receive the Flesh and Blood; not the Bread and Wine.

Rid. That proposition of yours hath a divers understanding. There is no promise made to them that receive Common Bread, as it were; but to those that worthily receive the Sanctified Bread, there is a promise of Grace made, like as Origen doth testify.

Wat. Where is that promise made?

Rid. The Bread which he brake, is it not a Communion? 1. Cor. 10: 17. Quia non dixit participatio Quia amplius quid significare voluit, & multam inter hac convenientiam ostendere. Non enim participatio tantum & acceptio, sed unitate communicamus. Quomodo modum enim corpus illud unum est Christus, ita & nos per hunc panem unione conjungimur. That is the Bread which we Break, is it not the Communication of Christ's Body? Wherefore did he not say participation? Because he would signifie some great matter, and that he would declare a great convenience

Wat. What doth he mean by Bread in that place?

Rid. The Bread of the Lords Table, the Communion of the Body of Christ.

Wat. Harken what Chrysostom saith upon that place, Chryf. in Panis quem frangimus, nonne communicatio corporis Christi est? Quare non dixit participatio? Quia amplius quid significare voluit, & multam inter hac convenientiam ostendere. Non enim participatio tantum & acceptio, sed unitate communicamus. Quomodo modum enim corpus illud unum est Christus, ita & nos per hunc panem unione conjungimur. That is the Bread which we Break, is it not the Communication of Christ's Body? Wherefore did he not say participation? Because he would signifie some great matter, and that he would declare a great convenience

(c) This Argument consisteth not directly and being in the second figure, it is not formal.

Spiritual eating of the Flesh of Christ.

The Sacrament gives no Grace, but as by an instrument.

(d) The Symbolism is thus to be formed: The Sacrament of the New Testament hath a promise of Grace annexed to it.

(e) The Sacrament of the New Testament hath a promise of Grace annexed to it.

venience and conjunction betwixt the same. For we do not Communicate by Participation only and receiving, but also by co-uniting. For likewise as that Body is co-united to Christ, so also we by the same Bread are conjoined and united to him.

Rid. Let Chrysofom have his manner of speaking, and his sentence. If it be true, I reject it not. But let it not be prejudicial to me to name it true Bread.

Wat. All (saith Chrysofom) which sit together at one board, do Communicate together of one true Body. What do I call (saith he) this communicating? We are all the self same Body. What doth Bread signifie? The Body of Christ. What be they that receive it? The Body of Christ. For many are but one Body. Chrysofom doth interpret this place against you. All we be one Bread, and one Mystical Body, which do participate together one Bread of Christ.

Rid. All we be one Mystical Body, which do communicate of one Christ in Bread, after the efficacy of Regeneration or quickening.

Wat. Of what manner of Bread speaketh he?

Rid. Of the Bread of the Lords Table.

Wat. Is that Bread one?

Rid. It is one, of the Church being one, because one Bread is set forth upon the Table: And so of one Bread all together do participate which communicate at the Table of the Lord.

Wat. See how absurdly you speak. Do you say all which be from the beginning to the end of the World?

Rid. All, I say, which at one Table together have Communicated in the Mysteries might well so do. Albeit the Heavenly and Celestial Bread is likewise one also, whereof the Sacramental Bread is a Mytery: The which being one, all we together do participate.

Wat. A perverse answer. Which all? Mean you all Christian men?

Rid. I do distribute this word (All) for all were wont together to Communicate of the one Bread divided into parts. All, I say, which were one Congregation, and which all did communicate together at one Table.

Wat. What? Do you exclude then from the Body of Christ all them which did not Communicate, being present?

Rid. But Cyprian saith, Panis quem nulla multitudo consumit, i. Bread which no multitude doth consume. Which cannot be understood but only of the Body of Christ.

Rid. Also Cyprian in this place did speak of the true Body of Christ, and not of material Bread.

Wat. Nay, rather he did there intreat of the Sacrament in that tractation De Canna Domini, writing upon the Supper of the Lord.

Rid. Truth it is, and I grant he intreateth thereof of the Sacrament: But also he doth admix something therewithal of the Spiritual manducation.

Smith. When the Lord saith, This is my Body, he useth no Tropical Speech:

Ergo, You are deceived.

Rid. I deny your Antecedent.

Smith. I bring here Augustine in Psal. 33. Conc. 1. expounding these words, Ferebatur in manibus suis, i. He was carried in his own hands. Regum.

*Hoc quomodo possit fieri in homine, quis intelligat? Manibus enim suis nemo portavit, sed alienis. Quomodo intelligatur de David secundum litteram, non invenimus; de Christo autem invenimus. Ferebatur enim Christus in manibus suis cum diceret; Hoc est corpus meum. Ferebatur enim illud corpus in manibus suis, &c. That is, How may this be understood to be done in man? For no man is carried in his own hands, but in the hands of other. How this may be understood of David after the Letter, we do not find; Of Christ we find it. For Christ was born in his own hands, when he saith, This is my Body, for he carried that same Body in his own hands, &c.*

Augustine here did not see how this place after the Letter could be understood of David, because no man can carry himself in his own hands. Therefore, saith he, this place is to be understood of Christ after the Letter. For Christ carried himself in his own hands in his Supper, when he gave the Sacrament to his Disciples, saying, This is my Body.

Rid. I deny your Argument, and I explicate the same. Augustine could not find after his own understanding how this could be understood of David after the Letter. Augustine goeth here from other in this exposition, but I go not from him. But let this exposition of Augustine be granted to you; although I know this place of Scripture be otherwise read of other men, after the verity of the Hebrew Text, and it is also otherwise to be expounded. Yet to grant to you this exposition of Augustine, say yet notwithstanding it maketh nothing against my Assertion: For Christ did bear himself in his own hands, when he gave the Sacrament of his Body to be eaten of his Disciples.

Smith. Ergo, It is true of Christ after the Letter, that he was born in his own hands.

Rid. He was born literally, and after that Letter which was spoken of David: but not after the Letter of these words, Hoc est corpus meum.

I grant that Augustine saith, that it is not found literally of David, that he carried himself in his own hands, but that it is found of Christ. But this word, ad litteram, literally, you do not well refer to that which was born, but rather it ought to be referred to him that did bear it. S. Augustines meaning in this; that it is not read any where in the Bible, that this carnal David, the Son of Jesse did bear himself in his hands, but of that Spiritual David that overthrew Goliath the Devil; that is, of Christ our Saviour, the Son of the Virgin, it may well be found literally, that he bare himself in his own hands after a certain manner, namely, in carrying the Sacrament of himself. And note, that S. Augustine hath these words, quodam modo, after a certain manner; which manifestly declare how the Doctors meaning is to be taken.

Smith. When then was he born in his own hands, and after what Letter?

Rid. He was born in the Supper Sacramentally, when he said, This is my Body.

Smith. Every man may bear in his own hands a figure of his Body.

But Augustine denieth that David could carry himself in his hands.

Ergo, He speaketh of no figure of his Body.

Rid. If Augustine could have found in all the Scripture, that David had carried the Sacrament of his Body, then he would never have used that exposition of Christ.

Smith. But he did bear himself in his own hands:

Rid. He did not bear a figure only.

Rid. He did bear himself, but in a Sacrament: and Augustine afterward addeth, quodam modo, that is, sacramentally.

Smith. You understand not what Augustine meant when he said, quodam modo; for he meant that he did bear his very true body in that Supper, not in figure and form of a Body, but in form and figure of Bread.

Ergo, You are holden fast, neither are you able to escape out of this labyrinth.

Doctor Wesley repeated this place again in English. Which done, then Doctor Tresham began thus to speak, moved (as it seemed to M. Ridley) with great zeal, and desired that he might be in stead of John Baptist, in converting the hearts of the Fathers, and in reducing the said Bishop Ridley again to the Mother Church. Now at the first, not knowing the person, he thought he had been some good old man, which had the Zeal of God, although not according to Knowledge, and began to answer him with manifold and Reverence. But afterward he smelt a Fox under a Sheeps clothing.

GOD Almighty grant that it may be fulfilled in me, that was spoken by the Prophet Malachi of John Baptist, which may turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the hearts of the Children to their Fathers, that you at length may be converted. The wife man saith, Sow, Honour thy Father, and Reverence thy Mother. But you dishonour your Father in Heaven, and pollute your Mother the Holy Church here on Earth, while ye sit not by it.

Rid. These by-words do pollute your School.

Tresh. If there were an Arrian which had that subtil wit that you have, he might soon shift off the Authority of the Scriptures and Fathers.

Wesl. Either dispute, or else hold your peace, I pray you.

Tresh. I bring a place here out of the Council of Lateran, the which Council representing the Universal Church, wherein were congregated 300. Bishops, and 70. Metropolitans, besides a great multitude of other, decreed that Bread and Wine, by the power of Gods Word, was Transubstantiated into the Body and Blood of the Lord. Therefore whosoever faith contrary, cannot be a Child of the Church, but an Heretick.

Rid. Good Sir, I have heard what you have cited out of the Councel of Laterane, and remember that there was a great multitude of Bishops and Metropolitans, as you said:
But yet you have not numbered how many Abbas, Priors, and Friers were not in that Councel, who were to the number of 800.

One of the Scribours en against
R. Ridley.

One of the Scribes. What, will you deny then the Authority of that Councel for the multitude of those Priors?

Rid. No Sir, not so much for that cause, as for that especially, because the Doctrine of that Councel agreed not with the Word of God, as it may well appear by the Acts of that Councel, which was holden under Innocen-tius the third, a man (if we believe the Histories) most pernicious to the Church and Common-wealth of Christ.

Of this time
the third read

Tregh. What, do you not receive the Councel of Laterane? Whereupon he with certain other cried, Scribite, scribite, Write, write.

Rid. No Sir, I receive not that Councel; Scribite, & rescribite, Write, and write again.

R. Ridley re-jecteth the Councel of Laterane.
Good men

Tregh. Evil men do eat the Natural Body of Christ.
Ergo, The true and Natural Body of Christ is on the Altar.

Rid. Evil men do eat the very true and Natural Body of Christ Sacramentally, and no further, as S. Augustine faith: But good men do eat the very true Body both Sacramentally, and Spiritually by Grace.

Tregh. I prove the contrary by S. Augustin, Lib. 5.
contra Donatistas cap. 8. Sicut enim Judas, cui buccellum Dominus tradidit, non malum accipiendo, sed male accipiendo peccavit, &c. Like as Judas, to whom the Lord gave the Morsellum did offend, not in taking a thing that was evil, but in receiving it after an evil manner, &c. And a little after, Quia aliquis non ad salutem manducat, non ideo non est Corpus. Because some do not eat unto Salvation, it followeth not therefore that it is not his Body.

Rid. It is the Body to them, that is, the Sacrament of the Body: and Judas took the Sacrament of the Lord to his condemnation. Austin hath distinguished these things well in another place, where he faith, Panem Domini, & panem Domini. Mali manducant panem Domini, non pa-nem Domini: boni autem manducant & panem Domini, & panem Domini, i. The Bread of the Lord, the Bread the Lord. Evil men eat the Bread of the West. Paul faith, the Body, and you say, the Sacrament glish.

Rid. Paul meaneth so indeed.
Wat. You understand it evil concerning the Sign: For the Fathers say, that evil men do eat him which descended from Heaven.

Rid. They eat him indeed, but Sacramentally. The Fathers use many times the Sacrament for the matter of the Sacrament, and all that same place maketh against you, and so here he cited the place.

Wat. I bring Theophylact, which faith: That Judas did take the Body of the Lord. Offendit Dominus cruce-latum Judas, qui cum argueretur, non intellexit, & gustavit carnem Domini, &c. i. The Lord did shew the cruelty of Judas, which, when he was rebuked, did not understand, and tasted the Lords Flesh, &c.

Answer.

Rid. This phrase to Divines is well known, and used of the Doctors. He tasted the Flesh of the Lord, Insen-sibiliter, Insensibiliter, that is, the Sacrament of the Lords Flesh.
West. Chrysostom faith, that the same punishment remaineth to them which receive the Body of the Lord unworthily, as to them which Crucified him.

Chrysostom alleged.

Rid. That is, because they defile the Lords Body: for evil men do eat the Body of Christ Sacramentally, but good men eat both the Sacrament and the matter of the Sacrament.

The Councel of Nice is alleged.

Wat. You reject the Councel of Laterane, because (you say) it agreeth not with Gods Word. What say you then to the Councel of Nice? The words of the Councel be these,
Ne humiliter spectemus propositum panem & potum, sed exaltata mente fideliter credamus facere in illa sacra mensa Agnus Dei tollentem peccata mundi à sacerdotibus sacramentum, i. Let us not look away by the ground upon the Bread and the Drink set before us, but lifting up our mind let us faithfully believe, there upon the Holy Table to lye the Lamb of God taking away the Sins of the World, being Sacrificed of the Priests.

1554.

Rid. That Councel was collected out of ancient Fathers: and is to use a great Authority; for it faith, Postum esse panem in altari, & exaltata mente considerandum eum qui in Calice est, i. That Bread is set upon the Altar, and having our minds lifted up, we must consider him which is in Heaven. The words of the Councel make for me.

Wat. (Exaltata mente) with a mind exalted: that is, not as brut Beasts at the rack or manger, having an eye only upon the thing that is set before them. Agnus Dei jacet in mensa, i. the * Lamb of God lieth on the Table, faith the Councel.

* If the God lieth ly upon the why doth the Councel bid us lift up our minds, which rather should bid us let down our minds to the Altar?

The place of the Council expounded.

Rid. The Lamb of God is in Heaven, according to the verity of the Body: and here he is with us in a Mystery, according to his power, not corporally.

Wat. But the Lamb of God lieth on the Table.

Rid. It is a figurative speech, for in our mind we understand him which is in Heaven.

Wat. But he lieth there, the Greek word is κατα.

Rid. He lieth there, that is, he is there present, not corporally, but he lieth there in his operation.

Wat. He lieth, but his operation lieth not.

Rid. You think very grossly of the sitting or lying of the celestial Lamb on the Table of the Lord. For we may not imagine any such sitting or lying upon the Table, as the reason of man would judge: but all things are here to be understood Spiritually. For that Heavenly Lamb is (as I confess) on the Table, but by a Spiritual Presence, by Grace, and not after any corporal Substance of his Flesh taken of the Virgin Mary.

And indeed the same Canon doth plainly teach, that the Bread which is set on the Table is material Bread; and therefore it (the Canon I mean) commandeth that we should not creep on the ground in our cogitation, to those things which are set before us, as who should say, what other things are they (as much as pertaineth to their true substance) than Bread and Wine? but rather, faith the Canon, lifting up our minds into Heaven, let us consider with Faith the Lamb of God which taketh away the Sins of the World, sitting or lying upon the Table. For a lified up Faith, faith he, fetch him which sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, after the true manner of a Body set by Grace on the Lords Table, and taking away the Sins of the World. For I think you mean not so; as though the Lamb did lie there prostrate with his members spread upon the Table.

derat. 3.

Smith. I bring another place out of the Councel of Nice: Nullus Apollonem dixit, hac est figura corporis Christi: Nullus venerabilium Presbyterorum dixit in cru-entum altaris sacrificium figuram, &c. i. None of the Apostles said, this is a figure of the Body of Christ: None of the Reverend Elders said, the unbloody Sacrifice of the Altar to be a figure.

Another place of the same Councel alleged.

Ergo, You are deceived.
Rid. This Canon is not in the Councel of Nice. For I have read over this Councel many times.

Then came in another whom M. Ridley knew not, *Quid d.
Ridley* co-
and said, The Universal Church both of the Greeks and *Pr.
Latines*, of the East and of the West, have agreed in the Councel of Florence uniformly in the Doctrine of the Sacrament, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is the true and real Body.

One of the Scribes.

Rid. I deny the Greek and the East Church to have agreed either in the Councel at Florence, or at any time else, with the Romish Church in the Doctrine of Transub-stantiation of Bread into the Body of Christ. For there was nothing in the Councel of Florence, wherein the Greeks would agree with the Romanists; albeit hitherto I confess it was left free for every Church to use, as they were wont, leavened or unleavened Bread.

Here cried out Doctor Cole, and said, they agreed together concerning Transubstantiation of Bread into the Body of Christ. Mr. Ridley said that could not be.

Here start up another unknown to Mr. Ridley, but thought to be one of the Scribes, who affirmed with him, that indeed there was nothing decreed concerning Transubstantiation; the Councel left that, as a matter

ter not meet nor worthy to disturb the Peace and Con- cord of the Church. To whom Mr. Ridley answered a- gain, saying, that he said the truth.

Pie. What say you to that Councel, where it is said, that the Priest doth offer an unbloody Sacrifice of the Body of Christ?

Rid. I say, it is well said, if it be rightly understood.

Pie. But he offereth an unbloody Sacrifice.

Rid. It was called unbloody, and is offered after a certain manner, and in a Mytery, and as a repre- sentation of that Bloody Sacrifice, and he doth not lye which saith Christ to be offered.

West. I with one Argument will throw down to the ground your opinion, out of Chrysostom, Hom. 24. in

1. ad Cor. and I will teach, not only a figure and a sign, or Grace only, but the very same Body, which was here coeverlant on the Earth, to be in the Eucharist.

We Worship the self same Body in the Eucharist which the wife men did worship in the Manger.

But that was his natural and real Body, not spiritual.

Ergo, The real Body of Christ is in the Eucharist.

Again, the same Chrysostom saith, We have not here the Lord in the Manger, but on the Altar. Here a Wo- man holdeth him not in her hands, but a Priest.

Rid. We worship, I confess, the same true Lord and Saviour of the World, which the wife men worshipped in the Manger, howbeit we do it in a Mytery, and in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, and that in spiritual liberty, as saith S. Aug. lib. 3. De doctrina Christiana: not in carnal servitude; that is, we do not worship fervently the signs for the things: For that should be, as he also saith, a part of a servile infirmity. But we behold with the Eyes of Faith him present after Grace, and spiritual- ly fet upon the Table; and we worship him which sitteth above, and is worshipped of the Angels. For Christ is al- ways assitant to his Mysteries, as the said Augustine saith. And the Divine Majesty, as saith Cyprian, doth never ab- sent it self from the Divine Mysteries; but this assitance and Prefence of Christ, as in Baptism it is wholly spiritual, and by Grace, and not by any Corporal Substante of the Flesh: Even so it is here in the Lords Supper, being right- ly and according to the Word of God duly ministrd.

West. That which the Woman did hold in her Womb, the same thing holdeth the Priest.

Rid. I grant the Priest holdeth the same thing, but after another manner. She did hold the Natural Body; the Priest holdeth the Mytery of the Body.

West. Weston repeated again his Argument out of Chrysostom in English.

Rid. I say that the Author meant it spiritually.

West. Weston here dissolving the Disputations, had these words: Videris praevalsum hominis animum, glori- osum, vasum, inconstantem: videtur hodie veritatis vires inconstas. Itaque clamate, Vici veritatem. Here you see the stubborn, the boasting, the crafty, the unconstant mind of this man. Here you see, this day, that the strength of the Truth is without fail. Therefore I beseech you all most earnestly to blow the note; and he began, and they fol- lowed, Verity hath the victory, Verity hath the victory.

The Disputation had at Oxford the 18. day of April, 1554. between Mr. Hugh Latimer Answerer, and M. Smith, and other Opposers.

After these Disputations of Bishop Ridley ended, next was brought out Mr. Hugh Latimer to dispute, up- on Wednesday, which was the eighteenth day of April. Which Disputation began at eight of the Clock, in such form as before; but it was most in English. For Mr. La- timer the Answerer alleged that he was out of use with the Latin, and unfit for that place.

There replied unto him Mr. Smith of Oriel College, Doctor Carwright, Mr. Hersfield, and divers other had inatches at him, and gave him bitter taunts. He escaped no hissings and scornful laughings, no more than they that went before him, He was very faint, and deli- cated that he might not long tarry. He durst not drink for fear of vomiting. The Disputation ended before eleven of the Clock. Mr. Latimer was not suffered to read that he had (as he said) painfully written: but it was exhibited up, and the Prolocutor read part thereof, and so proceed- ed unto the Disputation.

The Preface of Weston into the Disputation following

MEN and Brethren, we are come together this day (by the help of God) to vanquish the strength of the Arguments, and dispersed opinions of Adversaries, against the Truth of the real Prefence of the Lords Body in the Sacrament. And therefore, you Father, if you have any thing to answer, I do admonish that you answer in short and few words.

Latimer. I pray you good Master Prolocutor, do not exact that of me, which is not in me, I have not these twenty years much used the Latin Tongue.

West. Take your ease, Father.

Lat. I thank you Sir, I am well; Let me here protest my Faith, for I am not able to dispute; and afterwards do your pleasure with me.

The Protestation of M. Hugh Latimer, given up in writ- ing to Doctor Weston.

The Conclusions wherunto I must answer, are these: The three Conclusions?

1. The first is, That in the Sacrament of the Altar by the virtue of Gods Word pronounced by the Priest, there is really present the Natural Body of Christ, conceived of the Virgin Mary, under the kinds of the appearance of Bread and Wine, in like manner his Blood.
2. The second is, That after Consecration there remain- eth no Substance of Bread and Wine, nor any other Substance, but the Substance of God and Man.
3. The third is, That in the Mass there is the lively Sacrifice of the Church, which is Irreproachable, as well for the sins of the quick, as of the dead.

CONCERNING the first Conclusion, me thinketh it is set forth with certain new found terms that be obscure, and do not found according to the speech of the Scripture. Howbeit; howsoever I understand it, this I do answer plainly, though not without peril; I answer I say, that to the right Celebration of the Lords Supper there is no other Prefence of Christ required, than a Spiritual Pre- fence: and this Prefence is sufficient for a Christian man, as a Prefence by which we abide in Christ, and Christ abideth in us, to the obtaining of eternal Life, if we persevere. And this same Prefence may be called most fitly a Real Prefence, that is, a Prefence not feigned, but a true and a Faithful Prefence. Which thing I should re- hearce, lest some Sycophant, or Scornor should suppose me, with the Anabaptists, to make nothing else of the Sacrament, but a naked and a bare sign. As for that which is feigned of many concerning their Corporal Prefence, I for my part take it but for a Papistical Invention; there- fore think it utterly to be rejected.

Concerning the second Conclusion, I dare be bold to say; that it hath no stay or ground in Gods Word, but is a thing invented and found out by man; and there- fore to be taken as fond and false: and I had almost said, as the Mother and Nurse of the other Errors. It were good for my Lords and Masters of the Transubstantiation, to take heed lest they conspire with the Nesarians, for I do not see how they can avoid it.

The third Conclusion (as I do understand it) seemeth subtilly to sow Sedition against the offering which Christ himself offered for us in his own proper Person, according to that pithy place of Paul, Heb. 1. Where he saith, That Christs own self hath made purgation of our Sins. And afterward, That he might (saith he) be a merciful and Faithful Bishop, concerning those things which are to be done with God, for the taking away of our Sins. So that the expiation or taking away of our Sins may be thought rather to depend on this, that Christ was an offering Bishop, than that he was offered, were it not that he was offered of himself: and therefore it is need- less that he should be offered of any other. I will speak nothing of the wonderful Presumption of man, to dare to attempt this thing without a manifest vocation, special- ly in that it tendeth to the overthrowing and making fruit- less (if not wholly, yet partly) of the Cross of Christ, for truly it is no bafe or mean thing to offer Christ. And there- fore worthily a man may say to my Lords and Masters the offerers, By what Authority do ye this? and who

The answer of M. Latimer given up in writ- ing concern- ing the ques- tion as af- forsaide.

The Pre- sence of Christ in the Sacrament, how it is a real Pre- sence.

Answer to the second Conclusion.

Answer to the third Conclusion.

The taking away of Sins dependeth rather in the Person of the offerer, than in the thing offer- ed, but that he that was the offerer was offered himself.

who gave you this Authority? Where? when? A man cannot (saith the Baptist) take any thing except it be given him from above: Much less then may any man presume to usurp any honour, before he be thereto called. Again, If any man sin (saith S. John) we have (saith he) not a Master or Officer at home, which can sacrifice for us at Mass; but we have (saith he) an Advocate Jesus Christ, which once offered himself long ago; of which Offering the efficacy and effect is perdurable for ever, so that it is needles to have such Officers.

What meaneth Paul, when he saith, They that serve at the Altar, are partakers of the Altar? and so addeth; So the Lord hath ordained, that they that Preach the Gospel, shall live of the Gospel. Whereas he should have said, The Lord hath ordained, that they that Sacrifice at Mass, should live of their Sacrificing; that there might be a living assigned to our Sacrificers now, as was before Christs committing to the Jewish Priests. For now they have nothing to alledge for their living, as they that be Preachers have. So that it appeareth, that the Sacrificing Priesthood is changed by Gods Ordinance into a Preaching Priesthood, and the Sacrificing Priesthood should cease utterly, saving in as much as all Christian men are Sacrificing Priests.

1 John 2.
The Sacrificing Priesthood changed into Preaching Priesthood. The final cause why the Lords Supper was chiefly ordained.

The Supper of the Lord was instituted to provoke us to Thanksgiving for the Offering which the Lord himself did offer for us, much rather than that our Officers should do there as they do. Feed (saith Peter) as much as ye may the Flock of Christ: Nay rather let us Sacrifice as much as we may for the Flock of Christ. If so be the matter be as now men make it, I can never wonder enough, that Peter would or could forget this Office of Sacrificing, which at this day is in such a price and Estimation, that to feed is almost nothing with many. If thou cease from feeding the Flock, how shalt thou be taken? Truly Catholick enough. But if thou cease from Sacrificing and Massing, how wilt thou be taken? at the least, I warrant thee, thou shalt be called an Heretic. And whence, I pray you, come these Papistical Judgments? Except perchance they think a man feedeth the Flock in Sacrificing for them: and then what needeth there any learned Pastors? For no man is so foolish, but soon may he learn to Sacrifice and Mass it.

Sacrificing taken away preaching.

Preposterous Judgment of Papists.

Thus loe, I have taken the more pains to write, because I refused to dispute, in consideration of my debility thereto: that all men may know, how that I have so done not without great pains, having not any man to help me, as I have never before been debarr'd to have. O Sir, you may chance to live till you come to this age and weaknes that I am of. I have spoken in my time before two Kings more than once, two or three hours together, without interruption: But now, that I may speak the truth (by your leave) I could not be suffered to declare my mind before you, no, not by the space of a quarter of an hour, without snatches, reviling, checks, rebukes, taunts, such as I have not felt the like, in such an audience, all my Life long. Surely it cannot be but an heinous offence that I have given. But what was it? Forsooth I had spoken of the four Marrowbones of the Mass. The which kind of speaking I never read to be a sin against the Holy Ghost.

Mr. Latimer found more audience with Kings and Princes, than with judicial Doctors.

I could not be allowed to shew what I meant by my Metaphor: But sir, now by your favour I will tell you Master ship what I mean.

The first is the Popish consecration, which hath been called a Gods Body-making.

The second is Transubstantiation.

The third is Massal Oblation.

The fourth Adoration.

The four Marrowbones of the Mass by Mr. Latimer expounded. Consecration, Transubstantiation, Oblation, Adoration.

These chief and principal portions, parts and points belonging or incident to the Mass, and most esteemed and had in price in the same, I call the Marrowbones of the Mass; which indeed you, by force, might, and violence intrude in fount of words in some of the Scripture, with racking and cramping, injuring and wronging the same: but else indeed, plain out of the Scripture, as I am thoroughly perswaded, although in Disputation I now could nothing do to persuade the same to others, being both unapt to study, and also to make a shew of my former study in such readines as should be requisite to the same. I have heard much talk of Mr. Doctor Wetsom to and fro in my time: but I never knew your Person to my knowledge, till I came before you, as the Queens Majesties Comissioner. I pray God send you so right Judgment, as I perceive you have a great wit, great learning, with many other qualities. God give you Grace ever well to use them, and ever to have in remembrance, that he that dwelleth on high, looketh on the low things on the Earth; and that there is no counsel against the Lord; and also that this World hath been, and yet is a tottering World. And yet again, that though we must obey the Princes, yet that hath this limitation, namely, in the Lord. For who so doth obey them against the Lord, they be most pernicious to them, and the greatest adversaries that they have: For they so procure Gods vengeance upon them, if God be only the ruler of things.

There be some so corrupt in mind, the truth being taken from them, that they think gain to be godliness; Great learned men, and yet men of no learning, but of railing, and raging about questions and strife of words. I call them men of no learning, because they know not Christ, how much else sever they know. And on this sort we are wont to call great learned Clerks, being ignorant of Christ, unlearned men, for it is nothing but plain ignorance, to know any thing without Christ: Whereas who so knoweth Christ, the same hath knowledge enough, although in other knowledge he be to feck. The Apostle S. Paul confesteth of himself to the Corinthians, that he did know nothing but Jesus Christ Crucified. Many men babble many things of Christ which yet know not Christ; but pretending Christ do craftily colour and darken his glory. Depart from such men, saith the Apostle S. Paul to Timothy.

And so 1554.

Pride of D. Wetsom privily touched.

Obedience to Princes hath its limitation.

Knowledge without Christ is most ignorance.

Many there be which under pretence of Christ darken the glory of Christ.

It is not out of the way to remember what S. Augustine saith. The place where, I now will remember not, except it be against the Epistles of Petilian; Whosoever (saith he) teaches any thing necessarily to be believed, which is not contained in the Old and New Testament, the same is accursed. Oh! beware of this curse if you be wile. I am much deceived if Basilius have not such like words; Whosoever (saith he) is besides the Holy Scripture, if the same be taught as necessarily to be believed, that is Sin. Oh therefore take heed of this Sin!

Augustine

Basilius

There be some that speak many false things more probable, and more like to the truth, than the truth it self. Therefore Paul giveth a watchword; Let no man (saith he) deceive you with probability and persuasions of words. But what mean you, saith one, by this talk so far from the matter? Well, I hope, good Masters, you will suffer an Old Man a little to play the Child, and to speak one thing twice. O Lord God! you have changed the most holy Communion into a private action; and you deny to the Laity the Lords Cup, contrary to Christs commandment: and you do blemish the Annunciation of the Lords death till he come: For you have changed the Common Prayer, called the Divine Service, with the Administration of the Sacraments, from the vulgar and known Language, into a strange Tongue, contrary to the will of the Lord revealed in his Word. God open the door of your heart, to see the things you should see herein. I would as fain obey my Sovereign as any in this Realm: but in these things I can never do it with an upright conscience. God be merciful unto us. Amen.

The subtleties of the Papists opened in rebuking the Lords Supper.

But God few it good, that Wetsom never came to this Age.

Wets. Then refuse you to dispute? Will you here then subscribe?

Lat. No, good Master, I pray be good to an Old Man. You may, if it please God, be once Old, as I am: you may come to this Age, and to this Debility.

Wets. Ye said upon Saturday last, that ye could not find the Mass, nor the Marrowbones thereof in your Book: but we will find a Mass in that Book.

Lat. No, good M. Doctor, ye cannot.

Wets. What find you then there?

Lat. Forsooth a Communion I find there.

Wets. Which Communion, the first or the last?

Lat. I find no great diversity in them; they are one Supper of the Lord: but I like the last very well.

Wets. The first was naught belike.

Lat. I do not well remember wherein they differ.

Wets. Then Cake Bread and Loaf Bread are all one with you. Ye call it the Supper of the Lord, but you are deceived in that: for they had done the Supper before, and therefore the Scripture saith, Postquam canitum est; i. After they had

By this first and second Communion, he meant the two Books of public order set forth in K. Edwards days, the one in the beginning, the other in the latter end of his Reign. D. Wetsom cavilleth against the name of the Lords Supper.

Anno 1554. had supped. For ye know that S. Paul findeth fault with the Corinthians, for that some of them were drunken at this Supper; and ye know no man can be drunken at your Communion.

Cena Judaica. Lat. The first was called Cena Judaica; i. The Jewish Supper, when they did eat the Paschal Lamb together: the other was called Cena Dominica; i. The Lords Supper. Welf. That is false; for Chrysostom denieth that. And S. Amvrosius in cap. 10. prior ad Corinthios, saith, that Mysterium Eucharistiae inter canandum datum est Cena Dominica; i. The Mystery of the Sacrament, given as they were at Supper, is not the Supper of the Lord.

Greg. Nazianzenus saith the same, Rursus Pasche sacrum Discipulis in cenaculo ac post cenam, dieque unica ante passionem celebrat. Nos vero ea in orationis domibus, & ante cenam & post resurrectionem peragimus: that is, Again he kept the Holy Feast of Pasche with his Disciples in the dining Chamber after the Supper, and one day before his Passion. But we keep it both in the Churches and Houses of Prayer, both before the Supper, and also after the Resurrection.

And that first Supper was called Agape: can you tell what that is?

Lat. I understand no Greek. Yet I think it meaneth Charity.

Welf. Will you have all things done that Christ did then? Why, then must the Priest be hanged on the morrow. And where find you, I pray you, that a woman should receive the Sacrament.

Lat. Will you give me leave to turn my Book: I find it in the 11. Chapter to the Corinthians. I trow these be his words, Probat autem seipsum homo, &c.

I pray you good Master, what Gender is homo?

Welf. Marry the Common Gender.

Cole. It is in the Greek, ἡ ἀνδρῶν.

Harps. It is ἀνδρῶν, that is, vir.

Lat. It is in my Book of Erasmus's Translation, Probat seipsum homo.

Feck. It is Probat seipsum indeed, and therefore it importeth the Masculine Gender.

Lat. What then? I trow when the woman touched Christ, he said, Quis tetigit me? Scio quod aliquis me tetigit; i. Who touched me? I know that some man touched me.

Welf. I will be at Host with you anon. When Christ was at his Supper, none were with him but his Apostles only.

Ergo, He meant no woman, if you will have his Institution kept.

Lat. In the twelve Apostles was represented the whole Church, in which you will grant both men and women to be.

Welf. So through the whole Heretical translated Bible ye never make mention of Priest, till ye come to the putting of Christ to death. Where find you then that a Priest or Minister (a Minister I may call him well enough) should do it of necessity?

Lat. A Minister is a more fit name for that Office; for the Name of a Priest importeth a Sacrifice.

Welf. Well, remember that ye cannot find that a woman may receive by Scripture. Mr. Opponent fall to it.

Smith. Because I perceive that this charge is laid upon my neck to dispute with you: to the end that the same may go forward after a right manner and order, I will propose three Questions, so as they are put forth unto me.

And first I ask this question of you, although the same indeed ought not to be called in question: but such is the condition of the Church, that it is always vexed of the wicked fort. I ask, I say, whether Christ's Body be really in the Sacrament?

Lat. I trust I have obtained of Mr. Prolocutor, that no man shall exact that thing of me which is not in me. And I am sorry that this worshipful Audience should be deceived of their expectation for my sake. I have given up my mind in writing to Mr. Prolocutor.

Smith. Whatsoever ye have given up, it shall be registered among the A.G.s.

Lat. Disputation requireth a good memory; Ass abolita est mihi memoria: My memory is gone clean, and marvelously weakened, and never the better, I wis, for the Prison.

Welf. How long have ye been in Prison?

Lat. This three quarters of this year.

Welf. And I was in Prison six years.

Lat. The more pity, Sir.

Welf. How long have you been of this Opinion?

Lat. It is not long, Sir, that I have been of this Opinion.

Welf. The time hath been when you said Mass full devoutly.

Lat. Yea, I cry God mercy heartily for it.

Welf. Where learned you this new fangleness?

Lat. I have long fought for the Truth in this matter of the Sacrament; and have not been of this mind past seven years: And my Lord of Canterbury's Book hath especially confirmed my judgment herein. If I could remember all therein contained, I would not fear to answer any man in this matter.

Tresh. There are in that Book six hundred Errors.

Welf. You were once a Lutheran.

Lat. No, I was a Papist: For I never could perceive how Luther could defend his Opinion without Transubstantiation. The Tygerines once did write a Book against Luther, and I oft desired God, that he might live so long to make them answer.

Welf. Luther in his Book De privata Missa, said, That the Devil reasoned with him, and persuaded him that the Mass was not good, fol. 14. Conigit me, &c. Whereof it may appear, that Luther said Mass, and the Devil dissuaded him from it.

Lat. I do not take in hand here to defend Luther's sayings or doings. If he were here, he would defend himself well enough. I trow. I told you before that I am not meet for Disputations. I pray you read mine Answer, wherein I have declared my Faith.

Welf. Do you believe this, as you have written?

Lat. Yea, Sir.

Welf. Then have you no Faith.

Lat. Then would I be sorry, Sir.

Tresh. It is written, John 6. Except ye shall eat the Flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his Blood, ye shall have no life in you. Which when the Capernaimites, and many of Christ's Disciples heard, they said, This is a hard saying, &c. Now that the Truth may the better appear, here I ask of you, Whether Christ speaking these words, did mean of his Flesh to be eaten with the mouth, or of the spiritual eating of the same?

Lat. I answer (as Augustine understandeth) that Christ meant of the spiritual eating of his Flesh.

Tresh. Of what Flesh meant Christ, his true Flesh, or not?

Lat. Of his true Flesh, spiritually to be eaten in the Supper by Faith, and not corporally.

Tresh. Of what Flesh mean the Capernaimites?

Lat. Of his true Flesh also; but to be eaten with the mouth.

Tresh. They (as ye confess) did mean his true Flesh to be eaten with the mouth. And Christ also (as I shall prove) did speak of the receiving of his Flesh with the mouth.

Ergo, They both did understand it of the eating of one thing, which is done by the mouth of the Body.

Lat. I say, Christ understood it not of the bodily mouth, but of the mouth of the Spirit, Mind, and Heart.

Tresh. I prove the contrary, that Christ understood it of the eating with the bodily mouth. For wherever custom is a right good Mistress and Interpreter of things, & where as the acts put in practice by Christ, do certainly declare those things which he first spake: Christ's deeds in his Supper, where he gave his Body to be taken with the mouth, together with the custom which hath been ever since that time of that eating which is done with the mouth, doth evidently infer that Christ did understand his words, here cited of me out of the sixth of John, of the eating with the mouth.

Lat. He gave not his Body to be received with the mouth, but he gave the Sacrament of his Body to be received with the mouth: He gave the Sacrament to the mouth, his Body to the mind.

Tresh. But my reason doth conclude, That Christ spake concerning his Flesh to be received with the corporal mouth: For otherwise, (which God forbid) he had been a deceiver, and had been offensive to the Capernaimites and his Disciples, if he had not meant in this point as they thought he meant: for if he had thought as you do feign, it had been an easie matter for him to have said:

* You

Argument.

The Apostles represented the whole Church.
Welf. Concerned the Name of Minister.

The name of Minister more fit than the name of Priest.

Mr. Latimer modestly humbly humble to dispute.

Then they lift and close their hands at him.
Mr. Latimer confirmed by Dr. Canmer Book.

The zeal of Mr. Latimer sometimes in Popery against the Tygerines.

In that Book the Devil saith not divide him so much from saying Mass, as he laboureth to bring him to desperation for Mass: such temptations many times happen to good men.

Here Tresh. began to dispute in Latin.

Dr. Tresh. Argument without Form or Mood, concluding affirmatively in the second Figure.

Dr. Tresh. seemeth to say: Room.

The Sacrament given to the Mouth, the Body to the Faith.

* And what doth Christ esse mean by these words where he saith, My words be spirit and life, the flesh profiteth nothing?

* You shall not eat my Flesh with your mouth, but the Sacrament of my Flesh; that is to say, ye shall receive with your mouth not the thing it self, but the Figure of the thing, and thus he might have satisfied them: but so he said not, but continued in the truth of his words, as he was wont. Therefore Christ meant the self same thing that the Capernaues did, I mean concerning the thing it self to be received with the mouth, videlicet, that his true Flesh is truly to be eaten with the mouth. Moreover, forasmuch as you do expound for (corpus Christi) the Body of Christ (sacramentum corporis Christi) the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, and hereby do suppose that we obtain but a Spiritual Union, or Union of the Mind between us and Christ, plain it is, that you are deceived in this thing, and do err from the mind of the Fathers: for they affirm by plain and expresse words, that we are corporally and carnally joyed together. And these be the words of Hilary, Si verè igitur carnem corporis nostri Christum asumpsit, & verè homo ille qui ex Maria natus fuit; nos quoque verè sub mysterio, carnem corporis sui sumimus, & per hoc unum erimus, quia pater in eo est, & ille in nobis: Quando volentis unitas asseritur, cum naturalis per sacramentum proprietates perfectè sacramentum sit unitatis? That is, Therefore if Christ did truly take the Flesh of our Body upon him, and the same Man be Christ indeed which was born of Mary; then we also do receive under a mystery the Flesh of his Body indeed, and thereby shall become one, because the Father is in him, and he in us. How is the Unity of Will affirmed, when a Natural Propriety by the Sacrament is perfect Sacrament of Unity?

Mr. Latimer charged to preach the contrary Doctrine before the King at Greenwich.

Thus far hath Hilary. Lo here you see how manifestly these words confound your Assertion. To be short, I myself have heard you preaching at Greenwich before King Henry the Eighth, where you did openly affirm, That no Christian man ought to doubt of the True and Real Presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, forasmuch as he had the Word of Scripture on his side, (videlicet) Hoc est corpus meum. This is my Body: whereby he might be confirmed. But now there is the same Truth; the Word of Scripture hath the self same thing which it then had. Therefore why do you deny at this present that, whereof it was not lawful once to doubt before when you taught it?

Lat. Will you give me leave to speak?
Tresh. Speak Laith, I pray you, for ye can do it, if ye list, promptly enough.

Lat. I cannot speak Latin so long and so largely. Mr. Prolocutor hath given me leave to speak English. And as for the words of Hilary, I think they make not so much for you. But he that shall answer the Doctors had not need to be in my case, but should have them in a readinesse, and know their purpose. Melancthon saith, If the Doctors had foreseen that they should have been so taken in this Controuersie, they would have written more plainly.

Smith. I will reduce the words of Hilary into the form of a Syllogism.

Argument.

Da. Such as is the Unity of our Flesh with Christs Flesh, such (yea greater) is the Unity of Christ with the Father.

ti. But the Unity of Christs Flesh with ours is true and substantial.

fi. Ergo, The Unity of Christ with the Father is true and substantial.

Lat. I understand you not.

Seaton. I know your learning well enough, and how subtil ye be: I will use a few words with you, and that out of Cyprian, De cana Domini. The Old Testament doth forbid the drinking of Blood; The New Testament doth command the drinking and tasting of Blood: but where doth it command the drinking of Blood?

Dr Seaton reasoneth against Mr. Latimer out of Cyprian.

Lat. In these words, Bibite ex hoc omnes; i. Drink ye all of this.

Seaton. Then we taste true Blood.

Lat. We do taste true Blood, but spiritually; and this is enough.

Seaton. Nay, the Old and New Testament in this do differ: for the one doth command, and the other doth forbid to drink Blood.

* By that reason the New and Old Testament should not differ, but should be contrary one from the other, which cannot be true in natural or moral Precepts

Lat. It is true as touching the matter, but not as touching the manner of the thing.

Seaton. Then there is no difference between the drinking of Blood in the New Testament, and that of the Old: Anno for they also drank spiritually.

Lat. And we drink spiritually also, but a more precious Blood.

West. Augustine upon the 45th Psalm, saith, Securè bibite sanguinem quem iudicatis: That is, Drink boldly the Blood which ye have poured out.

Ergo, It is Blood.

Lat. I never denied it, nor ever will I go from it, but that we drink the very Blood of Christ indeed, but spiritually: For the same S. Augustine saith, Crede, & manducasti. i. Believe, and thou hast eaten.

West. Nay, Credere, non est bibere nec edere; i. To believe, is not to drink or eat. You will not say, I pledge you, when I say, I believe in God.

Lat. Is not (manducare) to eat, in your learning put for (credere) to believe?

i. est. I remember my L. Chancellor demanded Mr. Hooper of these questions, Whether * (edere) to eat, were (credere) to believe, and (altare) an Altar, were Christ in all the Scripture &c. &c. And he answered, Yea.

Then said my L. Chancellor, Why then * Habemus altare de quo non licet edere; i. We have an Altar of which it is not lawful to eat as much to say, as Habemus Christum, in quo non licet edere; i. We have a Christ, in whom we may not believe.

Tresh. Believe, and thou hast eaten, is spoken of the spiritual eating.

Lat. It is true, I do allow your saying; I take it so also.

West. We are commanded to drink Blood in the New Law.

Ergo, It is very Blood.

Lat. We drink Blood, so as appertaineth to us to drink to our comfort, in Sacramental Wine. We drink Blood sacramentally: he gave us his Blood to drink spiritually, he went about to shew, that as certainly as we drink Wine, so certainly we drink his Blood spiritually.

West. Do not you seem to be a Papist, which do bring in new words, not found in Scripture? Where find you that (sacramentaliter) sacramentally, in Gods Book?

Lat. It is necessarily gathered upon Scripture.

West. The Old Testament doth forbid the tasting of Blood, but the New doth command it.

Lat. It is true, not as touching the thing, but as touching the manner thereof.

West. Hear ye People, this is the Argument:

That which was forbidden in the Old Testament, is commanded in the New.

To drink Blood was forbidden in the Old Testament, and commanded in the New.

¶ This Argument, because the Major thereof is not universal, is not formal, and may well be retorted against Weston thus.

Ce. No natural or moral thing, forbidden materially in the Old Testament, is commanded in the New.

la. To drink mans natural Blood is forbidden materially in the Old Testament.

rent. Ergo, To drink mans natural Blood materially is not commanded in the New.

Lat. It is commanded spiritually to be drunk, I grant it is Blood drunk in the New Testament, but we receive it spiritually.

Pie. It was not forbidden spiritually in the Old Law.

Lat. The Substance of Blood is drunk, but not in one manner.

Pie. It doth not require the same manner of drinking.

Lat. It is the same thing, not the same manner. I have no more to say.

West. Here Weston cited the place of Chrysostom, of Judas's Treason: O Judea dementia! Ille cum Judæis triginta denariis pacificabatur; ut Christum venderet, & Christus ei sanguinem, quem vendidit, offerebat; i. O the madness of Judas! He made bargain with the Jews for Thirty pence to sell Christ, and Christ offered him his Blood which he sold.

Lat. I grant he offered to Judas his Blood which he sold, but in a Sacrament.

West. Because ye can defend your Doctors no better, * done in same places is taken for credere: but that to all places it is so taken, it followeth not.

* This place of the Hebrews allude to the old Sacrifice of the Jews, who, in the Feast of Propitiation the tenth day, used to carry the flesh of the sacrifice out of the Tents to be burned on an Altar without, because none of them which served in the Tabernacle should eat thereof: only the blood was carried by the high Priest into the holy place.

Answer,

Argument

retorted against him.

self.

Anno 1554. ye shall see what worshipful men ye hang upon, and one that hath been of your mind, shall dispute with you. Mr. Cartwright, I pray you dispute.

Dr. Cartwright urged to dispute, Cartwright returned to his old error again.
Cart. Reverend Father, because it is given me in commandment to dispute with you, I will do it gladly. But first understand ere we go any further, that I was in the same Error that you are in: But I am sorry for it, and do confess my self to have erred, I acknowledge mine offence, and I will and desire God that you may also repent with me.

Argument. 1. per se legis durum & difficile.
Lat. Will you give me leave to tell what hath caused Mr. Doctor here to recant? It is per se legis, the pain of the Law, which hath brought you back, and converted you, and many more; the which letteth many to confess God. And this is a great Argument, there are few here can dissolve it.

Cart. That is not my cause, but I will make you this short Argument, by which I was converted from mine Errors.

Argument. 2. de traditione consequentia, ad de traditionem antecessoria.
If the true Body of Christ be not really in the Sacrament, all the whole Church hath erred from the Apostles time.

But Christ would not suffer his Church to err:

Ergo, It is the true Body of Christ.

Lat. The Popish Church hath erred, and doth err. I think for the space of fix or seven hundred years, there was no mention made of any eating but spiritually: For, before these five hundred years, the Church did ever confess a spiritual Transubstantiation. But the Romish Church began the Error of Transubstantiation. My Lord of Canterbury's Book handleth that very well, and by him I could answer you, if I had him.

Cart. Linus and all the rest do confess the Body of Christ to be in the Sacrament: And S. Augustine also upon the 98. Psalm, upon this place, Adorate scabellum pedum, &c. granted that it is to be worshipped.

Lat. We do worship Christ in the Heavens, and we do worship him in the Sacrament: But the Massing Worship is not to be used.

Smith. Do you think that Cyril was of the Ancient Church?

Lat. I do think so.

Smith. He saith, That Christ dwelleth in us corporally: These be Cyrils words of the Mystical Benediction.

Lat. That (corporally) hath another understanding than you do grossly take it.

Cyril saith, that Christ dwelleth Corporally in us, but he saith not that Christ dwelleth Corporally in the Bread. Which dwelling of Christ in us, is as our dwelling is also in Christ, not local or corporal, but spiritual and heavenly. Corporally therefore is to be taken here in the same sense as S. Paul saith the fulness of Divinity to dwell in Christ corporally, that is, not lightly nor accidentally, but perfectly and substantially, with all his virtue and power, &c. And so dwelleth Christ corporally in us also.

Smith. Here Smith repeateth these words of Cyril, Per communionem corporis Christi, habitat in nobis Christus corporaliter; i. By the communicating of the Body of Christ, Christ dwelleth in us corporally.

Lat. The Solution of this is in my Lord of Canterbury's Book.

Smith. Cyril was no Papist, and yet these be his words, Christ dwelleth in us corporally: but you say he dwelleth in us spiritually.

Lat. I say both, that he dwelleth in us both corporally and spiritually, according to his meaning: Spiritually by Faith, and corporally by taking our Flesh upon him. For I remember I have read this in my Lord of Canterbury's Book.

West. Because your learning is let out to firm, and shut up in my Lord of Canterbury's Book, I will recite unto you a place of S. Ambrose, De apparitione ad Missam, where he saith, Videmus principem sacerdotem ad nos venientem, & offerentem sanguinem, &c. that is, We see the chief Priest coming unto us, and offering Blood, &c.

Angla. Paf. 18. Chrysoft. de incomprehensibili Dei natura.
Likewise both Augustine in the 38. Psalm, and Chrysoftom concerning the incomprehensible Nature of God, Tom. 3. say, Non solum homines, &c.

Lat. I am not ashamed to acknowledge mine ignorance, and these testimonies are more than I can bear away.

West. Then you must leave some behind you for lack of carriage.

Lat. But of Chrysoftom, he hath many figurative Speeches, and emphatical Locutions in many places; as in that which you have now recited, but he saith not, for the quick and the dead: he taketh the Celebration for the Sacrifice. West. You shall hear Chrysoftom again, upon the ninth Chapter of the Acti, Quid dicit? Hactenus manibus sacerdotum, &c. He doth not call it a Cup of Wine.

Lat. Ye have mine answer there with you in a Paper: and yet he calleth it not, Propitiatorium Sacrificium, i. a Propitiatory Sacrifice.

West. You shall hear it to be so: and I bring another place of Chrysoftom out of the same Treatise, Non temerè ab Apostolis est institutum, &c.

Lat. He is too precious a thing for us to offer; he offereth himself.

West. Here in another place of Chrysoftom to the People of Antioch, Hom. 69. and also to the Philippians he saith, There should be a Memory and Sacrifice for the Dead.

Lat. I do say, that the holy Communion beareth the name of a Sacrifice, because it is a Sacrifice memorative.

West. How say you to the Sacrifice of the Dead?

Lat. I say that it needeth not, and it beareth not.

West. Augustine in his Enchiridion the 110. Chapter saith, Non est negandum de functionis animos pietate suorum, &c. veniunt relevari, quum pro illis Sacrificium Mediatoris offeratur; i. We must not deny that the Souls of the Dead are relieved by the Devotion of their Friends which are living, when the Sacrifice of the Mediator is offered for them. Where he proveth the verity of Christs Body, and praying for the Dead. And it is said, that the same Augustine said Mass for his Mother.

Lat. But that Mass was not like yours, which thing doth manifestly appear in his Writings, which are against it in every place. And Augustine is a reasonable man, he requirith to be believed no further than he bringeth Scripture for his proof, and agreeth with Gods Word.

West. In the same place he proveth a Propitiatory Sacrifice, and that upon an Altar, and no Oyster-board.

Lat. It is the Lords Table, and no Oyster-board. It may be called an Altar, and so the Doctors call it in many places: But there is no Propitiatory Sacrifice, but only Christ. The Doctors might be deceived in some points, though not in all things. I believe them when they say well.

Cole. Is it not a shame for an old man to lie? You say, you are of the old Fathers Faith where they say well, and yet ye are not.

Lat. I am of their Faith when they say well, I refer my self to my Lord of Canterbury's Book wholly herein.

Smith. Then are not you of Chrysoftom's Faith, nor of S. Augustine's Faith.

Lat. I have said, when they say well, and bring Scripture for them, I am of their Faith; and further Augustine requirith not to be believed.

West. Origen, Hom. 13. upon Leviticus.

Lat. I have but one word to say, Panis sacramentalis, the Sacramental Bread is called a Propitiation, because it is a Sacrament of the Propitiation. What is your Vocation?

Weston. My Vocation is at this time to dispute; otherwise I am a Priest, and my Vocation is to offer.

Lat. Where have you that Authority given you to offer?

West. Hoc facite, Do this; for facite in that place is taken for offerre, that is, offer you.

Lat. Is facere nothing but Sacrificare to Sacrifice? Why, then no man must receive the Sacrament but Priests only: For there may none other offer but Priests.

Ergo, There may none receive but Priests.

West. Your Argument is to be denied.

Lat. Did Christ then offer himself at his Supper?

Pis. Yes, he offered himself for the whole World.

Lat. Then if this word Facite, Do ye, signifie Sacrificate, Sacrifice ye, it followeth, as I said, that none but Priests only ought to receive the Sacrament, to whom it is only lawful to Sacrifice: And where find you that I pray you?

West. Forty year ago whether could you have gone to have found your Doctrine?

Lat. The more cause we have to thank God, that hath now sent the light into the World.

West. The light? Nay light and lewd Preachers; for you could not tell what you might have. Ye altered and and changed so often your Communion and Altars, and all for this one end, to spoil and rob the Church.

Lat. These things pertain nothing to me, I must not answer other mens deeds, but only for mine own.

West. Well, Mr. Latimer, this is our intent, to will you well, and to exhort you to come to your self, and remember, that without Noahs Ark there is no health. Remember what they have been that were the beginners of your Doctrine, none but a few flying Apostates, running out of Germany for fear of the Fagot. Remember what they have been which have set forth the same in this Realm: A sort of fling-brains and light heads, which were never constant in any one thing, as it was to be seen in the turning of the Table, where like a sort of Apes they could not tell which way to turn their tails, looking one day West, and another day East, one that way, and another this way. They will be like (they say) to the Apostles, they will have no Churches. A Hovel is good enough for them. They come to the Communion with no reverence. They get them a Tankard, and one faith, I drink, and I am thankful; the more joy of thee, faith another. And in them was true that Hilary saith, Animus & mensuras de Deo fides facimus; that is, We make every Year and every Month a Faith. A Runnagate Scord take away the adoration or worshiping of Christ in the Sacrament, by whose procurement that Heretic was put into the last Communion-Book; so much prevailed that one Mans Authority at that time.

You never agreed with the Tygerines or Germans, or with the Church, or with your self. Your stubbornness cometh of a vain glory, which is to no purpose: For it will do you no good when a Fagot is in your Beard. And we fee all, by your own Confession, how little cause you have to be stubborn, for your learning is in Feoffers hold. The Queens Grace is merciful, if ye will turn.

Lat. You shall have no hope in me to turn. I pray for the Queen daily, even from the bottom of my heart, that she may turn from this Religion.

West. Here you all see the weakness of Heretic against the Truth: he denieth all Truth, and all the old Fathers.

Here all good Readers may see how this glorious Prolocutor triumpheth: but whether he hath the Victory or no, that I suppose they have yet neither heard nor seen. And give, that he had the Victory, yet what great marvel was it, disputing as he did, Non sine suo Teleso, that is, not without his tipping Cup standing at his Elbow all the time of his Disputation; not without a privy noting and smiling of them that beheld the matter, but especially at that time, when Dr. Ridley disputing with one of the Opponents, the said Prolocutor took the Cup, and holding it in his hand, said to the Opponent, Urge hoc, urge hoc, Nam hoc facis pro nobis. In which words, as he moved no little matter of laughter to the beholders thereof, so I thought here also not to leave the same unmentioned, somewhat also to delight the Reader withal, after his tedious weariness in reading the story thereof.

To the Reader.

And thus hast thou (loving Reader) the whole Action and Stage of this Doctorly Disputation shewed forth unto thee against these three worthy Confessors and Martyrs of the Lord, wherein thou maist behold the disorderd usage of the University-men, the unmannerly manner of the School, the rude tumult of the Multitude, the fierceness and interruption of the Doctors, the full pith and ground of all their Arguments, the Censures of the Judges, the railing Language of the Oblocutor, with his blast of Triumph in the latter end, being both the Actor, the Moderator, and also Judge himself. And what marvel then if the courage of this victorious Conqueror, having the Law in his own hands, to do and say what him listeth, would say for himself, Vicit veritas, although he said never a true word, nor made ever a true Conclusion almost in all that Disputation.

April 19,

If followed furthermore after Disputation of these three days being ended, that Mr. Harpfield the next day after, which was the Nineteenth of April, should dispute for his Form, to be made Doctor. To the which Disputation the Archbishop of Canterbury was brought forth, and permitted among the rest to utter an Argument or two in defence of his cause. As in sequele hereof may appear.

Disputation of Mr. Harpfield Bachelor of Divinity, answering for his Form to be made Doctor.

Harpfield.

I Am not ignorant what a weighty matter it is to intrate of the whole order and trade of the Scriptures: And most hard it is too, in the great contention of Religion, to shew the ready way whereby the Scriptures may be best understood. For the often reading of them doth not bring the true understanding of them. What other thing is there then? Verily this is the ready way, not to follow our own Heads and Senses, but to give over our Judgment unto the holy Catholick Church, who hath had of old years the Truth, and always delivered the same to their Posterity: But if the often reading of Scriptures, and never so painful comparing of places should bring the true understanding, then divers Heretics might prevail even against whole General Councils. The Jews did greatly brag of the knowledge of the Law, and of the Saviour that they waited for. But what availed it them? Notwithstanding, I know right well, that divers places of the Scripture do much warn us of the often reading of the same, and what fruit doth thereby follow; as Scrutamus, &c. Search the Scriptures; for they do bear witness of me, &c. Lex Domini, &c. The Law of the Lord is pure, able to turn Soules. And that saying of S. Paul, Omnis Scriptura, &c. All Scripture inspired from above, doth make that a man may be instructed to all good Works. Howbeit doth the Law of the Jews convert their Soules? Are they by reading instructed to every good Work? The Letter of the Old Testament is the same that we have.

The Heretics also have ever had the same Scriptures which we have that be Catholicks. But they are served as Tantalus that the Poets speak of, who, in the plenty of things to eat and drink, is said to be oppressed with hunger and thirst. The swifter that men do seek the Scriptures without the Catholick Church, the deeper they fall, and find Hell for their labour. S. Cyprion never swerving from the Catholick Church, saith, He that doth not acknowledge the Church to be his Mother, shall not have God to his Father. Therefore it is true Divinity, to be wife with the Church, where Christ saith, Nisi manducaveritis, &c. Unless ye eat my Flesh, and drink my Blood, ye have no life in you.

If he had meant of only eating Bread and drinking Wine, nothing had been more pleasant to the Caper-naites, neither would they have forsaken him. The Flesh profiteth nothing to them that do so take it. For the Caper-naites did imagine Christ to be given in such sort as he lived. But Christ spake high things; not that they should have him as Flesh in the Market, but to consider his Presence with the Spirit (a) under the forms whereby it is given. As there is an alteration of Bodies by courses and times of Ages, so there is no less (b) variety in eating of Bodies.

These things which I have recited briefly, Mr. Harpfield did with many more words set out: and hereupon Dr. Weston disputed against him.

West. Christs Real Body is not in the Sacrament.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Harpf. I deny the Antecedent.

West. John 16. Dico veritatem vobis, &c. I speak the truth unto you: It behooveth me that I go away from you. For unless I do depart, that Comforter cannot come, &c.

Upon this I will make this Argument.

Christ is gone away, as he did send the Holy Ghost.

But the Holy Ghost did verily come into the World:

Ergo, Christ is verily gone.

Harpf. He is verily gone, and yet remaineth here.

West. S. Augustine saith, that these words, Ego ero, &c. I will be with you even to the end of the World, are accomplished, secundum Manifestationem, according to his Majesty: but secundum praesentiam carnis non est hic; i. by the Presence of his Flesh he is not here. The Church hath him not in Flesh, but by Belief.

April 19.
The judgment of Mr. Harpfield for the best way to understand the Scriptures, and not follow our own Heads and Senses, but to give over our Judgment unto the holy Catholick Church, who hath had of old years the Truth, and always delivered the same to their Posterity: But if the often reading of Scriptures, and never so painful comparing of places should bring the true understanding, then divers Heretics might prevail even against whole General Councils. The Jews did greatly brag of the knowledge of the Law, and of the Saviour that they waited for. But what availed it them? Notwithstanding, I know right well, that divers places of the Scripture do much warn us of the often reading of the same, and what fruit doth thereby follow; as Scrutamus, &c. Search the Scriptures; for they do bear witness of me, &c. Lex Domini, &c. The Law of the Lord is pure, able to turn Soules. And that saying of S. Paul, Omnis Scriptura, &c. All Scripture inspired from above, doth make that a man may be instructed to all good Works. Howbeit doth the Law of the Jews convert their Soules? Are they by reading instructed to every good Work? The Letter of the Old Testament is the same that we have.

No, but those Jews, picking so much to the old bottom and face of their Church, and not seeking for knowledge, by ignorance of the true state of the Scriptures were deceived, and so be you.

(a) Under the Forms, that is, under the Properties of Bread and Wine, and so all this is true.
(b) In the material eating of mans body there is no variety: for to eat mans flesh either under Accidents, or not under Accidents, both is against the Scripture and against Nature.

Arguments.

This answer doth not falsify the Argument: for the Conclusion speaketh of a bodily absence, not of the Answer speaking of a spiritual remaining.

Harpf.

1554.

(f) If the natural Presence is here, then is it false that S. Augustine saith, Secundum praesentiam carnis non est hic.
(d) And how can we then give honour to him, to whom we can owe no charity, nor give any thing else unto? What manner foever ye give manner of his Presence.

to the Body, if the substantial Body be here indeed, it cannot be avoided, but either it must needs be false that S. Augustine saith, Non est hic, et sic, or else Christ must have two Bodies, in two places together, present here after one manner, and in Heaven after another manner.

Note what Harpfield here holdeth, that the Body of Christ, is not present in the Sacrament, but only to them that receive him worthily.

If the Presence of his Flesh be taken away as Cyril saith, how then can the Presence of his Flesh be in the Sacrament? V. I will then prove, that he is not in the Sacrament. Me autem non semper habebitis, sed qui est in Heaven, is not in the Sacrament.

Harpf. We must diligently weigh that there are two Natures in Christ: the Divine Nature, and Humane Nature. The Divine Nature is of such fort; that it cannot choise but be in all places. The Humane Nature is not such, that of force it must be in all places, although it be in divers after a divers manner. So where the Doctors do intreat of his Presence by Majesty, they do commend the Majesty of the Divine Nature, not to hinder us of the (c) Natural Presence here in the Sacrament.

Wesf. He saith further, Me autem non semper habebitis, sed qui est in Heaven, is not to be understood in the flesh.

Harpf. The Presence of the Flesh is to be considered, that he is not here as he was wont to live in conversation with them; to be seen, talked withal, or in such fort as a man may give him (d) any thing: after that fort he is not present.

Wesf. But what say you to this of Augustine, Non est hic, et sic?

Harpf. I do answer out of S. Augustine upon John, Tractat. 25. upon these words, Non videmus me, vado ad Patrem, &c. I go to the Father, ye shall not see me; that is, Such as I am now. Therefore I do deny the manner of his Presence.

Wesf. I will overthrow S. Augustine with S. Augustine, who saith this also, Quomodo quis possit tenere Christum? fidem mitte, & tenuisti. i. How may a man hold Christ? send thy Faith, and thou holdest him.

So he sheweth, that by sending our Faith, we do hold Christ.

Harpf. Indeed no man holdeth Christ unless he believe in him; but it is another thing to have Christ merciful and favourable unto us, and to have him present in the Sacrament.

There S. Augustine speaketh of holding him by Faith, as he is favourable unto us.

Wesf. Nay, he speaketh there how the Fathers had him in the flesh, and teacheth that we have him not so in the flesh, as they had him long time, saying, Tour Fathers did hold Christ present in the flesh: Do you hold him in your heart? What words can be more plain! Further he saith, He is gone and is not here: he hath left us, and yet hath not forsaken us. Hic est; Majestate, abiit carne; i. He is here in Majesty, and gone touching the flesh.

Harpf. I do understand Augustine thus, that Christ is here in his Flesh to them that receive him worthily: to such as do worthily receive him, to them he is not present in the flesh. I judge S. Augustine meaneth so. We have him, and have him not: we have him in receiving him worthily, otherwise not.

Wesf. Nay, Tenere carnem est tenere corticem literae. I will prosecute another Argument. Cyril doth say, By the Majesty of his Divinity he is ever here, but the Presence of his flesh hath been taken away.

Harpf. The sense of Cyril is thus to be understood; The most true Flesh of Christ is at the right hand of the Father. Thus the Fathers taught, and so they believed. Thus said Cyril: Thus said Augustine; and because this is the Foundation of our Faith, they did oftentimes teach it. Therefore when they prove this, (the Body to be in Heaven) they do not make against the Presence in the Sacrament.

So unless ye can plainly shew, that the Fathers do directly say he is not in the Sacrament, you make nothing against me: for I have shewed why the Fathers so spoke. They did teach the great difference between the Divine Nature, and the Humane Nature, as I have before said.

Wesf. I will then prove, that he is not in the Sacrament. Vigiliis against the Heretic Eutiches, upon these words, Me autem non semper habebitis, sed qui est in Heaven, is not in the Sacrament.

Harpf. I will shew you the reason of these words. The Heretic Eutiches did believe that the Divine Nature of Christ was fused on the Cross, and believed that Christ had no Natural Body. To this Vigilius said, That the Humane Nature was taken up and ascended, which could not so have done, unless he had a Body. This he said not, to take away the Presence in the Sacrament.

For what had he to refer this Sentence to the Sacrament? He never did so much as dream of the Sacrament.

Wesf. Cyril saith, Although he be absent from us in Cyril's Body, yet are we governed by his Spirit.

Harpf. By these words he gave us a cheerfulness to aspire upwards, seeking there hence our help. For as touching his conversation, he is not so in the Sacrament as one meet to be lived withal. But let him not teach us that he is not there to feed us; for after that fort he is there.

Wesf. You have satisfied me with your Answers; in doing the same learnedly and catolickly. But now to another Argument.

* Christ is now so absent from the Earth by his Body, as he was absent from Heaven when he lived here.

But when he did live bodily on Earth; the same Natural Body was out of Heaven.

Ergo, Now whilst this Natural Body is in Heaven; it is not in the Earth.

Harpf. I deny the Major.

Wesf. Fulgentius ad Thrasimundum Regem, libro secundo, saith, Secundum humanam substantiam absens erat caelo, cum descendit de caelo. These are Fulgentius's words touching his Humane Substance. He was absent from Heaven, when he descended from Heaven; and touching the same Substance, now he is in Heaven he is not on the Earth: but concerning the Divine Nature, he never forsook, neither Heaven nor Earth.

After these words, not waiting Harpfield's Answer, he offered Mr. Cranmer to dispute; who began in this wise.

Cranmer. I have heard you right learnedly and eloquently intreat of the Dignity of the Scriptures, which I do both commend, and have marvelled thereat within my self. But whereas you refer the true sense and judgment of the Scriptures to the Catholic Church, as Judge thereof, you are much deceived; specially for that under the Name of the Church you appoint such Judges as have corruptly judged, and contrary to the sense of the Scriptures.

I wonder likewise why you attribute so little to the diligent reading of the Scriptures, and conferring of places; seeing the Scriptures do so much commend the same, as well in divers other places, as also in those which you your self have already alleged. And as touching your Opinion of these Questions, it seemeth to me neither to have any ground of the Word of God, nor of the Primitive Church. And to say the truth, the Schoolmen have spoken diversly of them, and do not agree thereof among themselves. Wherefore, minding here briefly to receive my judgment also, I must desire you first to answer to me a few Questions which I shall demand of you. Which being done, we shall the better proceed in our Disputation. Moreover, I must desire you to bear also with my rudeness in the Latin Tongue, which through long disuse is not now so prompt and ready with me as it hath been: And now all other things set apart, I mind chiefly to have regard to the Truth. My first question is this, How Christ's Body is in the Sacrament, according to your mind or determination?

Then answered a Doctor, he is there as touching his Substance, but not after the manner of his Substance.

Harpf. He is there in such fort and manner as he may be eaten.

Cran. My next Question is, Whether he hath his quantity and qualities, form, figure, and such like properties.

Harpf. Are these your questions, said Mr. Harpfield? I may likewise ask you, When Christ passed through the Virgins Womb, an rupeit necne? When they had thus awhile contended, there were divers opinions in this matter. All the Doctors fell in a buzzing, incertain what to answer: some thought one way, some another; and thus Mr. Doctors could not agree.

Then Mr. Cranmer said thus; You put off questions with questions, and not with answers, I ask one thing of you, and you answer another. Once again I ask, Whether he have these Properties which he had on the Earth.

Tresf. No, he hath not all the quantities and qualities belonging to a Body.

Smith. Stay you Mr. Tresfham. I will answer you Mr. Doctor, with the words of Damasene; Transformatur panis, &c. The Bread is transformed, &c. But if thou wilt inquire how, Modus impossibilis, The manner is impossible.

The Body of Christ is here to feed our bellies, but not to be lived withal.

The Argument holdeth a proportion.

The opinion of Mr. Harpfield, said reproving the sense of the Scripture rather to the judgment of the Church, than to the diligent reading and conferring of places.

Christ present in the Sacrament in Substance, but not after the manner of Substance.

The Rabbinists could not agree among themselves.

West. Augustinus ad Frateres in Eremo, Sermon, 28. Est quidam manducandi modus; That is, There is a certain manner of eating. Augustine speaketh of two manners of eating; the one of them that eat worthily, the other that eat unworthily.

Harps. All things in the sixth of John are not to be referred to the Sacrament, but to the receiving of Christ by Faith. The Fathers do agree, that there is not intreaty made of the Supper of the Lord, before they come unto, Panis quem dabo vobis, caro mea est, &c.

Cran. There is intreating of Manna both before and after.

Harps. I will apply another Answer. This Argument hath a kind of Poyson in it, which must be thus bitten away; that Manna and this Sacrament are not both one. Manna hath not his Efficacy of himself, but of God.

Cran. But they that did take Manna worthily had Fruit thereby: And so by your Assertion, he that doth eat the Flesh of Christ worthily, hath his Fruit by that.

Therefore the like doth follow of them both, and so there should be no difference between Manna and this Sacrament, by your Reason.

Harps. When it is said, that they which did eat Manna are dead, it is to be understood, that they did want the vertue of Manna.

If Master Harpsfield do mean of Bodily Life, they which eat the Sacrament do dye as well as they which did eat the Manna. If he mean of Spiritual Life, neither be they all damned that did eat Manna, nor all saved that do eat the Sacrament. Wherefore the Truth is, that neither the eating of Manna bringeth Death, nor the eating of the Sacrament bringeth Salvation: But only the Spiritual believing upon Christ's Bodily Passion, which only justifieth both them and us. And therefore, as the Effect is Spiritual, which Christ speaketh of in this Chapter; so is the Cause of that Effect Spiritual whereof he meaneth, which is our Spiritual believing in him, and not our Bodily eating of him.

Cran. They then which do eat either of them worthily, do live.

Harps. They do live which do eat Manna worthily, not by Manna, but by the Power of God given by it. The other which do eat this Sacrament, do live by the same.

Cran. Christ did not intreat of the Cause, but the Effect which followed: He doth not speak of the Cause, whereof the Effect proceedeth.

Harps. I do say, The Effects are divers, Life, and Death, which do follow the Worthy and Unworthy eating thereof.

Cran. Since you will needs have an Addition to it, we must use both in Manna and in the Sacrament, indifferently, either worthily, or unworthily.

Christ spake absolutely of Manna, and of the Supper, so that, after that absolute speaking of the Supper, wicked men can in no wise eat the Flesh of Christ, and drink his Blood.

Further, Augustine upon John, Tractat, 26. upon these Words, Qui manducat, &c. saith, There is no such respect in common Meats; as in the Lords Body. For who that eateth other Meats hath still hunger, and needeth to be satisfied daily: but he that doth eat the Flesh of Christ, and drinketh his Blood, doth live for ever. But you know Wicked Men do not so.

Ergo, Wicked Men do not receive.

Harps. S. Augustine meaneth, That he who eateth Christs Flesh, &c. after a certain manner, should live for ever. Wicked Men do eat, but not after that manner.

Ca. Cran. Only they which participate Christ be of the Mystical Body.

me. But the Evil Men are not of the Mystical Body. tres. Ergo, They do not participate Christ.

West. Your wonderful gentle Behaviour and Modesty (good M. Doctor Cranmer) is worthy much commendation; and that I may not deprive you of your right and just deserving, I give you most hearty thanks in my own name, and in the name of all my Brethren. At which saying, all the Doctors gently put off their Caps. Then M. Weston did oppose the Respondent on this wise.

West. Tertullian doth call the Sacrament the Sign and Figure of the Lord.

S. Augustine ad Daradanum saith, Non dubitavit Dominus dicere, Hoc est Corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis, i. The Lord did not stick to say, This is my Body, when he gave a Sign of his Body.

Besides this, he giveth rules how to understand the Scriptures, saying: If the Scriptures seem to command some hainous thing, then it is figurative, as by example, Manducare carnem, & bibere sanguinem est tropicum sermo, i. To eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood, is a Tropical Speech.

Harps. Tertullian did write in that place against Marcion an Heretick, who denied Christ to have a True Body; and said, he had only a Fantastical Body. He went about to shew, that we had Christ both in Heaven and in Earth; and though we have the True Body in the Sacrament, yet he would not go about so to confound him, as to say, That Christ was truly in the Sacrament; for that Heretick would have therat rather marvelled, than believed it. Therefore he shewed him, that it was the Figure of Christ: And a Figure cannot be but of a thing that is, or hath been extant.

To the Text of Augustine, the Church hath never taught the contrary. There is an outward thing in the Sacrament, which sometimes hath sundry names. For it may be called a Figure in this Declaration, That Body which is in the Sacrament, is a Figure of Christ dwelling in Heaven.

To the third, That which is brought by Augustine for example about the understanding of the Scriptures, is thus to be understood, as tending to a general manner of eating; so Manducare carnem, & bibere sanguinem, i. To eat the Flesh, and drink the Blood, may be a figurative Speech to exclude Anthropophagiam, i. The eating of Mans Flesh. The which is, when we eat Mans Flesh cut in Morfels, as we eat common Meat; so as we neither have, nor eat Christ in the Sacrament.

West. I understand your short and learned Answer; which doth sufficiently content me. But now to the second Question, which is of Transubstantiation.

The Scripture calleth it Bread.

Ergo, It is Bread.

Harps. In the Name of Bread all is signified which we do eat.

West. Theodoretus an Ancient Writer, in his first Dialogue, saith, That Christ changed not the Nature, but called it his Body.

Harps. He doth there speak of Symbolo, which is Externa species Sacramenti, i. The outward form of the Sacrament. He meaneth, that that doth tarry in his own Nature. Moreover, as it was reported, he brought for his Answer Augustinum in sententiis Properi.

West. Theodoret also in his second Dialogue of those kinds of Bread and Wine, saith, Nec naturam egrediamur, manent etiam in sua substantia, i. They go not out of their own Nature, but they tarry in their own Substance.

Harps. They are understood to be of the same Substance wherein they are (a) turned.

West. But what say you to this? Manent in priori substantia, i. They remain in their former Substance.

Harps. Symbola manent, i. The outward signs do tarry.

West. But what is meant here by this word Symbolum?

Harps. The outward form or shape only of the Nature.

West. Then you cannot call them a Substance.

Harps. Yes, Sir, every thing hath a certain Substance in his kind.

West. That is true, but Accidents are not Substances in their kind.

Harps. Sunt quid in suo genere. Of this they contented much.

West. Chrysostom ad Casarium Monachum, saith, Sicut antequam consecratur, panis est: sic, postquam consecratur, liberatur est ab appellatione panis, donatusque est appellatione Corporis Domini, cum natura remanet; That is, Like as before it is consecrated, it is Bread: so after it is consecrated, it is delivered from the name of Bread, and is indued with the name of the Lords Body, whereas the Nature doth remain.

Harps. Where read you this place, I pray you?

his Arguments out of Peter Martyr's Story.

Harps. The Author shall be of more Credit, before that I make so much of him, as to frame an Answer unto it.

Gelasius.

West. Indeed I know not well where he findeth it. But Gelasius saith, That the Nature of Bread and Wine do tarry.

Harps. What is that Gelasius?

West. A Bishop of Rome.

Harps. Then he allowed the Mass?

West. Yea, and oftentimes said it: And Purgatory he also allowed, and so Prayer for the Dead, Reliques, and Invocation to Saints.

Harps. Belike then he meant nothing against Transubstantiation.

Origen in Mat. cap. 15.

West. It doth appear so indeed. But Origen upon Mat shew the 15. Chapter saith, That the material Bread doth tarry, and is conveyed into the Privy, and is eaten of Worms.

Harps. Tuff, tuff, this place appertaineth unto Holy Bread.

West. What, doth it appertain to Holy Bread?

Harps. Yea, unto Holy Bread.

West. By what means can you shew how this miraculous work bringeth Christ into the Sacrament?

Harps. By the Scriptures I prove that, which saith, Hoc est corpus meum, This is my Body.

West. It doth rejoice all us not a little, that you have so well maintained the sound Doctrine of the Sacrament of the Altar, wherein you have faithfully cleaved to the Catholick Church, as an only Stay of our Religion: By the which means you have proved your self meet to be authorized further towards the practising of the Scripture.

And here, I do openly witness, that I do thoroughly consent with you, and have, for Disputations sake only, brought these Arguments against you, which you have right learnedly satisfied: And now all things being done, after our Form and Manner, we will end this Disputation, saying, In oppositum est sacra Theologia, In oppositum est, &c.

¶ Thus have ye heard in these aforesaid Disputations, about the Holy Supper of the Lord, the Reasons and Arguments of the Doctors, the Answers and Resolutions of the Bishops, and the Triumph of the Prolocutor, triumphing before the Victory, with Viciis veritas, who rather, in my mind, should have exclaimed, Viciis potestas; as it happeneth always, Ubi pars major vincit meliorem. For else if potestas had not helped the Prolocutor more than veritas, there had been a small victoria. But so it is where Judgments be partial, and Parties be addicted, there all things turn to Victory, though it be never so mean and simple, as in this Disputation might well appear.

For first, of the Opponents party, neither was there almost any Argument in true mood and figure rightly framed: Neither could the Answers be permitted to say for themselves: And if they answered any thing, it was condemned before they began to speak. Again, Such disturbance and confusion, more like a Conspiration than any Disputation, without all Form and Order, was in the Schools during the time of their answering, that neither could the Answerers have place to utter their Minds, neither would the Opponents be satisfied with any Reasons. Concerning the which Disturbance of that misruled Disputation, you shall hear what Master Ridley himself reporteth by his own Description, in manner as followeth.

The Report and Narration of M. Ridley, concerning the misordered Disputation had against him and his Fellow-prisoners at Oxford.

R. Ridley reports of the misorder of this Disputation.

I Never yet, since I was born, saw or heard any thing done or handled more vainly or tumultuously, than the Disputation which was with me in the Schools at Oxford. Yea verily, I could never have thought that it had been possible to have found amongst men recounted to be of Knowledge and Learning in this Realm, any so brazen-faced and shameless, so disorderly and vainly to behave themselves, more like Stage-players in Enterludes to set forth a Pageant, than to grave Divines in Schools to dispute. The Sorbonical Clamours (which at Paris I have seen in times past, when Popery most reigned) might be worthily thought (in comparison of this Thrafonical ostentation) to have had much Modesty. And no great marvel, seeing they which should have been Moderators, and Overseers of others, and which should have given good Examples in Words and Gravity; they themselves, above all other, gave worst Example, and did, as it were, blow the Trump to the rest, to rave, roar, rage, and cry out. By reason whereof (good Christian Reader) manifestly it may appear, that they never fought for any Truth or Verity, but only for the Glory of the World, and their own bragging Victory. But left by the innumerable Railings and reproachful Taunts, wherewith I was baited on every side, our cause, yea rather Gods cause and his Churches, should be evil spoken of, and slandered to the World through false Reports, and untrue Examples given out of our Disputation, and so the Verity might sustain some Damage, I thought it no less than my Duty to write mine Answers; to the intent, that whosoever is desirous to know the Truth thereof, may by this perceive as well those things which were chiefly objected, as summarily that which was answered of me unto every of them. Howbeit (good Reader) I confess this to be most true, that it is impossible to set forth either all that was, God knoweth, tumultuously and confusedly objected of their parts, being so many, speaking many times altogether so thick, that one could not well hear another, neither all that was answered on my behalf to them so sundry and divers Opponents.

Moreover, a great part of the time appointed for the Disputations was vainly consumed in opprobrious Checks and reviling Taunts, with hissing and clapping of hands, and that in the English Tongue, to procure the Peoples Favour withal. All which things, when I with great grief of Heart did behold, protesting openly, that such excessive and outrageous Disorder was unbecomly for those Schools, and Men of Learning and Gravity, and that they which were the Doers and Stirrers of such things, did nothing else but betray the slenderness of their Cause, and their own Vanities: I was so far off by this my Humble Complaint, from doing any good at all, that I was enforced to hear such Rebukes, Checks, and Taunts for my Labour, as no person of any Honesty, without blushing, could abide to hear the like spoken of a most vile Varlet, against a most wretched Russian.

At the first beginning of the Disputation, when I should have confirmed mine Answer to the first Proposition in few words, and that (after the Manner and Law of Schools) afore I could make an end of my first Probation, which was not very long, even the Doctors themselves cried out, He speaketh Blasphemies, he speaketh Blasphemies. And when I on my Knees besought them, and that heartily, that they would vouchsafe to hear me to the End, (whereat the Prolocutor being moved, cried out on high, Let him read it, let him read it.) Yet, when I began to read again, there followed immediately such shouting, such a noise and tumult, such confusion of Voices, crying, Blasphemies, Blasphemies, as I, to my Remembrance, never heard or read the like, except it be that one, which was in the Acts of the Apostles, stirred up of Demetrius the Silver-Smith, and other of his Occupation, crying out against Paul, Great is Diana of the Ephesians, great is Diana of the Ephesians: And except it be a certain Disputation which the Arrians had against the Orthodoxes, and such as were of Godly Judgment in Africa, where it is said, that such as the President and Rulers of the Disputation were, such was the end of the Disputations. All were in a hurly-burly, and so great were the Slanders which the Arrians cast out, that nothing could quietly be heard. This wretched Vidior in the second Book of his History.

The which Cries and Tumults of them against me so prevailed, that, will I tell I, I was enforced to leave off reading of my Probations, although they were short. If any man doubt of the truth hereof, let the same ask any one that was there, and not utterly perverted in Popery, and, I am assured, he will say, I speak the least. But to complain of these things further, I will cease.

And further speaking of this Disputation, he concluded with these Words: And thus was ended this most glorious Disputation of the most Holy Fathers, Sacrificers, Doctors and Masters, which fought most manfully, as ye may see, for their God and Goods, for their Faith and Felicity, for their Country and Kitchen, for their Beauty and Belly, with triumphant Applauses and Favour of the whole University.

After the Disputation of M. Latimer ended, which was the 18. day of April; the Friday following, which was the 20. day of the said Month, the Commissioners sit in Saint Maries Church, as they did the Saturday before, and Doctor Weston used particularly Diffusions with every one of them, and would not suffer them to answer in any wise, but directly and peremptorily, as his words were, to say whether they would subscribe, or no. And first to the Bishop of Canterbury he said, he was overcome in Disputations: To whom the Bishop answered, That whereas Doctor Weston said, he hath answered and opposed, and could neither maintain his own Errors, nor impugn the Verity; all that he said, was false. For he was not suffered to oppose as he would, nor could answer as he was required, unless he would have brawled with them, so thick their Reasons came one after another. Ever four or five did interrupt him, that he could not speak. Master Ridley and Master Latimer were asked what they would do: They replied, That they would stand to that they had said. Then were they all called together, and Sentence read over them, that they were no Members of the Church. And therefore they, their Fautors and Patrons, were condemned as Heretics: And in reading of it, they were asked, Whether they would turn, or no: And they had them read on in the Name of God, for they were not minded to turn. So they were condemned all three.

After which, Sentence of Condemnation being awarded against them, they answered again every one in his turn, in manner and effect of words, as followeth: The Archbishop first beginning thus:

The Archbishop of Canterbury.

From this your Judgment and Sentence I appeal to the Just Judgment of God Almighty, trusting to be present with him in Heaven, for whose presence in the Altar I am thus condemned.

Doctor Ridley.

Although I be not of your Company, yet doubt I not but my Name is written in another place, whether this Sentence will find us fonder, than we should by the course of Nature have come.

Master Latimer.

I thank God most heartily, that he hath prolonged my Life to this End, that I may in this case glorifie God by that kind of death.

Doctor Westons Answer unto Latimer.

If you go to Heaven in this Faith, then I will never come thither, as I am thus perfwaded.

After the Sentence pronounced, they were separated one from another, videlicet, The Archbishop was returned to Bocardo, D. Ridley was carried to the Sheriffs House, Mr. Latimer to the Bayliffs.

On Saturday following, they had a Mass with a general Procession and great Solemnity. Doctor Cranmer was caused to behold the Procession out of Bocardo; Doctor Ridley out of the Sheriffs House. Latimer also, being brought to see it from the Bayliffs House, thought that he should have gone to Burning, and spake to one Augustine Cooper a Catchpole, to make a quick Fire. But when he came to Carfax, and saw the matter, he ran as fast as his old Bones would carry him, to one Spensers Shop, and would not look towards it. Last of all, Doctor Weston carried the Sacrament, and four Doctors carried the Canopy over him.

Immediately after the Sentence was given, Doctor Ridley writeth to the Prolocutor in manner as followeth.

Doctor Ridley to the Prolocutor.

After Prolocutor, you remember, I am sure, how you promised me openly in the Schools, after my Protestation, that I should see how my Answers were taken and written of the Notaries whom ye appointed (me futor neminem recitare) to write what should be said, and to have had License to have added unto them, or to have altered them, as upon more deliberation should have seemed me best. Ye granted me also, at the delivery of my Answer unto your first Proposition, a Copy of the same: These Promises are not performed. If your sudden departure be any part of the cause thereof, yet I pray you remember that they may be performed; for performance of Promise is to be looked for at a Righteous Judges Hands: Now I send you here my Answers in writing to your second and third Propositions, and do desire and require earnestly a Copy of the same, and I shall by Gods Grace procure the pains of the Writer to be paid for, and satisfied accordingly. Master Prolocutor, in the time of my Answering in the Schools, where I would have confirmed my Sayings with Authorities and Reasons, ye said then openly, that I should have time and place, to say and bring whatsoever I could; another time, and the same your saying was then and there confirmed of other of the Commissioners: Yes, and (I dare say) the Audience also thought then that I should have had another Day, to have brought and said what I could for the Declaration and Confirmation of mine Assertions: Now that this was not done, but so suddenly Sentence given before the Cause was perfectly heard, I cannot but marvel, &c.

On Monday next ensuing, after these things done and April 21 past, being the 23. of the said Month of April, Doctor Weston Prolocutor took his Journey up to London, with the Letters Certificatory from the University unto the Queen, by whom the Archbishop of Canterbury directed his Letters Supplicatory unto the Council: The which Letters, after the Prolocutor had received, and had carried them well-near half way to London, by the way he opened the same, and seeing the Contents thereof, sent them back again, refusing to carry them, &c. Likewise Bishop Ridley hearing of the Prolocutors going to London, writeth to him his Letters, wherein he desired him to carry his Answers up to certain Bishops in London, the Form of which Letters, first of D. Ridley, then of the Archbishop; and lastly, another Letter of D. Ridley to the Archbishop, here in order followeth.

A Letter of Bishop Ridley to the Prolocutor.

After Prolocutor, I desire you, and in Gods Name require you, that you truly bring forth and shew all mine Answers, written and subscribed with mine own Hand, unto the Higher House of the Convocation, and especially to my Lord Chancellor, my Lords of Duresm, Ely, Worcester, Norwich, and Chichester; and also to shew and exhibit this my Writing unto them, which in these few Lines here I write unto you: And that I did make this Request unto you by this my Writing, know ye, that I did take Witnesses of them by whom I send you this Writing, and also of those which were then with them present, videlicet, The two Bayliffs of Oxford, and of Mr. Irish, Alderman; then there called to be a Witnesses.

By me Nicholas Ridley, 13 of April An. 1554.

The Copy of the Archbishop of Canterburys Letter to the Council, sent by Doctor Westons, who refused to deliver them.

In right humble wise sheweth unto your Honourable Lordships Thomas Cranmer late Archbishop of Canterbury, beseeching the same to be a Means for me unto the Queens Highness for her Mercy and Pardon. Some of you know by what means I was brought and trained unto the Will of our late Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, and what I spake against the same, wherein I refer me to the Reports of your Honours and Worthships. Furthermore, this is to signify unto your Lordships, that upon Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday last past, were open Disputations here in Oxford against me, Mr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, in three matters concerning the Sacrament: First, Of the Real Presence. Secondly, Of Transubstantiation: And thirdly, Of the Sacrifice of the Mass. Upon Mondays against me; upon Tuesdays, against Dr. Ridley; and upon Wednesdays, against Mr. Latimer. How the other two were ordered, I know not; for we were separated, before that of us knoweth what the other said, nor how they were ordered. But as concerning my self, I can report: Doctor Chedsey was appointed to dispute against me; but the Disputation was so confused, that I never knew the like; every man bringing forth what him liked without Order; and such haile was made, that no Answer could be suffered to be taken fully to any Argument, before another brought a New Argument. And in such Wighty Matters the Disputation must needs be ended in one day, which can scarcely be ended in three Months. And when we had answered them, they would not appoint us one day to bring forth our Proofs, that they might answer us, being required by me thereunto, whereas I my self have more to say, than can be well discussed, as I suppose, in twenty days. The means to resolve the truth, had been to have suffered us to answer fully to all that they could say, and then they again to answer us fully to all that we can say. But why they would not answer us, what other cause can there be, but that either they feared their Matter, that they were not able to answer us, or else for some consideration they made such haile, not to seek the Truth, but to condemn us, that it must be done in post-haile before the matters could be thoroughly heard: For in haile we were all three condemned of Herefie. Thus much I thought good to signify unto your Lordships, that you may know the indifferent handling of matters, leaving the Judgment thereof unto your Wisdoms. And I beseech your Lordships, to remember me, a poor Prisoner, unto the Queens Majesty; and I shall pray, as I do daily unto God, for the long Preservation of your good Lordships in all Godliness and Felicity. April 23.

Doctor Ridley to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Archbishop not suffered to answer fully to any Argument.

With made in condemning the Archbishop and his Followers.

B. Ridley writeth to the Archbishop.

This Notice Morgan gave in presence against Lady Isas.

Disputation in Cambridge is intended.

I With ye might have seen these mine Answers before I had delivered them, that ye might have corrected them. But I trust, in the substance of the matter we do agree fully, both led by one Spirit of Truth, and both valking after one Rule of Gods Word. It is reported, that Sergeant Morgan, the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, is gone Mad. It is said also, that Justice Halerhath recanted, perverted by Doctor Mareman. Item, That Master Rogers, Doctor Crome, and Master Bradford shall be had to Cambridge, and there be disputed with, as we were here; and that the Doctors of Oxford shall go likewise thither, as Cambridge-men came hither. When ye have read mine Answers, send them again to Austen, except ye will put any thing to them. I trust the day of our delivery out of all Miseries, and of our entrance into perpetual Rest, and unto perpetual Joy and Felicity, draweth nigh: The Lord strengthen us with his mighty Spirit of Grace. If you have not to write with, you must make your Man your Friend. And this Bearer deserveth to be rewarded; so he may, and will do you pleasure. My Man is Trusty, but it grieveth both him and me, that when I find him write any thing to you, your Man will not let him come up to see you, as he may to Master Lattimer, and yours to me. I have a Promise to see how my Answers were written in the Schools, but as yet I cannot come by it. Pray for me, I pray for you, and so shall I for you. The Lord have Mercy of his Church, and lighten the Eyes of the Magistrates, that God's extrem Plagues light not on this Realm of England. Turn, or burn.

These Disputations being thus discussed and ended, which were at Oxford in the Month of April, as is aforesaid: Now let us return again to the prosecuting of our Story, touching other things likewise that happened in other parts of the Realm, in this Tumultuous Time of Q. Mary. And because things that hapned in that Time were so many and divers, that it is hard to keep a perfect order in reciting them all: To the intent therefore to insert things left out before, or else to prosecute the same more at full, we have thought here a little to interrupt the order of time (albeit not much) returning again to the Month of July the Year before, viz. 1553. In the which Month of July I shewed before, how the Duke of Northumberland was apprehended by the Guard, and brought to London by the Earl of Arundel, and other Lords and Gentlemen appointed for that purpose, on Saint James's day, being the 25. day of July, and so to the Tower, where he remained. These be the Names of them which were committed to the Tower with the Duke.

First, the Earl of Warwick, the Earl of Huntington, Lord Ambrose, and Lord Henry Dudley, Lord Hastings, who was delivered again the same Night; Sir John Gates, Sir Henry Gates, Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir Thomas Palmer, and Dr. Sands Chancellor of Cambridge.

The 26. day, the Lord Marquess of Northampton, the Bishop of London, Lord Robert Dudley, and Sir Richard Corbet were brought and committed to the Tower.

The 27. day, the Lord Chief Justice of England, and the Lord Mountacute Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, were committed to the Tower.

Upon the Friday, being the 28. of July, the Duke of Suffolk, and Sir John Cheek were committed to the Tower.

The 30. of July, the Lord Russell was committed to the Sheriff of London's Custody.

The 31. day, the Earl of Rutland was committed to the Fleet.

Upon the Munday, the last of July, the Duke of Suffolk was delivered out of the Tower again.

Upon Thursday the 3. of August, the Queen entered into the City of London at Aldgate, and so to the Tower, where she remained seven days, and then removed to Richmond.

Upon Friday the 4. day, Doctor Day was delivered out of the Fleet.

Upon the Saturday the 5. day, the Lord Ferris was committed to the Tower, and the same day Doctor Bonner was delivered out of the Marshalsey.

The same day at Night Doctor Cocks was committed to the Marshalsey, and one Master Edward Underhill to Newgate. Also the same day Doctor Tomfall and Stephen Gardiner were delivered out of the Tower, and Gardiner received into the Queens Privy Council, and made Lord Chancellor.

Upon Sunday the 7. day, Henry Dudley, Captain of the Guard at Guines, which before had been sent to the French King by his Cousin the Duke of Northumberland, after the dispatch of his Ambassage with the French King, returned to Guines, and so was taken, and this day brought to the Tower.

Upon Monday the 7. day of August, Drige in Latin was sung within the Tower, by all the Kings Chappel, and the Bishop of Winchester was Chief Minister, whereat was present the Queen, and most part of the Council.

Upon Tuesday the 8. of August, the Kings Body was brought to Westminster, and there buried; where Doctor Day Bishop of Chichester preached. The same day a Mass of Requiem was sung within the Tower by the Bishop of Winchester, who had on his Miter, and did all things as in times past was done; at which Mass the Queen was present.

Upon Thursday the Duke of Norfolk came forth of the Tower, with whom the Dutchess of Somerset was also delivered this Thursday.

Upon Sunday the 11. of August, Doctor Bourne preached at Pauls Cross: Of the which Sermon read before, page 14.

In the Week following, Commandment was given throughout the City, that no Apprentices should come to the Sermon, nor bear any Knife or Dagger.

Upon the Wednesday, being the 16. day of August, Master Bradford, Master Blason, and Master Veron, were committed to the Tower: With whom also Master Sampson should have been committed, and was sought for the same time at Master Elings House in Fleetstreet, where Master Bradford was taken: and because he was not found, the Bishop of Winchester fumed like a Prelate with the Messenger.

Upon the Friday, being the 18. of August, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marquess of Northampton, and the Earl of Warwick, were arraigned at Westminster, and there the same day condemned, the Duke of Norfolk that day being the High Judge.

Upon the Saturday the 19. of August, Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir John Gates, Sir Henry Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer were arraigned at Westminster, and condemned the same day, the Lord Marquess of Winchester being High Judge.

Upon which day a Letter was sent unto Sir Henry Tirl, Anthony Brown and Edmund Brown, Esquires, praying them to commit unto all such as shall containe the Queens Order of Religion, or shall keep themselves from Church, there to remain until they be conformable, and to signifie their Names to the Councel.

Upon Sunday the 20. of August, D. Watson, the Bishop of Winchester's Chaplain, preached at Pauls-Croft, at whose Sermon was present the Marquess of Winchester, the Earl of Bedford, the Earl of Pembroke, the Lord Rich, and 200 of the Guard with their Halberds, lest the People should have made any stir against the Preacher.

Upon Munday the 21. of August, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marquess of Northampton, Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir John Gases, and Sir Thomas Palmer, heard a Mass within the Tower, and after Mass they all five received the Sacrament in one kind only, as in the Popish time was used. On the which day also Queen Mary set forth a Proclamation, signifying to the People, That she could not hide any longer the Religion which she from her Infancy had professed, &c. Inhibiting in the said Proclamation, Printing, and Preaching; the Tenor whereof read before, page 14.

Upon the Tuesday, being the 22. of August, the Duke of Northumberland, Sir John Gases, and Sir Thomas Palmer, were beheaded at the Tower-Hill, as before is said page 14. The same day certain Noble Personages heard Mass within the Tower, and likewise after Mass, received the Sacrament in one kind.

Upon Sunday, the 27. day of August, Doctor Chesley preached at Pauls-Croft, and the same day the Bishop of Canterbury, Sir Thomas Smith, and the Dean of Pauls were cited to appear the Week following before the Queens Commissioners, in the Bishops Consistory within Pauls.

In this mean time it was noised abroad by running rumours falsely and craftily devised; either to flabstiff the credit of the mass, or else to bring Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury out of credit, that he, to curry Favour with Queen Mary, should promise to say Dirige Mass after the old custom for King Edward, and that he had already said Mass at Canterbury, &c. Wherefore to stop the noise and flanders of those Rumours, the said Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, the 7. day of September set forth a Letter, which was also printed, in purgation of himself, the Copy of which Letter here ensueth.

A Purgation of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, against certain Slanders falsely raised upon him.

As the Devil, Christs ancient Adversary, is a Liar, and the Father of Lies, even so hath he stirred up his Servants and Members to persecute Christs and his True Word and Religion with lying: which he ceaseth not to do most earnestly at this present time. For whereas the Prince of Darkness Memory King Henry the Eighth, seeing the great abuse of the Latine Mass, reformed some things therein in his Life time, and after, our late Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, took the same wholly away, for the manifold and great Errors and Abuses of the same, and reformed in the place thereof Christs Holy Supper according to Christs own Institution, and as the Apostles used the same in the Primitive Church, the Devil getteth about now by lying to overthrow the Lords Supper again, and to restore his Latin satisfactory Mass, a thing of his own Invention and Device. And to bring the same more easily to pass, some have abused the Name of me Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, by writing abroad, That I have set up the Mass at Canterbury, and that I offered to say Mass at the Burial of our late Sovereign Prince King Edward the Sixth, and that I offered to say Mass before the Queens Highness, and at Pauls Church, and I was not where. And although I have been well exercised these twenty Years to suffer and bear Evil Reports and Lies, and have not been much grieved thereat, but have borne all things quietly: Yet when untrue Reports and Lies turn to the hindrance of Gods Truth, they are in no wise to be suffered. Wherefore I have thought it to signifie unto the World, That it was not I that set up the Mass at Canterbury, but it was a False, Flattering, Lying, and Dissembling Monk, which caused Mass to be set up there without mine Advice or Counsel; Reddat illi Dominus in die illo. And as for offering my self to say Mass before the Queens Highness, or in any other place, I never did it, as her Grace well knoweth. But if her Grace will give me leave, I shall be ready to prove, against all that will say the contrary, that all that is contained in the Holy Communion, set out by the most Innocent and Godly Prince King Edward the Sixth, in his High Court of Parliament, is conformable to that Order which our Saviour Christ did both observe, and command to be observed, and which his Apostles, and the Primitive Church used many Years; whereas the Mass, in many things, not only hath no Foundation of Christs, his Apostles, nor the Primitive Church, but is manifestly contrary to the same, and containeth many horrible Abuses in it. And although many, either Unlearned or Malicious, do report, that M. Peter Martyr is unlearned, yet if the Queens Highness will grant thereunto, I, with the said M. Peter Martyr, and other four or five, which I shall choose, will, by Gods Grace, take upon us to defend, not only the Common Prayer of the Church, the Ministration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies, but also all the Doctrine and Religion set out by our Sovereign Lord King Edward the Sixth, to be more pure, and according to Gods Word, than any other that hath been used in England these 1000 Years: So that Gods Word may be Judge, and that the Reasons and Proofs of both Parties may be set out in writing, to the intent, as will that all the World may examine and Judge thereon, as that no man shall start back from his Writing. And where they boast of the Faith, that hath been in the Church these 1500 Years, we will join with them in this Point; and that the same Doctrine and Usage is to be followed, which was in the Church 1500 Years past: And we shall prove, That the Order of the Church, set out at this present in this Realm by Act of Parliament, is the same that was used in the Church 1500 Years past, and so shall they be never able to prove theirs.

The same Thursday, being the 7. of September, Lord Mountacute Chief Justice, and Lord Chief Baron were delivered out of the Tower.

The 13. of September, the Reverend Father Master Hugh Latimer was committed to the Tower.

The 14. of September, the Bishop of Canterbury was committed to the Tower.

The 26. of September, one Master Gray of Cambridge, called before him one Master Garth, for that he would not suffer a Boy of Peterbours to help him say Mass in Pembroke-Hall, which was before any Law was established for that behalf.

The Queen came to the Tower of London upon the Thursday, being the 28. of September, and upon the Saturday following she rode from the Tower through the City of London, where were made many Pageants to receive her, and so she was triumphantly brought to Westminster to Whitehall.

Upon the Sunday, being the first Day of October, the Queens Highness went from Whitehall to Westminster-Abby, accompanied with the most part of the Nobility of this Realm: Namely, these, The Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Arundel, the Earl of Shrewsbury, the Marquess of Winchester, the Earls of Derby, Bedford, Worcester, Cumberland, Westmerland, Oxford, Suffolke, Devonshire, Pembroke, the Lord Dacres of the North, Lord Ferris, Lord Cobham, Lord Aburgeyn, Lord Wentworth, Lord Scroppe, Lord Rich, Lord Vaux, Lord Howard, Lord Comins, Lord Morley, Lord Paget, and the Lord Willoughby; with other Nobles, and all the Ambassadors of divers Countries, the Mayor of London with all the Aldermen. Also out of the Abby, to receive her coming, came three Silver Crosses, and to the number of Fourty, or near upon, of Singing Men, all in very Rich and Gorgeous Coopes. Amongst whom was the Dean of Westminster, and divers of her Chaplains, which bare every one some Ensign in their Hands, and after them, followed ten Bishops, Mitered all, and their Crozier Staves in their Hands, and rich Coopes upon them every one. And in this Order they repaired from Westminster-Hall before the Queen to the Abbey, where she was Crowned by Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester.

and Lord Chancellor of England. At the time of the Coronation Doctor Day Bishop of Chichester made a Sermon to the Queens Majesty, and to the rest of the Nobility.

Also there was a general Pardon proclaimed within the Abbey at the same time of her Coronation, out of which Proclamation all the Prisoners of the Tower and of the Fleet were excepted, and 62. more. Whereof M. Whitchurch and M. Grafton were two.

The third of October, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge did challenge one Mr. Pierfon, for that he ministrified still the Communion in his own Parish, and did receive Strangers of other Parishes to the same, and would not say Maf. Whereupon within two days after, he was clean discharged from farther ministrifying in his Cure.

Upon the Wednesday following, the Archbishop of York was committed to the Tower.

Upon Thursday, being the 5. of October, 1554 the Queen rode to the Parliament in her Robes, and all the Nobility with her, and when they were set in the Parliament House, the Bishop of Winchester made to them a solemn Oration, and Sergeant Pollard was chosen Speaker of the Parliament. The same day the Bishops of Lincoln, Hereford, and Worcester, were discharged from the Parliament and Convocation.

Also the 10. day of October, the Earl of Huntington was delivered out of the Tower.

Upon the Sunday after, being the 15. of October, M. Laurence Saunders preached at Albhallows in Breadstreet in the Morning: Where he declared the Abomination of the Maf, with divers other Matters, very notably and godly. Whereof more shall be heard (by the Lords leave) hereafter when we come to his Story. In which his doing, as he shewed himself to be Gods Faithful Minister, so is he sure not to be defrauded of Gods Faithful Promise, who saith, Omnis qui confitebitur me coram hominibus, confitebor & ego illum coram Patre meo qui est in Caelis, Mat. 10. But about Noon of the same day, he was sent for by the Bishop of London, and from thence committed to the Marshalsey.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 20. of October, Doctor Wetton preached at Pauls Crofs. Who in the beginning of his Sermon willed the People to pray for the Souls departed, on this wise: You shall pray for all them that be departed, that be neither in Heaven, nor Hell, but in a place not yet sufficiently purged to come to Heaven, that they may be relieved by your devout Prayers. He named the Lords Table an Oyfter-Board. He said, that the Catechism in Latin, lately set out, was abominable Herefie, and likened the setters out of the same Catechism to Julianus Apostata, and the Book to a Dialogue set out by the said Julianus Apostata, wherein Christ and Pilate were the Speakers; with many other things. Which Sermon, with all the points thereof, Master Coverdale the same time learnedly confuted by writing, which remaineth yet in my hands to be seen.

In the Week following began the Disputations in the Convocation House in Pauls Church, whereof sufficient hath been before declared.

The 26. day of October, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge went to Clare-hall, and in the presence of Doctor Walker, displaced Doctor Madew, and placed Master Swyborne in the Mastership there, by force of the Lord Chancellors Letters, for that he was (as they termed it) Usoratus, that is, married.

The 28. day of October, the Papists in the Kings Colledge in Cambridge (not tarrying the making of any Law, but of their blind Zeal) had their whole Service again in the Latin Tongue, contrary to the Law then in force.

The last of October, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge did sharply reprove and threaten one M. Throckold, for that he challenged the said Vicechancellor, who had suffered Master Bovell (contrary to the Statutes then in force) quietly without punishment to depart, notwithstanding that he refused to swear to the Supremacy of the Queen, and the Abrogation of the Bishop of Rome.

The third day of November, the Vicechancellor sent for the Curate of the Round Parish in Cambridge, commanding him not to minister any more in the English Tongue, saying, he would have one Uniform Order of Service throughout the Town, and that in Latin, with Maf, which was established the Twelfth day of this Month.

The sixth day of November, Master Pollard preached at Saint Michaels, and in his Sermon approved Purgatory.

The 28. day of November, the Archdeacons Official visited in Hynton, where he gave in charge to prevent all such as did disturb the Queens Proceedings, in letting the Latin Service, the setting up of their Altars, and saying of Maf, or any part thereof: Whereby it was ease to see how these good Fellows meant to proceed, having the Law once on their Side, that thus readily against a manifest Law, would attempt the Punishment of any Man.

The 15. day of December there were two Proclamations at London; the one for the Repealing of certain Acts made by King Edward, and for the setting up of the Maf, for the 20. day of December then next following: The other was, That no Man should interrupt any of those that would say Maf.

The Parliament beginning about the 5. day of October, continued till the 5. of December. In the which Parliament were dissolved as well all the Statutes made of Premunire, in the time of K. Henry the Eighth, &c. As also other Laws and Statutes concerning Religion and Administration of Sacraments, decreed under King Edward the Sixth, as is partly above touched. In the which Parliament moreover was appointed the 20. day of December next ensuing the same year 1553. That all the old Form and Manner of Church-Service, used in the last year of King Henry, should now again be restored.

On New-years Even being the last of December, the Lord Marquis of Northampton was delivered out of the Tower.

About this time a Priest of Canterbury said Maf on a Priest of the one day, and the next day after he came into the Pulpit, and desired all the People to forgive him; for he said, he had betrayed Christ; not as Judas did, but as Peter did, and there made a long Sermon against the Maf.

The day after New-years day, being the second day of January, in the Year of our Lord, 1554. Four Ambassadors came into London from the Emperor, and were Honourably received. Their Names were these: Le Comte de Egmont, Le Comte de Lalen, Monsieur Corvire, Le Chancelier Nigre.

About this time a great Number of New Bishops, Deans, &c. were chosen, more than were made at one time since the Conquest. Their Names are these:

- D. Holyman Bishop of Bristol.
- D. Coates Bishop of Westchester.
- D. Hopton Bishop of Norwich.
- D. Bourne Bishop of Bath.
- D. White Bishop of Lincoln.
- D. Mores Bishop of Rochester.
- D. Morgan Bishop of S. Davids.
- D. Poole Bishop of S. Asaph.
- D. Brookes Bishop of Gloucester.
- D. Moreman, Coadjutor to the Bishop of Exeter, and after his decease Bishop of Exeter.
- D. Glyn Bishop of Bangor.
- Master Fecknam Dean of Pauls.
- D. Rainolds Dean of Bristol, with others.

The 12. day of January, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge called a Congregation general, wherein amongst other things he shewed, that the Queen would have there a Maf of the Holy Ghost upon the 18. day of February then next following, for that it was her Birthday, which was fulfilled the day appointed, and that very solemnly.

Upon the Saturday, being the 13. of January, Doctor Crome was committed to the Fleet. Also upon the Sunday following, one Mr. Addington was committed to the Tower. Also this same Sunday knowledge was given in the Court openly by the Bishop of Winchester, that the Marriage between the Queens Majesty and the King of Spain was concluded, and the day following, being Anno 1554. being Monday, and the 15th of January, the Mayor with the Aldermen and certain Commons were at the Court, and there they were commanded by the Lord Chancellor to prepare the City ready to receive the said King of Spain; who declared unto them what a Catholic, mighty, prudent, and wise Prince the said King was, with many other commendations of him.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 20th of January, the Court of the First-Fruits and Tenths was dissolved.

Upon the Thursday at night following, the 25th day of January, the Lord Marquis of Northampton was again committed to the Tower, and Sir Edward Warner with him. Who were brought to the Tower by the Mayor.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 26th of January, Justice Hales was committed to the Marshalsey, and the same day Mr. Rogers was committed to the Newgate. Upon this Saturday, Sunday and Monday following, the Londoners prepared a number of Soldiers, (by the Queens Commandment) to go into Kent against the Commons: whereof were chief Captains the Duke of Norfolk, the Earl of Wornwood, Sir Henry Feringham, Sir George Haward, and ten other Captains. Which Soldiers when they came to Rochester-Bridge, where they should have set upon their Enemies, most of them (as it is said) left their own Captains and came wholly to the Kentish Men, and so the foresaid Captains returned to the Court both void of Men and Victory, leaving behind them both six pieces of Ordnance and Treasure.

About the latter end of January, the Duke of Suffolk with his Brethren departed from his House at Shene, and took his Voyage into Leicester-shire. After whom was sent the Earl of Huntingdon to take him and bring him to London, who proclaimed the said Duke Traytor by the way as he rode.

And thus passing to the Month of February, here is to be noted by way of story, that upon the 15th day of the said Month, being Thursday, there were seen within the City of London, about Nine of the Clock in the Forenoon strange fights. There were seen two Suns both shining at once, the one a good pretty way distant from the other. At the same time was also seen a Rainbow turned contrary, and a great deal higher than hath been accustomed. The common handling of the Rainbow is thus—but this flood thus—with the Head downward, and the Feet as it were upward. Both these fights were seen as well at Westminster, in Cheap-side, on the South-side of Pauls, as in very many other places, and that by a great number of honest men. Also certain Aldermen went out of the Guild-Hall to behold the fight.

As touching the rising of Mr. Wyatt, with Sir William Cobham and others in Kent, and their coming to London in the Month of February; also of the Queens coming to Guild-Hall, and her Oration there made; and after of the taking of the said Wyatt and his Company; likewise of the apprehension of the Duke of Suffolk with his Brother Lord John Gray; and the next day after of the Beheading of the Lord Guildford and Lady Jane, which was the 12th day of February, and how the day before which was the 11th of the said Month, Lord William Howard, and Sir Edward Hastings were sent for the Lady Elizabeth; and how the same Sunday, Sir Henry Isley, Mr. Culpepper, and Mr. Winter were committed to the Tower, the Bishop of Winchester the same day, being the 11th of February, preaching before the Queen, and perfwading her to use no mercy toward these Kentish Men, but severe Execution, all which was in the Month of February; because most of these matters have been briefly touched before or else may be found in other Chronicles, I will cease to make any further story of them: having somewhat notwithstanding to declare touching the Arraignement and Death of the Duke of Suffolk.

Upon Saturday, being the 17th day of February, the Duke of Suffolk was Arraigned at Westminster, and the same day condemned to dye by his Peers; the Earl of Arundel was chief Judge for this day.

Upon the Sunday following, which was the 18th day of the said Month, Sessions was kept in London, which hath not before been kept upon the Sunday.

Upon the Monday, the 19th of February, the Lord Cobham three Sons; and four other Men were Arraigned at Westminster: of which Sons the youngest was condemned, whose name was Thomas, and the other two came not at the Bar, and the other four were condemned.

Upon the Tuesday, being the 20th of February, the Lord John Gray was Arraigned at Westminster, and there condemned the same day, and other three Men, whereof one was named Naile.

Upon Wednesday, the 21st of February, the Lord Thomas Gray and Sir James Croft were brought through London to the Tower with a number of Horiamen.

Upon the Thursday, being the 22nd of February, Sir Nicholas Throgmorton was committed to the Tower.

Upon the Friday, being 23rd of February, 1554, the Duke of Suffolk was beheaded at the Tower-Hill, the order of whose Death here followed.

The godly End and Death of the Duke of Suffolk Beheaded at Tower-Hill, 23rd February 1554.

ON Friday the 23rd of February, 1554, about Nine of the Clock in the Forenoon, the Lord Henry Gray, Duke of Suffolk, was brought forth of the Tower of London unto the Scaffold on the Tower-Hill, with a great Company, &c. and in his coming thither, there accompanied him Dr. Weston as his ghostly Father, notwithstanding, as it should seem, against the will of the said Duke. For when the Duke went up to the Scaffold, the said Weston, being on the left hand, pressed to go up with him. The Duke with his hand, put him down again off the Stairs: and Weston, taking hold of the Duke, forced him down likewise. And as they attended the second time, the Duke again put him down.

Then Weston said, that it was the Queens pleasure he should do so. Wherewith the Duke calling his hands abroad, ascended up the Scaffold, and paused a pretty while after. And then he said: Majesty, I have offended the Queen, and her Laws, and thereby am justly condemned to dye, and am willing to dye, desiring all Men to be obedient, and I pray God that this my Death may be an example to all Men, beseeching you all to bear me witness, that I dye in the Faith of Christ, trusting to be saved by his Blood only, and by no other Trumpeter, the which died for me, and for all them that truly repent, and steadfastly trust in him. And I do repent, desiring you all to pray to God for me, and that when you see my Breath depart from me, you will pray to God that he may receive my Soul. And then he desired all Men to forgive him, saying, that the Queen had forgiven him.

Then Mr. Weston declared with a loud Voice, that the Queens Majesty had forgiven him. With that divers of the Standers-by said with meety, good, and audible Voice: Such Forgiveness God send thee, meaning Dr. Weston. Then the Duke kneeled down upon his Knees, and said the Psalm Miserere mei Deus unto the end, holding up his hands, and looking up to Heaven. And when he had ended the Psalm, he said, In manus tuas Domine commendo Spiritum meum, &c. Then he arose and stood up, and delivered his Cap and his Scarf unto the Executioner.

Then the said Executioner kneeled down, and asked the Duke forgiveness. And the Duke said, God forgive thee, and I do: and when thou dost thine Office, I pray thee do it well, and bring me out of this World quickly, and God have mercy to thee. Then stood there a man and said, My Lord, how shall I do for the Money that you do owe me? And the Duke said, Alas good Fellow, I pray thee trouble me not now, but go thy way to my Officers. Then he knit a Kerchief about his Face, and kneeled down and said, Our Father which art in Heaven, &c. unto the end. And then he said, Christ have mercy upon me, and laid down his Head on the Block, and the Executioner took the Ax, and at the first clop strook off his Head, and held it up to the People, &c.

The same day a number of Prisoners had their Par-bout their Necks. There were in (a) number about 200, who were hanged through the City to Westminster, and had their Pardons.

Priests divorced.

In this Week, all such Priests within the Dioceses of London as were married, were divorced from their Livings, and commanded to bring their Wives within a fortnight, that they might be likewise divorced from them. This the Bishop did of his own power.

Gentlemen sent into Kent to be Executed.

Upon the Tuesday in the same Week, being the 27th of February, certain Gentlemen of Kent were sent into Kent, to be Executed there. Their Names were these, the two Mantels, two Knevetts, and Brea; with these Mr. Rudfow also and certain others were condemned, and should have been Executed, but they had their Pardon.

Mr. Rudfow with certain others pardoned.

As touching the foresaid Mr. Mantel the Elder, here by the way is to be noted, that as he was led to Execution, and at his first calling under the Gallows, the Rope brake. Then they would have had him recanted the Truth, and received the Sacrament of the Altar (as they term it) and then they said he should have the Queens Pardon: but Mr. Mantel, like a worthy Gentleman, refused their Serpentine counsel, and chose rather to dye, than to live for dishonouring of God.

Moreover, as touching the said Mr. Mantel, for that he was reported falsely to have fallen from the constancy of his Profession; to clear himself thereof, and to prove the finisler surmise of his Recantation, he wrote this brief Apology in purgation of himself: the Copy whereof you shall hear.

The Apology of Mr. Mantel the Elder.

March 20. The Boile of Mr. Mantel the Elder.

Perceiving that already certain false Reports are raised of me concerning my Answer in the behalf of my Belief, whilst I was Prisoner in the Tower of London, and considering how sore a matter it is to be an occasion of Offence to any of those Little ones that believe in Christ: I have thought it the duty of a Christian man, as near as I can (with the Truth) to take away this Offence. It pleased the Queens Majesty to send unto me Mr. Doctor Bourne, unto whom at the first meeting I acknowledged my Faith in all points to agree with the four Creeds, that is, the common Creed, the Creed of Nice, Quicunque vult, and Te Deum laudamus.

Dr. Bourne sent to Mr. Mantel.

Further, as concerning Confession and Penance, I declare that I could be content to shew unto any learned Minister of Christs Church any thing that troubled my Conscience, and of such a man I would most willingly hear Absolution pronounced.

Mr. Mantel opposed in the Sacrament.

Toucing the Sacrament of the Altar (as he termed it) I said that I believed Christ to be there present at the Holy Ghosts mean; when these words were written, Hoc est corpus meum.

Further, when this would not satisfy, I desired him to consider, that I was a condemned Man to dye by a Law, and that it was more meet for me to seek a readines and preparation to Death. And inasmuch as I dissented not from him in any Article of the Christian Faith necessary to Salvation, I desired him for Gods sake no more to trouble me with such matters, as which to believe, is neither Salvation; nor not to believe, damnation. He answered, that if I dissented but in the least matter from the Catholick Church, my Soul was in great danger; therefore much more in this great matter, alleging this Text, Qui offenderit in minimo, factus est reus omnium, &c. He that offendeth in the least of these, is guilty of them all. Yea, quoth I, Verum ex hinc mandatum est. It is true of these Commandments of God. To this I desired him to consider it was not my matter, nor could I in these matters keep Disputation, nor minded so to do; and therefore to take these few words for a full Answer, that I not only in the matter of the Sacrament, but also in all other matters of Religion, believe as the holy Catholick Church of Christ (grounded upon the Prophets and Apostles) believeth. But upon this word Church was agreed not; for I took exception at the Antichristian Popish Church.

The Church.

Then fell we in talk of the Mass, wherein we agreed not; for I both for the occasion of Idolatry, and also the clear subversion of Christs Institution, thought it naught; and he, & contra, upon certain considerations supposed it good. I found fault that it was accounted a Sacrifice propitiatory for Sin, and at certain other applications of it. But he said that it was not a Propitiatory Sacrifice for Sin (for the death of Christ only was the Sacrifice) and this but a commemoration of the same. Then, if ye think so, (certain blasphemous Collets left out) I could be content (were it not for offending my poor Brethren that believe in Christ, which know not so much) to bear your Mass. See, quoth he, how vain glory toucheth you. Not so Sir, quoth I, I am not now I thank God, in case to be vain-glorious.

Then I found further fault with it, that it was not a Communion. Yea, saith he, one Priest saying Mass here, and another there, and the third in another place, &c. is a Communion. This agreeth scarcely with these words of Paul, said I, Non in melius, sed in deterius convenitis. Ye come not after a better manner, but after a worse. Yea, and it is a Communion too, said he, when they come together. Now draweth on the time (quoth he) that I must depart from you to the Court, to say Mass before the Queen, and must signifie unto her in what case I find you, and methinks I find you sore seduced. Then I said, I pray you report the best: for I trust you find me not obstinate. What shall I say? are ye content to bear Mass, and to receive the Sacrament of the Mass? I beseech you, said I, signifie unto her Majesty, that I am neither obstinate nor stubborn; for time and persuasion may alter me, but as yet my Conscience is such, that I can neither bear Mass, nor receive the Sacrament after this sort. Thus, after certain Requests made to the Queens Majesty concerning other matters, he departed.

The next day he came to me again, and brought with him St. Cyrilians Works; for so I had required him to do the day before, because I would see his Sermon De Mortalitate. He had in this Book turned and interlined certain places both concerning the Church and the Sacrament, which he willed me to read. I read as much as my time would serve, and at his next coming I said, that I was wofully of Cyrilians mind in the matter of the Sacrament. Dr. Welton and Dr. Mallet came after to me, whom I answered most after this sort as I did the other. Dr. Welton brought in the place of St. Cyrilian, Panis iste non effigie, sed natura mutatur, &c. I asked of him how Natura was taken in the Convocation-House, in the Disputation upon the place of Theodorot.

To be short, Dr. Bourne came often unto me, and I always said unto him, that I was not minded, nor able to dispute in matters of Religion: but I believed as the holy Catholick Church of Christ, grounded upon the Prophets and Apostles, doth believe: and namely in the matter of the Sacrament, as the holy Fathers, St. Cyrilian and St. Augustine do write, and believed; and this Answer and none other they had of me in effect; what words soever have been spread abroad of me, that I should be conformable to all things, &c. The truth is, I never heard of Mass, nor received the Sacrament during the time of my Imprisonment.

One time he willed me to be confessed. I said, I am content. We kneeled down to pray together in a Window. I began without Benedicere, desiring him not to look at my hand for any superstitious particular enumeration of my Sins. Therewith he was called away to the Council; & ego liberatus. Thus much I bear only for my Life, as God knoweth. If in this I have offended any Christian, from the bottom of my heart I ask them forgiveness. I trust God hath forgiven me, who knoweth that I durst never deny him before men, lest he should deny me before his Heavenly Father.

Thus I have left behind me written with mine own hand the effect of all the Talk, especially of the worst that ever I granted unto, to the uttermost I can remember, as God knoweth. All the whole Communication I have not written; for it were both too long and too foolish so to do. Now I beseech the living God, which hath recovered me to his mercy, and brought to pass, that I dye steadfast and undefiled in his Truth, at utter defiance and detestation of all Papisical and Antichristian Doctrine; I beseech him (I say) to keep and defend all his chosen

March 7. Sir Gawen Carew, and M. Gile brought to the Tower.

In London the 17. day of March, every Householder was commanded to appear before the Aldermen of their Ward, and there were commanded, that they, their Wives and Servants, should prepare themselves to shrift, and receive the Sacrament at Easter, and that neither they, nor any of them should depart out of the City, until Easter was past.

March 25. The five rifen out of the Sepulchre from all the Warden at St. Pancrase Church.

The 25. day (being Easter-day) in the morning, at St. Pancrase in Cheap, the Crucifix with the Pixe were taken out of the Sepulchre, before the Priest rose to the Resurrection: so that when after his accustomed manner he put his hand into the Sepulchre, and said very devoutly, Surrexit, non est hic, he found his words true, for he was not there indeed: Whereupon being half dismayed, they consulted amongst themselves who they thought to be likeliest to do this thing. In which debate they remembered one Marib, which a little before had been put from that Parsonage because he was married, to whose charge they laid it. But when they could not prove it, being brought before the Mayor, they then burdened him to have kept company with his Wife, since that they were by commandment divorced. Whereto he answered, That he thought the Queen had done him wrong to take from him both his Living and his Wife: which Words were then noted, and taken very grievously, and he and his Wife was both committed to several Counters, notwithstanding that he had been very sick.

M. Mayb buried with suspicion and with his Marriage.

April 8. A Cat hanged with a dozen Crews upon the Gallies in Cheap.

The 8th of April there was a Cat hanged upon a Gallies at the Cross in Cheap, apparelled like a Priest ready to say Mass, with a haven Crown. Her two fore-feet were tied over her Head, with a round Paper like a Wafer-cake put between them: whereon arose great evil Will against the City of London. For the Queen and the Bishops were very angry withal; and therefore the same afternoon there was a Proclamation, that whosoever could bring forth the Party that did hang up the Cat, should have xx. Nobles, which Reward was afterwards increased to xx. Marks, but none could or would catch it.

The number and occasion of sitting up this Gallies in Cheap, is here to be understood, that after the Sermon of the Bishop of Winchester (above-mentioned) made before the Queen for the fruit Execution of Wyat's Soldiers, immediately upon the same the 13. of February, were set up a great number of Gallies in divers places of the City; namely, two in Cheap, one at Leaden-Hall, one at Billings-gate, one at St. Magnus Church, one in Smithfield, one in Fleetstreet, four in Southwark, one at Aldgate, one at Bishopsgate, one at Aldersgate, one at Newgate, one at Ludgate, one at St.

James Park Corner, one at Cripplegate: all which Gibbets and Gallies, to the number of 20, there remained for Terror of other, from the 13. of February till the 4. of June, and then at the coming in of King Philip were taken down.

The 11. day of April was Sir Thomas Wyatt beheaded at the Tower-Hill, where he uttered these Words touching the Lady Elizabeth, and the Earl of Devonshire. Concerning, said he, what I have said of others in my Examination, to charge any others as partakers of my doing, I accuse neither my Lady Elizabeth Grace, nor my Lord of Devonshire. I cannot accuse them, neither am I able to say, that to my knowledge they knew anything of my Rising. And when Dr. Weston told him, that his Confession was otherwise before the Council, he answered: That which I said then, I said; but that which I say now, is true.

Upon the Tuesday, being the 17. of April, Sir James Croft and Mr. Winter were brought to the Guild-Hall, with whom also the same time, and to the same place was brought Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, and there arraigned of Treason, for that he was suspected to be of the Conspiracy with the Duke of Suffolk and thereto, against the Queen: where he so boldly and wisely behaved himself (as well in clearing his own case, as also in opening such Laws of the Realm as were then alleged against him) that the Quest, which was charged with this matter, could not in Conscience but find him not guilty: for the which, the said 12. Persons of the Quest, being also substantial Men of the City, were bound in the Sum of 500 pounds apiece to appear before the Queens Council at a day appointed, there to answer such things as should be laid against them for his acquitting. Which Quest appeared accordingly before the Council in the Star-Chamber upon Wednesday, being the 25. of April, and S. Marks day. From whence, after certain questioning, they were committed to Prison: Emanuel Lucar and Mr. Whetstone were committed to the Tower, and the other ten to the Fleet.

As concerning the Condemnation of Thomas Archbishop of Canterbury, of Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Latimer, which vv as the 20. of this Month of April, and also of their Disputations, because vve have said enough before, it shall not need now to bestow any further rehearsal thereof.

The Friday next following, after the Condemnation of them, the 27. of April, Lord Thomas Gray, the late Duke of Suffolks Brother, vv as beheaded at Tower-Hill.

Upon the Saturday, being the 28. of April, Sir James Croft and M. Winter vv ere again brought to the Guild-Hall, vv here Sir James Croft vv as arraigned and condemned; and because the day vv as far spent, M. Winter vv as not arraigned.

Upon the Thursday, being the 17. of May, William Thomas vv as arraigned at the Guild-Hall, and there the same day condemned, who the next day after vv as hanged, drawn and quartered. His Accusation vv as, for conspiring the Queens death: vv hich how true it vv as I have not to say. This is certain, that he made a right godly end, and vvrote many fruitful Exhortations, Letters and Sonnets in the Prison before his death.

In the Month of May it vv as given out, and bruted abroad, that a solemn Disputation should be holden at Cambridge (as ye heard before in M. Ridley's Letter, p. 75.) between M. Bradford, M. Saunders, M. Rogers, and others of that side, and the Doctors of both the Universities on the other side, like as had been in Oxford before, as you have heard. Whereupon the godly Preachers which were in Prison having word thereof, albeit they were destitute of their Books, neither were ignorant of the purpose of the Adversaries, and how the cause vv as prejudiced before: also how the Disputations vv ere confusively handled at Oxford, nevertheless they thought not to refuse the offer of Disputation, so that they might be quickly and indifferently heard; and therefore vv idely pondering the matter with themselves, by a public consent directed out of Prison a Declaration of their mind by Writ 15. 25. 8th. day of May. Wherein first, as touching the Disputation, although they knew that they should do no good, whereas all things were so prejudiced before; yet nevertheless they would not deny to dispute, so that the Disputation might be either before the Queen, or before the Council, or before the Parliament-Houses, or else if they might dispute by Writing: for else if the matter were brought to the Doctors handling in their own Schools, they have sufficient proof, they said, by the Experience of Oxford, what little good will be done at Cambridge; and so consequently declaring the Faith and Doctrine of their Religion, and exhorting the People withal to submit themselves with all patience and humility, either to the will or punishment of the Higher Powers, they appeared in the end from them to be their Judges in this behalf, and so ended their Protestation, the Copy and Contents wherof I thought not unfit here to be inserted.

A Copy of a certain Declaration drawn and sent out of Prison by Mr. Bradford, Mr. Saunders, and divers other godly Preachers, concerning their Disputation, and Doctrine of their Religion, as followeth:

A Declaration of the godly preachers, written and sent abroad out of Prison.

Because we hear that it is determined of the Magistrates, and such as be in Authority, especially of the Clergy, to send us speedily out of the Prisons of the Kings-Bench, the Fleet, the Marshalsey, and Newgate, where at this present we are, and of long time some of us have been, not as Rebels, Traytors, Seditious Persons, Thieves, or Transgressors of any Laws of this Realm, Inhibitions, Proclamations, or Commandments of the Queens Highness, or of any of the Councils (Gods Name be praised therefore) but alone for the Confidence we have to God, and his most holy Word and Truth, upon most certain knowledge: because we say, we hear that it is determined, we shall be sent to one of the Universities of Cambridge or Oxford, there to dispute with such as are appointed in that behalf: in that we purpose not to dispute otherwise than by Writing, except it may be before the Queens Highness and her Council, or before the Parliament-Houses; and therefore perchance it will be bruted abroad, that we are not able to maintain by the Truth of Gods Word, and the consent of the true and Catholick Church of Christ, the Doctrine we have generally and severally taught, and some of us have written and set forth, where-through the godly and simple may be offended, and somewhat weakened: we have thought it our bounden duty now whilst we may, by writing to publish and notice the Causes why we will not dispute otherwise than is above-said, to prevent the Offences which might come thereby.

The Causes why they will not otherwise dispute than before indifferent Judges. The matter of Disputation is against Gods Word. The second Cause.

First, Because it is evidently known unto the whole World; that the Determinations of both the Universities in matters of Religion, especially wherein we should dispute, are directly against Gods Word, yea, against their own Determinations in the time of our late Sovereign Lord and most godly Prince, King Edward: and further it is known they be our open Enemies, and have already condemned our Causes, before any Disputation had of the same.

Secondly, Because the Prelates and Clergy do not seek either us or the Verity, but our destruction and their glory. For if they had fought us (as Charity requireth) then would they have called us forth hereabouts before their Laws were so made, that frankly and without peril we might have spoken our Consciences. Again, If they had fought for the Verity, they would not have concluded of Controversies before they had been disputed; so that it easily appeareth, that they seek their own glory and our destruction, and not us and the Verity: and therefore we have good cause to refuse Disputation, as a thing which shall not further prevail than to the setting forth of their glory, and the suppression of the Verity.

The third Cause. The Judges or the Disputation promised Enemies against the Truth.

Thirdly, Because the Censors and Judges (as we hear who they be) are manifest Enemies to the Truth, and that which worke is, obstinate Enemies, before whom Pearls are not to be cast, by the Commandment of our Saviour Jesus Christ, and by his own Example. That they be such, their doings of late at Oxford, and in the Convocation-House in October last past, do most evidently appear.

The fourth Cause. Want of Books necessary for Disputation.

Fourthly, Because some of us have been in Prison these 8 or 9 Months, where we have had no Books, no Paper, no Pen, no Ink, or convenient place for study, we think we should do evil, thus suddenly to defend into Disputa-tion with them, which may alledge, as they list, the Fathers and their Testimonies, because our Memories have not that which we have read so readily, as to reprove, when they shall report and wreathe the Authors to their purpose, or to bring forth that we may have there for our advantage.

Fifthly, Because in Disputation we shall not be permitted to prosecute our Arguments, but be stoppt when we should speak; one saying this, another that, the third his mind, &c. As was done to the godly Learned Fathers, especially Dr. Ridley at Oxford, who could not be permitted to declare his mind and meaning of the Propositions, and had oftentimes half a dozen at once speaking against him, always letting him to prosecute his Argument, and to answer accordingly: we will not speak of the hissing, scoffing and taunting, which wonderfully then was used. If on this sort, and much worse they handled these Fathers, much more will they be shameless bold with us, if we should enter into Disputation with them.

Sixthly, Because the Notaries, that shall receive and write the Disputations shall be of their appointment, and such as either do not or dare not favour the Truth, and therefore must write either to please them, or else they themselves (the Censors and Judges we mean) at their pleasure will put to, and take from that which is written by the Notaries; who cannot, or must not have in their custody that which they write, longer than the Disputation endureth, as their doings at Oxford declareth. No Copy nor Scroll could any man have by their good will. For the Censors and Judges will have all delivered into their hands. Yea, if any man was seen there to write, as the report is, the same man was sent for, and his Writings taken from him: so must the Disputation serve only for the glory, not of God, but of the Enemies of his Truth.

For these causes we all think it so necessary not to dispute with them, as if we did dispute we should do that which they desire and purposely seek, to promote the Kingdom of Antichrist, and to suppress (as much as may be) the Truth. We will not speak of the offence that might come to the godly, when they should hear, by the report of our Enemies, our Answers and Arguments framed (you may be sure) for their Fantasies, to the flandering of the Verity.

Therefore we publish, and by this Writing notice unto the whole Congregation and Church of England, that for these aforesaid causes we will not dispute with them, otherwise than with the Pen, unless it be before the Queens Highness and her Council, or before the Houses of the Parliament, as is above-said. If they will write, we will answer, and by writing confirm and prove out of the infallible Verity, even the very Word of God, and by the testimony of the good and most ancient Fathers in Christs Church, this our Faith and every piece thereof, which hereafter we in a Sum, do write and send abroad purposely, that our good Brethren and Sisters in the Lord may know it: and to seal up the same, we are ready through Gods help and Grace to give our lives to the Halter or Fire, or otherwise, as God shall appoint: humbly requiring, and in the bowels of our Saviour Jesus Christ beseeching all that fear God, to be have themselves as obedient Subjects to the Queens Highness and the Superior Powers, which are ordained of God under her, rather after our example to give their Heads to the Block, than in any point to rebel, or once to mutter against the Lords Anointed; we mean our Sovereign Lady Queen Mary, into whose heart we beseech the Lord of Mercy plentifully to pour the wisdom and grace of his holy Spirit, now and for ever. Amen.

First, We confess and believe all the Canonical Books of the Old Testament, and all the Books of the New Testament, to be the very true Word of God, and to be written by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, and therefore to be heard accordingly, as the Judge in all Controversies and matters of Religion.

Secondly, We confess and believe, that the Catholick Church, which is the Spouse of Christ, as a most obedient and loving wife, doth embrace and follow the Doctrine of these Books in all matters of Religion; and therefore is she to be heard accordingly; so that those which will not hear this Church thus following and obeying the word of her Husband, we account as Heretics and Schismatics, according to this saying, If he will not hear the Church, let him be to thee as a Heathen.

Thirdly, We believe and confess all the Articles of Faith and Doctrine set forth in the Symbol of the Apostles, which we commonly call the Creed, and in the Symbols of the Councils of Nice, kept An. Dom. 324. of Constantinople, An. Dom. 384. of Ephesus, kept An. Dom. 431. of Chalcedon, kept An. Dom. 454. of Toletum the first and fourth. Also in the Symbols of Athenasius, Tertullian, and of Damasus, which was about the year of our Lord 376. we confess and believe (we say) the Doctrine of the Symbols generally and particularly; so that whosoever doth otherwise, we hold the same to erre from the Truth.

Justification by Faith only in Christ.

Fourthly, We believe and confess concerning Justification, that as it cometh only from Gods mercy through Christ, so it is perceived and had of none, which be of years of discretion, otherwise than by Faith only: which Faith is not an opinion, but a certain persuasion wrought by the Holy Ghost in the mind and heart of Man, where-through as the Mind is illuminated, so the heart is supplied to submit it self to the will of God unfeignedly, and so sheweth forth an inherent Righteousness, which is to be discerned in the Article of Justification, from the Righteousness which God endueth us withal, justifying us, although inseparably they go together. And thus we do not for curiosity or contention sake, but for Conscience sake, that it might be quiet, which it can never be, if we confound without distinction Forgiveness of Sins, and Christs Justice imputed to us, with Regeneration and inherent Righteousness. By this we disallow Papistical Doctrine of Free-will, of works of Supererogation, of Merits, of the necessity of Auricular Confession and Satisfaction to God-worsh.

Service in the Vulgar Tongue.

Fifthly, We confess and believe concerning the exterior Service of God, that it ought to be according to the Word of God; and therefore in the Congregation all things publick ought to be done in such a Tongue as may be most to edifie and not in Latin, where the People understand not the same.

Invocation to God alone.

Sixthly, We confess and believe that God only by Christ Jesus is to be prayed unto and called upon; and therefore we disallow Invocation or Prayer to Saints departed this life.

Purgatory and Masses supererogatory denied.

Seventhly, We confess and believe, that as a man departeth this life, so shall he be judged in the last day generally, and in the mean season is entred either into the state of the Blessed for ever, or Damned for ever; and therefore is either past all help, or else needs no help of any in this life. By reason whereof we affirm Purgatory, Masses of Scels calis, Trentals, and such Sufferages as the Popish Church doth obtrude as necessary, to be the Doctrine of Antichrist.

Two Sacraments.

Eighthly, We confess and believe the Sacraments of Christ, which be Baptism and the Lords Supper; that they ought to be ministered according to the Institution they ought concerning the substantial parts of them: and that they be no longer Sacraments, than they be had in use, and used to the end for which they were instituted.

The Supper to be ministered in both kinds.

And here we plainly confess, that the mutilation of the Lords Supper, and the subtraction of the one kind from the Lay People, is Antichristian. And so is the Doctrine of Transubstantiation of the Sacramental Bread and Wine after the words of Consecration, as they be called.

Item, The Adoration of the Sacrament.

Item, The Adoration of the Sacrament with honour due unto God: the reservation and carrying about of the same.

Item, The Mass to be a Propitiatory Sacrifice.

Item, The Mass to be a Propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and dead, or a work that pleaseth God.

All these we believe and confess to be Antichristian Doctrine: as is the inhibition of Marriage as unlawful to the laity.

All these we believe and confess to be Antichristian Doctrine: as is the inhibition of Marriage as unlawful to the laity. And we doubt not by Gods Grace, but we shall be able to prove all our Conclusions here to be most true by the verity of Gods Word, and consent of the Catholic Church, which followeth and hath followed the governance of Gods Spirit, and the judgment of his Word.

And thus through the Lords help we will do, either in Dispensation by word before the Queens Highness and her Council, either before the Parliament Houses, of whom we doubt not but to be indifferently heard, or our Pens, whensoever we shall be thereto by them that have Authority, required an i commended.

In the mean season, as obedient Subjects, we shall be have our selves towards all that be in Authority, and not cease to pray to God for them, that he would govern them all, generally and particularly, with the Spirit of wisdom and grace. And so we heartily desire, and humbly pray all men to do, in no point consenting to any kind of Rebellion or Sedition against our Sovereign Lady the Queens Highness: but where they cannot obey, but they must disobey God, there to submit themselves with all patience and humility to suffer as the will and pleasure of the higher Powers shall adjudge: as we are ready through the goodness of the Lord to suffer whatsoever they shall adjudge us unto, rather than we will consent to any Doctrine contrary to this which we here confess, unless we shall be justly convinced thereof, either by writing or by word before such Judges as the Queens Highness and her Council, or the Parliament Houses shall appoint. For the Universities and Clergy have condemned our causes already by the bigger, but not by the better part, without all dispensation of the same: and therefore most justly we may, and do appeal from them to be our Judges in this behalf, except it may be in Writing, that to all Men the matter may appear. The Lord of mercy endue us all with the Spirit of his Truth and Grace of perseverance therein unto the end. Amen.

To these things, above said, do I Miles Coverdale, late of Exon, consent and agree, with these mine afflicted Brethren being Prisoners, mine own hand.

And thus much concerning this present Declaration subscribed by these Preachers, which was on the 8th day of May.

Furthermore, the 19th day of the said Month, the Lady Elizabeth, Sister to the Queen, was brought to the Tower, and committed to the custody of Sir John Williams, after Lord Williams of Tamesof whom her Highness was gently and courteously intreated: who afterward was had to Woodstock, and there committed to the keeping of Sir Henry Bensfield Knight, of Oxfordshire in Norfolk: who on the other side both forgetting his estate, and his own duty (as it is reported) shewed himself more hard and straight unto her, than either cause was given of her part, or reason of his own part would have led him, if either grace or wisdom in him might have been before, what danger afterward might have ensued thereof. Whereof we have to intreat more at large (the Lord willing) hereafter in the story and life of Queen Elizabeth.

Upon the Friday following, being the 20th of July, and St. Margarets day, the Prince of Spain landed at Southampton. The Prince himself was the first that landed: who immediately as he set foot upon the Land, drew out his Sword, and carried it naked in his hand a good pretty way.

Then met him, a little without the Town, the Mayor of Southampton with certain Commoners, who delivered the Keys of the Town unto the Prince, who removed his Sword (naked as it was) out of his right into his left hand, and so received the Keys of the Mayor without any word speaking, or countenance of thankfulness, and after a while delivered the Keys to the Mayor again. At the Town-Gate met him the Earl of Arundel and the Lord Williams, and so he was brought to his Lodging.

Upon the Wednesday following, being St. James day, and the 25th of July, Philip Prince of Spain, and Mary Queen of England were married together solemnly in the Cathedral Church at Winchester, by the Bishop of Winchester, in the presence of a great number of Noble Men of both the Realms. At the time of this Marriage the Emperours Ambassador being present, openly pronounced, that in consideration or that Marriage the Emperor had granted and given unto his Son the Kingdom of Naples &c.

August 1.

Wherupon the first day of August following, there was a Proclamation, that from that time forth the stile of all manner of Writings should be altered, and this following should be used.

Philip and Mary by the Grace of God, King and Queen of England, France, Naples, Jerusalem and Ireland, Defenders of the Faith, Princes of Spain and Sicil, Archdukes of Austria, Dukes of Millaine, Burgundy, and Brabant, Countes of Halspurg, Flaunders and Tyrol.

Of this Marriage as the Papists chiefly seemed to be very glad, so divers of them after divers studies, to shew forth their inward affections, made Interludes and Pageants, some drew forth Genealogies, deriving his Pedigree from Edward the Third, and John of Gaunt, some made Verses. Amongst all other, M. White, then Bishop of Lincoln (his Poetical Vein being drunken with joy of the Marriage) spued out certain Verses: the Copy whereof we have here inserted.

Philippi & Mariæ Genealogia, qua ambo Principes ex Johanne de Gamleve, Edwardi Tertii, Angliæ, Franciæque Regis, filio, descendisse ostenduntur. White Lincolniensi Authore.

Hoc Patre proprio, & ſauſto quaſi ſidere nata Jure tenes ſacram, teneſque Maria coronam.

Verses of M. White Bishop of Lincoln, concerning the Marriage of Philip and Mary.

Nubat ut Angla Anglo, Regina Maria Philippo, Inque ſuum fontem Regia ſtirps redeat,
Noluit humani generis Dæmon vetus hoſtis;
Sed Deus Anglorum provida ſpes voluit.
Nollet Scotus inopis, timidusque ad prælia Gallus:
Cæſar, & Italia, & Flandria tota voleat.
Noluit Hæreticus (ſtirps Caiphæ) Pontificum grex, Pontificum ſed grex Catholicus voluit.
Oſo uxorati Patres in Dæmone nollent:
Quinque Cathenati pro pietate volent.
Sed ſidam regni Concilium voluit.
Noluit etatis noſtræ Catilina Viatus,
Sed proceres & plebs & pia turba voleat.
Nollet Graius Dux, & Cantia turba rebellans:
Nos, quoniam Dominus ſic voluit, volumus.
Clarior effectus repetat ſua limina ſanguis, Cum ſit Philippo junctæ Maria viro.

Answer by the Reverend Biſhop of Norwich to the Biſhop of Lincoln.

Fæternò nubat Maria ut Regina Philippo,
Ut ſint pulſa ſuis Sceptra Britanna locis,
Vult Dæmon generis noſtri antiquiſſimus hoſtis;
Anglorum non vult anchora ſola Deus.
Nolunt hunc Galli, nolunt Scoti arripentes, Vult Cæſar, Flandrus, vult Italus Galias:
Vult grex Pontificum, ſtirps Caiphæ, turba bicornis,
Non vult ſanctorum ſed pia turba Patrum.
Nolunt oſio, quibus ſunt vincula jugalia curæ, Quinque cathenati Dæmonis arte volent.
Hoc neque tu proſuſi Dudlec animoſe volebat:
Invocant regni Conſilium voluit.
Dedecus hoc non vult fortiffimus ille Viatus:
Invocis populus, ſic proceresque volent.
Vos vultis, quoniam ſemper mala cuncta volitis:
Non vult Graius Dux, nec pia turba voleat.
Quot tulit Hiſpanus Rex ergo commoda ſecum,
Regina ſocias tam dedit ille manus?

Another Answer by the ſaid Author.

Hiſpano nubat Maria ut Regina Philippo, Exſtipetur ſtirps ut quæque Nobiliſſum,
Vult pater id veſter diſturbans omnia Dæmon:
Non vult Anglorum ſed Pater Alitonans.
Non vult bellipotens Gallus, non vult Scotus acer: Vult Cæſar, Flandrus, Papicolæque volumus.

Goex miratorum vult, Cayphas ipſa propago:
Non vult ſanctorum ſed pius ordo Patrum.
Nolunt oſio, pios qui jure colunt hymenæos:
Quinque cathenati pro impietate volent.
Dudleus minimi vult Northumbrius Heros:
Cui ſua perchara eſt Patria, nemo vult.
Libertatis amans non vult bonus ille Viatus,
Non proceres, non plebs, nec pia turba voleat.
Vos vultis, pietas qui vultis ut exulet omnis:
Non Graius, ſed nec Cantia turba voleat.
Ergo magis clarus qui ſit (rogo) ſanguis avitus,
Quando jugalis ſit junctus uterque iboro?

Other Verses answering to Biſhop White, made by J. C.

Ouamlibet Anglorum ſtirps ementia Philippo, Et Maria Hiſpano de genetrice ſuit.
Ut tamen Hiſpano, conſuſi ſanguinis Angla Nuberet in Gentis dedecus atque Patriæ.
Noluit Anglorum priſcæ virtutis amator:
Sed Deus in noſtram perniciem voluit.
Noluit in noſtram, niſi conſpirata, ſalutem
Turba: quid ad nos ſi gens inimica vult?
Pontifices ſati, quaſi Cayphas, omnia dantes Nolebant: at grex cacolucos voluit.
Elegere pii commiſſa talia nolle:
Velle quidem demens hæreſis illa ſuit.
Conſilium multo præſtantius oſio marij,
Quinque cathenatis ob maleſuſa dabant.
Noluit hoſi jungi thalamus Northumbrius Heros.
O conſulitros, qui voluere, malos.
Noluit baud æquo conſigens Marte Viatus:
Solaque que voluit, turba Papalis erat.
Nolebat Graius, neque terra Britanna volebat:
Nos, quoniam Dominus ſic voluit, tuimus.
Sed tuimus pariter ſata inſelicia: quando Infelix Maria eſt nupta, Philippo, tibi.

Other Verses answering likewise.

Nubat ut Hiſpano Regina Maria Philippo
Dic age, White, mihi, quos voluiſſe vides?
Noluit aut voluit quid inani turba, reſert nil.
Velle & nolle Dei eſt: quid vult ille, reſert.
Hoc quoniam voluit (inquit) Dominus, voluiſſis:
Quid voluit, quoniam neſcis inepte, ciat.
Scilicet hoc voluit, vates ut vanus & auper, Et mendax Whitus Pſeudopropheta foret.
Regi nos Regi nupſit, non nupſerat, Angla eſt.
Non Angla eſt, grævida eſt, non grævida eſt, grævis eſt.
Parturit atque parit, ſic vos voluiſſis evantes,
Nil tamen illa parit: hoc voluit Dominus.
Duxerat ad paucos meſes, mox deſerit idem:
Sponſa eſt, mox vidua eſt: hoc voluit Dominus.
Irrita fruſtrantur ſemper ſic vota malorum, Perniciem Patriæ qui voluere, iæe.

After the conſummation of which Marriage, they both removed from Wincheſter to ſundry other places, and by eaſie Journies came to Winſor Caſtle, where he was ſtalled in the Order of the Garter, upon Sunday, being the 12. of Auguſt. At which time an Herald took down the Arms of England at Winſor, and in the place of them would have ſet up the Arms of Spain, but he was commanded to ſet them up again by certain Lords. From thence they both removed to Richmond, and from thence by Water to London, and landed at the Biſhop of Wincheſter Houſe, through which they paſſed both into Southwark Park, and ſeto Southwark Houſe called Suffolk Place, where they lay that Night, being the 18th of Auguſt.

And the next day, being Saturday, and the 19th of Auguſt, the King and Queens Majeſties rode from Suffolk Place (accompanied with a great number, as well of Noblemen as Gentlemen) through the City of London to White-Hall, and at London-Bridge, as he entered at the Draw-Bridge, was a vain great Spectacle ſet up, two Images preſenting two Giants, one named Corineus, and the other Gogmagog, holding between them certain Latin Verſes, which for the vain ſolicitation of flattery I overpaſs.

And as they paſſed over the Bridge, there was a number of Ordnance ſhot off at the Tower, ſuch as by Old mens report the like hath not been heard or ſeen theſe 100 years.

Anno 1554. From London-Bridge they passed the Conduit in Gracious-freet, which was finely painted, and among other things, the nine Worthies, whereof King Henry the 8th was one. He was painted in Harness, having in one hand a Sword, and in the other hand a Book, whereupon was written Verbum Dei, delivering the same Book (as it were) to his Son King Edward, who was painted in a Corner by him.

But hereupon was no small matter made: for the Bishop of Winchester, Lord Chancellor, sent for the Painter, and not only called him Knave for painting a Book in King Henry's hand, and specially for writing thereupon Verbum Dei, but also rank Traytor and Villain, saying to him that he should rather have put the Book into the Queens hand (who was also painted there) for that she had reformed the Church and Religion, with other things according to the pure and sincere Word of God indeed.

The Painter answered and said, that if he had known that had been the matter wherefore his Lordship sent for him, he could have remedied it and not have troubled his L^{ty}.

The Bishop answered and said, that it was the Queens Majesties will and commandment that he should send for him: and so commanding him to wipe out the Book and Verbum Dei too, he sent him home. So the Painter departed, but fearing lest he should leave some part either of the Book, or of Verbum Dei in King Henry's hand; he wiped away a piece of his Fingers withal.

Here I pass over and cut off other gawds and Pageants of palmist shewed to him in passing through London, with the flattering Verses set up in Latin, wherein were blazed out in one place the five Philips: as the five Worthies of the World, Philip of Macedonia, Philip the Emperours, Philippus Audax, Philippus Bonus, Philipp Prince of Spain and King of England.

In another Poetry King Philip was resembed by an Image representing Orpheus, and all English People resembled to brute and savage Beasts following after Orpheus Harp, and dancing after King Philip's Pipe. Not that I reprehend the art of the Latin Verses, which was fine and cunning, but that I pass over the matter, having other graver things in hand; and therefore pass over also the fight at Pauls Church side, of them that came down upon a Rope tied to the Bartlements with his Head before, neither staying himself with his hand nor foot, which shortly after cost him his life.

But one thing by the way I cannot let pass, touching the young flourishing Rood, newly set up against this present time to welcome King Philip into Pauls Church. The setting up of which Rood was this, and may make as good a Pageant as the best.

Anno 2. Maria, Bener in his Royalty, and all his Prebendaries about him in Pauls Quire, the Rood laid along upon the Pavements, and also the Doors of Pauls being shut, the Bishop with others said and sung divers Prayers by the Rood: that being done, they anointed the Rood with Oil in divers places, and after the anointing, crept unto it, and kissed it.

After that, they took the said Rood, and weighed him up, and set him in his old accustomed place, and all the while they were doing thereof, the whole Quire sang Te Deum, and when that was ended, they rang the Bells, not only for joy, but also for the notable and great fact they had done therein.

Not long after this, a merry Fellow came into Pauls, and spied the Rood with Mary and John new set up; whereto, among a great sort of People, he made low Courtesie, and said: Sir, your Masterhip is welcome to Town. I had thought to have talked further with your Masterhip, but that ye be here clothed in the Queens Colours. I hope that ye be but a Summers Bird, in that ye be dressed in white and green.

The Prince thus being in the Church of Pauls, after Dr. Harpsfield had finished his Oration in Latin, set forward through Fleetstreet, and so came to White-hall, where he with the Queen remained four days after, and from thence removed unto Richmond.

After this, all the Lords had leave to depart into their Countries, with strict commandment to bring all their Harness and Artillery into the Tower of London with all speed. Now remained there no English Lord at the Court, but the Bishop of Winchester. From Richmond they removed to Hampton Court, where the Hall-door within the Court was continually shut, so that no man might enter, unless his Errand were first known, which seemed strange to Englishmen that had not bin used thereto.

About the 8. day of September Bishop Bener began his Visitation, who charged six men in every Parish to enquire (according to their Oaths) and to present before him the day after St. Matthews day, being the 23. of September, all such persons as either had or should offend in any of his Articles, which he had set forth to the number of 37. Of the which Visitation of Bener I have somewhat more largely to intreat, after that first I shall overpass a few other things following in course of this present story.

The 17. day of September was a Proclamation in London, That all Vagabonds and Mafterles men, as well Strangers as Englishmen, should depart the City within five days; and strictly charging all Inholders, Victuallers, Taverners and Alchouse-keepers, with all other that sell Victuals, that they (after the said five days) should not sell any Meate, Drink, or any kind of Victual to any Servingman whatsoever, unless he brought a Testimonial from his Master to declare whole Servant he was, and were in continual household with his said Master, upon pain to run in danger of the Law, if they offended herein.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 30. day of September, the Bishop of Winchester Lord Chancellor of England, preached at Pauls-Crofs, at whose Sermon were present all the Council that were at the Court: namely, the Marquess of Winchester, the Earl of Arundell, Lord North, Sir Anthony Brown, M. Rochester, M. Walgrave, M. Englefield, Lord Fitzwater, and Secretary Peters, and the Bishops of London, Duresm and Ely, which three sat under the Bishops Arms. The Gospel whereof he made his Sermon, is written in the 22. Chapter of Matthew, where the Pharisees came unto Christ, and amongst them one asked Christ which was the greatest Commandment; Christ answered, Thou shalt love thy Lord God with all thy heart, &c. and thy Neighbour as thy self, in these two is comprehended the Law and the Prophets.

After his long declaration of these Words, speaking very much of Love and Charity, at last he had occasion upon S. James his words to speak of the true Teachers, and of the false Teachers; saying, that all the Preachers almost in King Edwards time, preached nothing but Voluptuousness, and filthy and blasphemous Lies, affirming their Doctrine to be that false Doctrine whereof S. James speaketh; saying, that it was full of perverse Zeal, earthly, full of discord and dissention, that the Preachers aforesaid would report nothing truly, and that they taught that it was lawful for a man to put away his Wife for Adultery, and marry another, and that if a man vowed to day, he might break it to morrow at his pleasure, with many other things which I omit. And when he spake of the Sacrament, he said, that all the Church from the beginning have confessed Christs Natural Body to be in Heaven, and here to be in the Sacrament, and so concluded that matter; and then willed all Men to say with Josephs Brethren, Peccavimus in fratrem: We have all sinned against our Brother, and so (said he) have I too. Then he declared what a Noble King and Queen we have, saying, that if he should go about to shew that the King came hither for no necessity or need, and what he had brought with him, it should be superfluous, seeing it is evidently known, that he hath ten times as much as we are in hope and possession of, affirming him to be as wife, sober, gentle, and temperate a Prince as ever was in England, and if it were not so proved, then to take him for a false Liar for his so saying: Exhorting all men to make much of him, and to win him whilst we had him, and so should we also win all such as he hath brought with him, and so made an end.

Upon the Tuesday following, being the seventh day of October, twenty Carts came from Westminster laden (as it was noised) with Gold and Silver, and certain of the Guard with them through the City to the Tower, and there it was received in by a Spaniard, who was the Kings Treasurer, and had custody of it within the Tower. It was matted about with Mats, and mailed in little bundles about two foot long, and almost half a foot thick, and in every Cart were six of those bundles. What it was indeed, God knoweth, for it is to us uncertain.

About the same time, or a little before, upon Corpus Christi Day, the Procession being made in Smithfield, while after the manner the Priest with his Box went under the Canopy, by chance there came by the way a certain simple man, named John Street, a Joyner of Coleman-Street, who having some haste in his business, and finding no other way to pass through, by chance went under the Canopy by the Priest. The Priest seeing the man so to presume to come under the Canopy, being belike afraid, and worse feared than hurt, for fear let his Pix fall down. The poor Man, being straightways apprehended, was had to the Counter, the Priest accusing him unto the Council, as though he had come to flay him, whereas the poor Man, (as himself hath since declared unto us) had no such thought ever in his mind. Then from the Counter he was had unto Newgate, where he was cast into the Dungeon, there chained to a Post, where he was cruelly and miserably handled, and so extremely dealt withal, that being but simple before, he was now feared out of his Wits altogether, and so upon the same had to Bedlam. Whereupon the brief Chronicle of London in this point is not to be credited, which truly reported that he feigned himself in Newgate to be mad: which thing we in writing of this History, by due Inquisition of the party, have found to be contrary.

About the fifth of October, and within a fortnight following, were divers as well Householders as Servants and Apprentices apprehended and taken, and committed to sundry Prisons, for the having and selling of certain Books which were sent into England by the Preachers that fled into Germany and other Countreys; which Books nipped a great number so near, that within one fortnight there were little left than Threefore imprisoned for this matter: among whom was Master Brown a Goldsmith, Mr. Spark a Draper, Randal Tiver a Stationer, Mr. Besten a Merchant, with many other.

Upon the Sunday, being the 14. day of October, the old Bishop of Durham preached in the Shroud.

Upon St. Lukes day following, being the 18. of October, the Kings Majesty came from Westminster to Pauls Church along the Streets, accompanied with a great number of Noble men, and there he was received under a Canopy at the West-door, and so came in to the Chancel, where he heard Mass, which a Spanish Bishop and his own Chappell sing, and that done he returned to Westminster to Dinner again.

Upon Friday, being the 26. of October, certain men, whereof I spake before, which were of Mr. Throgmortons Quest, being in number 8. (for the other four were delivered out of Prison, for that they submitted themselves, and said they had offended, like Weaklings, not considering truth to be truth, but of force for fear said so) these eight Men, I say, whereof M. Emanuel Lucas, and M. Whetstone were chief, were called before the Council of the Star-Chamber: where they all affirmed that they had done all things in that matter according to their knowledge, and with good Consciences, even as they should answer before God at the day of Judgment. Where M. Lucas said openly before all the Lords, that they had done in the matter like honest men, and true and faithful Subjects, and therefore they humbly besought the Lord Chancellor, and the other Lords, to be means to the King and Queens Majesties that they might be discharged and set at liberty, and said that they were all contented humbly to submit themselves to their Majesties, saving and reserving their Truth, Consciences, and Honesty. Some of the Lords said, that they were worthy to pay a thousand pounds apiece, and other some said, that Mr. Lucas and Mr. Whetstone were worthy to pay a 1000 Marks apiece, and the rest 500 l. apiece. In conclusion, Sentence was given by the Lord Chancellor, that they should pay a thousand Marks apiece, and that they should go to Prison again, and there remain till further order were taken for their punishment.

Upon Tuesday, being the 30. of October, the Lord J. Gray was delivered out of the Tower, and set at liberty.

Upon Sunday the 4. of November, five Priests did Penance at Pauls-Cross, which were content to put away their Wives, and take upon them again to minister. Every of them had a Taper in his hand, and a Rod, whereupon the Preacher did dispel them.

Upon Wednesday the 7. of November, the Lord Paulet, and Sir Edward Hastings Master of the Horse, were sent as Ambassadors, I know not whither, but, as it was adjudged, to Cardinal Poole, who lay all that Summer before at Brussels: and it was thought they were sent to accompany and conduct him into England, where at that time he was nominated and appointed Bp. of Canterbury.

Upon the Friday following the 9. of November, Mr. Barlow late Bishop of Bath, and Mr. Cardmaker, were brought before the Council in the Star-Chamber, where after communication they were commanded to the Fleet.

Upon the Saturday, being the 10. of November, the Sheriffs of London had commandment to take an Inventory of every one of their goods which were of Master Throgmortons Quest, and to seal up their Doors, which was done the same day. M. Whetstone, M. Lucas, and M. Kytely, were judged to pay 1000 pounds apiece, and the rest 1000 Marks apiece, to be paid within one fortnight after. From this payment were exempted those four which confessed a fault, and submitted themselves, whose Names, are these, M. Lee, M. Poynter, M. Bejwick, and M. Carret.

Mention was made a little before of the Visitation of Edmund Boner Bishop of London, which began (as is said) about the Month of September: for the better preparation whereof were set forth certain Articles to the number of 37. Which Articles, partly for the tediousness of them, partly for that M. Bale in a certain Treatise hath sufficiently painted out the same in their colours, partly also because I will not infect this Book with them, I slip them over, proceeding in the progress of this Bishop in his Visitation in the County of Essex. Who passing through the said County of Essex, being attended with divers Worshipful of the Shire (for so they were commanded) arrived at Sterford in Hertfordshire, where he rested certain days, solacing himself after that painful peregrination with no small feasting and banqueting with his Attendants aforesaid, at the house of one Parsons his Nephew, whose Wife he commonly called his fair Neice (and fair she was indeed) he took there great pleasure to hear her play upon the Virginals (wherein she excelled) inasmuch that every dinner (sitting by his sweet side) he arose and played three several times at his request of his good and spiritual Devotion towards her. These certain days thus passed in this Bishop-like fashion, he proceeded in his Popish Visitation towards Hadham his own House and Parish, not past two miles from Sterford, being there most solemnly run out, as in all other places whereas he passed. At length drawing near unto Hadham, when he heard no stirring there in honour of his Holiness, he grew into some Choler, and the nearer he approached the hotter was his fit: and the quieter the Bells were, the unquieter was his Mood. Thus rode he on chafing and fuming with himself. What meaneth (saith he) that Knave the Clark that be Ringeth us? and the Parson that be meeteth me not? with sundry other furious words of fiery element. There this patient Prelate, coming to the Town, aighted, calling for the Key of the Church, which was then all unread, for that (as they then pretended) he had prevented his time by two hours, whereupon he grew from choler to plain melancholy, so as no man willingly would deal with him to qualifie the raging humor so far incorporated in his Brest. At the last, the Church-door being opened, the Bishop entered, and finding no Sacrament hanged up, nor Rood-loft decked after the Popish Precept (which had commanded about the same time a well favoured Rood, and of tall stature unfastenably in all Churches to be set up) curtailed his small Devotions, and fell from all choler and melancholy to flat madnes in the uttermost degree, swearing and raging with an hunting Oath or two, and by no Beggars, that in his own Church, where he hoped to have seen best order, he found most disorder, to his Honours most heavy discomfort, as he said, calling the Parson (whose name was Doctor Bricker) Knave, and Heretic. Who there humbled himself, and yielded, as it were, to his fault, saying, He was sorry his Lordship was come before that he and his Parish looked for him, and therefore could not do their duties to receive him accordingly: and as for those things lacking, he trusted in short time hereafter he should compass that, which hitherto he could not bring about.

Therefore if it pleased his Lordship to come to his poor Houfe (where his Dinner was prepared) he would satisfie him in those things which his Lordship thought amiss. Yet this so reasonable an Answer nothing could satisfie nor allwaie his passion unreasonable. For the Catholick Prelate utterly defied him and his Cheer, commanding him out of his sight, saying, as his by-word was, Before God thou art a Knaave, evant Heretick, and therewithal, whether thrusting or striking at him, so it was that with his hand he gave Sir Thomas Joffelin Knight (who was then amongst the rest, and stood next the Bishop) a good fiewet upon the upper part of the Neck, even under his Ear, as some say which stood by, but, as he himself said, he hit him full upon the Ear: whereat he was somewhat astonished at the suddenness of the Quarrel for that time.

At last he spake and said, What meanest thou Lordship? have you been trained in Will Sommers School, to strike him that standeth next you? The Bishop still in rage either heard not, or would not hear.

Then M. Pecknam Dean of Pauls, seeing the Bishop still in this bitter rage, said, O M. Joffelin, you must bear with my Lords, for truly his long imprisonment in the Marshalsey, and the misusing of him there hath altered him, that in these Passions he is not ruler of himself, nor it behooveth any man to give him counsel until his heat be past, and then assure your self M. Joffelin, my Lord will be sorry for those abuses that now he cannot see in himself. Whereunto he merrily replied and said, So it seems M. Pecknam, for now that he is come forth of the Marshalsey, he is ready to go to Bedlam. At which merry Conceit some laughed, and mo smiled, because the Nail was so truly hit upon the Head. The Bishop, nothing abashed at his own folly, gave a deaf Ear; as no marvel it was that he turned little to strike a Stranger, which spared not the burning of so many good men.

After this worthy combat thus finished and achieved, this Martial Prelate presently tooketh him to his Horse again, notwithstanding he was minded to tarry at Hadham three or four days, and so had made provision in his own Houfe, and leaving his Dinner rode that Night with a small company of his household to Ware, where he was not looked for three days after, to the great wonder of all the Country, why he so prevented his day aforetalled.

At this hasty posting away this Bishop, his whole Train of Attendants therewith him. Also his Doctors and Chaplains (a few excepted) turried behind, and Dined at Doctor Brickets as merrily, as he rode toward Ware all chafing: which Dinner was prepared for the Bishop himself. Now whether the Bishop were offended at those Solemnities which he wanted, and was accustomed to be saluted withal in other places where he journeyed, joining to that, that his great God was not exalted above-ground over the Altar, nor his Block Almighty set seemly in the Rood-loft to entertain Strangers, and thereupon took occasion to quarrel with Doctor Bricket (whose Religion perchance he somewhat suspected) I have not perfectly to say, but so it was supposed of divers the cause thereof to rise, which dave the Bishop so hastily from such a Dinner. Testified by such as there and then were present. Rich. K. &c.

A story of a Rood set up in Lancashire.

IN this Visitation of Bishop Boner above-mentioned, ye see how the Bishop took on for not setting up the Rood, and ringing the Bells at Hadham. Ye heard also of the Precept, which commanded in every Parish a Rood to be erected, both well favoured and of a tall stature. By the occasion whereof it cometh in mind (and not out of place) to story likewise what happened in a certain Town in Lancashire near to Lancaster, called Cockram, where the Parishioners and Church-wardens, having the same time a like Charge for the erecting of a Rood in their Parish Church, had made their bargain and were at a price with one that could cunningly carve and paint such Idols, for the framing of their Rood: who, according to his Promise, made them one, and set it up in their Church. This done, he demanded his Money: But they, mistaking his Workmanship, refused to pay him, whereupon he arrested them, and the Matter was brought before the Mayor of Lancaster, who was a very meet Man for such a purpose, and an old Favourite of the Gospel, which is rare in that Country. Then the Carver began to declare how they Covenanted with him for the making of a Rood with the appurtenances, ready carved and set up in their Church, which he according to his Promise had done, and now demanding his Money, they refused to pay him. Is this true, quoth the Mayor to the Wardens? Yea Sir, said they. And why do you not pay the poor Man his due, quoth he? And it please you Master Mayor (quoth they) because the Rood we had before was a well-favoured man, and he promised to make us such another: but this that he hath set us up now is the worst favoured thing that ever you set your eyes on, gaping and grinning in such sort, that none of our Children dare once look him in the face, or come near him. The Mayor thinking that it was good enough for that purpose, if it had been worse; My Masters (quoth he) howsoever the Rood like you, the poor mans labour hath been never the less, and it is pity that he should have any hindrance or loss thereby. Therefore I will tell you what you shall do: Pay him the Money ye promised him, and go your ways home and look on it, and if it will not serve for a god, make no more ado, but clap a pair of Horns on his Head, and so he will make an excellent Devil. This the Parishioners took well in worth: the Poor man had his Money, and divers laughed well therat: but so did not the Babylonish Priests.

This Mayor above-mentioned continued a Protestant almost 50 years, and was the only Reliever of March the Martyr (whose story followeth hereafter) with Meat, Drink and Lodging, while he lay in Lancaster Castle, the space of three Quarters of a year, before he was had to Chester to be burned, &c.

About this time or the month next before, which was October, there came a Precept or Mandate from Boner Bof London, to all Bishops and Curates within his Diocess, for the abolishing of such Scriptures and Writings as had been painted upon Church-Walls before, in King Edward days. The Copy of which Precept or Mandate here we thought good to express, that the World might see the wicked proceedings of their Impious Zeal, or rather their malicious Rage against the Lord and his Word, and against the edifying of Christian People: whereby it might appear, by this blotting out of Scriptures, not only how blasphemously they spake against the holy Scriptures of God, but also how studiously they fought by all manner of means to keep the People still in Ignorance. A Mandate of Boner Bishop of London, to abolish the Scriptures and Writings painted upon the Church-Walls.

Endured, by Gods permission Bishop of London, to all and every Parsons, Vicars, Clerks, and Lectors, within the Parish of Hadham, or within the precinct of our Diocess of London, wherefoever being, sendeth Greeting, Grace and Benediction.

Because some Children of Iniquity, given up to Carnal desires and Novelities, have by many ways enterprized to banish the ancient manner and order of the Church, and to bring in and establish Sects and Heresies; taking from thence the picture of Christ, and many things besides instituted and observed of ancient time laudably in the same, placing in the rooms thereof such things, as in such a place it behooved them not to do, and also have procured as a stay to their Heresies (as they thought) certain Scriptures wrongly applied to be painted upon the Church-Walls, all which persons tend chiefly to this end; that they might uphold the liberty of the Flesh, and marriage of Priests, and destroy, as much as lay in them, the reverent Sacrament of the Altar, and might extinguish and enervate Holy-days, Fasting-days, and other laudable Discipline of the Catholick Church, opening a window to all Vices, and utterly closing up the way unto Vertue: Wherefore we being moved with a Christian Zeal, judging that the premises are not to be longer suffered, do for discharge of our duty, commit unto you jointly and severally, and by the tenor hereof do straitly charge and command you, that at the receipt hereof, with all speed convenient, you do warn, or cause to be warned, first, second, and third time, and preceptually, all and singular Church-wardens and Parishioners whofoever within our foresaid Diocess of London, wherefoever any such Scriptures or Paintings have been attempted, that they abolish and extinguisht such manner of Scriptures, so that by no means they either read or seen, and shew to proceed moreover, as they shall see good and laudable in themselves. And if after the said monition, the said Churchwardens and Parishioners shall be found remiss and negligent, or culpable, then you jointly and severally shall see the said Scriptures to be razed, avowed and extinguished forthwith: citing all and singular these Churchwardens and Parishioners, (whom we at a for too some do cite here by the tenor hereof) that all and singular the Churchwardens and Parishioners being slack and negligent, culpable therein, shall appear before us, our Vicar general and principal Official, or our Commissary special in our Cathedral Church of St. Paul at London, in the Consistory there, at the hour appointed for the same, the sixth day next after their Citation, if it be a Court-day, or else at the next Court-day after ensuing, whereat either we or our Official or Commissary shall sit: there to say and allege for themselves some reasonable cause, if they have or can tell of any, why they ought not to be excommunicated, or otherwise punished for their such negligence, slackness and fault, to say and to allege, and further to do and receive, as Law and Reason requireth. And what you have done in the premises, do you certify us, or our Vicar, principal Official, and such our Commissary, diligently and duly in all things, and through all things, or let him among you thus certify us, which hath taken upon him to execute this Mandate: In Witness whereof we have set our Seals to these Presents. M. Christopher sent to Cambridge with Graduation Injunctions.

About this time the Lord Chancellor sent M. Christopher upon the University of Cambridge, with these Articles, which he enjoined them to observe.

The first, That every scholar should wear his apparel according to his degree in the Schools.

The second was touching the pronunciation of the Greek Tongue.

The third, That every Preacher there should declare the whole stile of the King and Queen in their Sermons.

In this University of Cambridge, and also of Oxford, by reason of the bringing of these things, and especially for the alteration of Religion, many good Wits and Learned men departed the Universities: of whom, some of their own accord gave over, some were thrust out of their Fellowships, some were miserably handled: inasmuch that in Cambridge, in the College of St. John, there were four and twenty places void together, in whose rooms were taken in four and twenty other, which neither in Virtue nor in Religion seemed to answer to them before. And no less miserable was the estate of Oxford, by reason of the time, and the strict dealing of the Visitors, that, for setting forward their Papistical proceedings, had no regard or respect to the forwardness of good Wits, and the maintenance of good Letters, beginning then more and more to flourish in that University.

In Cambridge were 24 places void at one time in one College.

A Popish Exhortation of Doctor Trehan.

And for so much as we have entred into the mention of Oxford, we may not pass over in silence the famous Exhortation of Dr. Trehan, who supplying the room of the Subdean in Christ-Church, after he had called all the Students of the Colledge together, with great Eloquence and Art perswatory, began to commend the dignity of the Mass unto them, declaring, that there was stuff enough in the Scriptures to prove the Mass good. Then to allure them to the Catholick Service of the Church, he used these Reasons, declaring that there were a goodly company of Copes, that were appointed to Windsor, but he had found the Queen so gracious unto him, that they should come to Christ-Church. Now, if they like honest men would come to Church, they should wear them on Holy-days. And besides all this, he would get them the Lady Bells of Bampton, and that should make the sweetest Ring in all England. And as for an holy Water sprinkle, he had already the fairest that was within the Realm. Wherefore he thought that no man would be so mad to forgo these Commodities, &c.

The great Reasons of Dr. Trehan.

Which things I rehearse, that it may appear what want of discretion is in the Fathers of Popery, and into what idle Follies such men do fall, whom I beseech the Lord, if it be his pleasure to reduce to a better Truth and to open their eyes to see their own blindness.

To proceed now further in the course and race of our Story whereas we left, being before in the Month of November, it followeth more, that on the xxiiij day of the same Month of November, being Monday, began the Parliament holden at Westminster, to the beginning whereof both the King and Queen rode in their Parliament Robes, having two Swords born before them. The Earl of Pembroke bare his Sword, and the Earl of Westmerland bare the Queens. They had two Caps of Maintenance born before them, whereof the Earl of Arundel bare one, and the Earl of Shrewsbury the other.

Cardinal Pole landed at Dover upon the Wednesday, being the 21. day of November, on which day one Act passed in the Parliament for his restitution in Blood, utterly repealing as false and most slanderous, that Act made against him in King Henry the Eighth's time, and on the next day being Thursday, and the 22. of November, the King and the Queen came both to the Parliament House to give their Royal Assent, and to establish this Act against his coming.

Upon the Saturday, being the 24. of November, the said Cardinal came by Water to London, and so to Lambeth House, which was ready prepared against his coming.

Upon the Wednesday following, being the 28. of November, there was general Procession in Pauls for joy that the Queen was conceived and quick with Child, as it was declared in a Letter sent from the Council to the Bishop of London.

The same day were present at this Procession ten Bishops, with all the Prebendaries of Pauls, and also the Lord Mayor with the Aldermen, and a great number of Commons of the City in their best array. The Copy of the Councils Letter here followeth, ad perpetuam res memoriam.

A Copy of a Letter sent from the Council unto Edmund Bener Bishop of London, concerning Queen Maries conceiving with Child.

After our hearty Commendations unto your good Lordship: whereas it hath pleased Almighty God amongst other his infinite benefits of late most graciously poured upon us and this whole Realm, to extend his Benediction upon the Queens Majesty in such sort, as she is conceived and quick of Child: Whereby her Majesty if Q. Mary (being our natural Lady, Queen, and undoubted Inheritor of this Imperial Crown) good hope of certain Succession in the Crown is given unto us, and consequently by the great Calamities (which for want of such Succession might otherwise have fallen upon us and our Posterity) shall by Gods grace be well avoided, if we thankfully acknowledge this benefit of Almighty God, endeavouring our selves with earnest Repentance to thank, honour and serve him, as we be most bounden: These be not only to advertise you of these good news, to be by you published in all places within your Diocess, but also to pray and require you, that both your self do give God thanks with us for this his especial grace, and also give order that Thanks may be openly given by singing of Te Deum in all the Churches within your said Diocess; and that likewise all Priests and other Ecclesiastical Ministers, in their Masses, and other Divine Services, may continually pray to Almighty God so to extend his holy band over her Majesty, the King, Hisness, and this whole Realm, as that this thing, being by his Omnipotent Power graciously thus begun, may by the same be well continued and brought to good effect, to the glory of his Name. Whereunto, albeit we doubt not, ye would of your self have had special regard without these our Letters, yet for the earnest desire we have to have this thing done out of hand, and diligently continued, we have also written these our Letters, to put you in remembrance; and so bid your Lordship most heartily well to fare. Anno

Also the same day in the Afternoon Cardinal Poole came to the Parliament-House, which at that present was kept in the great Chamber of the Court at White-Hall, for that the Queen was then sick, and could not go abroad: where the King and Queens Majesty sitting under the Cloth of Estate, and the Cardinal sitting on the Right hand, with all the other Estates of the Parliament being present, the Bishop of Winchester being Lord Chancellor began in this manner.

The words of Winchester for receiving of the Cardinal.

Winchester Words for Card. Poole.

MY Lords of the Upper House, and you my Masters of the Nether House, here is present the Right Reverend Father in God my Lord Cardinal Poole, come from the Apostolick See of Rome, as Ambassador to the King and Queens Majesties, upon one of the weightiest Causes that ever happened in this Realm, and which pertaineth to the glory of God, and your Universal benefit. The which Ambassage their Majesties pleasure is to be signified unto you all by his own mouth, trusting that you will receive and accept it in as benevolent and thankful wise as their Highnesses have done, and that you will give an attentive and inclinable ear unto him.

When the Lord Chancellor had thus ended his Talk, the Cardinal, taking the time then offered, began his Oration, wherein he declared the causes of his coming, and what were his desires and requests. In the which mean time the Court Gate was kept shut until he had made an end of his Oration.

The renour of Cardinal Pooles Oration, made in the Parliament-House.

Card. Poole Oration in the Parliament House.

MY Lords all, and you that are the Commons of this present Parliament assembled, which in effect is nothing else but the State and Body of the whole Realm. As the cause of my repair hither hath been most wisely and gravely declared by my Lord Chancellor, so, before that I enter to the particularities of my Commission, I have somewhat touching my self, and to give most humble and hearty Thanks to the King and Queens Majesties, and after that to you all, which of a Man exiled and banished from this Commonwealth, have restored me to be a Member of the same, and of a man having no place neither here, or elsewhere within this Realm, have admitted me in a place, where to speak and to be heard. This I protest unto you all, that though I was Exiled my Native Country without just cause, as God knoweth, yet the Ingratitude could not pull from me the affection and desire that I had to profit and do you good. If the offer of my service might have been received, it was never to be feck, and where that could not be taken, you never failed of my Prayer, nor ever shall.

But leaving the rehearsal thereof, and coming more near to the matter of my Commission, I signify unto you all, that my principal Travel is for the reformation of this noble Realm to the ancient Nobility, and to declare unto you, that the See Apostolick, from whence I come, hath a special respect to this Realm above all other, and not without cause, seeing that God himself, as it were by Providence, hath given this Realm prerogative of Nobility above other: which to make more plain unto you, it is to be considered that this Island first of all Islands received the light of Christs Religion. For as stories testify, it was prima Provinciarum quæ amplexa est fidem Christi.

For the Britains being first Inhabitants of this Realm (notwithstanding the subjection of the Emperours and Heathen Princes) did receive Christs Faith from the Apostolick See universally, and not in parts as other Countries, nor by one and one, as Clocks increase their hours by distinction of times, but altogether at once, as it were in a moment. But after that their ill Merits or forgetfulness of God had deserved expulsion, and that Strangers being Infidels had possessed this Land, yet God of his goodness, not leaving where he once loved, so illuminated the hearts of the Saxons being Heathen men, that they forsook the darkness of Heathen Errors, and embraced the light of Christs Religion: so that within a small space Idolatry and Heathen Superstition was utterly abandoned in this Island.

This was a great Prerogative of Nobility, the benefit whereof though it be to be ascribed to God, yet the mean occasion of the same came from the Church of Rome. In the Faith of which Church we have ever since continued and consented with the rest of the World in unity of Religion. And to shew further the fervent Devotion of the Inhabitants of this Island towards the Church of Rome, we read that divers Princes in the Saxons time with great Travel and Expences went personally to Rome, as Offa and Adolphus; which thought it not enough to shew themselves obedient to the said See; unless that in their own persons they had gone to that same place from whence they had received so great a grace and benefit.

In the time of Carolus Magnus, who first founded the University of Paris, he sent into England for Alcuin a great Learned man, which first brought Learning to that University, whereby it seemeth that the greatest part of the World fetcht the light of Religion from England.

Adrian the Fourth being an English-man converted Norway from Infidelity, which Adrian afterwards, upon great affection and love that he bare to this Realm being his Native Country, gave to Henry the Second, King of England, the right and Signory of the Dominion of Ireland, which pertained to the See of Rome.

I will not rehearse the manifold benefit, that this Realm hath received from the Apostolick See, nor how ready the same hath been to relieve us in all our necessities. Nor will I rehearse the manifold Miseries and Calamities that this Realm hath suffered by swerving from that Unity. And even as in this Realm, so also in all other Countries which refusing the Unity of the Catholick Faith have followed fantastical Doctrine, the like Plagues have happened. Let Asia and the Empire of Greece be a Specie unto the World, who, by swerving from the Unity of the Church of Rome, are brought into Captivity and subjection of the Turk. All stories be full of like Examples. And to come unto the later time, look upon our Neighbours in Germany, who, by swerving from this Unity, are miserably afflicted with diversity of Sects, and divided into Factions.

What shall I rehearse unto you the tumults and effusion of Blood that hath happened these late days? Or trouble you with the rehearsal of those Plagues that have happened since this Innovation of Religion, whereof you have felt the bitterness, and I have heard the Report? Of all which matters I can say no more, but such was the misery of the time. And see how far forth this Fury went. For those that live under the Turk may freely live after their Conscience, and so was it not lawful here.

If men examine well upon what grounds these Innovations began, they shall well find that the Root of this, as of many other Mischiefs, was Avarice, and that the lust and carnal Affection of one man confounded all Laws both divine and human. And notwithstanding all these Devices and Policies practiced within this Realm against the Church of Rome, they needed not to have lost you, but that they thought rather as Friends to reconcile you, than as Enemies to infect you. For they wanted not great Officers of the most mighty Potentates in all Europe to have aided the Church in that Quarrel. Then mark the Sequel: There seemed by these Changes to rise a great face of Riches and Gain, which in proof came to great misery and lack. See how God then can confound the wisdom of the wise, and turn unjust Policy to meer folly, and that thing which seemed to be done for relief, was cause of plain ruine and decay. Yet fee that goodness of God, which at no time failed us, but most benignly offered his Grace, when it was of our parts least sought and worst deserved.

And when all light of true Religion seemed utterly extinct, the Churches defaced, the Altars overthrown, the Ministers corrupted: even like as in a Lamp the light being covered, yet it is not quenched, even so in a few remained the confession of Christs Faith, namely in the Breast of the Queens Excellency, of whom to speak without adulation, the saying of the Prophet may be verified, Eccæ quasi derelicta!

And see how miraculously God of his goodness preserved her Highness, contrary to the expectation of many, that when numbers conspired against her, and Policies

That the Faith of the Romans came first from Rome, whence it is said, yet that Faith and Doctrine of the Romans was not such then as it is now. Read before. Or this is a read before. Or otherwise read before.

May rather what Reason and Tradition the See of Rome hath sucked out of England, it is incredible. The cause of their subjection to the Turk cannot be provided to come by swerving from the Unity of the Church of Rome, for they never fully joynted unto it. And as touching the subjection of Asia and Greece to the Turk, read in the story of the Turk before. And why? then do ye more cruelly than the Turk persecute others for their Conscience?

More for the Venage that was hoped by it, than for any great love.

England, of all Islands, received first the Faith of Christ.

And therefore it may be said, Da gloriam Deo. For in mans Judgment, you her Graces part was nothing in appearance but despair.

And yet for all these practices and devices of ill men, here you see her Grace established in her Estate, being your lawful Queen and Governess, born among you, whom God hath appointed to reign over you for the restitution of true Religion, and extirpation of all Errors and Sects. And to confirm her Grace the more strongly in this enterprise, lo how the Providence of God hath joyned her in Marriage with a Prince of like Religion, who being a King of great Might, Armor, and Force, yet useful towards you neither Armor nor Force, but seeketh you by the way of Love and Amity: in which respect great cause you have to give thanks to Almighty God, that hath sent you such a Catholick Governess. It shall be therefore your part again to love, obey, and serve them.

And as it was a singular favour of God to conjoin them in Marriage, so it is not to be doubted but that he shall send them lives, for the comfort and surety of this Commonwealth.

Plain the Emperour compared to David,

Of all Princes in Europe, the Emperor hath travelled most in the cause of Religion, as it appeareth by his acts in Germany: yet happily by some secret Judgment of God, he hath not achieved the end. With whom in my Journey hitherwards I had conference touching my Legation: whereof when we had understandings, he shewed a great appearance of most earnest joy and gladness, saying, That it rejoiced him no less of the re-concilement of this Realm unto Christian Unity, than that his Son was placed by Marriage in the Kingdom, and most glad he was of all, that the occasion thereof should come by me being an English-man born, which is (as it were) to call home our selves. I can well compare him to David, which though he were a Man elect of God, yet, for that he was contaminate with Blood and War, he could not build the Temple of Jerusalem, but left the finishing thereof to Solomon, which was Rex pacificus. So may it be thought, that the appealing of Controversies of Religion in Christianity, is not appointed to this Emperor, but rather to his Son, who shall perform the building that his Father had begun. Which Church cannot be perfectly builded, unless universally in all Realmes we adhere to one Head, and do acknowledge him to be the Vicar of God, and to have Power from above. For all Power is of God, according to the saying, Non est potestas nisi à Deo. And therefore I consider that all Power being in God, yet, for the conservation of quiet and godly life in the World, he hath derived that Power from above into the parts here in Earth: which is, into the Power Imperial, and Ecclesiastical. And these two several effects, and operations. For Secular Princes, to whom the Temporal Sword is committed, be Ministers of God to execute Vengeance upon Transgressors and Evil livers, and to preserve the well-doers and innocents from Injury and Violence. Which Power is represented in these two most excellent Persons, the King and Queens Majesty here present, who have this Power committed unto them immediately from God, without any Superiour in that behalf.

Clarke declared,

The other Power is of Ministration, which is the power of the Keys, and Order in the Ecclesiastical State, which is by the Authority of Gods Word, and examples of the Apostles, and of all old holy Fathers from Christ hitherto, attributed and given to the Apostolick See of Rome, by special Privilege. From which See I am here deputed Legate and Embassador, having full and ample Commission from thence, and have the Keys committed to my hands, I confess to you that I have the Keys, not as mine own Keys, but as the Keys of him that sent me, and yet cannot open; not for want of Power in me to give, but for certain impediments in you touching, which must be taken away before my Commission can take effect. This I protest before you, my Commission is not of prejudice to any person. I come not, to destroy, but to build. I come to reconcile, not to condemn, I am not come to compel, but to call again, I am not come to call any thing in question already done, but my Commission is of grace and clemency, to such as will receive it. For touching all matters that be past they shall be as things cast into the Sea of forgetfulness.

But the mean, whereby you shall receive this benefit, is to revoke and repeal those Laws and Statutes, which be impediments, blocks and bars to the execution of my Commission. For like as I my self had neither place nor voice to speak here among you, but was in all respects a banished man, till such time as ye had repealed those Laws that lay in my way: even so cannot you receive the benefit and grace offered from the Apostolick See, until the abrogation of such Laws, whereby you have disjoyned and differred your selves from the Unity of Christs Church.

It remaineth therefore that you, like true Christians and provident men for the weal of your Souls and Bodies, ponder what is to be done in this so weighty a cause, and so to frame your Acts and proceedings, as they may first tend to the glory of God, and next to the conservation of your Commonwealth, surety and quietness.

The next day after the Three Estates assembled again in the great Chamber of the Court at Westminster: where the King and Queens Majesties and the Cardinal being present, they did exhibit (all kneeling on their knees) a Supplication to their Highnesses, the manner whereof ensueth.

The Copy of the Supplication and Submission exhibited to the King and Queens Majesties, by the Lords and Commons of the Parliament.

WE the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons of this present Parliament assembled, representing the whole Body of the Realm of England and Dominions of the same, in our own names particularly, and also of the said Body universally, in this Supplication directed to your Majesties with most humble suit, that it may by your gracious intercession and means, be exhibited to the most Reverend Father in God, the Lord Cardinal Poole Legate, sent specially hither from our most holy Father Pope Julius the Third, and the See Apostolick of Rome, do declare our selves very sorry and repentant for the Schism and Disobedience committed in this Realm and Dominions of the same, against the said See Apostolick, either by making, agreeing or executing any Laws, Ordinances or Commandments against the Supremacy of the said See, or otherwise doing or speaking that might impugn the same: offering our selves, and promising by this our Supplication, that for a token and knowledge of our said Repentance, we be and shall be always ready, under and with the Authority of your Majesties, to the uttermost of our power, to do that which shall be in us for the abrogation and repealing of the said Laws and Ordinances in this present Parliament; as well for our selves as for the whole Body whom we represent.

Whereupon we most humbly beseech your Majesties, as persons unoffended in the offence of this Body towards the said See, which nevertheless God by his Providence hath made subject unto your Majesties, so to set forth this our most humble suit, that we may obtain from the See Apostolick, by the said most Reverend Father, as well particularly as universally, absolution, release and discharge from all danger of such Censures and Sentences, as by the Laws of the Church we be fallen in, and that we may as Children repentant, be received into the bosom and unity of Christs Church, so as this Noble Realm, with all the Members thereof, may in unity and perfect obedience to the See Apostolick, and Pope for the time being, serve God and your Majesties, to the furtherance and advancement of his honour and glory, Amen.

The Supplication being read, the King and Queen delivered the same unto the Cardinal, who (perceiving the effects thereof to answer his expectation) did receive the same most gladly from their Majesties: and after he had in few words given thanks to God, and declared what great cause he had to rejoice above all others, that his coming from Rome into England had taken most happy success: He by the Popes Authority did give them this Absolution following.

An Absolution pronounced by Cardinal Poole to the whole Parliament of England; in the Presence of the King and Queen.

Absolution from the Pope given to the Realm of England, Christ's Absolution in not sufficient, without the Papes be pyced what, England brought from Gods blessing unto the warm Sun.

To Demus sang, but with heavy hearts God knoweth.

Great Joy at Rome for the Conversion of England, and good cause why.

When all this was done, they went into the Chappel, and there singing Te Demus, with great Iolemnity declared the Joy and Gladness that for this Reconciliation was pretended.

The Report of this was with great speed sent unto Rome; as well by the King and Cardinals Letters, which hereafter follow, as also otherwise. Whereupon the Pope caused there at Rome Processions to be made, and Thanks to be given to God with great Joy for the Conversion of England to his Church, and therefore praising the Cardinals Diligence, and the Devotion of the King and Queen, on Christmas Even, by his Bulls he set forth a General Pardon to all such as did truly rejoyce for the same.

A Copy of King Philips Letter, written with his own Hand to Pope Julius, touching the restoring of the Realm of England.

Most Holy Father, I wrote yesterday unto Don John Matricus that he should declare by word of Mouth, or else write to your Holiness, in what good State the Matter of Religion stood in this Realm, and of the submission to your Holiness, as to the Chief, as this day which is the Feast of S. Andrew, late in the evening, we have done God that service (to whose only Godness we must impute it, and to your Holiness, who have taken so great pain to gain these Souls) that this Realm with full and general consent of all them that represent the State, being very penitent for that was past, and well bent for that they come to do submit themselves to your Holiness, and to that Holy See; whom, at the Request of the Queen and me, your Legate did absolve. And forasmuch as the said Don John shall signify unto your Holiness all that passed in this matter, I will write no more thereof, but only that the Queen and I, as most faithful and devout Children of your Holiness, have received the greatest Joy and Comfort thereof that may be expressed with Tongue: Considering that, besides the Service done to God hereby, it hath chanced in the time of your Holiness, to place as it were in the Lap of the Holy Catholick Church such a Kingdom as this is. And therefore I think I cannot be thankful enough for that is done this day. And I trust in him, that your Holiness shall always understand, that the Holy See hath not had a more Obedient Son than I, nor more desirous to preserve and increase the Authority of the same. God guide and prosper the most holy Personage of your Holiness as I desire.

From London the 30. of November, 1554.

Your Holiness most Humble Son the King, &c.

Here followeth likewise the Cardinals Letter to the said Pope concerning the same Matter.

Those things which I wrote unto your Holiness of late, of that Hope which I trusted would come to pass, that in short space this Realm would be reduced to the Unity of the Church, and Obedience of the Apostolick See, though I did write then not without great Cause: yet nevertheless I could not be void of all fear, nor only for that difficulty which the Minds of our Countrymen did shew, being so long alienated from the See Apostolick, and for the old Hatred which they had born to many years to that Name: But much more I feared, lest the first entry into the Cause itself should be put off by some other Matter or Convent in coming betwixt.

For the avoiding whereof, I made great means to the King and Queen, which little needed: For their own godly Forwardness, and earnest Desire to bring the thing to pass, far surmounted my great and earnest Expectation. This day in the Evening, being S. Andrews day (who first brought his Brother Peter to Christ) it is come to pass by the Providence of God, that this Realm is reclaimed to give due obedience unto Peters Seat and your Holiness, by whose means it may be conjoynted to Christ the Head, and his Body which is the Church. The thing was done and concluded in Parliament (the King and Queen being present) with such full consent and great rejoycing, that incontinently after I had made my Oration and given the Benediction, with a great joy and shout there was divers times said, Amen, Amen. Which doth evidently declare, that that Holy Seed, although it hath been long oppressed, yet was not utterly quenched in them; which chiefly was declared in the "Noility. Returning home to my House, these things I wrote unto your Holiness upon the sudden, rejoycing that I had so luckily brought to pass, I weighly welcome to a Matter by the Divine Providence, thinking to have sent my Letters by the Kings Post, who (as it was said) should have departed shortly: But afterwards changing my purpose, when I had determined to send one of mine own Men, I thought good to add thus much to my Letters, for the more ample Gratulation and Rejoycing at that good Chance: Which thing as it was right great gladness to me through the Event of the same (being it felt very great, and so holy, so profitable to the whole Church, so healthful to this my Country which brought me forth, so honourable to the same which received me): So likewise I took no less rejoycing of the Princes themselves, through whose Virtue and Godliness the matter did take success and perfection. Of how many, and how great things may the Church (which is the Spouse of Christ, and our Mother) make her Account through those her Children?

Oh notable Zeal of Godliness! Oh Ancient Faith! which undoubtedly doth so manifestly appear in them both, that who so seeth them, must needs (whether he will or no) lay the same which the Prophet spake of the first Children of the Church; Ipsi sunt semen cui benedixit Dominus. Hec plantatio Domini ad glorificandum. That is, These are the Seed which the Lord hath blessed. This is the Lords planting to glory in. How holily did your Holiness with all your Authority and earnest Affection favour this Marriage? which truly seemeth to express a great similitude of the Highest King, which being Heir of the World, was sent down by his Father from the Regal Seat to be Spouse and Son of the Virgin, and by this means to comfort all Mankind: For even so this King himself, the greatest Heir of all Men which are in the Earth, leaving his Fathers Kingdoms that are most great, is come into this little Kingdom, and is become both the Spouse, and Son of this Virgin, (for he so behaved himself as though he were a Son, whereas indeed he is a Husband) that he might, as he hath in effect already performed, shew himself an Aider and Helper to reconcile this People to Christ, and his Body, which is the Church. Which things, seeing they are so, what may not our Mother the Church her self look for at his hands, that hath brought this to pass, to convert the Hearts of the Fathers towards their Sons, and the Unbelievers to the Willom of the Righteous? which Virtue truly, doth wonderfully shine in him. But the Queen, which at that time, when your Holiness sent me Legate unto her, did rise up as a Rod of Incense springing out of the Trees of Mirre, and as Frankincense out of the Desert; She, I say, which a little before was forsaken of all men, how wonderfully doth she now shine? What a Saviour of Mirre and Frankincense doth she give forth unto her People? which (as the Prophet saith) of the Mother of Christ) brought forth before the labour, before she was delivered brought forth a Man-Child: Who ever heard of such a thing? and who hath seen the like of this? Shall the Earth bring forth in one day, or shall a whole Nation be brought forth together? But the now hath brought forth a whole Nation before the time of that Delivery, whereof we are in most great Hope.

The Pope, such only as may be welcome to the No. 107 of England, as water to the Sea.

Oh dissolution of a flourishing Cardinal!

What similitude is between light and darkness? a Cox.

Cardinal Paul flattereth the King.

How

How great cause is given to us to rejoyce? How great cause have we to give thanks to Gods Mercy, your Holiness, and the Emperors Majesty, which have been Causes of so Happy and so Godly a Marriage, by which we being reconciled, are joynted to God the Father, to Christ, and to the Church? of the which although I cannot comprehend in words the joy that I have taken, yet I cannot keep silence of it. And to this my rejoycing this also was joynted (which when I had perceived by the Letters of the Reverend Archbishop of Constance, your Holiness Nuncio with the Emperors Majesty, brought me marvellous great gladness) that your said Holiness began to restore to the Ancient Beauty those things, which in the Church of Rome through the corruption of times were deformed, which truly, when it shall be finished, then indeed may we well cry out with the Prophet, and speak unto your Holiness with these words, Exe te solus iustus & vexationis, & indu te decore, qui a Deo tibi est in gloria sempiterna: nominabitur enim tibi nomen tuum a Deo sempiternum, pax iustitia & honor pietatis. Tum autem dicitur, Circumspice & vide collectos filios tuos ab oriente sole usque in occidentem, verbo sancto gaudentem. That is, Put off the stole of Sorrow and Vexation, and put on Consoles, which thou hast of God in everlasting Glory. For thy Name shall be named of God everlasting, peace of righteousness, and honour of Godliness; and then it shall be said, Look about and see thy Sons gathered together from the Sun-rising, to the going down of the same, rejoycing in the Holy Word. There is nothing truly (to speak of thy Children gathered together in the West, which prepare themselves to meet their Mother) which they had rather see, than her apparelled (that I may use the words of the Prophet) in that Garment of Righteousness wherewith God adorned her in times past. This one thing remaineth, That your Holiness Joy, and the Joy of all the Universal Church may be perfected, which, together with us her unworthy Children, earnestly not to pray to God for it. The Almighty God preserve your Holiness long to continue in Health for the profit of his Church. From London the last of November, 1554.

Your most humble Servant Reginald Poole, Cardinal.

preached at Pauls-Cross.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 2. of December, the Bishop of Winchester, Lord Chancellor of England, preached at Pauls-Cross, at which Sermon was present the King and Cardinal Poole. He took for his Theme this part of the Epistle of S. Paul to the Romans the 13. Chapter, This also we know the Season (brethren) that we should now awake out of sleep, for now is our Salvation nearer, than when we believed, &c. Some Notes whereof as they came to my hands faithfully gathered (as it appeareth by sundry Copies) I have here thought good to set forth.

A dreaming Sermon of the B of Winchester.

First, He shewed how the saying of S. Paul was verified upon the Gentiles, who had a long time slept in dark Ignorance, not knowing God: Therefore S. Paul (quoth he) to stir up their heavy dulness, willed them to awake out of their long sleep, because their Salvation was nearer, than when they believed. In amplifying this matter, and comparing our times with theirs, he took occasion to declare what difference the Jewish Sacraments had from these of the Christians, wherein he used these words:

Even as the Sacrament of the Jews did declare Christ to come, so do our Sacraments declare Christ to be already come: But Christ to come, and Christ to be come, is not all one. For now that he is come, the Jews Sacraments be done away, and ours only remain, which declare that he is already come, and is nearer us, than he was to the Fathers of the Old Law: For they had him but in Signs, but we have him in the Sacrament of the Altar, even his very Body. Wherefore now also it is time that we awake out of our sleep, who have slept rather dreamed these twenty years past, as shall more easily appear by declaring at large some of the Properties and Effects of a Sleep or a Dream. And first, As Men intending to sleep, do separate themselves from company, and desire to be alone; even so have we separated our selves from the Sea Apostolick of Rome: and have been alone, no Realm in Christendom like us.

Secondly, as in sleep Men dream sometime of killing, sometime of maiming, sometime of drowning, or burning, sometime of such beastliness as I dare not name, but will spare your Ears: So we have in this our sleep not only dreamed of Beastliness, but we have done it indeed. For in this our sleep hath not one Brother destroyed another: Hath not half our Money been wiped away at one time? And again, those that would defend their Conscience, were slain, and others also otherwise troubled; besides infinite other things, which you all know as well as I, wherof I report me to your own Consciences. Further, in a mans sleep all his Senses are stopped, so that he can neither see, smell, nor hear: Even so whereas the Ceremonies of the Church were instituted to move and stir up our Senses, they being taken away, were not our Senses (as ye would say) stopped, and we fast asleep? Moreover, when a man would gladly sleep, he will put out the Candle, lest peradventure it may let his sleep, and awake him: So of late all such Writers as did hold any thing with the Apostolick See, were condemned, and forbidden to be read; and Images (which were "Lay-mens Books") were cast down and broken.

The Sleep hath continued with us these twenty years, and we all that while without a Head. For when King Henry did first take upon him to be Head of the Church, it was then no Church at all. After whose death, King Edward (having over him Governours and Protectors, which ruled as them listed) could not be Head of the Church, but was only a Shadow or Sign of a Head: And at length it came to pass, that we had no Head at all; nor, not so much as our two Archbishops. For on the one side, the Queen being a Woman, could not be Head of the Church; and on the other side, they both were convicted of one Crime, and so deposed. Thus, while we desired to have a Supreme Head among us, it came to pass, that we had no Head at all: When the Tumult was in the North in the time of K. Henry the Eighth (I am sure) the K. was determined to have given over the Supremacy again to the Pope; but the hour was not then come, and therefore it went not forward, lest some would have said, that he did it for Fear.

After this, Mr. Knevet and I were sent Ambassadors unto the Emperor, to desire him that he would be a Mean between the Popes Holiness and the King, to bring the King to the obedience of the See of Rome, but the time was not yet come. For it might have been said, that it had been done for a Civil Policy. Again, in the beginning of King Edwards Reign the matter was moved, but the Time was not yet: For it would have been said, that the King (being but a Child) had been bought and sold. Neither in the beginning of the Queens Reign was the hour come; for it would have been said, that it was done in a time of weakness. Likewise when the K. first came, if it had been done, they might have said it had been by Force and Violence. But now, even now, "hora est," the hour is come, when nothing can be objected, but that it is the meer Mercy and Providence of God. Now hath the Popes Holiness, Pope Julius the 3d. sent unto us this Most Reverend Father, Cardinal Poole, an Ambassador from his side. What to do? Not to revenge the Injuries done by us against his Holiness, sed benedicere maledicentibus, to give his Benediction to those that defamed and persecuted him.

And that we may be the more meet to receive the said Benediction, I shall desire you that we may always acknowledge our selves offenders against his Holiness; I do not exclude my self forth of the number. I will fere cum flentibus, & gaudere cum gaudentibus; That is, Weep with them that weep, and rejoyce with them that rejoyce. And I shall desire you, that we may defer the matter no longer; for now, hora est, the hour is come. The King and Queens Majesties have already restored our Holy Father the Pope to his Supremacy, and the three Estates assembled in the Parliament, representing the whole Body of the Realm, have also submitted themselves to his Holiness, and his Successors "for ever, wherefore let us not any longer stay. And even as Saint Paul said to the Corinthians, that he was their Father, so may the Pope say, that he is our Father: For we received our Doctrine first from Rome, therefore he may challenge us as his own. We have all cause to rejoyce, for his Holiness hath sent hither and prevented us, before we sought him: such such Care hath he for us. Therefore let us say, Hæc est dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea, Rejoyce in this Day, which is of the Lords working, that such a Noble Birth is come, yea, such a Holy Father (I mean my Lord Cardinal Poole) which can speak unto us as unto Brethren, and not as unto Strangers, who hath a long time been absent. And let us now awake, which so long have slept, and in our sleep have done so much naughtiness against the Sacraments of Christ, denying the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and pulled down the Altar, which thing Luther himself would not do, but rather reproved them that did, examining them of their belief in Christ.

So Ezechias pulled down the Altar, which Moses did set up: and yet we condemn the Colage of Ezechias, and disprove Moses for setting up the other.

This was the Sum of his Sermon before his Prayers, wherein he prayed first for the Pope, Pope Julus the Third, with all his Colledge of Cardinals, the Bishop of London, with the rest of that Order; then for the King and Queen, and the Nobility of this Realm; and last, for the Commons of the same, with the Souls departed, lying in the pains of Purgatory. This ended, the time being late, they began in Pauls to ring to their Evening Song, whereby the Preacher could not be well heard, which caused him to make a short end of his Clerly Sermon.

About this very time a Post or Messenger was sent from the whole Parliament to the Pope, to desire him to confirm and establish the Sale of Abby-lands and Chantry-lands; For the Lords and the Parliament would grant nothing in the Popes behalf, before their Purchases were fully confirmed.

Decemb. 6. The Chapter of Westm. dissolved by the Cardinal

Upon the Thursday following, being the 6 day of December, and Saint Nicholas day, all the whole Convocation, both Bishops and others, were sent for to Lambeth to the Cardinal, who the same day forgave them all their Perjurations, Schisms, and Heresies, and they all there kneeled down and received his Absolution, and after an Exhortation and Gratulation for their Conversion to the Catholick Church made by the Cardinal, they departed.

Decemb. 11. The Question of Mr. Tregoner put to the Court, and delivered.

Upon the Wednesday, being the 12. of December, five of the eight men which lay in the Fleet, that were of Master Throgmorton Quest, were discharged, and set at liberty upon their Fine paid, which was 22.0 pound a piece; and the other three put up a Supplication, therein declaring, that their Goods did not amount to the Sum that they were appointed to pay; and so upon that Declaration paying 40. li. a piece, they were delivered out of Prison upon St. Thomas day before Christmass, being the 21. of December.

Decemb. 12.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 22. of December, all the whole Parliament had strict commandment, that none of them should depart into their Countrey this Christmass, nor before the Parliament were ended. Which commandment was wonderful contrary to their Expectations. For as well many of the Lords, as also many of the Inferiour sort had sent for their Horses, and had them brought hither.

Decemb. 28.

Upon the Friday following, being the 28. of December, and Childermas day, the Prince of Piedmont came to the Court at Westminster.

ANNO 1555.

January. Mr. Rose with 30. persons taken as a Commission in Bow-Church-yard.

Upon New-years day at Night following, certain Holland Men and Women of the City, to the Number of 30. and a Minister with them named Master Rose, were taken as they were in a House in Bow-Church-Yard at the Communion, and the same Night they were all committed to Prison. And on the Thursday following, being the 3. day of January, Mr. Rose was before the B. of Winchester, being Lord Chancellor, and from thence the same day he was committed to the Tower, after certain Communication had between the Bishop and him.

The Act of Supremacy passed in the Parliament.

The same day the Act of Supremacy past in the Parliament. Also the same day at Night was a great Tumult between Spaniards and Englishmen at Westminster, whereof was like to have ensued a great Mischief through a Spanish Friar, which got into the Church and rung Alarum. The Occasion was about two Whores which were in the Cloyster at Westminster with a sort of Spaniards, whereof, whilst some plaid the Knaves with them, other some did keep the Entry of the Cloyster with Dogs in harness. In the mean time certain of the Deans Men came into the Cloyster, and the Spaniards discharged their Dogs at them, and hurt some of them. By and by the Noise of this doing came into the Streets, so that the whole Town was up almost, but never a stroke was stricken. Notwithstanding the Noise of this doing with the Deans Men, and also the ringing of the Alarum, made much ado, and a great Number also to be sore afraid.

Ye heard a little before the Councils Letter sent to Bishop Boner, signifying the good News of Queen Mary to be not only conceived, but also quick with Child, which was in the Month of November, the 28. day. Of this Child great talk began at this time to rise in every Mans Mouth, with busie preparation, and much ado, especially amongst such as seemed in England to carry Spanish Hearts in English Bodies. In Number of whom here is not to be forgotten, nor defrauded of his condign Commendation for his worthy Affection toward his Prince and her Issue, one Sir Richard Southwell, who being the same time in this Parliament-house, whenas the Lords were occupied in other Affairs and Matters of Importance, suddenly starting up, for fulness of joy burst out in these words following: Tygh my Masters, quoth he, what talk ye of these Matters? I would have you take some Order for our Master that is now coming into the World apace, lest he find us unprovided, &c. By the which words both of him, and also by the foresaid Letters of the Council, & the common talk abroad, it may appear what an assured Opinion was then conceived in mens Heads of Q. Mary to be conceived and quick with Child. Inasmuch that at the same time, and in the same Parliament there was eftsoons a Bill exhibited, and an Act made upon the same, the words whereof, for the more evidence, I thought good here to exemplifie, as followeth.

The Words of the Act.

Albeit we the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, have firm hope and confidence in the Goodness of Almighty God, that like as he hath hitherto miraculously preserved the Queens Majesty from many great imminent Perils and Dangers; even so he will of his Infinite Goodness give her His Highness strength, the rather by our continual Prayers, to pass well the danger of deliverance of Child, whereunto it hath pleased him (to all our great comforts) to bless her: yet forasmuch as all things of this World be uncertain, and having before our eyes the dolorous experience of this inconsistent Government, during the time of the Reign of the late King Edward the Sixth, do plainly see the manifold Inconveniences, great Dangers and Perils that may ensue in this whole Realm, if foresights be not used to prevent all evil Chances, if they should happen: For the observing hereof, we the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, for and in consideration of a most special Trust and Confidence that we have and repose in the King's Majesty, for and concerning the Politick Government, Order, and Administration of this Realm in the time of the young years of the Issue or Issues of her Majesties Body to be born, if it should please God to call the Queens Highness out of this present Life, during the tender years of such Issue or Issues (which God forbid) according to such order and manner, as hereafter in this present Act his Highness most Gracious Pleasure is, should be declared and set forth, have made our humble Suit, by the Assent of the Queens Highness, that his Majesty would vouchsafe to accept and take upon him the Rule, Order, Education, and Government of the said Issue or Issues to be born, as is aforesaid: Upon which our Suit, being of his said Majesty most graciously accepted, it hath pleased his Highness not only to declare, That like as for the most part his Majesty verily trusteth that Almighty God (who hath hitherto preserved the Queens Majesty, to give this Realm so good an Hope of certain Succession in the Blood Royal of the same Realm) will assist her Highness with his Graces and Beneditions, to see the Fruit of her Body well brought forth, live, and able to govern (whereof neither all this Realm, may all the World besides, should or could receive more Comfort than his Majesty should and would) yet if such chance should happen, his Majesty at our humble Desires is pleased and contented, not only to accept and take upon him the care and charge of the Education, Rule, Order, and Government of such Issues as of this thy Marriage shall be born between the Queens Husband and him; but also, during the time of such Government, would by all ways and means, study, travel, and employ himself to advance the Weal both publick and private of this Realm and Dominion thereunto belonging, according to the said Trust in his Majesty reposed, with no less good will and affection, than if his Highness had been naturally born amongst us. In consideration whereof, be it Enacted by the King and the Queens most Excellent Majesties, by the assent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, &c.

As it is to be seen in the Act more at large ratified and confirmed at the same Parliament, to the same intent and Purpose.

¶ Thus much out of the Act and Statute I thought to rehearse, to the intent the Reader may understand not so much how Parliaments may sometimes be deceived (as by this Child of Q. Mary may appear) as rather what cause we Englishmen have to render most earnest thanks unto Almighty God, who so mercifully, against the opinion, expectation, and working of our Adversaries, hath helped and delivered us in this case, which otherwise might have opened such a Window to the Spaniards, to have entered and replenished this Land, that peradventure by this time Englishmen should have enjoyed no great quiet in their own Countrey: The Lord therefore make us perpetually mindful of his Benefits: Amen.

Thus we see then how man doth purpose, but God disposeth as pleaseth him. For all this great Labour, Provision and Order taken in the Parliament-house for their Young Master long looked for, coming so surely into the World, in the end appeared neither young Master, nor young Mistress, that any Man yet to this day can hear of. Furthermore, as the labour of the Lay-folk was herein deluded; so no less ridiculous it was to behold, what little Effect the Prayers of the Popes Churchmen had with Almighty God, who travelled no less with their Processions, Masses and Collects, for the happy deliverance of this young Master to come, as here followeth to be seen.

O Most Righteous Lord God, which for the Offence of the first Woman, hast threatened unto all Women a common sharpe and inevitable malediction, and hath enjoy-ned them that they should conceive in sin, and being conceived, should be subject to many and grievous torments; and finally, be delivered with the danger and jeopardy of their Lives: We beseech thee for thine exceeding great goodness and bottomless mercy, to mitigate the strictness of that Law.
Assuage thine anger for a while, and cherish in the bosom of thy favour and mercy our most Gracious Queen Mary, being now at the point to be delivered. So help her, that without danger of her Life she may overcome the sorrow, and in due season bring forth a Child, in Body beautiful and Comely, in mind Noble and Valiant. So that afterwards, she, forgetting the trouble, may with joy, laud and praise be boundfulness of thy Mercy, and, together with us, praise and bless both thee and thy Holy Name World without end. This, O Lord, we desire thee, we beseech thee, and most heartily crave of thee. Hear us, O Lord, and grant us our Petition: Let not the Enemies of thy Faith, and of thy Church say, Where is their God?

Prayer made by the Ca-

Q. Mary, being great and quick witted Child.

O Most Mighty Lord God, which regardest the Prayer of the humble, and despisest not their Request; bow down from thine high Habitation of the Heavens, the eyes of thy Mercy unto us wretched Sinners, bowing the knees of our Hearts, and with many and deep Sighs bewailing our sins and offences, humbly with eyes intent, and hands displayed, praying and beseeching thee, with the shield of thy Protection, to defend Mary thy Servant, and our Q. who hath none other Helper but thee, and whom, through thy Grace, thou hast willed to be conceived with Child:
and at the time of her travel graciously with the help of thy right Hand deliver her, and from all danger, with the Child in her conceived, mercifully preserve.

It hath seemed good in thy sight, merciful Father, by thy Servant Mary, to work these Wonders; that is to say,
In her hands to vanquish and overthrow the stout Enemy, and to deliver us, thy People, out of the hands of "Here-ticks, Infidels, Enemies to thee, and to the Cross of thy beloved Son Jesus Christ, that of thy Servant thou mightest speak in far Countries. Therefore for these wonderful works, which thou dost to thy Servants, thou art magnified Lord God, for ever, and we thy People bless thee the God of Heaven, which hath wrought upon us this great Mercy, and hath excluded from us the Heretick, the Enemy of Truth, the Persecutor of thy Church. We know, we know, that we have grievously (Lord) sinned, that we have been deceived by vanity, and that we have forsaken thee our God. Our Iniquities be multiplied on our head, and our sins be increased up to Heaven: and we our selves having offended, and our Princes and our Priests, for these our Sins, have deserved an Hypocrite to our Prince, our Sins have deserved a Tyrant to our Governour, that should bring our life to bitterness. We be not worthy to have so gentle and merciful a Queen, so godly a Ruler, and finally, so virtuous a Prince; at the very beginning of whose Reign, a new Light, as it were, of Gods Religion seemed to us for to spring and rise. The Jews did bless the Widow Judith with one voice, saying, Thou art the glory of Jerusalem, thou art the joy of Israel, thou art the honour of our People, for that thou hast loved Chastity, and thou shalt be blessed for ever.

And we the English People with one agreeable consent do cry; Thou Mary art the glory of England, our joy, the honour of thy People, for that thou hast embraced Chastity; thine heart is strengthened, for the hand of our Lord hath comforted thee, and therefore thou shalt be blessed for ever. But bow down, O most merciful Father, thine Ear, and open thine Eyes, and behold our Affliction, and our humble Confession. Thou knowest, Lord, that against Philip, not by Human, but by thy Ordinance our King, and against thy Servant Mary, by thy Providence our Queen, the Restorers and Maintainers of thy Testament of the Faith, and most constant Defenders of thy Church: Thou knowest, I say, that against these our two Governors, the enemies of thy Holy Testament, and of the Church thy Spouse, be most rank Rebels and spiteful Murmurers, walking after their Lusts, whose mouth speaketh words of Pride, to the end they may fit up the Kingdom of Here-ticks and Schismatics. By the Power of their hands they "would change thy Promises, and destroy thine Inheritance, and stop and shut up the mouths of them that praise thee, and extinguish the glory of thy Catholick Church and Altar.

It is manifest and plain, how many Contentions, how many Conspiracies and Seditions, how great Wars, what Tumults, how many and how great troublesome Vexations, how many Heresies and Schisms (for these be the most ready devices, and evident tokens of Heresicks) for our Sins do hang over us, if thy Servant be taken from this Life: for we acknowledge that our Lord is omnipotent, who hath pitched his dwelling-place in the midst of his People, to the intent to deliver us out of the hands of our Enemies. Turn therefore thy Countenance unto us, shew unto us, O Lord, thy face. Punish us for our Sins according to thy Will and Pleasure, only now deliver us.
We bowing the knees of our heart, beseech thee, that thou wilt not reserve unto us punishment for ever, and we shall praise thee all the days of our life. Hear our cry, and the Prayer of thy People, and open to them the treasure of thy Mercy, thy gracious Favour, the Spring of Lively Water. Thou that hast begun, make in the hand of thy Servant a perfect work. Suffer not, we pray thee, the "faithless Rebels to say of thy Servant and her Counsellors, that they have devised matters which they cannot perform. And grant unto thy Servant an happy and an ease Travel. For it is not impossible to thy Power, nor indecent to thy Justice, nor unwonted to thy Mercy.

It is well known unto us, how marvellously thou diddst work in Sarah of the Age of 90. Years, and in Elizabeth the barren, and also for stricken in Age: For thy Counsel is not in the Power of men. Thou Lord that art the Searcher of Hearts and Thoughts, thou knowest that thy Servant never lust after Man, never gave her self to

And give unto our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King Philip and Queen Mary, thy Blessings and long life upon Earth; and grant that of them may come Kings and Queens, which may steadfastly continue in Faith, Love, and Holiness. And blessed be their Seed of our God, that all Nations may know, thou art only God in all the Earth, which art blessed for ever and ever: Amen.

O Almighty Father, which didst sanctifie the Blessed Virgin and Mother Mary in her Conception, and in the Birth of Christ our Saviour thine only Son: Also by thine Omnipotent Power didst safely deliver the Prophet Jonas out of the Whales Belly: Defend, O Lord, we beseech thee, thy servant Mary, our Queen, with Child conceived, and so visit her in and with thy Godly Gift of health that not only the Child thy Creature, within her contained, may joyfully come from her into this World, and receive the blessed Sacraments of Baptism and Confirmation, enjoying therewith daily increase of all Princely and Gracious Gifts both of Body and Soul; but that also she the Mother, through thy special Grace and Mercy, may in time of her Travell avoid all excessive Dolor and Pain, and abide perfect and pure from all peril and danger of Death, with long and prosperous Life, through Christ our Lord: Amen.

January 10.

It followeth now further in process of the Story, that upon the Tuesday, being the 10. of January, nineteen of the Lower House of the Parliament with the Speaker, came to the Whitehall to the King, and offered him the Government of the Realm and of the Issue, if the Queen should fail, which was confirmed by Act of Parliament within ten days after.

January 26.
The Popes
Supremacy established by Parliament.

Upon Wednesday following, being the 26. of January, the Parliament was clean dissolved. In this Parliament amongst other tidings, the Bishop of Rome was established, and all such Laws as were made against him since the twentieth Year of K. Henry the 8th. were repealed, and also Cardinal Pole, Bishop Pater, Lilly, and other were restored to their Blood. Also there was an Act made for speaking of Words; That whoever should speak any thing against the King, or Queen, or that might move any Sedition or Rebellion, at the first time to have one of his Ears cut off, or to forfeit an hundred Marks; and at the second time, to have both his Ears cut off, or else to forfeit an hundred pound; and whosoever should write, cypher, or print any of the Premises, to have their Right Hand cut off.

Three Statutes against Heretics revived.

Also in this Parliament three Statutes were revived for trial of Heresie: one made in the fifth year of R. 2. another in the second year of H. 4. and the third in the second year of H. 5. Also the doing of M. Rafe, and the other that were with him, was commuted in this Parliament, and upon that occasion an Act was made, That certain Evil Prayers should be Treason against the Queens Highness. The Prayers of these men were thus; God turn the Heart of Q. Mary from Idolatry, &c. else shorten her days. Whereof read the Statute 2. 1. & 2. Reg. Phil. & Mar. cap. 9.

As touching the taking of M. Rafe and his Fellows, word was brought thereof to Mr. Hooper, being then in the Fleet. Whereupon the said Mr. Hooper sendeth Answer again, with a Letter also of Consolation sent to the said Prisoners; the Copy whereof I thought here not to overpass.

The Answer of Mr. Hooper to a Letter sent unto him concerning certain Prisoners taken in Bow-Church-yard.

The Grace of God be with you, Amen. I perceive by your Letter, how that upon New-years day as Night there were taken a godly company of Christians, whilst they were praying. I do rejoice in that men can be so well occupied in this perilous time, and flee unto God for Remedy by Prayer, as well for their own lacks and necessities, as also charitably to pray for them that persecute them. So doth the Word of God command all men to pray charitably for them that hate them, and not to revile any Magistrate with words, or to mean him Evil by force or violence. They also may rejoice that in well-doing they were taken to the Prison. Wherefore I have thought it good to send them this little Writing of Consolation; praying God to send them patience, charity, and constancy in the Truth of his most Holy Word. Thus fare you well, and pray God to send his true Word into this Realm again amongst us, which the ungodly Bishops have now banished. Jan. 4. An. 1555.

certain Letter sent unto him.

A Letter of Consolation sent from Mr. Hooper to the Godly Brethren taken in Bow-Church-yard in Prayer, and laid in the Counter in Breadstreet.

The Grace, Favour, Consolation, and aid of the Holy Ghost, be with you now and ever. So be it. Dearly beloved in the Lord, ever since your Imprisonment I have been marvellously moved with great affections and passions, as well of Mirth and Gladness, as of Heaviness and Sorrow. Of Gladness in this, that I perceived how ye be bent and given to Prayer and Invocation of Gods help in these dark and wicked Proceedings of men against Gods Glory. I have been sorry to perceive the malice and wickedness of men to be so cruel, devilish, and tyrannical to persecute the People of God for serving of God, saying and hearing of the holy Psalms, and the Word of eternal life. These cruel doings do declare, that the Papists Church is more bloody and tyrannical, than ever was the Sword of the Esauicks and Gensiles.

A Letter of
Mr. Hooper
full of most heavenly consolation;

When I heard of your taking, and what ye were doing, wherefore, and by whom ye were taken, I remembered how the Christians in the Primitive Church were used by the cruelty of unchristen Heathens, in the time of Trajan the Emperor, about 77. years after Christs Ascension into Heaven: and how the Christians were persecuted very sore, as though they had been Traytors and Movers of Sedition. Whereupon the gentle Emperor Trajan required to know the true Cause of Christian mens trouble. A great learned Man called Plinius, wrote unto him, and said; It was because the Christians said certain Psalms before day unto one called Christ, whom they worshipped for God. When Trajan the Emperor understood it was for nothing but for Conscience and Religion, he caused by his Commandments every where, That no man should be persecuted for serving of God. But the Pope and his Church hath cast you into Prison, being taken even doing the Work of God, and one of the excellentest Works that is required of Christian Men: that is to wit, whilst ye were in Prayer, and not in such wicked and superstitious Prayers as the Papists use, but in the same Prayer that Christ hath taught you to pray. And in his Name only ye gave God thanks for that ye have received, and for his Sake ye asked for such things as ye want. O, glad may ye be that ever ye were born, to be apprehended whilst ye were so virtuously occupied. Blessed be they that suffer for Righteousness sake. For if God had suffered them that took your Bodies, then to have taken your Life also, now had they been following the Lamb in perpetual Joys, away from the Company and Assembly of Wicked men. But the Lord would not have you suddenly so to depart, but reserveth you, gloriously to speak and maintain his Truth to the World.

Of this pecc-tion read before;The Pope worse than Trajan the Heathen Emperor;

Be ye not careful what ye shall say, for God will go out and in with you, and will be present in your Hearts, and in your Mouths to speak his Wisdom, although it seemeth feemeth Foolishness to the World. He that hath begun this good work in you, continue you in the same unto the end; and pray unto him that ye may fear him only, that hath power to kill both Body and Soul, and to cast them into Hell-fire. Be of good comfort. All the Hairs of your Head are numbered, and there is not one of them can perish, except your Heavenly Father suffer it to perish. Now ye be in the field, and placed in the Fore-front of Christs Battel. Doubtless it is a singular Favour of God, and a special Love of him towards you, to give you this forward and preheminance, as a Sign that he trusteth you before others of his People. Wherefore (dear Brethren and Sisters) continually fight this Fight of the Lord. Your Cause is most just and godly, ye stand for the true Christ (who is after the Flesh in Heaven) and for his true Religion and Honour, which is amply, fully, sufficiently, and abundantly contained in the Holy Testament, sealed with Christs own Blood. How much be ye bound to God who puts you in trust with so Holy and just a Cause?

Remember what lookers-on you have to see and behold you in your fight, God and all his Angels, who be ready always to take you up into Heaven, if ye be slain in his fight. Also you have standing at your backs all the multitude of the Faithful, who shall take courage, strength, and desire to follow such Noble and Valiant Christians as you be. Be not afraid of your Adversaries: for he that is in you, is stronger than he that is in them. Shrink not although it be pain to you, your pains be not now so great, as hereafter your Joies shall be. Read the comfortable Chapters to the Romans 8. 10. 15, Hebrewes 11. 12. And upon your knees thank God that ever ye were accounted worthy to suffer any thing for his Names sake. Read the second Chapter of S. Lukes Gospel, and there you shall see how the Shepherds that watched upon their sheep all night, as soon as they heard that Christ was Born at Bethlem, by and by went to see him. They did not reason nor debate with themselves, who should keep the wolf from the sheep in the mean time, but did as they were commanded, and committed their sheep unto him, whose pleasure they obeyed. So let us do now we be called, commit all other things to him that calleth us. He will take heed that all things shall be well. He will help the Husband, he will comfort the Wife, he will guide the servants, he will keep the Houle, he will preserve the goods; ye, rather than it should be undone, he will walk the ditches, and rock the cradle. Call therefore all your care upon God for he careth for you.

Besides this, you may perceive by your Imprisonment, that your Adversaries weapons against you be nothing but Flesh, Blood, and Tyranny. For if they were able, they would maintain their wicked Religion by Gods Word: but for lack of that, they would Violently compel us as they cannot by Holy Scripture persuade, because the Holy Word of God, and all Christs doings be contrary unto them. I pray you, pray forme, and I will pray for you. And although we be assunder after the World, yet in Christ (I trust) for ever joyning in the Spirit, and so shall meet in the Palace of the Heavenly Joies, after this short and transitory life is ended. Gods Peace be with you. Amen. The 14. of January, 1555.

Upon the Friday following, being the 18. of January, all the Council went unto the Tower, and there the same day discharged and set at liberty all the prisoners of the Tower, or the most part of them, namely, the late Duke of Northumberland's Sons, Ambrose, Robert, and Hemy; Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir John Rogers, Sir James Crofts, Sir Nicholas Thymorton, Sir Nicholas Arna, Sir George Harper, Sir Edward Warner, Sir William Sentlow, Sir Gawen Carew, Master Gibbes, Cuthbert Vaughan, with many other.

Upon the Tuesday following, being the 22. of January, all the Preachers that were in prison were called before the Bishop of Winchester Lord Chancellor, and certain other, at the Bishops Houle at Saint Mary Overies. From whence (after Communication, being asked whether they would Convert and enjoy the Queens Pardon, or else stand to that they had taught; they all answered, that they would stand to that they had taught) they were committed to straighter prison than before they were, with Charge that none should speak with them.

Among the which Number of prisoners, one James George the same time died in prison, being there in Bonds for Religion and Righteousnes sake; who therefore was exempted to be buried in the Popish Churchyard, and was buried in the Field.

Upon the Wednesday following, being the 23. of January, all the Bishops with all the rest of the Convocation Houle were before the Cardinal at Lambeth, where he willed them to repair every man where his cure and Charge lay, exhorting them to intreat the people and their flock with all gentleness, and to endeavour themselves to win the people rather by gentleness than by extremity and rigour, and so let them depart.

Upon the Friday following, being the 25. of January, and the day of the Conversion of Saint Paul, there was given a General and Solemn Procession thorow London, to give God thanks for their Conversion to the Catholick Church: wherein (to set out their Glorious pomp) there were fourscore and ten Crosses, 160. Priests and Clerks, who had every one of them Copes upon their backs, singing very lustily. There followed also for the better estimation of the fight, eight Bishops, and last of all came Bona the Bishop of London, carrying the Popish Pix under a Canopie.

Besides, there was also present the Major, Aldermen, and all the Livery of every occupation. Moreover, the King also himself, and the Cardinal came to Pauls Church the same day. From whence after Mass they returned to Westminster again. As the King was entered the Church at the steps going up to the Quire, all the Gentlemen that of late were let at liberty out of the Tower, kneeled before the King, and offered unto him themselves and their services.

After the Procession there was also commandment given to make Bonfires at night. Whereupon did rise among the people a doubtful talk why all this was done. Some said it was that the Queen being (as they said) with Child, might have a safe delivery. Others thought that it was for Joy that the Realm was joyned again to the See of Rome, which opinion of both seemed most true.

Upon the Munday following, being the 28. of January, the Bishop of Winchester, and the other Bishops had Commission from the Cardinal to sit upon, and order, according to the Laws, all such Preachers and Hereticks (as they termed them) as were in prison, and according to this Commission, the same day the Bishop of Winchester and the other Bishops, with certain of the Council, sat in S. Mary Overies Church and called before them these three, M. Hooper, M. Rogers, and Master Cardmaker, who were brought thither by the Sheriffs; from whence after Communication they were committed to prison till the next day, but Cardmaker this day submitted himself unto them.

Upon the Tuesday, being the 29. of January, Hooper, Rogers, Doctory Taylor, and Bradford were brought before them, where Sentence of Excommunication and Judgment Ecclesiastical was pronounced upon M. Hooper and M. Rogers, by the Bishop of Winchester, who late as Judge in Caiphas seat, who drove them out of the Church, according to their law and order. Doctory Taylor and Bradford were committed to prison till the next day.

Upon the Wednesday, being the 30. of January, Doctory Taylor, Doctory Crome, M. Bradford, M. Saunders, and Doctory Ferrar, sometimes Bishop of S. David, and M. Ferrar were before the said Bishops, where three of them, that is to say, Doctory Taylor, Master Saunders, and M. Bradford were likewise Excommunicated, and Sentence pronounced upon them, and so committed to the Sheriffs. D. Crome desired two months respite, and it was granted him; and M. Ferrar was again committed to prison till another time. All these men shewed themselves to be learned, as indeed they were no less: but what availeth either learning, reason, or Truth it self, where will beareth rule?

After the examination and Condemnation of these good men and Preachers above recited, Commissions and Inquisitors were sent abroad likewise into all Parts of the Realm; by reason whereof, a great number of most godly and true Christians (out of all the quarters of the Realm, but especially Ken, Essex, Northfolk and Suffolk) were apprehended, were apprehended, brought up to London, cast into prison, and afterward (most of them) either consumed cruelly by fire, or else through evil handling died in the Prisons, and were buried on the Dung-Hills abroad in the Fields, or in some backside of the Prison. Of all which matters, concerning the Tragical handling of the blessed Martyrs and Witnesses of Jesus Christ, of all the Bloody Persecution of this time, now followeth (the Lord so granting) severally and more particularly in this next Book in order to be declared: after that I shall first recite a general Supplication, given up in the name of the Preachers aforesaid lying in Prison, unto the King and Queen during the time of the Parliament, as followeth.

Unto the King and Queens most excellent Majesties, and to their most Honourable and High Court of Parliament.

As application of the persecuted Preachers to the King and Queen.

IN most humble and lamentable wise complain unto your Majesties, and to your High Court of Parliament, your poor desolate and obedient Subjects: H. F. T. B. P. R. S. &c. That whereas your said Subjects, living under the Laws of God, and of this Realm in the days of the late most noble King Edward the sixth, did in all things shew themselves true, faithful, and diligent Subjects, according to their vocation, as well in the sincere ministering of Gods most Holy Word, as in due obedience to the higher Powers, and in the daily practice of such virtues and good demeanour, as the Laws of God at all times, and the Statutes of the Realm did then allow: Your said Subjects nevertheless, contrary to all Laws of Justice, Equity, and Right, are in very extreme manner, not only cast into Prison (where they have remained, now these 15. or 16. Months) but their Livings also, their Houses and Possessions, their Goods and Books taken from them, and they slandered to be most Hainous Hereticks, their Enemies themselves being both Witnesses, Accusers, and Judges, belying, slandering, and mis-reporting your said Subjects at their pleasure, where as your said Subjects, being straightly kept in Prison, cannot yet be suffered to come forth, and make answer accordingly.

In consideration whereof, it may please your most excellent Majesty, and this your High Court of Parliament, graciously to tender the present Calamity of your said poor Subjects, and to call them before your Presence, granting them liberty, either by Mouth or Writing in the plain English Tongue, to answer before you, or before indifferent Arbiters to be appointed by your Majesties, who such Articles of controversie in Religion as their said Adversaries have already condemned them of, as of Hainous Heresies: Provided, that all things may be done with such moderation and quiet behaviour, as becometh Subjects and Children of Peace, and that your said Subjects may have the free use of all their own Books, and conference together among themselves.

Which thing being granted, your said Subjects doubt not but it shall plainly appear, that your said Subjects are true and Faithful Christians, and neither Hereticks, neither Teachers of Heresie, nor cut off from the true Catholick Universal Church of Christ: yea, that rather their Adversaries themselves be unto your Majesties as were the Charmers of Egypt to Pharaoh, Zedechias and his Adherents unto the King of Israel, and Barjesu to the Proconsul Sergius Paulus. And if your said Subjects be not able by the testimony of Christ, his Prophets, Apostles, and Godly Fathers of his Church, to prove, that the Doctrine of the Church, Homiles, and Service taught and set forth in the time of our late most godly Prince and King, Edward the sixth, is the true Doctrine of Christs Catholick Church, and most agreeable to the Articles of the Christian Faith; your said Subjects offer themselves then to the most heavy punishment, that it shall please your Majesties to appoint.

Wherefore for the tender Mercy of God in Christ (which you look for at the day of Judgement) your said poor Subjects in Bonds most humbly beseech your most excellent Majesties, and this your High Court of Parliament, benignly and graciously to hear and grant this their Petition, tending so greatly to the Glory of God, to the edifying of his Church, to the Honour of your Majesties, to the commendation and maintenance of Justice, Right, and Equity both before God and Man. And your said Subjects, according to their bounden duty, shall not cease to pray unto Almighty God for the Gracious preservation of your most excellent Majesties long to endure.

Request of the Preachers to stand to the trial of their Doctrines before your Majesty.

The long imprisonment of the Christian Preachers. Underly proceeding of the adversaries against Gods people.

John Rogers brought up in the University of Cambridge, where he profitably travelled in good Learning, at the length was chosen and called by the Merchants Adventurers to be their Chaplain at Antwerp in Brabant, whom he served to their good contentation many years. It chanced him there to fall in Company with that worthy Servant and Martyr of God William Tindal, and with Miles Coverdale, which both for the hatred they bare to Popish Superstition and Idolatry, and love to true Religion, had forsaken their Native Country. In conferring with them the Scriptures he came to great knowledge in the Gospel of God, inasmuch that he cast off the heavy Yoke of Popery, perceiving it to be impure and filthy Idolatry, and joyined himself with them two in that painful and most profitable labour of translating the Bible into the English Tongue, which is intituled, The Translation of Thomas Matthew. He knowing by the Scriptures, that unlawful Vows may lawfully be broken, and that Matrimony is both honest and honourable among all men, joyined himself in lawful Matrimony, and so went to Wittenberg in Saxony, where he with much soberness of living did not only greatly increase in all good and godly Learning, but also so much profited in the knowledge of the Dutch Tongue, that the Charge of a Congregation was orderly committed to his Cure.

In which Ministry he diligently and faithfully served many years, until such time as it pleased God, by the faithful travel of his chosen and dear Servant, King Edward the Sixth, utterly to banish all Popery forth of England, and to receive in true Religion, setting Gods Gospel at liberty. He then being orderly called, having both a Confidence and a ready good will to help forward the Work of the Lord in his Native Country, left such honest and certain Conditions as he had in Saxony, and came into England to preach the Gospel, without certainty of any Condition. In which Office, after he had a space diligently and faithfully travelled, Nicholas Ridley, then Bishop of London, gave him a Prebend in the Cathedral Church of Pauls; and the Dean and the Chapter chose him to be the Reader of the Divinity Lesson there, wherein he diligently travelled, until such time as Queen Mary obtaining the Crown, banished the Gospel and true Religion, and brought in the Antichrist of Rome, with his Idolatry and Superstition.

After the Queen was come to the Tower of London, he being orderly called thereunto, made a godly and vehement Sermon at Pauls Cross, confirming such true Doctrine as he and other had there taught in King Edward's days, exhorting the People constantly to remain in the same, and to beware of all pestilent Popery, Idolatry, and Superstition. The Council being then over-matched with Pupils and Bloody Bishops, called him to account for his Sermon: To whom he made a stout, witty, and godly Answer, and yet in such sort handled himself, that at that time he was clearly dismissed. But after that Proclamation was set forth by the Queen to prohibite true Preaching, he was called again before the Council; for the Bishops thrifted after his Blood. The Council quarrelled with him concerning his Doctrine, and in conclusion commanded him as Prisoner to keep his own House, and so he did: although by flying he might easily have escaped their cruel hands, and many things there were which might have moved him thereunto. He did see the Recovery of Religion in England, for that present, desperate: He knew he could not want a Living in Germany, and he could not forget his Wife and ten Children, and to seek means to succour them. But all these things set apart, after he was called to answer in Christs Cause, he would not depart, but stoutly stood in defence of the same, and for the trial of that Truth, was content to hazard his Life.

Thus he remained in his own House as Prisoner a long time, till at the length, through the uncharitable procurement of Boner Bishop of London, who could not abide such honest Neighbours to dwell by him, he was removed from his own House to the Prison called Newgate, where he was lodged among Thieves and Murderers for a great space: During which time, what business he had with the Adversaries of Christ, all is not known, neither yet any certainty of his Examinations, further then he himself did leave in Writing, which God would not to be lost, but to remain for a perpetual Testimony in the Cause of Gods Truth, as here followeth recorded and testified by his own writing.

The Examination and Answer of John Rogers made to the Lord Chancellor, and to the rest of the Council, the 22. of January, Anno 1555.

The Lord Chancellor.

First the Lord Chancellor said unto me thus: Sir, Examination and answer of Mr. John Rogers.

Rogers. No, my Lord, I have been kept in close Prison, and except there have been some general thing said at the Table when I was at Dinner or Supper, I have heard nothing; and there have I heard nothing whereupon any special thing might be grounded.

L. Chan. Then said the Lord Chancellor; General things, general things, mockingly: Ye have heard of my Lord Cardinals coming, and that the Parliament hath received his Blessing, not one resisting unto it, but one man which did speak against it. Such an Unity, and such a Miracle hath not been seen. And all they, of which there are Eight score in one House, (said one that was by, whose name I know not) have with one assent and consent received Pardon of their Offences, for the Schism that we have had in England, in refusing the holy Father of Rome.

Anno 1555. Rome to be Head of the Catholick Church. How say ye? Are ye content to unite and knit your self to the Faith of the Catholick Church with us, in the state in which it is now in England? Will ye do that?

Rog. The Catholick Church I never did nor will dissent from.

L. Chan. Nay, but I speak of the state of the Catholick Church, in that wife in which we stand now in England, having received the Pope to be Supreme Head.

No Head of the Catholick Church but Christ. Rog. I know none other Head but Christ of his Catholick Church, neither will I acknowledge the Bishop of Rome to have any more Authority than any other Bishop hath by the Word of God, and by the Doctrine of the old and pure Catholick Church four hundred years after Christ.

L. Chan. Why didst thou then acknowledge K. Henry the Eighth to be the Supreme Head of the Church, if Christ be the only Head?

Rog. I never granted him to have any Supremacy in Spiritual things, as are the Forgiveness of Sins, Giving of the Holy Ghost, Authority to be a Judge above the Word of God.

L. Chan. Yea, said he, and Tomfall Bishop of Durham, and N. Bishop of Worcester, if thou hadst said so in his days, and they nodded the head at me with a laughter, thou hadst not been alive now.

Rog. Which thing I denied, and would have told how he was said and meant to be Supreme Head. But they looked and laughed one upon another, and made such a business, that I was constrained to let it pass. There lyeth also no great weight thereupon; for all the World knoweth what the meaning was. The Lord Chancellor also said to the Lord William Haward, that there was no inconvenience therein, to have Christ to be Supreme Head and the Bishop of Rome also: And when I was ready to have answered that there could not be two Heads of one Church, and have more plainly declared the vanity of that his Reason, the Lord Chancellor said, What saidst thou? Make us a direct Answer whether thou wilt be one of this Catholick Church or not, with us in that state in which we are now?

Rog. My Lord, without fail I cannot believe, that ye your selves do think in your hearts that he is Supreme Head in forgiving of Sin, &c. (as is before said) seeing you, and all the Bishops of the Realm have now twenty years long preached, and some of you also written to the contrary, and the Parliament hath so long agoe condescended unto it. And there he interrupted me thus.

L. Chan. Tush, that Parliament was with most great cruelty constrained to abolish and put away the Primacy from the Bishop of Rome.

Rog. With cruelty? why then I perceive that you take a wrong way with cruelty to perfwade mens Consciences. For it should appear by your doings now, that the cruelty then used hath not perfwaded your Consciences. How would you then have our Consciences perfwaded with cruelty?

L. Chan. I talk to thee of no cruelty, but that they were so often and so cruelly called upon in that Parliament, to let the Act go forward; yea, and even with force driven thereunto, whereas in this Parliament it was so uniformly received, as is aforesaid.

Rog. Here my Lord Pages told me more plainly, what my Lord Chancellor meant. Unto whom I answered: My Lord, what wilt ye conclude thereby; that the first Parliament was of less Authority, because but few condescended unto it? And this last Parliament of great Authority, because more condescended unto it? It goeth not my Lord, by more or lesser part, but by the wiser, truer, and godlier part: And I would have said more, but the L. Chancellor interrupted me with his question, willing me once again to answer him. For, said he, we have, more to speak with than thou, which must come in after thee. And so there were indeed ten persons more out of Newcastle, besides those that were not called. Of which ten, one was a Citizen of London, which granted unto them, and nine were contrary: which all came to Prison again, and refused the Cardinals Blessing, and the Authority of his holy Fathers Church, saying that one of these nine was not asked the question, otherwise than thus, whether he would be an honest man as his Father was before him, and he answering Yea, he was so discharged by the friendship of my L. William Haward, as I have understood. He bade me tell him what I would do; whether I would enter into the one Church with the whole Realm as it is now, or not? No, said I, I will first see it proved by the Scriptures. Let me have Pen, Ink, and Books, &c. And I shall take upon me plainly to set out the matter, so that the contrary shall be proved to be true; and let any man that will confer with me by writing.

L. Chan. Nay, that shall not be permitted thee? Thou shalt never have so much proffered thee as thou hast now, if thou refuse it, and will not now condescend and agree to the Catholick Church. Here are two things, Mercy and Justice: If thou refuse the Queens Mercy now, then shalt thou have Justice ministred unto thee.

Rog. I never offended, nor was disobedient unto her Grace, and yet I will not refuse her Mercy. But if this shall be denied me to confer by writing; and to try out the truth, then it is not well, but too far out of the way. Ye your selves (all the Bishops of the Realm) brought me to the knowledge of the pretended Primacy of the Bishop of Rome, when I was a young man twenty years past: And will ye now without collation have me to say and do the contrary? I cannot be so perfwaded.

L. Chan. If thou wilt not receive the Bishop of Rome to be Supreme Head of the Catholick Church, then thou shalt never have her Mercy thou mayest be sure. And as touching conferring and trial, I am forbidden by the Scriptures to use any conferring and trial with thee. For S. Paul teacheth me, that I should smite and chew an Heretic after one or two Monitions, knowing that such an one is overthrown, and is faulty, inasmuch as he is condemned by his own judgment.

Rog. My Lord, I deny that I am an Heretic: Prove ye that first, and then alledge the foresaid Text. But still the Lord Chancellor played on one string, saying:

L. Chan. If thou wilt enter into one Church with us, &c. tell us that, or else thou shalt never have so much proffered thee again as thou hast now.

Rogers. I will find it first in the Scripture, and see it tried thereby, before I receive him to be Supreme Head.

Wer. Why? Do ye not know what is in your Creed: Credo Ecclesiam sanctam Catholicam, I believe the holy Catholick Church.

Rog. I find not the Bishop of Rome there. For (Catholick) significeth not the Romish Church: It significeth the content of all true Teaching Churches of all times, and all ages. But how should the Bishop of Rome's Church like be one of them, which teacheth so many Doctrines that are plainly and directly against the Word of God? Can that Bishop be the true Head of the Catholick Church that doth so? that is not possible.

L. Chan. Shew me one of them, one, let me hear one.

Rog. I remembered my self, that amongst so many I were best to shew one, and said, I will shew you one.

L. Chan. Let me hear that, let me hear that.

Rog. The Bishop of Rome and his Church, say, read, and sing, all that they do in their Congregations, in Latin, which is directly and plainly against the first to the Corinthians, the fourteenth Chapter.

L. Chan. I deny that, I deny that that is against the Word of God. Let me see you prove that; how prove you that?

Rog. Thus I began to say the Text from the beginning of the Chapter, Qui loquitur linguam, &c. to speak with tongue, said I, is to speak with a strange tongue, as Latin or Greek, &c. and so to speak, is not to speak unto men, but to God. But ye speak in Latin, which is a strange tongue, wherefore ye speak not unto men, but unto God * (meaning God only at the most.) This he granted, that they spake not unto men, but unto God.

L. Chan. Well, then it is in vain unto men.

Rog. No, not in vain. For one man speaketh in one tongue, and another in another tongue, and all well.

L. Chan. Nay, I will prove then, that he speaketh neither to God nor to Man, but unto the Wind.

Rog. I was willing to have declared how and after what sort these two Texts do agree (for they must agree, they be both the sayings of the Holy Ghost, spoken

St. Paul intended to have the Truth to be tried by Learning;

The Bishops neither will stand by their Assertion, nor yet will suffer other men to do so.

Speaking in a strange tongue against S. Paul.

by the Apostle Paul) as to wit, to speak not to Men, but unto God, and to speak into the Wind: and so to have gone forward with the proof of my matter begun, but here arose a noise and a confusion. Then said the Lord Chancellor:

L. Chan. To speak unto God, and not unto God, were impossible.

Rog. I will prove them possible.

L. Haward. No, said my Lord William Haward to my Lord Chancellor: now will I bear you witness that he is out of the way: For he granted first, that they which speak in a strange speech speak unto God: and now he saith the contrary, that they speak neither to God nor to Man.

Rog. I have not granted nor said (turning me to my Lord Chancellor) as you report. I have alledged the one Text, and now I am come to the other. They must agree, and I can make them to agree. But as for you, you understand not the matter.

L. Haward. I understand so much, that that is not possible. This is a point of Sophistry, quoth Secretary Bournes.

L. Chan. Then the Lord Chancellor began to tell the Lord Haward, that when he was in High Dutchland, they at Hale, which had before prayed and used their Service all in Dutch, began then to turn part into Latin, and part into Dutch.

Worcester. Yea, and at Wittenberg too.

Rog. Yea, (but I could not be heard for the noise) in an University, where men for the most part understand the Latin, and yet not all in Latin. And I would have told the Order, and have gone forward both to have answered my Lord, and to have proved the thing that I had taken in hand: but perceiving their talk and noise to be too noisome, I was fain to think this in my heart, suffering them in the mean while to talk one of them one thing, and another another. Alas! neither will these men hear me if I speak, neither yet will they suffer me to write. There is no remedy, but let them alone, and commit the matter to God. Yet I began to go forward, and said, that I would make the Texts to agree, and to prove my purpose well enough.

L. Chan. No, no, thou canst prove nothing by the Scripture. The Scripture is dead: it must have a lively Expofitor.

Rog. No, the Scripture is alive. But let me go forward with my purpose.

Wor. All Hereticks have alledged the Scriptures for them: but they were confuted by the Scriptures, and by none other Expofitor.

Rog. Yea, all Hereticks have alledged the Scriptures for them: but they were confuted by the Scriptures, and by none other Expofitor.

Wor. But they would not confess that they were overcome by the Scriptures, I am sure of that.

Rog. I believe that: and yet were they overcome by them, and in all Councils they were disputed with and overthrowen by the Scriptures. And here I would have declared how they ought to proceed in these days, and so have come again to my purpose, but it was impossible: for one asked one thing, another said another, so that I was fain to hold my peace, and let them talk. And even when I would have taken hold on my proof, the Lord Chancellor, bade to Prison with me again; and away, away, said he, we have more to talk withal: If I would not be reformed (so he termed it) away, away. Then up I stood, for I had kneeled all the while.

Then Sir Richard Southwell, who stood by in a Window, said to me, Thou wilt not burn in this gear when it cometh to the purpose, I know well that.

Rog. Sir, I cannot tell, but I trust in my Lord God, yes, lifting up mine eyes unto Heaven.

B. of Ely. Then my Lord of Ely told me much of the Queens Majesties pleasure and meaning, and set it out with large words, saying, That he took them that would not receive the Bishop of Rome's Supremacy, to be unworthy to have her Mercy, &c.

Rogers. I said I would not refuse her Mercy, and yet I never offended her in all my life: And that I besought her Grace, and all their Honours, to be good to me, relieving my Conscience.

Divers spake at once. No, quoth they then, a great sort of them, and specially Secretary Bournes; A married Priest, and have not offended the Law?

Rog. I said, I had not broken the Queens Law, nor yet any point of the Law of the Realm therein: For I married where it was lawful.

Divers at once. Where was that; said they? thinking that to be unlawful in all places.

Rogers. In Dutchland. And if ye had not here in England made an open Law that Priests might have had Wives, I would never have come home again; for I brought a Wife and eight Children with me: which thing ye might be sure that I would not have done, if the Laws of the Realm had not permitted it before.

Then there was a great noise, some saying that I was come too soon with such a sort: I should find a slow coming of it; and some one thing, and some another. And one said (I could not well perceive who) that there was never a Catholick man or Country, that ever granted that a Priest might have a Wife.

Rogers. I said, The Catholick Church never denied Marriage to Priests, nor yet to any other man; and therewith was I going out of the Chamber, the Sergeant which brought me thither having me by the Arm.

Wor. Then the Bishop of Worcester turned his face towards me, and said that I wist not where that Church was or is.

Rogers. I said, yes, that I could tell where it was, but therewith went the Sergeant with me out of the Door.

This was the very true effect of all that was spoken unto me, and of all that I answered thereunto.

And here would I gladly make a more perfect Answer to all the former Objections, as also a due proof of that which I had taken in hand: but at this present I was informed that I should to morrow come to further Answer. Wherefore I am compelled to leave out that which I would most gladly have done, desiring here the hearty and unfeigned help of the Prayers of all Christs true Members, the true Imps of the true unfeigned Catholick Church, that the Lord God of all Consolation will now be my Comfort, Aid, Strength, Buckler and Shield: As also of all my Brethren that are in the same Cafe and Distress, that I and they all may despise all manner of threats and cruelty, and even the bitter burning Fire, and the dreadful dart of Death, and stick like true Souldiers to our dear and loving Captain, Christ, our only Redeemer and Saviour, and also the only true Head of the Church, that doth all in us all, which is the very property of an Head (and is a thing that all the Bishops of Rome cannot do) and that we do not traitorously run out of his Tents, or out of the plain Field from him, in the most jeopardy of the Battel, but that we may persevere in the Fight (if he will not otherwise deliver us) till we be most cruelly slain of his Enemies. For this I most heartily, and at this present, with weeping tears most instantly and earnestly desire and beseech you all to pray: And also if I dye, to be good to my poor and most honest Wife, being a poor Stranger, and all my little Souls, hers and my Children, Whom, with all the whole faithful and true Catholick Congregation of Christ, the Lord of Life and Death save, keep, and defend in all the troubles and assaults of this vain World, and bring at the last to everlasting Salvation on the true and sure Inheritance of all crossed Christians, Amen, Amen.

The 27. day of January at night.

The second Confession of John Rogers, made, and that should have been made (if it might have been heard) the 28. and 29. day of January, 1555.

First, being asked again by the Lord Chancellor, whether I would come into one Church with the Bishops and whole Realm, as now was concluded by Parliament (in the which all the Realm was converted to the Catholick Church of Rome) and so receive the mercy before proffered me, arising again with the whole Realm out of the Schism and Error in which we had long been, with Recantation of my Errors. I answered, That before I could not tell what his mercy meant, but now I understand that

The second Examination of Mr. Rogers.

Windsor's Mercy, which it meaneth.

Anno 1555. that it was a Mercy of the Antichristian Church of Rome, which I utterly refused; and that the thing which he spake of, was a very fall into Error and false Doctrine. Also that I had and would be able, by Gods grace, to prove that all the Doctrine which I had ever taught was true and Catholick, and that by the Scriptures and the Authority of the Fathers that lived 400. years after Christs Death. He answered, That should not, might not, nor ought not to be granted me: for I was but a private man, and might not be heard against the Determination of the whole Realm. Should, quoth he, when a Parliament hath concluded a thing, one, or any private person have Authority to discuss, whether they had done right or wrong? No, that may not be.

Whatsoever is once concluded in a Parliament, ought not to be reformed afterward by Doctrine, nor the Word of God, by the Bishop of Winchester's Divinity.

I answered shortly, That all the Laws of men might not, neither could rule the Word of God, but, that they all must be discussed and judged thereby, and obey thereunto: and neither my Conscience, nor any Christian mans, could be satisfied with such Laws as disagreed from that Word: and so was willing to have said much more. But the Lord Chancellor began a long Tale to very small purpose, concerning mine Answer, to have deceived me; that there was nothing in me whereof I should be heard, but Arrogancy, Pride, and Vain-glory. I also granted mine Ignorance to be greater than I could express, or than he took it: but yet that I feared not, by Gods assistance and strength, to be able by writing to perform my word, neither was I (I thanked God) so utterly ignorant as he would make me; but all was of God, to whom he thanks rendered therefore. Proud man was I never, nor yet vain-glorious. All the world knew well, where and on which side Pride, Arrogancy, and Vain-glory was. It was a poor Pride, that was or is in us, God I knoweth.

Then said he, That at the first dash condemned the Queen and the whole Realm to be of the Church of Antichrist, and burdened me highly therewithal. I answered, That the Queens Majesty (God save her Grace) would have done well enough, if it had not been for his counsel. He said, the Queen went before him, and it was her own motion. I said, without fail I neither could, nor would I ever believe it.

Dr. Aldrich witnesseth with the Bishop of Winchester.

Then said Dr. Aldrich the Bishop of Carlisle, that they the Bishops would bear him witness. Yes, quoth I, that I believe well, and with that the People laughed: For that day there were many, but on the morrow they kept the Doors shut, and would let none in, but the Bishops Adherents and Servants in a manner, yea, and the first day the thousand man came not in. Then Mr. Comptroller and Secretary Bourne would have stood up also to bear witness, and did.

I said it was no great matter: and to say the truth, I thought that they were good helpers thereunto themselves: but I ceased to say any more therein, knowing that they were too strong and mighty of power, and that they should be believed before me, yea, and before our Saviour Christ, and all his Prophets and Apostles too, in these days.

The opinion of Mr. Rogers touching the Sacrament of the Body of Christ, required.

Then after many words, He asked me what I thought concerning the blessed Sacrament, and stood up, and put off his Cap, and all his Fellow Bishops, (of which there were a great sort, new men, of whom I knew few) whether I believed in the Sacrament to be the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ, that was born of the Virgin Mary, and hanged on the Cross, really and substantially.

I answered, I had often told him that it was a matter in which I was no medler, and therefore suspected of my Brethren to be of a contrary Opinion. Notwithstanding, even as the most part of your Doctrine in other Points is false, and the defence thereof only by force and cruelty: so in this matter I think it to be as false as the rest.

For I cannot understand (really and substantially) to signify otherwise than corporally: but corporally Christ is only in Heaven, and so cannot Christ be corporally also in your Sacrament. And here I somewhat let out his Charity after this sort: My Lord, quoth I, ye have dealt with me most cruelly: For ye have put me in Prison without Law, and kept me there now almost a year and a half. For I was almost half a year in my House, where I was obedient to you, God knoweth, and spake with no man. And now have I been a full year in Newgate at great Costs and Charges, having a Wife and ten Children to feed, and I had never a penny of my Livings; which was against the Law.

He answered, That Dr. Ridley which had given them me, was an Usurper, and therefore I was the unjust Possessor of them.

Was the King then an Usurper, quoth I, which gave Dr. Ridley the Bishoprick?

Yea, quoth he, and began to set out the wrongs that the King had done to the Bishop of London, and to himself also. But yet I do misde my terms, quoth he, to call the King Usurper. But the word was gone out of the abundance of the heart before: and I think that he was not very sorry for it in heart. I might have said more concerning that matter, but I did not.

I asked him wherefore he put me in Prison. He said, because I preached against the Queen.

I answered that it was not true: and I would be bound to prove it, and to stand to the trial of the Law, that no man should be able to disprove it, and thereupon would set my life. I preached (quoth I) a Sermon at the Cross, after the Queen came to the Tower; but there was nothing said against the Queen, I take witness of all the Audience, which was not small. I alleged also that he had, after Examination, let me go at liberty after the preaching of that Sermon.

Yea, but thou didst read thy Lectures after, quoth he, against the commandment of the Council.

That did I not, quoth I, let that be proved, and let me dye for it. Thus have you now against the Law of God and Man handled me, and never lent for me, never conferred with me, never spoke of any learning, till now that ye have gotten a whip to whip me with, and a sword to cut off my neck, if I will not confend to your mind. This Charity doth all the World understand.

I might and would have added, if I could have been suffered to speak, that it had been time enough to take away mens Livings, and thereto have imprisoned them, after that they had offended Laws: For they be good Citizens that break not Laws, and worthy of praise, and not of punishment. But their purpose is to keep men in Prison, until they may catch them in their Laws, and so kill them. I could and would have added the Example of Daniel, which by a crafty devised Law was cast into the Lions Den. Item, I might have declared, that I most humbly desired to be set at liberty, sending my Wife to him with a Supplication, being great with Child, and with her eight honest Women, or thereabouts, to Richmond, at Christmas was a twelve month, whilst I was yet in my House.

Item, I wrote two Supplications to him out of Newgate, and sent my Wife many times to him. Mr. Gosnell also that worthy man, who is now departed in the Lord, laboured for me, and so did divers other worthy men also take pains in the matter. These things declare my Lord Chancellors Antichristian Charity, which is, that he hath and doth seek my Blood, and the destruction of my poor Wife and my ten Children.

This is a short sum of the words which were spoken on the 28. day of January at Afternoon, after that Mr. Hooper had been the first, and Mr. Cardmaker the second in Examination before me. The Lord grant us Grace to stand together, fighting lawfully in his cause, till we be smitten down together, if the Lords will be so to permit it. For there shall not a hair of our heads perish against his will, but with his will. Whereunto the same Lord grant us to be obedient unto the end, and in the end, Amen: Sweet, mighty, and merciful Lord Jesus, the Son of David and of God: Amen, Amen, let every true Christian say and pray.

Then the Clock being, as I guessed, about four, the Lord Chancellor said, That he and the Church must yet use Charity with me (what manner of Charity it is, all true Christians do well understand, as to wit, the same that the Fox doth with the Chickens, and the Wolf with the Lambs) and gave me reprieve till to morrow, to see whether I would remember my self well to morrow, and whether I would return to the Catholick Church (for so he calleth his Antichristian false Church) again, and repent, and they would receive me to Mercy.

I said that I was never out of the true Catholick Church,

Dr. Gosnell called King James an Usurper.

Mr. Rogers imprisoned against all Law and Right.

Mr. Rogers punished before any Law was broken.

Mr. Gosnell laboured for Mr. Rogers.

Great charity use Charity with me (what manner of Charity it is, all true Christians do well understand, as to wit, the same that the Fox doth with the Chickens, and the Wolf with the Lambs) and gave me reprieve till to morrow, to see whether I would remember my self well to morrow, and whether I would return to the Catholick Church (for so he calleth his Antichristian false Church) again, and repent, and they would receive me to Mercy.

Act 3.

Cruelly forced without a cause.

Mr. Rogers a year and a half in duress.

Church, nor would be: but into his Church would I by Gods Grace, never come.

The Popes Church is the Church of Antichrist.

Well, quoth he, then is our Church false and Antichristian.

Yes, quoth I.

And what is the Doctrine of the Sacrament?

False, quoth I, and cast my hands abroad.

Then said one, that I was a Player. To whom I answered not; for I passed not upon his mock.

Mr. Rogers wanted to appear the next day.

Come again, quoth the Lord Chancellor, to morrow between nine and ten.

I am ready to come again, whensoever ye call, quoth I.

And thus was I brought up by the Sheriffs to the Compter in Southwark, Mr. Hooper going before me, and a great multitude of People being present, so that we had much to do to go in the Streets.

Thus much was done the 28. day of January.

Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hooper brought again before the Chancellor.

The second day, which was the 29. of January, we were sent for in the Morning about 9. of the Clock, and by the Sheriffs fetched from the Compter in Southwark to the Church again, as to wit, to St. Mary Overie, where we were the day before in the Afternoon, as is said. And when Mr. Hooper was condemned, as I understood afterward, then sent they for me. Then my Lord Chancellor said unto me:

God now words to Mr. Rogers.

Rogers, quoth he, here thou wast yesterday, and we gave thee liberty to remember thyself this night, whether thou wouldst come to the Holy Catholick Church of Christ again or not. Tell us now what thou hast determined, whether thou wilt be repentant and sorry, and wilt return again and take mercy.

Answer of Mr. Rogers to the Bp. of Winchester.

My Lord, quoth I, I have remembered myself right well, what you yesterday said to me, and desire you to give me leave to declare my mind, what I have to say thereunto; and that done I shall answer you to your demanded question.

Mr. Rogers here to defend himself by writing.

When I yesterday desired that I might be suffered by the Scripture and Authority of the first, best, and purest Church to defend my Doctrine by writing (meaning not only of the Primacy, but also of all the Doctrine that ever I had preached) ye answered me, that it might not, nor ought not to be granted me, for I was a private person; and that the Parliament was above the Authority of all private persons, and therefore the Sentence thereof might not be found faulty and valueless by me being but a private person. And yet my Lord, quoth I, I am able to shew Examples, that one man hath come into a General Council, and after the whole had determined and agreed upon an Act or Article, some one man coming in afterward, hath by the Word of God declared so pithily, that the Council had erred in decreeing the said Article, that he caused the whole Council to change and alter their Act or Article before determined. And of these Examples, said I, I am able to shew two. I can also shew the Authority of S. Augustine; that when he disputed with an Heretick, he would neither himself, nor yet have the Heretick to lean unto the determination of two former Councils, of the which the one made for him, and the other for the Heretick that disputed against him: but said that he would have the Scriptures to be their judge, which were common and indifferent for them both, and not proper to either of them.

Contra. Mar. 20. 15. 64.

Item, I could shew, said I, the Authority of a learned Lawyer Panormitanus, which saith, that unto a simple Lay-man that bringeth the Word of God with him there ought more credit to be given, than to a whole Council gathered together. By these things will I prove that I ought not to be denied to say my mind, and to be heard against a whole Parliament, bringing the Word of God for me, and the Authority of the old Church 400. years after Christ, albeit that every man in the Parliament had willingly and without respect of fear and favour agreed thereunto, which thing I doubt not a little of; specially seeing the like had been permitted in the old Church, even in General Councils, yes, and that in one of the chiefest Councils that ever was, unto which neither any Acts of this Parliament, nor yet any of the late General Councils of the Bishops of Rome ought to be compared. For, said I, if Henry the Eighth were alive, and should call a Parliament, and begin to determine a thing (and here I would have alledged the example of the Act of making the Queen a Bastard, and of making himself the Superiour Head; but I could not, being interrupted by one whom God forgive) then will ye (pointing to my Lord Chancellor) and ye, and ye, and so ye all (pointing to the rest of the Bishops) say, Amen: yes, and it like your Grace, it is meet that it be so enacted.

A Case put to the B. of Winchester.

Anno 1555.

This was Sir Anthony Trewar.

Here my Lord Chancellor would suffer me to speak no more; but bade me sit down mockingly, saying, that I was sent for to be instructed of them, and I would take upon me to be their Instructor.

Mr. Rogers not suffered to speak.

My Lord, quoth I, I stand, and sit not: Shall I not be suffered to speak for my life?

Shall we suffer thee to tell a Tale, and to pray, quoth he? And with that he stood up, and began to face me, after his old arrogant proud fashion, for he perceived that I was in a way to have touched them somewhat, which he thought to hinder by dashing me out of my Tale, and so he did. For I could never be suffered to come to my Tale again, no not to one word of it; but he had much like communication with me, as he had the day before, and as his manner is, taunt upon taunt, and check upon check. For in that case, being Gods cause, I told him he should not make me afraid to speak.

Mark here the Spirit of this Fellow.

Lord Chan. See what a Spirit this Fellow hath, said he, finding fault at mine accustomed earnestness, and hearty manner of speaking.

Rogers. I have a true Spirit, quoth I, agreeing and obeying the Word of God, and would further have said, That I was never the worse, but the better, to be earnest in a just and true Cause, and in my Master Christs matters; but I could not be heard. And at the length he proceeded towards his Excommunication and Condemnation, after that I had told him that his Church of Rome was the Church of Antichrist, meaning the false Doctrine and Tyrannical Laws, with the maintenance thereof by cruel persecutions used by the Bishops of the said Church (of which the Bishop of Winchester and the rest of his fellow Bishops, that are now in England, are the chief Members.) Of Laws I mean, quoth I, and not all men and women which are in the Popes Church. Likewise when I was said to have denied their Sacrament (whereof he made his wonted reverent mention, more to maintain his Kingdom thereby, than for the true reverence of Christs Institution; more for his own and his Popish Generations sake, than for Religion or Gods sake) I told him after what order I did speak of it (for the manner of his speaking was not agreeing to my words, which are before recited in the Communication that we had in the 28. of January) wherewith he was not contented, but he asked the Audience whether I had not simply denied the Sacrament. They would have said, and did, what he lusted, for the most of them were of his own Servants at that day, the 29. of January I mean. At the last I said, I will never deny that I said, that is, that your Doctrine of the Sacrament is false; but yet I tell you after what order I said it.

The godly Spirit of Mr. Rogers.

The Church of Rome to be the Church of Antichrist, meaning the Laws and Doctrine now used in Rome.

How the B. of Winchester looked for blood.

To be short, he read my Condemnation before me, particularly mentioning therein but two Articles; first, That I affirmed the Romish Catholick Church to be the Church of Antichrist; and that I denied the Reality of their Sacrament. He caused me to be degraded and condemned, and put into the hands of the Laity, and so he gave me over into the Sheriffs hands, which were much better than his.

The Copy of which his Condemnation here I thought good to put down in English, to the intent that the same, being here once expressed, may serve for all other Sentences Condemnatory throw the whole Story to be referred unto.

The Sentence Condemnatory against Mr. Rogers.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Steven by the permission of God Bishop of Winchester, lawfully and rightly proceeding with all godly favour by Authority and Virtue of our Office, against thee John Rogers Priest, also called Matthew, before us personally here present, being accused and detected, and notoriously slandered of Heresie, having heard, seen, and understood, and with all

The Sentence defined against Mr. Rogers.

Anno 1555. all diligent deliberation weighed, discussed, and considered the merits of the cause, all things being observed, which by us, in this behalf in order of Law ought to be observed, sitting in our Judgment Seat, the Name of Christ being first called upon, and having only God before our eyes, because by the Acts enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this matter, and by thine own Confession Judicially made before us, we do find that thou hast taught, holden, and affirmed, and obstinately defended divers Errors, Heresies, and Damnable Opinions, contrary to the Doctrine and Determination of the Holy Church,

His Articles. as namely these; That the Catholick Church of Rome is the Church of Antichrist: Item, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not substantially nor really the Natural Body and Blood of Christ. The which aforesaid Heresies and Damnable Opinions being, contrary to the Law of God, and Determination of the Universal and Apostolical Church, thou hast arrogantly, stubbornly, and wittingly maintained, held and affirmed, as also defended before us, as well in this Judgment, as also elsewhere, and with the like obstinacy, stubbornness, malice and blindness of heart, both wittingly and willingly hast affirmed, that thou wilt believe, maintain and hold, affirm and declare the same: We therefore S. Winchester Bishop, Ordinary, and Diocesan aforesaid, by the consent and assent as well of our Reverend Brethren the Lord Bishops here present and assistant, as also by the Counsel and Judgment of divers worshipful Lawyers and Professors of Divinity, with whom we have communicated in this behalf, do declare and pronounce thee the said John Rogers, otherwise called Matthew, through thy demerits, transgressions, obstinacies, and wilfulness (which through manifold ways thou hast incurred by thine own wicked and stubborn obstinacy) to have been, and to be guilty of the detestable, horrible, and wicked offences of Heretical Pravity and execrable Doctrine, and that thou hast before us sundry times spoken, maintained, and wittingly and stubbornly defended the said cursed and execrable Doctrine in the sundry Confessions, Assertions, and Recognitions here Judicially before us oftentimes repeated, and yet still dost maintain, affirm and believe the same, and that thou hast been and art lawfully and ordinarily convicted in this behalf: We therefore, I say, albeit following the example of Christ, Which would not the death of a Sinner, but rather that he should convert and live; we have gone about oftentimes to correct thee, and by all lawful means that we could, and all wholesome admonitions that we did know, to reduce thee again unto the true Faith and Unity of the Universal Catholick Church, notwithstanding have found thee obstinate and stiff-necked, willingly continuing in thy Damnable Opinions and Heresies, and; refusing to return again unto the true Faith and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and as the Child of wickedness and darkness so to have hardened thy heart, that thou wilt not understand the voice of thy Shepherd, which with a Fatherly affection doth seek after thee, nor wilt be allured with his Fatherly and Godly Admonitions: we therefore

Steven the Bishop aforesaid, not willing that thou which art wicked shouldest now become more wicked, and infect the Lords Flock with thine Heresies (which we are greatly afraid of) with sorrow of mind and bitterness of heart do judge thee, and definitively condemn thee the said John Rogers, otherwise called Matthew, thy demerits and faults being aggravated through thy damnable obstinacy, as guilty of most detestable Heresies, and as an obstinate impenitent sinner, refusing penitently to return to the lap and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and that thou hast been and art by Law Excommunicate, and do pronounce and declare thee to be an Excommunicate person. Also we pronounce and declare thee, being an Heretic, to be cast out from the Church, and left unto the Judgment of the Secular Power, and now presently so do leave thee as an obstinate Heretic, and a person wrapped in the Sentence of the Great Curse, to be degraded worsly for thy demerits requiring them notwithstanding in the bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, that this execution and punishment worthy to be done upon thee may so be moderated, that the Rigor thereof be not too extrem, nor yet the gentleness too much mitigated, but that it may be to the salvation of thy Soul, to the extirpation, terror, and conversion of the Hereticks; to the Unity of the Catholick Faith) by this our Sentence Definitive which we here lay upon and against thee, and do with sorrow of heart promulgate in this form aforesaid.

After this Sentence being read, he sent us (Mr. Hooper, I mean, and me) to the Clink, there to remain till night and when it was dark, they carried us, Mr. Hooper going before with the one Sheriff, and I coming after with the other, with bills and weapons onow, out of the Clink, and led us thorow the Bishops Houfe, and so thorow S. Mary Overies Church-yard, and so into Southwerk, and over the Bridge on Proceffion to Newgate through the City. But I must shew you this also, that when he had read the Condemnation, he declared that I was in the Great Curse, and what a vengeable dangerous matter it was to eat and drink with us that were accursed, or to give us any thing: for all that so did, should be partakers of the same Great Curse.

Well my Lord, quoth I, here I stand before God and you, and all this Honourable Audience, and take him to witness, that I never wittingly or willingly taught any false Doctrine; and therefore have I a good Conscience before God and all good men. I am sure that you and I shall come before a Judge that is righteous, before whom I shall be as good a man as you: and I nothing doubt but that I shall be found there a true Member of the true Catholick Church of Christ, and everlastingly saved. And as for your false Church, ye need not to Excommunicate me forth of it. I have not been in it these twenty years, the Lord be thanked therefore. But now ye have done what ye can, my Lord, I pray you yet grant me one thing.

What is that, quoth he?
That my poor Wife, being a stranger, may come and speak with me so long as I live. For she hath ten Children that are hers and mine, and somewhat I would counsel her, what were best for her to do.

No, quoth he, she is not thy Wife.
Yes my Lord, quoth I, and hath been these 18. years. Should I grant her to be thy Wife, quoth he?
Chuse you, quoth I, whether ye will or not; she shall be so nevertheless.

She shall not come at thee, quoth he.
Then I have tried out all your Charity, said I. You make your self highly displeased with the Matrimony of Priests, but you maintain open Whoredom: as in Wales, quoth I, where every Priest hath his Whore openly dwelling with him, and lying by him: even as your Holy Father suffereth all the Priests in Deutschland and in France to do the like. Thereto he answered not, but looked as it were a squint at it: and thus I departed, and saw him last.

Other good matter there is beside penned by Mr. Rogers in the Prison, which he thought and would have answered, if he might have been permitted: which matter hereunder followeth to be seen by his own setting down.

Hitherto, dearly beloved, ye have heard what was said: now hear what I purposed the night before to have said, if I could have been permitted. Two things I purposed to have touched. The one, how it was lawful for a private man to reason and write against a wicked Act of Parliament, or ungodly Council, which the Lord Chancellor the day before denied me. The other was to prove that Prosperity was not always a token of Gods Love.

And this I purposed to speak of, because the Lord Chancellor boasted of himself, that he was delivered forth of Prison as it were by Miracle, and preserved of God to restore true Religion, and to punish me and such other, whom he termed Hereticks. Concerning these two points, in this matter I purposed to have proceeded. It is not unknown to you, that King Henry the eighth in his time made his daughter, the Queen that now is, a Bastard: he abolished the Authority of the Bishop of Rome: he pulled down Abbeyes: And all this he did by the consent of Parliament.

King Edward the sixth in his time made lawful the marriage of Priests, turned the Service into English, abolished the Idolatrous Mass, with all like Superstitious Trumpetry,

Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hooper per cent to Newgate.

A vengeable thing to be in the Popes Curse.

Mr. Rogers words to the Bishop of Winchester.

Mr. Rogers request, as heave his wife come to him while he lived, could not be granted.

These matters prevent sorrow of heart, and yet they will not cease from murdering.

Tromperry, set up the holy Communion, and all by consent of Parliament.

The Queen that now is hath repealed the Act that made her Bastard, hath brought in the Bishop of Rome, and set him in his old Authority, beginneth to set up Abbeyes again, hath made the marriage of Priests unlawful, hath turned the English Service into Latin again, hath set up the Mass again, with like baggage, and pulled down the holy Communion: And all this is done by consent of Parliament.

If the Acts of Parliament, made in King Henric time and in King Edwards, had their Foundation upon Gods Word, whereupon all positive Law ought to be grounded; then these which are established in the Queens time, being clean contrary to the others, as they are not warranted by Gods Word, so are they wicked, and therefore to be both spoken and written against of all men, as well of private as of publick persons.

If your Acts, my Lord Chancellor, which you have lately coyned (I call them yours, because ye only bear the swinge, devise, and decree what ye list, all other men are forced to follow) be good, and according to Gods Word, then the former Acts were naught, which thing ye seem to say, in utterly taking of them away, and setting up of the contrary: If the former were naught, why then did ye consent unto them, and confirm them to be good by your voluntary and advised writing? as it appeareth, and will do to the Worlds End, in your Book De vera Obedientia, where you prove the Queen a Bastard, and the Bishop of Rome to be an Usurper, and to have no Authority in the Realm of England.

Ye must needs confesse, that the most part of your Acts of Parliament in these latter days have been according to the fantasies of a few. King Henry in his time established by Parliament in a manner what he listed, and many things that might well have been amended.

In King Edwards days the Dukes of Somerset and Northumberland bare a great stroke in things, and did not all things sincerely. Even so, since the Queen that now is came to the Government of the Realm, all things are ordered by your device, and head, and the whole Parliament House is led as you list; by reason whereof they are compelled to consent to things both contrary to Gods manifest Word, and also contrary to their own Consciences: so great is your cruelty.

For to bring your wicked purposes to pass, and to establish your Antichristian Kingdom (which, I trust, the Lord with the Breath of his Mouth will speedily blow over) ye have called three Parliaments in one year and an half, that, what ye could not compass by subtil perswasion, ye might bring to pass by tyrannical threatening: For if ye had not used cruel force in your doings, ye had never brought to pass such things as this day ye have, to the utter defacing and abolishing of Gods true Religion, and to the casting away and destruction of your Natural Country, so much as in you lieth.

And as it is most true, that Acts of Parliament have in these latter days been ruled by the fantasies of a few; and the whole Parliament House, contrary to their minds, was compelled to consent to such things as a few have conceived: So it must needs be granted, that the Papists at all times were most ready to apply themselves to the present World, and like men-pleasers to follow the fantasies of such as were in Authority, and turn with the State, which waysoever it turned. Yea, if the State should change ten times in one year, they would ever be ready at hand to change with it, and so follow the cry, and rather utterly forsake God, and be of no Religion, than that they should forgoe lust or living, for God or for Religion.

King Henry by Parliament, according to Gods Word, put down the Pope: The Clergy consented, and all men openly by oath refused his usurped Supremacy, knowing by Gods Word Christ to be Head of the Church, and every King in his Realm to have, under and next unto Christ, the chief Sovereignty.

King Edward also by Parliament, according to Gods Word, set the Marriage of Priests at liberty, abolished the Popish and Idolatrous Mass, changed the Latin Service, and set up the holy Communion: The whole Clergy consented hereunto; many of them set it forth by their Preaching; and all they by practising confirmed Anno the same. 1555.

Notwithstanding, now when the State is altered, and the Laws changed, the Papistical Clergy, with other like Worldlings, as men neither fearing God, neither flying Worldly flame, neither yet regarding their Consciences, Oaths, or Honesty, like wavering Weather-Cocks, turn round about, and putting on Harlots foreheads, sing a new song, and cry with an impudent mouth: Come again, come again to the Catholick Church, meaning the Antichristian Church of Rome, which is the Synagogue of Satan, and the very Sink of all Superstition, Heresie, and Idolatry.

Of what force I pray you may a man think these Parliaments to be, which scantily can stand a year in strength? Or what credit is to be given to these Law-makers, which are not ashamed to establish contrary Laws, and to condemn that for evil, which before (the thing it self and the circumstances remaining all one) they affirmed and decreed to be good. Truly ye are so ready, contrary to all right, to change and turn for the pleasure of man, that at length, I fear, God will use you like Changelings, and both turn you forth of his Kingdom, and out of your own Country.

Ye charge the Gospel-Preachers with the undoing of this Realm: Nay, it is the turning Papists, which have not only set to Sale their Country like Traytors, but also troubled the simple People, so that they cannot tell what they may believe. For that which they affirmed, and Preached to be true Doctrine in King Edwards days, now they cry against it, as it were most abominable Heresie. This fault, I trust, ye shall never find at our hands.

Therefore to conclude that which I purposed, so much as the Acts of Parliament of these later times are one contrary to another, and those which ye now have established in your time are contrary to Gods most manifest Word, as is the usurped Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, the Idolatrous Mass, the Latin Service, the prohibiting of lawful Marriage (which S. Paul calleth the Doctrine of Devils) with many such other: I say, it is not only lawful for any private man, which bringeth Gods Word for him, and the Authority of the primitive and best Church, to speak and write against such unlawful Laws; but it is his duty, and he is bound in every Conscience to do it. Which thing I have proved by divers examples before, and now will add but one other, which is written in the fifth of the Acts, where it appeareth that the High Priests, the Elders, Scribes, and Pharisees, decreed in their Council, and gave the same Commandments to the Apostles, that they should not preach in the Name of Christ, as ye have also forbidden us; Notwithstanding when they were charged therewithal, they answered, Obedire oportet Deo magis quam hominibus: that is, We ought more to obey God than man: even so we may, and do answer you; God is more to be obeyed than man; and your wicked Laws cannot so tongue-eye us, but we will speak the truth.

The Apostles were beaten for their boldness, and they rejoiced that they suffered for Christs cause. Ye have also provided Rods for us, and bloody Whips: Yet when ye have done that which Gods hand and Council hath determined that ye shall do, be it Life or Death, I trust that God will so assist us by his holy Spirit and Grace, that we shall patiently suffer it, and praise God for it and whatsoever become of me and others, which now suffer for speaking and professing of the Truth, yet be ye sure, that Gods Word will prevail and have the upper hand, when your bloody Laws and wicked Decrees, for want of sure Foundation, shall fall in the dust: and that which I have spoken of your Acts of Parliament, the same may be said of the General Councils of these latter days, which have been within these five hundred years, where the Antichrist of Rome, by reason of his usurped Authority, ruled the roast, and decreed such things as made for his gain, not regarding Gods Glory: and therefore are they to be spoken, written, and cried out against of all such as fear God and love his Truth.

And thus much I purposed to have said concerning the first point.

Now

Anno 1555.

Now touching the second Point. That whereas my Lord Chancellor had the day before said his pleasure of them that ruled the Realm while he was in Prison, and also rejoiced as though God had made this Alteration, even for his sake and his Catholick Church; as he called it, and to declare as it were by Miracle, that we were before in a Schism and Heresie, and the Realm was now brought unto an Unity, and to a Truth, and I cannot tell whereto: thereto was I fully purposed to have said. Secondly, my Lord, whereas ye yesterday so highly dispraised the Government of them that ruled in innocent King Edwards days, it may please your Lordship to understand, that we poor Preachers, whom ye so evil allow, did most boldly and plainly rebuke their evil Governance in many things, specially their Covetousness, and neglect and small regard to live after the Gospel, as also their negligence to occasion other to live thereafter, with more things than I can now rehearse. This can all London testify with us. I would also have told him, what I my self for my part did once at Pauls Cross, concerning the misde of Abbeyes, and other Church Goods: and I am assured right well, that never a Papist of them all did ever so much therein as I did, I thank the Lord therefore: I was also, as is well known, faine to answer therefore before all the Council, and many of my Brethren did the like, so that we for the not rebuking of their Faults, shall not answer before God, nor be blameworthy before men. Therefore let the Gentlemen and Courtiers themselves, and all the Citizens of London, testify what we did.

But, my Lord, you could not abide them, for that which they did unto you, and for that they were of a contrary Religion unto you. Wherefore in that you seem so infest against them, it is neither any just or publick Cause, but it is your own private hate that maketh you to report so evil of their Governance. And ye may now say what ye list of them, when they be partly dead and gone, and partly by you put out of Office.

But what shall be said of you when your fall shall follow, ye shall then hear. And I must say my Conscience to you: I fear me, ye have and will with your Governance bring England out of Gods Blessing into a warm Sun. I pray God you do not.

I am an English man borne, and a God knoweth, do naturally will well to my Countrey. And, my Lord, I have often proved that the things, which I have much feared aforehand should come to pass, have indeed followed. I pray God I may fail of my guessing in this behalf: but truly, that will not be with expelling the true Word of God out of the Realm, and with the shedding of Innocent Blood.

And as touching your rejoicing, as though God had set you aloft to punish us by Miracle (for so you report and brag openly of your self) and to minister Justice, if we will not receive your holy Father's Mercy, and thereby do declare your Church to be true, and ours false, to that I answer thus: Gods Works be wonderful, and are not to be comprehended and perceived by mans wisdom, nor by the wit of the most wise and prudent. Yea, they are soonest deceived, and do most easily judge amis of Gods wonderful Works, that are most worldly-wise. God hath made all the wisdom of this World foolishness, first to the Corinthians, the first, and the second Chapter.

Dedit dilectum animam suam in manus inimicorum ejus. Hierem. xii.

That is,

He hath put his beloved and dear heart into the hands of the Enemies thereof.

This thing doth God, which thing all wise men account to be the most foolish and unwise part that can be. Will the wife of the world, trow ye, put their most dear Friends and tenderly beloved Children into their Enemies hands, to kill, slay, burn, &c. that is unto them a madness, above all madnes. And yet doth God use this order, and this is an high and singular wisdom in his sight, which the world taketh to be most extrem madnes.

Can the world shew a cause why he suffered the great multitude of innocent Children to be murdered of Hered of Alcalon, or why he put that most holy man, John Baptif, into the hands of Herod his Son to be beheaded, and that in Prison secretly without open Judgment most tyrannously? Why he suffered his beloved Apostle James to be beheaded of another Herod? Levi 12. Why he suffered his beloved Seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to be four hundred years in thraldom and bondage, and under Pharaoh? And all the Stock of Juda and Benjamin, his beloved Children and Church, to come under the Power, Sword, and Tyranny of Nebuchadnesor? No verily, but his true Catholick Church knoweth divers Causes thereof, which are now too long to rehearse, and which I would right gladly shew, if I had time.

But this I am right sure of, that it was not because that the foresaid godly men were in Heresies, and subject to false Gods Services, and Idolatry, and that their Adversaries were men of God, and beloved of God: The contrary was true: John Baptif was beloved of God, and Herod hated, and so forth of the rest: And John Baptif, the innocent Children, James, the Children of Israel in Egypt, and in Babylon, were the Catholick Members and People of God: And their Adversaries, unto whose hands they were put and delivered, and that of God, by his good will and pleasure, were Idolaters, and the People of the Devil: But they would be called the chief Members of God, and rejoiced that they had the true God, and that it was now declared by Miracles, that the Israelites had but a false God, and a false Religion, seeing they were delivered into the Babylonians hands. And all the other (the Herods and Pharaohs I mean) plainly determined, that if the men, which they killed and handled evil, had been Gods People, God would never have suffered them to come into their hands, but rather have done the contrary; and have let John Baptif kill Herod, and the Israelites Pharaoh and Nebuchadnesor. Even the like is now to be seen in us, and in our most cruel Adversaries.

They are not therefore the Catholick Church, because our merciful God hath at this present given our lives into their hands: Neither are we therefore Heretics; because we suffer punishment at their hands, as the Lord Chancellor by his rejoicing seemeth to gather: The contrary is hereby to be gathered, that we be the Members of the true Catholick Church, because we suffer for the same Doctrine which John Baptif, James, the Israelites, yea Christ, and the Apostles did teach: of which none taught any thing of our Adversaries Doctrine, namely, that the rotten Antichristian Head of Rome should be the Head of Christs Church: but they have manifestly taught the contrary, specially Paul, in the second to the Thessalonians, the second Chapter: John in the Apocalypse: Daniel 11. Which thing, if I might have Life and Books, I would so (by Gods grace) set forth, that all the world should see it: and that our Adversaries, with their Antichristian Head, are the Members of the Devils Church, as they undoubtedly are. And in like case, as the above-mentioned holy men, though they in their days were counted to be Heretics, Seditious, and Disturbers of the whole world; for unto John Baptif it was said, Job 1. Wherefore baptizest thou, if thou be not Helias, nor that Prophet? &c. As who should say, Thou hast no such Authority to begin a new Ceremony in the Church: For we be in ordinary possession of the Church: and of us thou hast received no such Power: we abide by our Circumcision: and the like could I declare of James, and of all the Apostles and Prophets, and of our Saviour Christ himself, that were all condemned as Heretics, and Blasphemers of God, and Disturbers of the whole World. Paul and Silas, Acts the sixteenth, heard like words of the Philippians; These men trouble our City, seeing they are Jews, and preach Institutions which are not lawful for us to receive, seeing we be Romans. And in the sixteenth; In Athens, the wise men of this world, and such as gave their endeavour to wisdom, said by S. Paul: Quid vult sermo-rogis hic dicere? that is, What wilt this Prater (as my Lord Chancellor said to me, Shall we suffer this Fellow to prate, when I would fain have said that thing that I have here written) Thriller, News-carrier or bringer, that telleth whatsoever men will have him for gain and advantage, that will for a piece of Bread say what ye will have him, &c. And another said in the same place, He seemeth to be a Preacher of new Devils, &c. And Act. 21. the Jews say by Paul, laying hands on him, help O ye Israelites, say they, this is the man that teacheth all men every where against the People (meaning the Jews) and the Law of this place (meaning Jerusalem) and yet was never a word of these true. And Act. 22. the same Jews said of Paul: Out of the Earth with that man, or away with him: For it is not lawful for him to live, or he is not worthy to live. And how many more of these Examples are to be found in the Bible? Although I say these men were in their days taken for Hereticks of them that were then in Authority, and of the great multitude of the World, yet it is now well known, yea and very shortly after their deaths this was known, yea, and even in their lives also unto the true Catholick Church, that they were not only the chief and special Members of the true Catholick Church, but also the founders and builders thereof (notwithstanding the sinister Judgment that the wise and mighty men, and the great multitude of the World had of them) and in their Consciences they were always assuredly certified of the same. Even the same shall the World find true in us, shortly after our deaths, as also there beat this hour (the Lord be thanked therefore) not a few that already know it, as we our selves also are by Gods Grace assuredly certified in our Consciences, that we are not Hereticks, but Members of the true Catholick Church, and that our Adversaries the Bishops and Popish Clergy, which will have that Title, are the Members of Satans Church, and their Antichristian Head of Rome with them.

But here they will cry out; Lo these men will be still John Baptists, the Apostles, and Prophets, &c.

I answer, We make not our selves like unto them, in the singular virtues and gifts of God given unto them; as of doing miracles, and of many other things. The similitude & likeness of them & us consisteth not in all things, but only in this, that is, that we be like them in Doctrine, and in the suffering of Persecution and Infamy for the same.

We have Preached their very Doctrine, and none other thing: That we are able sufficiently to declare by their writings; and by writing for my part, I have proffered to prove the same, as is now often said. And for this cause we suffer the like reproach, shame, and rebuke of the World, and the like persecution, losing of our Lives and Goods, forsaking (as our Master Christ commandeth) Father, Mother, Sister, Brethren, Wives, Children, and all that there is, being assured of a Joyful Resurrection, and to be Crowned in Glory with them, according to the infallible promises made unto us in Christ, our only and sufficient Mediator, Reconciler, Priest, and Sacrifice, which hath pleased the Father, and quieted and pacified his wrath against our Sins, and made us without spot or wrinkle in his sight by imputation, although we, of and in our selves, are bespotted, and be-blotted with many filthy Sins, which if the great Mercy granted in Christ did not put away, by not imputing them unto us of his measureless unspeakable Mercy and Love to save us, they would have brought us to everlasting Damnation, and Death perpetual: Herein, and in no other, do we affirm our selves to be like unto our Head Christ, and all his Apostles, Prophets, Martyrs, and Saints. And herein ought all Christian men to be like them, and herein are all true Christian men and women like them every one, according to the measure of the Faith that God hath dealt unto them, and to the diversity of the gifts of the Spirit given unto them. But let us now consider, that if it be Gods good will and pleasure to give his own beloved heart, that is his beloved Church, and the Members thereof, into the hands of their Enemies, to chasten, try, and prove them, and to bring them to the true unfeigned acknowledging of their own natural stubbornness, disobedience towards God and his Commandment, as touching the Love of God and of their Brethren or Neighbours, and their natural inclination, readiness, and desire to love Creatures, to seek their own lusts, pleasures, and things forbidden of God, to obtain a true and earnest repentance, and sorrowfulness therefore, & to make them to sigh and cry for the forgiveness of the same, and for the aid of the Spirit, daily to mortify and kill the said evil desires and Lusts; yea, and often falling into gross outward Sins, as did David, Peter, Magdalen, and others, to rise again also therewith with a mighty crying for Mercy, with many other causes: let us also consider what he hereafter doth with the said enemies, into whose hands he hath given his tender beloved dearlings to be chastened and tried. Forsooth, whereas he but chasteneth his dearlings, and croseth them for a small while, according to his good pleasure, as all Fathers do with their Children, Heb. 12. Prov. 3. he utterly destroyeth, yea and everlastingly dameth the unrepentant Enemies. Let Herod tell me what he was by killing Jame, and persecuting Peter, and Christs tender dearlings, and beloved Spouse and Wife, his Church. Verily God thought him not worthy to have death inflicted unto him by Men or Angels, or any worthy Creatures, but those small, and yet most vile vermines, lice, and worms must consume and kill his beately, vile, and tyrannous Body; Pharaoh and Nebuchadonors, for all their pride and most mighty power, must at the length let Gods dearlings go freely away out of their land, yea out of their hands and tyranny. For when it could not be obtained at their hands that Gods Congregation might have true mercy Ministred unto them, but the counterfeit mercy of these our days, that is to say, extreme cruelty, and even the very and that most horrible and cruel death, God arose and awoke out of his sleep, and destroyed those enemies of his flock with a mighty hand, and stretched out arm. Pharaoh did with most great and intolerable labors and burdens oppress and bring under the poor Israelites, and yet did the Courtiers undoubtedly noise abroad, that the King was merciful unto them, to suffer them to live in the land, and to set them a work, that they might get them their livings. If he should thrust them out of his Land whither should they go, like a sort of Vagabonds and Rummagates? This Title and Name of mercy would that Tyrant have, and so did his flattering false Courtiers spread his vain praise abroad. Have not we the like examples now-a-days? O that I had now time to write certain things pertaining to our Winchesters mercy! How merciful he hath been to me and to my good Brethren I will not speak of, neither yet to the Dor Suffolks most innocent Daughter, and to her as innocent Husband. For although their Fathers were faulty, yet had their youth and lack of experience deserved a pardon by all true merciful Mens Judgments. O that I had time to paint out this matter aright; but there be many alive that can do it much better when I am dead. Pharaoh had his Plagues, and his most flourishing Land was by counterfeit mercy, which was indeed right cruelty and abominable Tyranny, utterly destroyed. And think ye that bloody butcherly Bishop of Winchester and his most bloody Brethren shall escape? Or that England shall for their offences, and specially for the maintenance of their Idolatry, and wilful following of them, not abide as great brunts? yes undoubtedly.

If God look not mercifully upon England, the seeds of utter destruction are sown in it already by these Hypocritical Tyrants, and Antichristian Prelats, Popish Papists, and double Traytors to their Natural Country. And yet they speak of Mercy, of Blessing, of the Catholick Church, of Unity, of Power, and Strengthening of the Realm. This double dissimulation will shew it self one day when the Plague cometh, which will undoubtedly light upon those Crown-thorn Caputins, and that shortly, whoeover the Godly and the poor Realm suffer in the mean while by Gods good sufferance and will.

Spite of Nebuchadonors beard, and maugre his heart, the captive, thrall, and miserable Jews must come home again, and have their City and Temple builded up again by Zerobabel, Esdra, and Nehemias, &c. And the whole Kingdom of Babylon must go to ruin, and be taken in of strangers, the Persians and the Medes. So shall the dispersed English Flock of Christ be brought again into their former estate, or to a better, I trust in the Lord God, than it was in innocent King Edwards days, and our Bloody Babylonian Bishops; and the whole Crown-thorn Company brought to utter shame, rebuke,

Gods Justice

Enemies and Persecutors.

rebuke, ruine, decay, and destruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not suffer for ever their abominable lying false Doctrine, their Hypocritie, Blood-thirst, whoredom, idleness, their pestilent Life, pampered in all kind of pleasure, their Traifonical boasting pride, their malicious, envious, and poisoned stomachs, which they bear towards his poor and miserable Christians. Peter truly warneth, that If Judgement beginneth at the House of God, what shall be the end of them that believe not the Gospel? If the righteous shall scarce be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinful appear? Some shall have their punishment here in this World, and in the World to come; and they that do escape in this World, shall not escape Everlasting Damnation. This shall be your fawce, O ye wicked Papists, make ye merry here as long as ye may.

February.

After that John Rogers, as ye have heard, had been long and straitly imprisoned, lodged in Newgate amongst Thieves, often examined, and very uncharitably intreated, and at length unjustly and most cruelly by wicked Winchester condemned: The fourth of February, in the year of our Lord 1555. being Munday in the morning he was warned suddenly, by the keepers wife of Newgate, to prepare himself to the fire: who being then found asleep, scarce with much thogging could we awaked. At length being raised and waked, and bid to make halt, then, said he, if it be so, I need not tye my points: and so was had down, first to Boner to be degraded. That done, he craved of Boner but one Petition. And Boner asking what that should be: Nothing (said he) but that he might talk a few words with his wife before his burning. But that could not be obtained of him. Then said he, you declare your Charity what it is: and so he was brought into Smithfield by Mr. Chefter, and Mr. Woodroffe, then Sheriffs of London, there to be burnt; where he shewed

M. Rogers warned to prepare for Death.

M. Rogers degraded. M. Rogers could not be suffered of Boner to speake his wife before his burning. M. Rogers brought to Smithfield.

most constant patience, not using many words, for he could not be permitted, but only exhorting the people constantly to remain in that Faith and true Doctrine which he before had taught, and they had learned, and for the Confirmation whereof he was not only content patiently to suffer and bear all such bitterness and cruelty as had been shewed him, but also most gladly to resign up his Life, and to give his Flesh to the consuming fire, for the Testimony of the same.

The Copy of M. Rogers examinations by Gods providence preserved.

Briefly, and in few words to comprehend the whole order of his Life, doings and Martyrdom: First, this Godly M. Rogers was committed to Prison, as is above said, and there continued a year and half. In Prison he was merry, and earnest in all he wentabout. He wrote much; his examinations he penned with his own hand, which else had never come to light. Wherein is to be noted, by the way, a memorable working of Gods Providence. Ye heard a little above, how M. Rogers craved of Boner, going to be burning, that he might speake a few words before with his wife, which could not be granted. What these words were, which he had to say to his wife, it is for no man certainly to define. Likewise it may be supposed that his purpose was, amongst other things, to signify unto her of the Book written of his Examinations and Answers, which he had privily hid in a secret corner of the Prison where he lay. But where mans power lacketh, see how Gods Providence worketh. For notwithstanding that during the time of his Imprisonment, strait search there was to take away his Letters and writings; yet after his death, his wife and one of her Sons called Daniel, coming into the place where he lay, to see for his Books and writings, and now ready to go away; it chanced her Son aforementioned, casting his eye aside, to spie a Black thing, (for it had a black cover, belike because it should not be known) lying in a blind corner under a pair of Stairs. Who, willing his Mother to see what it was, found it to be the Book written with his own hand, containing these his Examinations, and Answers with other matter above specified. In the latter end whereof, this also was contained; which because it concerneth a Prophetical Forewarning of things pertaining to the Church, I thought to place the same his words, as they be there written, which are these: If God look not mercifully upon England, the seeds of utter destruction are sown in it already by these Hypocritical T, rants and Antichristian Prelates, Popish Papists,

M. Rogers is mentioned in propheticall Petition. England is already.

and double Traitors to their Natural Countrey. And yet they speake of Mercy, of Blessings, of the Catholick Church, of Unity, of Power, and strengthening of the Realm. This double dissimulation will shew itself one day when the plague cometh, which undoubtedly will light upon these Crown-horn Captains, and that shortly, whatsoever the Godly and the poor Realm suffer in the mean while by Gods sufferance and will.

Spite of Nebuchadonozor's beard, and mauge his heart, the captive, thrall, and miserable Jews must come home again, and have their City and Temple builded up again by Zorobabel, Eldas, and Nehemias, &c. And the whole Kingdom of Babylon must go to ruin, and be taken of strangers, the Persians and Meads. So shall the dispersed English Flock of Christ be brought again into their former Estate; or to a better, I trust in the Lord God, than it was in innocent King Edward's days; and our Bloody Babylonical Bishops, and the whole Crown-horn Company brought to utter shame, rebuke, ruine, decay, and destruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not suffer for ever their abominable lying false Doctrine, their Hypocritie, Blood-thirst, Whoredom, idleness, their pestilent Life, pampered in all kind of pleasure, their Traifonical boasting Pride, their malicious, envious and poisoned stomachs, which they bear towards his poor and miserable Christians. Peter truly warneth, that If Judgement beginneth in the House of God, what shall be the end of them that believe not the Gospel? If the righteous shall scarce be saved, where shall the ungodly and sinful appear? Some shall have their punishment here in this World and in the World to come; and they that do escape in this World, shall not escape everlasting Damnation. This shall be your fawce, O ye wicked Papists, make ye merry as long as ye may.

He is mentioned here of the Jews, of the Babylonians, of the Persians, of the Meads.

1 Pet. 4.

Furthermore, amongst other words and sayings, which may seem Prophetically to be spoken of him, this also may be added, and is notoriously to be marked, that he spake, being then in Prison, to the Printer of this present book, who then also was laid up for like cause of Religion: Thou, said he, shalt live to see the Alteration of this Religion, and the Gospel to be freely preached again: And therefore have me commended to my Brethren, as well in exile as others, and bid them be circumspect in displacing the Papists, and putting good Ministers into Churches, or else their end will be worse than ours. And for lack of Good Ministers to furnish Churches, his device was (M. Hooper also agreeing to the same) that for every ten Churches some one good and learned Superintendent should be appointed, which should have under him Faithful Readers, such as might well be got, so that Popish Priests should clean be put out, and the Bishop once a year to oversee the profiting of the Parishes; and if the Minister did not his duty, as well in profiting himself in his Book, and his Parishioners in good instructions, so that they may be trained by little and little to give a reckoning how they do profit, then he to be expelled, and another put in his place: And the Bishop to do the like with the Superintendent: This was his Counsel and request: Shewing moreover, and protesting in his commendations to his Brethren by the Printer aforesaid, that if they would not so do, their end, he said, would be worse than theirs.

M. Rogers prophesied of the return of the Gospel.

M. Rogers counsel in placing good Ministers.

Over and besides divers things touching M. Rogers, this is not to be forgotten, how in the days of King Edward the sixth, there was a controversy among the Bishops and Clergy, for wearing of Priests Caps, and other attire belonging to that order. M. Rogers being one of that number which never went otherwise than in a round Cap, during all the time of King Edward, affirmed that he would not agree to that decreement of uniformity, but upon this condition, that if they would needs have such an uniformity of wearing the Cap, Tipper, &c. then it should also be decreed vithal, that the Papists, for a difference betwixt them and others, should be constrained to wear upon their sleeves a Chalice with an Host upon it. Whereupon if they would consent, he would agree to the other; otherwise he would not, he said, consent to the sitting forth of the same, nor ever wear the Cap, as indeed he never did.

A note touching Priests Caps.

The words of Mr. Woodroffe to Mr.
Rogers.

To proceed now further in describing the doings of this man, during the time while he remained Prisoner in Newgate, he was to the Prisoners beneficial and liberal; for whom he had thus devised, that he with his Fellows should have but one Meal a day, they paying notwithstanding for the Charges of the whole; the other Meal should be given to them that lacked on the other side of the Prison. But Alexander, a Copperfinith indeed, of whose doing more shall be said God-willing hereafter, would in no case suffer that. The Sunday before he suffered, he drunk to Mr. Hooper, being then underneath him, and bade them commend him unto him, and tell him, There was never little Fellow better would stick to a man, than he would stick to him, presupposing they should both be burned together, although it happened otherwise; for Mr. Rogers was burnt alone. And thus much briefly concerning the Life and such Acts of Mr. Rogers, as I thought worthy noting.

Now when the time came, that he being delivered to the Sheriffs, should be brought out of Newgate to Smithfield, the place of his Execution, first came to him Mr. Woodroffe, one of the aforesaid Sheriffs, and calling Mr. Rogers unto him, asked him if he would revoke his abominable Doctrine, and his evil Opinion of the Sacrament of the Altar. Mr. Rogers answered and said, That which I have Preached I will Seal with my Blood. Then, quoth Mr. Woodroffe, thou art an Heretic. That shall be known, quoth Rogers, at the Day of Judgment. Well, (quoth Mr. Woodroffe) I will never pray for thee. But I will pray for you, quoth Mr. Rogers; and so was brought the same day, which was Monday the Fourth of February, by the Sheriffs toward Smithfield, saying the Psalm Miserere by the way, all the People wonderfully rejoicing at his Constancy, with great Praises and Thanks to God for the same: And there in the Presence of M. Rochester, Comptroller of the Queens Household, Sir Richard Southwell, both the Sheriffs, and a wonderful number of People, he was burned into Ashes, walking his hands in the flame as he was in burning. A little before his burning at the Stake, his Pardon was brought, if he would have Recanted, but he utterly refused it. He was the first Protomartyr of all the blessed Company that suffered in Queen Mary's time, that gave the first adventure upon the Fire. His Wife and Children, being eleven in number, and ten able to go, and one sucking on her Breast, met him by the way as he went towards Smithfield: This sorrowful sight of his own flesh and blood could nothing move him, but that he constantly and cheerfully took his Death with wonderful Patience, in the defence and quarrel of Christs Gospel.

AFTER that Queen Mary, by publick Proclamation in the first year of her Reign, had inhibited the sincere preaching of Gods holy Word, as is before declared, divers godly Ministers of the Word, which had the Cure and Charge of Souls committed to them, did notwithstanding, according to their bounden Duty, feed their Flock faithfully, not as Preachers authorized by publick Authority, (as the Godly Order of the Realm was in the happy days of blessed King Edward) but as the private Pastors of particular Flocks, among whom Laurence Saunders was one, a man of worshipful Parentage. His bringing up was in Learning from his Youth, in places meet for that purpose, as namely in the School of Eaton. From whence (according to the manner there used) he was chosen to go to the Kings Colledge in Cambridge, where he continued Scholar of the Colledge three whole years, and there profited in knowledge and learning very much for that time: Shortly after that, he did forsake the University, and went to his Parents, upon whose advice he minded to become a Merchant, for that his Mother, who was a Gentlewoman of good estimation, being left a Widow, and having a good Portion for him among his other Brethren, she thought to set him up wealthy, and so he coming up to London, was bound Apprentice with a Merchant, named Sir William Chester (who afterward chanced to be Sheriff of London the same year that Saunders was burned at Coventry.) Thus by the mind of his Friends Laurence should needs have been a Merchant; but Almighty God, which hath his secret working in all things, saw better for his Servant, as it fell out in the end: For although that Saunders was bound by fast Indenture to play the Merchant, yet the Lord so wrought inwardly in his heart, that he could find no liking in that Vocation: So that when his other Fellows were busily occupied about that kind of Trade, he would secretly withdraw himself into some privy Corner, and there fall into his solitary Lamentations, as one not liking with that kind and trade of life.

It happened that his Master, being a good man, as hearing his Prentice thus in his fierce Prayers inwardly to mourn by himself, called him unto him, to know what the cause was of that his solitainties and lamentations who then perceiving his mind nothing to finish that kind of Life, (for so Sanders declared unto him) and perceiving also his whole purpose to be bent to the study of his Book, and spiritual contemplation, like a good man directed his Letters incontinently unto his friends, and giving him his Indenture to set him free: and thus Lawrence Sanders being ravished with the love of Learning, and especially with the reading of Gods Word, tarried not long time in the traffick of Merchandize, but shortly returned to Cambridge again to his study, where he began to couple to the knowledge of the Latin, the study of the Greek Tongue, wherein he profited in small time very much: Therewith also he joynd the study of the Hebrew: Then gave he himself wholly to the study of the holy Scripture, to furnish himself to the Office of a Preacher.

In study he was diligent and painful, in Godly Life he declared the fruits of a well exercised Conscience, he prayed often and with great fervor, and in his Prayers as also at other times, he had his part of spiritual exercises, which his hearty fighting to God declared, in which when any special assault did come, by Prayer he felt present relief then was his company marvellous comfortable. For as his exercises were special teachings, so in the end they proved singular Comfortations: wherein he became so expert, that within short space he was able to comfort others which were in any Affliction, by the consolation wherewith the Lord did comfort him. Thus continued he in the University, till he proceeded Master of Arts, and a long space after.

In the beginning of King Edwards Reign, when Gods true Religion was begun to be restored, after Licence obtained, he began to preach, and was so well liked of them which then had Authority, that they appointed him to read a Divinity Lecture in the Colledge at Fotheringay, where by Doctrine and Life heedified the Godly, drew many ignorant to Gods true knowledge, and stopped the mouth of the Adversaries. He married about that time, and in the married estate led a Life unblamable before all men. The Colledge of Fotheringay being dissolved, he was placed to be reader in the Minster at Lichfield: where he to behaved himself in teaching and living, that the very Adversaries did give him a full report as well of Learning, as of much Godliness. After a certain space, he departed from Lichfield to a Benefice in Leicester-shire, called Churchington, whereupon he keeping residence taught diligently, and kept a liberal house. From thence he was orderly called to take a Benefice in the City of London, named Abthallows in Breadstreet. Then minded he to give over his Cure in the Country: and therefore after he had taken possession of his Benefice in London, he departed from London into the Country, clearly to discharge himself thereof. And even at that time began the broul about the claim that Queen Mary made to the Crown, by reason wherof he could not accomplish his purpose.

In this trouble, and even among the beginners of it, (such I mean as were for the Queen) he preached at Nor-thampton, nothing meddling with the State, but boldly uttered his Conscience against Popish Doctrine and Antichrists damnable Errors, which were like to spring up again in England, as a just plague for the little Love which the English Nation did bear to the Blessed Word of God, which had been so plentifully offered unto them. The Queens men which were there and heard him, were highly displeased with him for his Sermon, and for it kept him among them as Prisoner. But partly for love of his Brethren and Friends, which were chief doers for the Queen among them, partly because there was no Law broken by his Preaching, they dismissed him. He, seeing the dreadful days at hand, inflamed with the fire of Godly zeal, preached with Diligence at both those Benefices, as time could serve him, seeing he could resist neither of them now, but into the hand of a Papist.

Thus passed he to and fro Preaching, until that Proclamation was put forth, of which mention is made in the beginning. At which time he was at his Benefice in the Country, where he notwithstanding the Proclamation aforesaid, taught diligently Gods truth confirming the people therein, and arraigning them against false Doctrine, until he was not only commanded to cease, but also with force resisted, so that he could not proceed there in Preaching. Some of his Friends, perceiving such fearful menacing, counselled him to flee out of the Realm, which he refused to do. But seeing he was with violence kept from doing good in that place, he returned towards London to visit the Flock, of which he had there the charge.

On Saturday, the 14. of October, as he was coming nigh to the City of London, Sir John Mordant, a Councellor to Queen Mary, did overtake him, and asked him whether he went. I have (said Sanders) a Cure in London, and now I go to instruct my People according to my duty. If you will follow my Council, quoth Mr. Mordant, let them alone, and come not at them. To this Sanders answered: how shall I then be discharged before God, if any be sick, and desire Consolation, if any want good Counsel and need instruction, or if any should slip into Error and receive false Doctrine? Did you not, quoth Mordant, Preach such a day, and named the day, in Breadstreet in London? Yes verily, said Sanders, that same is my Cure. I heard you my self, quoth Mr. Mordant: and will you Preach now there again? If it please you, said Sanders to morrow you may hear me again in that same place, where I will confirm by the Authority of Gods Word, all that I said then, and whatsoever before that time I taught them.

I would counsel you (quoth the other) not to Preach. If you can and will forbid me by lawful Authority, then I must obey, said Sanders. Nay (quoth he) I will not forbid you, but I do give you Counsel. And thus entered they both the City, and departed each from other. Mordant, of an uncharitable mind went to give warning to Bona Bishop of London, that Sanders would Preach in his Cure the next day. Sanders resorted to his lodging, with a mind bent to do his duty. Where because he seemed to be somewhat troubled, one which was there about him, asked him how he did. In very deed (saith he) I am in Prison, till he was in Prison. His mind was unquiet until he had Preached, and that he should have quietness of mind, though he were put in Prison.

The next day, which was Sunday in the forenoon, he made a Sermon in his Parish, entitulating on that place which Paul writeth to the Corinthians: I have coupled you to one man, that ye should make your selves a chaste Abthallows. Virgin unto Christ. But I fear least it come to pass, that as the Serpent beguiled Eve; even so your wits should be corrupted from the singleness which ye had towards Christ. He recited a sum of that true Christian Doctrine, through which they were coupled to Christ, to receive of him free justification through Faith in his Blood. The Papistical Doctrine he compared to the Serpents deceiving, and left they should be deceived by it, he made a comparison between the voice of God, and the voice of the Popish Serpent; defending to more particular Declaration thereof, as it were to let them plainly see the difference that is between the Order of the Church Service set forth by King Edward in the English Tongue, and comparing it with the Popish Service then used in the Latine Tongue.

The first he said was good, because it was according to the Word of God, Corinth. 14. and the order of the Primitive Church. The other he said was evil, and though in that evil be intermingled some good Latin words; yet was it but as a little honey or milk mingled with a great deal of Poyson, to make them drink up all. This was the sum of his Sermon.

In the Afternoon he was ready in his Church to have given another exhortation to his people. But the Bishop of London interrupted him by sending an Officer for him. This Officer charged him, upon the pain of Disobedience and Contumacy; forthwith to come to the Bishop his Master. Thus, as the Apostles were brought out of the Temple, where they were teaching, unto the Rulers of the Priesthood was Lawrence Sanders brought before this Bishop of this place of London, who had in his company the aforementioned Sir John Mordant and some of his Chaplains. The Bishop laid no more to Laurence Sanders charge, but Treason for breaking the Queens Proclamation, Heresie and Sedition for his Sermon.

*Preaching of Gods Word

Bishop Bower.*

The Treason and Sedition his charity was content to let slip, untill another time. But an Heretick he would now prove him, and all those, he said, which did teach and believe that the Administration of the Sacraments and all orders of the Church are most pure, which do come most nigh to the order of the Primitive Church. For the Church was then but in her Infancy, and could not abide that perfection which was afterward to be furnished with Ceremonies. And for this cause Christ himself, and after him the Apostles, did in many things bear with the rudeness of that Church. To this Laurence Sanders answered with the Authority of S. Augustine, That Ceremonies were even from the beginning invented and ordained for the rude infancy and weak infirmity of man, and therefore it was a token of the more perfection of the Primitive Church, that it had few Ceremonies, and of the rudeness of the Church Papistical, because it had so many Ceremonies, partly Blasphemous, partly unfavoury and unprofitable.

*Ceremonies

After much talk had concerning this matter, the Bishop willed him to write what he believed of Transubstantiation. Laurence Sanders did so, saying; My Lord, ye do seek my Blood, and ye shall have it: I pray God that ye may be so Baptized in it, that ye may thereafter loath blood-sucking, and become a better man. This writing the Bishop kept for his purpose, even to cut the writers throat, as shall appear hereafter. The Bishop, when he had his will, sent Laurence Sanders to the Lord Chancellor, as Anna sent Christ to Caiphaz, and like favour found Sanders as Christ his Master did before him. But the Chancellor being not at home, Sanders was constrained to tarry for him by the space of four hours, in the utter Chamber, where he found a Chaplain of the Bishops very merrily disposed, with certain Gentlemen playing at the Tables, with divers others of the same Family or House occupied there in the same exercise.

All this time Sanders stood very modestly and soberly at the Screen or Capboard bare-headed, Sir John Mordant his Guide or Leader walking up and down by him: who (as I said before) was then one of the Council. At the last the Bishop returned from the Court, whom, as soon as he was entered, a great many suiters met and received: so that before he could get out of one house into another, half an hour was passed. At the last he came into the Chamber, where Sanders was, and went thorow into another Chamber: where in the mean way Sanders leader gave him a writing, containing the Cause, or rather the Accusation of the said Sanders: Which when he had perused; where is the man, said the Bishop? Then Sanders, being brought forth to the place of Examination, first most lowly and meekly kneeled down, and made curtesie before the Table where the Bishop did sit; unto whom the Bishop spake on this wise:

*Winchester

M. Sanders.*

How happeneth it, said he, that, notwithstanding the Queens Proclamation to the contrary, you have enterprised to preach?

Sanders denied not that he did preach: saying, that forso much as he saw the perillous times now at hand, he did but (according as he was admonished, and warned by Ezekiel the Prophet) exhort his Flock and Parishioners to persevere and stand stedfastly in the Doctrine which they had learned; saying also, That he was moved and pricked forward thereunto by the place of the Apostles, wherein he was commanded rather to obey God than man; and moreover, that nothing more moved or stirred him thereunto, than his own Conscience.

*M. Sanders

A goodly Conscience surely, said the Bishop. This your Conscience could make our Queen a Ballard, or misbegotten: Would it not, I pray you?

Then said Sanders, We, said he, do not declare or say, that the Queen is base, or misbegotten, neither go about any such matter. But for that let them care whole writings are yet in the hands of men, witnessing the same, not without the great reproach and shame of the Author: privily taunting the Bishop himself, which had before (to get the favour of Henry the Eighth) written and set forth in print a Book of true Obedience, wherein he had openly declared Queen Mary to be a Ballard. Now Mr. Sanders going forwards in his purpose, said; We do only profess and teach the sincerity and purity of the Word; the which, albeit it be now forbidden us to Preach with our Mouths, yet notwithstanding, I do not doubt, but that our Blood hereafter shall manifest the same. The Bishop being in this sort prettily ruffled and touched, said; Carry away this frolic fool to Prison. Unto whom M. Sanders answered, that he did give God thanks, which had given him at the last a place of rest and quietness, whereas he might pray for the Bishops conversion.

Furthermore, he that did lie with him afterwards in Prison, in the same Bed, reported that he heard him say, that even in the time of his Examination he was wonderfully comforted, inasmuch as not only in Spirit, but also in Body, he received a certain taste of that Holy Communion of Saints, whilst a most pleasant refreshing did issue from every Part and Member of the Body unto the seat and place of the Heart, and from thence did ebb and flow to and fro unto all the parts again.

This Sanders continued in Prison a whole year and three months. In all which space he sent divers Letters to divers men; as one to Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer; another to his Wife, and also to others, certifying them both of the Publick Calamity of the time, and also of his private Afflictions, and of sundry his conflicts with his Adversaries: as in writing to his friend he spake of Weston conferring with him in Prison, whereof ye shall hear anon (by the leave of the Lord) as followeth in the story. In the mean time the Chancellor, after this little talk with Mr. Sanders (as is aforesaid) sent him to the Prison of the Marshalsey, &c. For the Caiphaz (Winchester I mean) did nothing but bait him with some of his curish eloquence, and so committed him to the Prison of the Marshalsey, where he was kept Prisoner one whole year and a quarter. But of his Cause and Estate, thou shalt now see what L. Sanders himself did write.

A parcel of a Letter of Laurence Sanders sent to the Bishop of Winchester, as an answer to certain things wherewith he had before charged him.

Touching the cause of my Imprisonment, I doubt & question whether I have broken any Law or Proclamation. In my Doctrine I did not, forasmuch as at that time it was permitted by the Proclamation to use, according to our Conscience, such service as was then established. My Doctrine was then agreeable unto my Conscience and the same service then used. The Act which I did (be meaneth publick teaching of Gods Word in his own Parish, called Alhallowes in Breadstreet in the City of London) was such as being indifferently weighed, sounded no wilful breaking of the Proclamation, or at the least no wilful breaking of it, forasmuch as I caused no bell to be rung, neither occupied I any place in the Pulpit, after the order of Sermons or Lectures. But be it that I did break the Proclamation, this long time of Continuance in Prison may be thought to be more than a sufficient punishment for such a fault.

A fragment of M. Sanders

Touching the charging of me with my Religion, I say with S. Paul, this I confess, that after the way which they call Heresie, so worship I the God of my fore-fathers, believing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets, and have hope towards God, &c. And herein study I to have always a clear Conscience towards God and towards men: So that God I call to witness, I have a Conscience. And this my Conscience is not grounded upon vain fantasies, but upon the infallible verity of Gods Word, with the witnessing of his chosen Church agreeable unto the same.

good Conscience.

It is an easie thing for them, which take Christ for their true Pastor, and be the very Sheep of his Pasture, to discern the Voice of their true Shepherd, from the Voice of Wolves, Heralings, and Strangers: forasmuch as Christ saith; My Sheep hear my Voice: Ye and thereby they shall have the gift to know the right Voice of the true Shepherd, and so to follow him, and to avoid the contrary, as he also saith; The Sheep follow the Shepherd, for they know.

mercies, Which hath made us meet to be partakers of the inheritance of Saints in light, which hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the Kingdom of his beloved Son, by whom we have redemption through his Blood, &c. O most happy estate, that in an unspeakable wife our Life is hid with Christ in God: But whensoever Christ which is our Life shall shew himself, then shall we also appear with him in Glory. In the mean season as our sight is but in a glass, even in a dark speaking, so we walk in Faith, not after outward appearance: The which Faith although for want of outward appearance, reason reputeth but as vain, yet the chosen of God do know the effect thereof, to bring a more substantial state and lively fruition of very felicity and perfect blessedness than reason can reach, or senses receive. By this Faith we have in our possession all good things, yea even them which the eye hath not seen, and the ear hath not heard, neither hath entered the heart of man, &c. Then if hereby we do enjoy all good things, it followeth that we must needs possess, have and enjoy you, most Reverend Fathers, who be no small part of our joy and good things given us of God.

1 Cor. 2.

We heretofore have had the fruition of you by bodily Presence to our inexpressible benefit, praised be that our most Gracious God therefore. And now in Spirit we have the experience of unspeakable comfort by your Reverend Fatherhoods, for that in this so glorious sort ye become a Town set upon a Hill, a Candle upon a Candlestick, a Spectacle unto the World, both to the Angels and unto men. So that as we to our great comfort do feel, you also may assuredly with S. Paul, that the things which happen unto us, do chance unto the great furtherance of the Gospel; so that our Bonds in Christ are manifest, not only throughout all the Judgment-hall, but in all whole Europe; inasmuch that many of the Brethren in the Lord, being encouraged through our Bonds, dare more boldly speak the word without fear. And herein as you have with S. Paul greatly to rejoice, so we rejoice with you, and we do indeed with you give thanks for this worthy excellent favour of our God towards you, that Christ is thus magnified in you, yea, and hereafter shall be magnified in your Bodies, whether it be through Life or Death. Of which thing truly we are assured in our Prayers for you, and Ministering of the Spirit. And although for our own parts, Christ is unto you in Life and Death advantage, and that your desire is (as indeed it were better for you) to be loosed, and to be with Christ, yet for the Church of Christ were it much more necessary, that ye should abide in the Flesh. Yea, that Merciful God, even for his Christs sake, grant that ye may abide and continue for the furtherance of the Church, and rejoicing of Faith, that the rejoicing thereof may be the more abundant through Christ by your restoring, Amen, Amen.

But if it seem better otherwise unto the Divine Wisdom, that by speedy Death he hath appointed you to glorify him, the Lords will be done. Yea, even as we do rejoice both on your behalfs, and also on our own, that God is magnified by Life, and should be more abundantly glad for the continuance thereof; so we shall no less rejoice to have the same wrought by Death. We shall give thanks for this honour given unto you, rejoicing that ye are accounted worthy to suffer for the Name of Christ, and that it is given to you of God, not only that ye should believe in him, but also that ye should suffer for his sake. And herein we shall have to rejoice in the behalf of the Church of Christ, whose Faith may be the faster fixed upon Gods verity, being confirmed with three such worthy witnesses. O thanks be to God for this his unspeakable gift!

And now most Reverend Fathers, that you may understand the truth of us, and our estate how we stand in the Lord, I do assure your Reverences, partly by that I perceive by such of your Brethren as be here in Bonds with me, partly by that I hear of them which be in other places, and partly by that inward experience which I, most unworthy, have of Gods good comfort (more abundance whereof I know there is in others) you may be assured (I say) by Gods Grace, that you shall not be frustrate of your hope of our constant continuance in the cheerful confession of Gods everlasting verity. For even as we have received the Word of Truth, even the Gospel of our Salvation, wherein we believing are sealed with the holy Spirit of Promise, which is the earnest of our Inheritance (the which I pray certifieth our spirit, that we are the Children of God, and therefore God hath sent the spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father) so after such portion as God measureth unto us, we with the whole Church of Christ, and with you Reverend Fathers, receiving the same Spirit of Faith, according as it is written; I believed, and therefore I have spoken: We also believe, and therefore speak. For the which we in this dangerous Bondage and other Afflictions, having even such a fight as we have seen in you, and have heard of you, are in no wise afraid of our adversaries.

And forasmuch as we have such an Office, even as God hath had Mercy on us, we go not out of kind, but even with you, after our little power, we labour to maintain the Faith of the Gospel, knowing most certainly, that though we have this treasure in earthen Vessels, that the excellency of this power might be Gods, and not ours; yet shall we not be dashed in pieces: For the Lord will put his hand under us. When we are troubled on every side, yet are we not without shift: When we are in poverty, we are not utterly without some thing: When we suffer Persecution, we are not forsaken therein: When we are cast down, yet we shall not perish: but to Communicate with our sweet Saviour Christ in bearing the Cross, it is appointed unto us, that even with him also we shall be glorified: For it is a true saying; If we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we be patient, we shall also reign with him: If we deny him, he shall also deny us. Wherefore be we of good cheer, always bearing about in our Body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the Life of Jesus might appear also in our Body: For we know, that he which raised up the Lord Jesus, shall raise us up also by the means of Jesus, & shall join us to himself together with you. Wherefore we are not wearied; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our Tribulation which is momentary and light, prepareth an exceeding and eternal weight of Glory unto us, while we look not on the things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen. For the things which are seen, are temporal; but the things which are not seen, are eternal.

We testify unto you, Reverend Fathers, that we draw these matters with joy out of the Wells of the Saviour. And I trust we shall continually with you bless the Lord, and give thanks unto the Lord out of the Wells of Israel; we trust to be merry together at that great Supper of the Lamb, whose Spouse we are by Faith, and there to sing that song of everlasting Hallelujah, Amen. Yea, come Lord Jesus. The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you, Amen.

Grace and Comfort in Christ Jesus, our only Comfort in all extrem assaults, Amen.

Fain would this Flesh make strange of that which the spirit doth embrace; Oh! Lord, how loth is this loytering sluggard to pass forth in Gods path! It phantasizeth forth much fear of fray-bugs: and were it not for the force of Faith which pulleth it forward by the rein of Gods most sweet promise, and of hope which pricketh on behind, great adventures there were of fainting by the way. But blessed and everlastingly blessed be that Heavenly Father of ours, who in his Christ, our sufficient Saviour, hath vouchsafed to shine in our Hearts, that he give us the light of the knowledge of the Glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ: and having this treasure in our earthen Vessels, that the excellency of the power might be Gods and not ours, we are (according to his good will) troubled on every side, yet are we not without shift; we are in poverty, yet are we not without sufficient; we suffer persecution, but are not forsaken therein; we are cast down, nevertheless we perish not; we bear in the Body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the Life of Jesus might also appear in our Body.  by the Grace of our Christ we shall not be wearied, neither be dismayed by this our probation through the fire of Affliction, as though some strange thing had happened unto us: But by his Power we shall rejoice, inasmuch as we are partakers of Christs Passion, that when he doth appear, we may be merry and glad, knowing that our Tribulation, which is momentary and light, prepareth an exceeding and an eternal weight of Glory unto us, while we look not on the things which are seen, but on the things which are not seen. They that sow in Tears, shall reap in Joy. For he that goeth on his way weeping and scattering his good seed, shall doubtless come again with joy, and bring his whole sheaves with him. Then, then shall the Lord wipe away all Tears from our Eyes. Then, then shall be brought to pass that saying which is written: Death is swallowed up in victory. Death, where is thy sting? Hell, where is thy victory? Yea, thanks be to God, which hath given us Victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

In the mean season it remaineth for us to follow Saint Peters bidding: Let them (saith he) that are troubled, according to the will of God, commit their Souls to him with well doing, as a Faithful Creator and Maker. He is our Maker, we are his handy-work and Creatures, whom now when he hath made, he doth not leave and forsake, as the Shipwright doth the Ship, leaving it at all adventures to be tossed in the Tempest, but he comforteth us his Creatures, and in him we live, move and have our being: Yea, not only that, but now that he hath in his dear Christ repaired us, being before utterly decayed, and redeemed us, purging us unto himself as a peculiar people by the Blood of his Son, he hath put on a most tender good-will and Fatherly Affection towards us, never to forget us unto whom by such promises he hath plighted such Faith, that though it were possible that the Mother could forget her Infant, and not be tender-hearted to the Child of her Womb, yet may not it be, that his Faithful Believers should be forgotten of him. He biddeth us to cast our care on him, and saith, that assuredly he careth for us. And what though for a season he doth suffer us to be troubled in the troublous Tempests of Temptation, and seemeth as in much anger to have given us over, and forgotten us? let not us for all that leave off to put our trust in him, but let us with Godly Job conclude in our selves and say: Even though he kill me, yet will I put my trust in him. Let us with the Blessed Abraham in hope, even contrary to hope, by Belief lean unto that our loving Lord, who though for our probation he suffereth us to be afflicted, yet will he not be always chiding, neither keepeth he his anger for ever: for he knoweth whereof we are made, he remembereth that we are but dust. Wherefore, look how high the Heaven is in comparison of the Earth, so great is his Mercy towards them which fear him. Look how wide the East is from the West, so far hath he set our sins for us. Yea, like as a Father, pitieth his own Children, even so is the Lord merciful unto them that fear him. Oh! what great cause of rejoicing have we in our most Gracious God? we cannot but burst forth in the praising of such a bountiful Benefactor, and say with the same Psalms: Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and all that is within me Praise his holy Name. Praise the Lord, O my Soul, and forget not all his benefits.

Dear Wife, Riches I have none to leave behind me, wherewith to endow you after the Worldly manner: But that Treasure of talking how sweet Christ is unto hungry Consciences, (whereof, I thank my Christ, I do feel part, and would feel more) that I bequeath unto you, and to the rest of my beloved in Christ, to retain the same in sense of heart always. Pray, pray. I am merry, and I trust I shall be merry, maugre the teeth of all the Devils in Hell. I utterly refuse my self, and resign my self unto my Christ, in whom I know I shall be strong, as he seeth needful. Pray, pray, pray.

come into the Prison, yet did he take the little Babe out of her Arms, and brought him unto his Father: Laurence Sanders seeing him, rejoiced greatly, saying, that he rejoiced more to have such a Boy, than he should if two Thousand pounds were given him. And unto the standers by, which praised the goodness of the Child, he said, What man fearing God, would not lose this Life present, rather than by prolonging it here, he should adjudge this Boy to be a Bastard, his Wife a Whore, and himself a Whoremonger? Yea, if there were no other cause, for which a man of my Estate should lose his Life, yet who would not give it, to avouch this Child to be legitimate, and his marriage to be lawful and holy?

I do, good Reader, recite this saying, not only to let thee see what be thought of Priests marriage: but chiefly to let all married Couples and Parents learn to bear in their bosom true affections: natural, but yet seasoned with the true Salt of the Spirit, unfeignedly and unfeignably mortified to do the Natural Works and Offices of married Couples and Parents, so long as with their doing they may keep Christ with a free confessing hand, in a Conscience unsoiled: Otherwise both they and their own Lives are to be forsaken, as Christ required them to be denied, and given in his cause.

And now to come to the Examination of this good man, after that the Bishops had kept him one whole year and a quarter in Prison, at length they called him, as they did the rest of his fellows, openly to be examined. Of the which his first Examination the effect and purport thus followeth.

The Examination of Laurence Sanders.

Praised be our Gracious God who preferreth his from evil, and doth give them Grace to avoid all such offences as might hinder his Honour, or hurt his Church, Amen.

Being convened before the Queens most Honourable Council, sundry Bishops being present, the L. Chancellor began to speak in such form as followeth:

L. Chan. It is not unknown that you have been a Prisoner, for such abominable Heresies and false Doctrine as hath been shown by you; and now it is thought good that mercy be showed to such as seek for it. Wherefore if now you will shew your self conformable, and come home again, mercy is ready. We must say that we have fallen in manner all: but now we are risen again, and returned to the Catholick Church; you must rise with us, and come home unto it. Give us forthwith a direct answer.

Sand. My Lord, and my Lords all, may it please your Honours to give me leave to answer with deliberation.

Chan. Leave of your painting and pride of speech: For such is the fashion of you all, to please your selves in your glorious words. Answer yea, or nay.

Sand. My Lord, it is no time for me now to paint. And as for Pride, there is no great cause why it should be in me; My learning I confess to be but small: and as for riches or worldly wealth I have none at all. Notwithstanding, it standeth me in hand to answer to your demand circumspectly, considering that one of these two extremities are like to fall upon me: the losing of a good Conscience, or the losing of this my Body and Life. And I tell you truth, I love both Life and Liberty, if I could enjoy them without the hurt of my Conscience.

Chan. Conscience? You have none at all, but pride and arrogance, (as) dividing your selves by singularity from the Church.

Sand. The Lord is the knower of all mens Consciences. And where your Lordship layeth to my charge this dividing my self from the Church (as you do mean, and is now among you concluded upon, and I do understand) I do assure you, that I live in the Faith wherein I have been brought up since I was fourteen years old: being taught that the Power of the Bishop of Rome is but usurped, with many other abuses springing thereof. Yea, this I have received even at your hands that are here present, as a thing agreed upon by the Catholick Church and Publick Authority.

Chan. Yea marry, but I pray you, have you received by consent and authority all your Heresies of the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar.

Sand. My Lord, it is less offence to cut off an arm, hand, or joyn of man, than to cut off the head. For the man may live though he do lack an arm, hand, or joyn, and so he cannot without his head. But you, all the whole sort of you, have agreed to cut off the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, whom now you will have to be the Head of the Church again.

B. of Lond. And if it like your Lordship, I have his hand against the Blessed Sacrament. How say you to that ?

Sanders. What I have written, that I have written, and farther I will not accuse my self. Nothing have you to burden me withal, for breaking of your Laws since they were in force.

Chan. Well ; you be obstinate, and refuse liberty.

Sand. My Lord, I may not buy liberty at such a price: but I beseech your Honours to be means to the Queens Majesty for such a pardon for us, that we may live and keep our Conferences unclogged, and we shall live as most obedient Subjects. Otherwise, I must say for my self, that by Gods Grace I will abide the most extremity that man may do against me, rather than to do against my Conscience.

Chan. Ah Sirra, you will live as you list. The Donatists did desire to live in singularity, but indeed they were not meet to live on Earth : No more be you, and that shall you understand within these seven days; and therefore away with him.

Sand. Welcome be it, whatsoever the will of God shall be, either Life or Death. And I tell you truly, I have learned to dye. But I exhort you to beware of shedding of innocent Blood. Truly it will cry. The Spirit of God rest upon all your Honours, Amen. This is the sum and form of my first Examination, Pray, &c.

This Examination being ended, the Officers led him out of the place, and so stayed until the rest of his fellows were likewise handled, that they might have them altogether to prison. Lawrence Sanders standing among the Officers; seeing there a great multitude of people, opened his mouth and spake freely, warning them all of that which by their falling from Christ to Antichrist they did deserve; and therefore exhorting them by Repentance to life again, and to embrace Christ with stronger Faith, to confess him to the end, in the defiance of Antichrist, Sin, Death, and the Devil: So should they retain the Lords favour and blessing.

The Copies of his other Examination and Excommunication came to the hands of such as do keep them hid in secret. But in them, as he defended Christs cause stoutly, so warned he the Pharisaical Bishops and Papists of their Hypocrite and Tyranny freely, and cleared himself of their unjust quarrellings truly. After he was excommunicate and delivered to the Secular Power, he was brought by the Sheriff of London to the Prison called the Compter, in his own Parish in Breadstreet: whereat he rejoiced greatly, both because he found there a Fellow-prisoner, M. Cardmaker, with whom he had Christlike and comfortable conference, and also because out of Prison, as before out of a Pulpit, he might preach to his Parishioners; as by his Letter hereafter shall be declared.

The fourth day of February, the Bishop of London did come to the Prison where he was, to degrade him: which when he had done, Lawrence Sanders said to him, I thank God I am none of your Church.

The day following in the morning, the Sheriff of London delivered him to certain of the Queens Guard, which were appointed to carry him to the City of Coventry, there to be burned. The first night they came to S. Albans, where Mr. Grimald (a man who had more store of good gifts, than of great constancy) did speak with him.

After Mr. Sanders had given him a lesson meet for his lightness, he took a Cup in his hand, and asked him if he would pledge him of that Cup, of which he would begin to him. Grimald, by his shuffling and shrinking shewing what he was, said, Of that Cup which is in your hand I will pledge you: But of that other which you

A lawfull request but it could not be heard.

To live as the Scripture teacheth us, is not to live as we list. The Papists desire the Pope, the protestants Christ, only to be their Head: Now which of these two be most like the Donatists?

mean, I will not promise you. Well, said Master Sanders, my dear Lord Jesus Christ hath begun to me of a more bitter Cup than mine shall be, and shall I not pledge my most sweet Saviour? Yes, I hope.

After they were come to Coventry, the same night a poor Shoemaker, which was wont to serve him of shoes, came to him after this manner, and said; O my good Master, God strengthen and comfort you. Gramercies good Shoemaker, quoth Master Sanders, and I pray thee to pray for me; for I am the unmeetest man for this high office, that ever was appointed to it: but my Gracious God and dear Father is able to make me strong enough. That same night he was put into the Common Goal among other Prisoners, where he slept little, but spent the night in Prayer, and instructing of others.

A good Shoemaker of Coventry.

M. Sanders put to the Common Goal in Coventry.

Anno 1555. The next day, which was the eighth day of February, he was led to the place of Execution in the Park without the City, going in an old gown and a shirt, bare-footed, and oft times fell flat on the ground, and prayed. When he was come nigh to the place, the Officer, appointed to see the execution done, said to Mr. Sanders, that he was one of them which marred the Queens Realm with false Doctrine and Heresie, wherefore thou hast deserved death, quoth he, but yet if thou wilt revoke thine Heresies, the Queen hath pardoned thee: if not, yonder fire is prepared for thee. To whom Mr. Sanders answered, it is not I, nor my fellow Preachers of Gods Truth that have hurt the Queens Realm, but it is your self, and such as you are, which have always resisted Gods holy Word; it is you which have and do mar the Queens Realm. I do hold no Heresies, but the Doctrine of God, the blessed Gospel of Christ; that hold I, that believe I, that have I taught, and that will I never revoke. With that, this Tormentor cryed, Away with him. And away from him went M. Sanders with a merry courage towards the fire. He fell to the ground, and prayed: he rose up again and took the stake to which he should be chained, in his Arms, and kissed it, saying: Welcome the Cross of Christ, welcome everlasting Life: and being fastned to the stake, and fire put to him, full sweetly he slept in the Lord.

And thus have ye the full History of Laurence Sanders, whom I may well compare to S. Laurence, or any other of the Old Martyrs of Christs Church; both for the fervent zeal of the truth and Gospel of Christ, and the most constant patience in his suffering, as also for the cruel torments that he in his patient Body did sustain in the flame of fire. For so his cruel enemies handled him, that they burned him with green wood; and other smothering rather than burning fewel, which put him to much more pain, but that the Grace and most plentiful Consolation of Christ, which never forsaketh his servants, and gave strength to S. Laurence, gave also patience to this Laurence, above all that his torments could work against: which well appeared by his quiet standing, and sweet sleeping in the fire, as is above declared.

And to the intent to give the Reader to understand the better, what the Grace of Christ worketh in his servants; and again, how feeble and weak man is of himself without this Grace given from above, though he seem otherwise never so stout in himself: here therefore have we added to the foresaid story of Laurence Sanders, the Communication which in the beginning of his trouble was between him and Doctor Pendleton, by the example whereof, such as stand, may learn to understand to take heed with due fear, and not to brag; to lean to the Grace of the Lord, and not to presume in themselves.

A certain Communication between Laurence Sanders and Dr. Pendleton, in the beginning of Queen Maries time.

At the change of Religion in this Realm, and the beginning of Queen Maries Reign, Doctor Pendleton and Master Sanders, men known to the World, not only to be learned, but also earnest Preachers of Gods Word in the time of blessed King Edward, met together in the Country, where by occasion they were at that time, and as the case required (by reason of the Persecution that was then at hand) fell to debate what was best for them to do in so dangerous a season. Whereunto Mr. Sanders, whether through very frailty of his weak flesh, that was loth to taste the bitter Cup, though his Spirit were ready thereunto; or whether it were upon the mistrust of his own strength, that he might receive the greater power from above; or whether it were not for any one of the said causes alone, but for both together, or such like; seemed so fearful and feeble spirited, that he shewed himself in appearance, like either to fall quite from God and his Word, which he had taught, or at least to betake him to his heels, and to fly the Land, rather than to stick to his Profession and abide by his Tackle: So as Doctor Pendleton (who on the contrary side appeared not so big of Body, but as bold in courage, nor so earnest before in Pulpit, but as ready now to seal the same with his Blood) took upon him to comfort M. Sanders all that he might, admonishing him, as he could do it very well, not to forsake cowardly his flock when he had most need to defend them from the Wolf; neither having put his hand to Gods Plough, to start now aside and give it over, nor yet (that is worst of all) having once forsaken Antichrist, to fall either himself, or suffer others by his example to return to their vomit again.

After which and such like persuasions bidding him be of good comfort, and to take a good heart unto him; What man, quoth he, there is a great deal more cause in me to be afraid than in you, forasmuch as you see, I carry a greater mass of flesh upon my back than you do, and being so laden with a heavier lump of this vile carcase, ought therefore of Nature to be more frail than you: and yet, said he, I will see the uttermost drop of this grease of mine molten away, and the last goblet of this flesh consumed to ashes, before I will forsake God and his Truth. Whereunto the other answering but little, and wishing that Almighty God would give him more strength than he presently felt in himself, acknowledging his own weakness, consented notwithstanding, though it were somewhat faintly, to joyn with him in the profession of the Gospel, and so to go up to London, and set forth the same: whereupon they gave each other their hands.

Now when they were come to London, Lord, what a great change was there between these two persons! The poor feeble faint-hearted Sanders, by the goodness of Almighty God, taking heart of Grace to him, seeking the same in humility, boldly and stoutly confirmed his flock out of the Pulpit, where his charge lay, mightily beating down Antichrist, and lustily Preaching Christ his Master, for the which heavenward suffered most willingly, as is before declared. Whereas on the other side, Pendleton the proud (who as it appeared by the sequel, had been more stout in words than constant in deeds, and a greater bragger than a good Warrior) followed Peter so justly in cracks, howsoever he did in Repentance (which God only knoweth) that he came not so soon to London but he changed his tippet, and played the Apostata, preaching in stead of found Doctrine nothing almost but Errors and Lies, advancing Antichrist, and overthrowing poor Christ with all his main: so his former boldness came to nothing, unless it were a contrary key, becoming of a Faithful Pastor a false Runnagate, and of a true Preacher a sworn Enemy to Gods everlasting Testament, to the great offence of his Brethren, the hurt of his flock, and the utter undoing, without Gods greater Mercy, of his own Soul. Wherein are specially to be considered the deep and marvellous Judgment of God, who as he can and doth make strong whom it pleaseth him, when he seeth his time, and most commonly such as appear most feeble: even so contrariwise, throweth he down other some, seem they never so stout, stand they never so much in their own conceits. Wherefore let him that standeth take heed he fall not, and let us pray continually to Almighty God, though we have Faith, that he will help and increase our Faith, that in him it may be made strong, which of it self is so weak, that it is soon overthrown.

This blessed Man of God induring long time in Prison, did not pass all this time in unfruitful Idleness, but still from time to time did visit his friends (as is said) and especially his wife, with many Letters full of Godly Instruction and Consolation. All which Letters I shall not be greatly needful here to insert, partly because they are to be found in the Book of Letters, partly because we intend also (if God will) to prosecute the same more at large. In the mean time it shall not be out of place here presently to comprehend certain of them as in order followeth.

A Letter sent to M. Ferrar Bishop of S. Davids, Doctor Taylor, Mr. Bradford, and Mr. Philpot.

Grace, Mercy, and Peace in Jesus Christ our Lord, &c. A Letter of Good Fathers, and dear Brethren, be thankful unto M. Sanders our most Gracious God, which hath preserved us, and shall preserve us (I doubt not) from blaspheming his Blessed Name: yea, not only that, but also Ex ore Infantium & Lactantium perficit laudem, &c. i. Out of the Mouths of very Babes & Sucklings shall be set forth his praise. They offer us (for such) (forsooth) our liberty and pardon, so that we will rise with them into that Faith which we wish them were fain from. Yea, or no, must be answered in haste. They will not admit any needful circumstances, but all (as heretofore) most detestable and abominable. Rise with them we must unto the unity. And pardon (say I) of me must not so dearly be purchased. A pardon I desire, to live with an unclogged Conscience. The Donatists (say they) sought for such singularity, but they were not meet to live in a Commonwealth, no more be you, as you shall shortly understand. Wherefore away with him; yea, the time was named within this seven-night. There be twelve hours in the day. Death shall be welcome (say I) as being looked for long since, and yet do Justice ye were best, for Abels blood cried, ye was what. The Spirit of God be upon you, and God save your Honours. Thus departed I from them. Pray, pray. Abah, Puer sum, nescio loqui; I am a Child, I cannot speak. My Brother P. shall shew you more herein. By him send me word what you have done. Fare ye well, and pray, pray, I would gladly meet with my good Brother Bradford on the backside about eleven of the Clock. Before that time I cannot start out, we have such Out-walkers, but then will they be at dinner.

Yours as you know, L. Sanders.

A Letter which Laurence Sanders did write to his Wife, and others of the Faithful, after his Condemnation to the Fire, written the last of January, An. 1555 out of the Compter in Breadstreet.

The Grace of Christ, with the Consolation of the Holy Ghost, to the keeping of the Faith and a good Conscience, confirm and keep you for ever Vessels to Gods Glory, Amen.

Oh! what worthy thanks can be given to our gracious God for his unmeasurable Mercies plentifully poured upon us? And I most unworthy Wretch cannot but pour forth at this present, even from the bottom of my heart, the bewailing of my great ingratitude and unkindness towards so gracious a good God and loving Father. I beseech you all, as for my other many sins, so specially for that sin of my unthankfulness, crave pardon for me in your earnest Prayers, commending me to Gods great Mercies in Christ.

To number these Mercies in particular, were to number the drops of water which are in the Sea, the Sands on the shore, the Stars in the Skie. O my dear Wife, and ye the rest of my Friends, rejoice with me, I lay rejoice with Thanksgiving for this my present Promotion, in that I am made worthy to magnifie my God, not only in my life, by my low mouth and uncircumcised lips, bearing witness unto his Truth, and also by my blood to seal the same, to the glory of my God, and confirming of his true Church: And as yet I testify unto you, that the comfort of my sweet Christ doth drive from my fainting the fear of death. But if my dear Husband Christ doth for my trial leave me alone a little to my self, alas, I know in what case I shall be then: but if for my proof he do so, yet I am sure he will not be long or far from me. Though he stand behind the Wall and hide himself (as Solomon saith in his Mystical Ballet) yet will he peep in by a cleft to see how I do. He is a very tender-hearted Joseph; though he speak roughly to his Brethren, and handle them hardly; yet threaten grievous Bondage to his best beloved Brother Benjamin: yet can he not contain himself from weeping with us and upon us, with filling on our necks, and sweetly kissing us. Such a Brother is our Christ unto all. Wherefore hasten to go unto him as Jacob did with his Sons and Family, leaving their Country and Acquaintance. Yea, this our Joseph hath obtained for us, that Pharaoh the Iudiel shall minister unto us Chariots, wherein at ease we may be carried to come unto him: as we have experience how our very Adversaries do help us unto our everlasting Bliss by their speedy dispatch; yea, and how all things have been helpings hereunto; blessed be our God. Be not afraid of Fiery bugs which lye in the way. Fear rather the Everlasting Fire: fear the Serpent which hath that deadly sting, of which by bodily death they shall be brought to taste which are not grafted in Christ, wanting Faith and a good Conscience, and so are not acquainted with Christ the killer of death. But oh my dear Wife and Friends! weye whom God hath delivered from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the Kingdom of his dear Son, by putting off the Old Man, and by Faith putting on the New, even our Lord Jesus Christ, his Wisdom, Holiness, Righteousness and Redemption; we, I say, have to triumph against the terrible faterial Serpent the Devil, Sin, Hell, Death, and Damnation. For Christ our brazen Serpent hath pulled away the sting of this Serpent, so that now we may boldly, in beholding it spoiled of sting triumph, and with our Christ, and all his Elect, say, Death, where is thy sting? Hell, where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, who hath given (Us) the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ.

Wherefore be merry, my dear Wife, and all my dear fellow Heirs of the everlasting Kingdom, always remember the Lord. Rejoice in Hope, be patient in Tribulation, continue in Prayer, and pray for us now appointed to the slaughter, that we may be unto our Heavenly Father a far Offering, and an acceptable Sacrifice. I may hardly write to you. Wherefore let these few words be a Witness of my Commendations to you and all them which love us in the Faith; and namely, unto my Flock, among whom I am resident by Gods Providence, but as a Prisoner.

And although I am not so among them, as I have been to preach to them out of a Pulpit, yet doth God now preach unto them by me, by this my Imprisonment and Captivity which now I suffer among them for Christs Gospel sake, bidding them to beware of the Romish Antichristian Religion and Kingdom, requiring and charging them to abide in the Truth of Christ, which is shortly to be sealed with the Blood of their Pastor: who though he be unworthy of such a Ministry, yet Christ their high Pastor is to be regarded, whose Truth hath been taught them by me, is witnessed by my Chains, and shall be by my Death, through the power of that high Pastor. Be not careless, good Wife, cast your care unto the Lord, and commend me unto him in repentant Prayer, as I do you and our Samuel; whom, even at the Stake, I will offer as my self unto God. Fare ye well all in Christ, in hope to be joyed with you in Joy everlasting. This hope is put up in my bosom, Amen, Amen, Pray, pray.

Another Letter to Mrs. Lucie Harrington, a godly Newwoman, and friendly to him in his Troubles.

Your most gentle Commendations, whereby this Messenger made remembrance unto me was for two Causes very comfortable: First, For that thereby I understood of the state of your health and bodily welfare, for the which I give thanks unto God, who grant the long continuance thereof to his honour and fatherly good will, whereunto I will daily say, Amen. And further, I was refreshed by the expressing of your mindful friendship towards me far unworthy thereof. Wherein I take occasion of much-rejoicing in our so gracious a God an' merciful Father, who as he hath in his immeasurable mercy by Faith hand-fastened us his chosen Children unto his dear Son our Christ; as the Spiritual Spouse of such an Heavenly Husband: so he linketh us by love one unto another, being by that Bond compact together with charitable readiness to do good one to another: so that first to the glory of our God and his Christ, then to our own joying in the testimony of a good Conscience, and last of all to the keeping of the mouth and confusion of our Adversaries, we bear the Badge as the right Spouse of our Christ, which himself noted in this saying: Herein shall all men know that ye be my Disciples, if ye love one another. Then farther, by this Bond of mutual Love is set forth the Fatherly Providence of God towards us his Children; that though it be he that careth for us, in whom we live, move, and be, who feedeth all Flesh with bodily sustenance, yet hath he appointed us in these present necessities to stand in his stead one unto another. Wherein is not only set forth our dignity, but also that unspeakable accord and unity among us the many Members of his Mystical Body. And though that either for lack of ability, or else through distance of place, power and opportunity of helping one another do fail: yet wonderful is the working of Gods Children

John 1.
Prayer distributeth Gods Blessings from one to another.
Thus doth our faithful Prayer, which we make one for another, distribute and scatter Gods bountiful Blessings, both gloriously and bodily, when ordinary ability lacketh, and when the arm may not reach forth such Gods riches. According herunto I will perceive and understand your readiness to do good unto all, and especially I have experience of your ready good will towards me in your hearty desire to stretch out your helping hand to relieve my lack: and of your help to be extended to me in the other spiritual sort, by your good prayer, I doubt not; as also therein assure you of my help, being all that I may do, and yet the same not so much as I would do.

My need concerning bodily necessities is as yet furnished by Gods provision, so that I am not driven to any extremity, wherefore to be burdensome to you, as your gentle benevolence provoketh me, the Lord reward you therefore. If God make me worthy to be his witness at this present, in giving this corruptible body to burn for the testimony of his Truth, it is enough for me to say to you that I have a poor Wife and Child, whom I love in the Lord, and whom I know for my sake you will tender when I am departed hence, &c.

Another Letter of Mr. Sanders.
Grace and Mercy, &c. It happeneth oftentimes that abundance of matter bringeth with it much vehemency of friendly affection, maketh men dumb, and even then chiefly, when there is most eager purpose of speaking, silence doth suppress, and catcheth the party so affected imperfectly to express that he goeth about to utter. Such impediment by much matter mingled with fervency of affection, feel I sometimes in my self, letting the utterance, either by tongue or writing, of the abundance of the heart. The love of our most gracious God and heavenly Father, bestowed upon us in the Merits of Christ our Saviour, who may by conceit of mind comprehend, passing indeed all understanding? Much less may the fame by any means be expressly uttered. And as such heavenly blessings, which by faith we fetch from above, be inexpressible, so is it hard to utter, when the faithful are set on fire by love, their readiness to reach forth and to give by Charity, as by faith they have received. But (alas) we carry this Treasure in Earthen Vessels. Many times Faith is feeble, and then Love looseth her favour. Pray we therefore, Lord increase our Faith, and Love forthwith will be on fire. And immortal thanks be given unto our God, who in our Christ hath bestowed upon us the first fruits of his Spirit, who crieth in our hearts, Abba, Father. And (as S. Paul saith) seeing we have the same spirit of faith, according as it is written; I believed, and therefore I have spoken: we also believe, and therefore we speak. Yea, God knoweth, this spirit putteth in us a mind to speak, but in attempting thereof we are driven with Moses to say; O Lord, I am slow mouthed and of uncircumcised lips: and with Jeremy, O Lord, I cannot speak.

Jer. 1.

Albeit, that this infancy restraineth the opening of such abundance of heart in my tender Christian Duty to be declared towards you, yet I beseech you, let this be sealed in your understanding; that as S. Paul expresseth unto his Corinthians, that they were in his heart either to live or to dye, with many other such Sayings uttered unto them and the Galatians, expressing his vehement affection towards them: so in some part I would be like affected towards all Gods Children, and especially towards you whom I know in Christ, and to whom I will not say how much I am indebted. I thank you for your great friendship and tender good will towards my Wife: yea, that good gracious God recompence you, which may worthily with the more counterveil the fame, and fulfill that which lacketh of thankful duty in us. And because of that which heretofore I have conceived of you, and of your more than natural Love towards me and mine; I make my self thus bold to lay this burden upon you, even the care and charge of my laid poor Wife; I mean, to be unto her a Mother and Mistress to rule and direct her by your discreet counsel. I know she conceiveth of you the same that I do, and is thankful unto God with me for such a Friend; and therefore I beseech you even for Christs sake, put never from you this friendly charge over-her, whether I live longer, or shortly depart. But to charge you otherwise, thanks be to God; neither I, neither she have any such extrem need: if we had, I would be as bold with you as mine own Mother, I beseech you give my hearty Salutations unto Mr. Fitz-Williams, and my good Lady, with thanks also for my poor Wife and Child, the Lord recompence them.

L. Sanders.

Furthermore, as touching his Fatherly care and affection to his Wife and his little Child, the same is lively set forth in another Letter which he did write to his Wife: wherein he admonished her that the would not resort much to the Prison where he was, for danger of trouble that might ensue, the tenor of whose Letter here followeth.

Another Letter to his Wife, with a certain Remembrance to Mr. Harrington, and Mr. Hurland.

Grace and Comfort, &c. Wife, you shall do best not to come often unto the Grate where the Porter may see you. Put not your self in danger where it needs not: you shall, I think, shortly come far enough into danger by keeping Faith and a good Conscience: which (dear Wife) I trust you do not slack to make reckoning and account upon, by exercising your inward man in meditation of Gods most Holy Word, being the Sustainance of the Soul, and also by giving your self to humble Prayer: for these two things be the very means how to be made Members of our Christ, meet to inherit his Kingdom.

Do this, dear Wife, in earnest, and not leaving off, and so we two shall with our Christ and all his chosen Children, enjoy the merry World in that everlasting immortality, whereas here will nothing else be found but extreme misery, even of them which most greedily seek this worldly wealth: and so, if we two continue Gods children grafted in our Christ, the same Gods blessing which we receive shall also settle upon our Samuel. Though we do shortly depart hence and leave the poor Infant (to our seeming) at all adventures, yet shall he have our gracious God to be his God: for so hath he said, and be cannot lie; I will be thy God, saith he and the God of thy Seed. Yea, if you leave him in the wilderness destitute of all help, being called of God to do his will, either to dye for the Confession of Christ, either any work of Obedience: that God which heard the cry of the little poor Infant of Agar, Sarahs Hand-maiden, and did succour it, will do the like to the Child of you or any other fearing him, and putting your trust in him.

And if we lack Faith, as we do indeed many times, let us call for it, and we shall have the increase both of it, and also of any other good Grace needful for us: and be merry in Gods whom also I am very merry and joyful. O Lord, what great cause of rejoicing have we, to think upon ought to be that Kingdom, which he voucheth safe for his Christs sake freely to give us, forsaking our selves and following him? Dear Wife, this is truly to follow him, even to take up our Cross and follow him; and then as we suffer with him, so shall we reign with him everlastingly, shortly, Amen.

Another Letter to his Wife, to Mr. Robert Harrington and Mr. Hurland, &c.

Grace and Comfort, &c. Dear Wife, rejoice in our gracious God, and his and our Christ; and give thanks most humbly and heartily to him for this days work, that in any part I most unworthy Wretch should be made worthy to bear witness unto his everlasting Verity, which Antichrist with his, by main force (I perceive) and by most impudent Pride and Boasting will go about to suppress. Remember God alway, my dear Wife, and so shall Gods Blessing light upon you and your Samuel. O remember always my words for Christs sake, be merry, and grudge not against God, and pray, pray. We be all merry here, thanks be unto our God, who in his Christ hath given us great cause to be merry, by whom he hath prepared for us such a Kingdom, and doth and will give unto us some little taste thereof, even in this life, and to all such as are delirious to take it. Blessed (saith our Christ) be they which hunger and thirst after righteousness, for such shall be satisfied. Let us go, yea, let us run to seek such Treasure, and that with whole purpose of heart to cleave unto the Lord, to find such Riches in his heavenly Word through his Spirit obtained by Prayer. My dear Friends and Brethren, Mr. Harrington and Mr. Harland, pray, pray. Spiritus quidem promptus est, caro autem infirma; that is, The Spirit is ready, but the Flesh is weak. When I look upon my self, Quid ego stupidus & attonitus habeo quod dicam, nisi illud Petri, Exi à me Domine, quia homo peccator sum? i. Being attonished and confounded, what have I else to say but those words of Peter, Lord go from me, for I am a sinful man? But then feel I that sweet comfort, Lucerna pedibus meis verbum Domini, lumen seminis mei; & hac mea est consolatio in humilitate mea; i. The Word of the Lord is a Lanthorn unto my feet, and a Light unto my paths; and this is my comfort in my trouble. Then wax I bold with the same Peter to say, Domine, ad quem ibimus? verba vite eterne habes; i. Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of Everlasting Life. This comfort have I when the giver thereof doth give it. But I look for Battails, which the root of unfaithfulness, the which I feel in me, will most eagerly give unto my Conscience, when we come once to the Combate. We be (I wem) within the sound of the Trump of our Enemies. Play ye that be abroad the part of Moses, Orantes in omni loco, suffolentes puras manus; i. Praying in all places, lifting up pure hands; and Gods People shall prevail: yea, our blood shall be their perdition who do most triumphantly spill it, and we then being in the hands of our God, shall shine in his Kingdom, and shall stand in great steadfastness against them which have dealt extremely with us: And when these our Enemies shall thus see us, they shall be vexed with horrible fear, and shall wonder at the hastiness of the sudden health; and shall say with themselves, having inward sorrow and mourning for very anguish of mind: These are they whom we sometime had in derision and jested upon: we Fools thought their lives to be very madnesse, and their end to be without honour, but lo how they are accounted among the Children of God, The Blessing of God be with you all, &c.

GRace and Comfort in Christ, Amen. Dear Wife, be merry in the Mercies of our Christ, and also ye my dear Friends. Pray, pray for us every body. We be shortly to be dispatched hence unto our good Christ, Amen, Amen. Wife, I would you sent me my shirt, which you know whereunto it is consecrated. Let it be sewed down on both sides, and not open. O my heavenly Father, look upon me in the face of thy Christ, or else I shall not be able to abide thy Countenance; such is my filthiness. He will do so, and therefore I will not be afraid what sin, death, hell and damnation can do against me. O Wife, always remember the Lord. God bless you, yea, he will bless thee, good Wife, and thy poor Boy also: only cleave thou unto him, and he will give thee all things. Pray, pray, pray.

GRace and Consolation in our sweet Saviour Christ. Make haste my dear Brethren to come unto me, that we may be merry. Eo gaudio quod nemo tollet à nobis; i. with that joy which no man shall take from us. O wretched sinner, that I am not thankful unto this my Father, who hath vouchsafed me worthy to be a Vessel unto his honor. After these godly Letters of Mr. Sanders diversly dispersed and sent abroad to divers of the faithful Congregation of Christ, as is afore to be seen; now in the latter end we will adjoyn two other Letters not written by Mr. Sanders the Martyr, but by Mr. Ed. Sanders the Justice, his Brother, sent to this our Sanders in Prison, although containing no great matter worthy to be known, yet to this intent that the Reader may see in these two Brethren so joyed in Nature, and so divided in Religion, that word of the Lord verified, truly saying; Brother shall be against Brother, &c. as by the Contents of these two Letters following may appear.

After my most hearty Commendations, those been to ascertain you, that I have spoken with Mr. Ballet, who hath shewed me, that four pound (all Deductions being allowed) is the whole that hath come to his hands of the Profit of the Prebendary at York, the which you shall have, although as he thinketh, it was not due unto you by reason of your Deprivation before it was due. As concerning your Conscience in Religion, I beseech God it may be lightened by the Holy Ghost, and that you may also have the Grace of the Holy Ghost to follow the counsel of St. Paul to Timothy 2. Recte tractare verbum veritatis, that is, To handle rightly the Word of Truth. Wherein you dissenting from many Holy and Catholic men, especially in the Sacrament, it maketh me in my Conscience to condemn yours. For although I have not inherio fancied to read Peter Martyr, and other such, &c. Yet have I had great desire to see Theophylact and divers others of this sort and opinion, both notable and holy Fathers (if any credit be to be given to the Writings of our Ancient Fathers before us) and surely the Sentences and Judgments of two or three of them have more confirmed my Conscience, than three hundred of the Laxingians, or as many of the Lutherans can or should do. Thus in haste willing to relieve you, to the end you might convert, if you shall need towards your finding, if you shall require it of me, you shall unfeignedly find my money ready, as knoweth our Lord, who send us all things good for us. Scrib'd this Thursday by your Brother and Petitioner to God.

AS Nature and Brotherly Love with Godly Charity requreth, I send you by these Letters (quantum licet) most hearty Commendation, being sorry for your fault, and your disobedient handling of your self towards my L. Chancellor, who, I assure you, mindeth your good and preservation, if you can so consider and take it. I would be glad to know whether you have not had with you of late some learned men to talk with you by my Lord Chancellors appointment, and how you can frame your self to reform your Error in the Opinion of the most blessed and our most comfortable Sacrament of the Altar. Wherein I assure you, I was never in all my life better affected than I am at this present, using to my great comfort hearing of Mass, and somewhat before the severing time, the Meditation of S. Bernard, set forth in the third Leaf of this present Book. The accustomed using whereof I am fully professed unto, during my life, and to give more faith unto that Confession of holy Bernard, than to Luther, &c. or Latimer, &c. for that the Amiquity, the Universality of the open Church, and the consent of all Saints and Doctors do confirm the same, as I am certain you, that I have been earnestly moved in mine own Conscience these ten or twelve days past, and also between God and my self, to move you to the same, most earnestly desiring you, and as you tender to my natural, godly, and friendly love towards you, that

The Life and Martyrdom of Mr. John Hooper Bishop of Worcester and Gloucester, burnt for the Defence of the Gospel at Gloucester, An. 1555. Febr. 9.

The Story, Life, and Martyrdom of Mr. John Hooper Bishop of Worcester. John Hooper Student and Graduate in the University of Oxford, after the Study of the Sciences, wherein he had abundantly profited and proceeded, through Gods secret Vocation was stirred with fervent desire to the love and knowledge of the Scriptures. In the reading and searching whereof, as there lacked in him no diligence joined with earnest Prayer; so neither wanted unto him the Grace of the Holy Ghost to satisfy his desire, and to open unto him the light of true Divinity.

Thus Mr. Hooper growing more and more, by Gods Grace, in ripeness of Spiritual Understanding, and shewing withal some sparkles of his fervent Spirit, being then about the beginning of the six Articles, in the time of King Henry the Eighth, fell effusions into displeasure and hatred of certain Rabbines in Oxford, who by and by began to stir Coals against him, whereby, and especially by the procurement of Dr. Smith, he was compelled to void the University; and so removing from thence, was retained in the House of Sir Thomas Arundel, and there was his Steward, till the time that Sir Thomas Arundel, having intelligence of his Opinions and Religion, which he in no case did favour, and yet exceedingly favouring the Person and Conditions of the man, found the means to send him in a Message to the Bishop of Winchester, writing his Letter privily to the Bishop, by conference of Learning to do some good upon him, but in any case requiring him to send home his Servant to him again.

Winchester, after long Conference with Mr. Hooper, four or five days together, when he at length perceived, that neither he could do that good which he thought to him, nor that he would take any good at his hand, according to Mr. Arundel's Request, he sent home his Servant again, right well commending his Learning and Wit, but yet bearing in his Breast a grudging stomack against Mr. Hooper still.

It followed not long after this, as Malice is always working mischief, that Intelligence was given to Mr. Hooper to provide for himself, for danger that was working against him. Whereupon Mr. Hooper leaving Mr. Arundel's House, and borrowing an Horse of a certain Friend (whose Life he had saved a little before from the Gallows) took his Journey to the Sea side to go to France, sending back the Horse again by one, which indeed did not deliver him to the Owner. Mr. Hooper being at Paris, tarried there not long, but in short time returned into England again, and was retained of Mr. Senlow, till the time that he was again molested and laid for: whereby he was compelled (under the pretence of being Captain of a Ship going to Ireland) to take the Seas, and so escaped he (although not without extream peril of drowning) through France to the higher parts of Germany. Where he, entering acquaintance with the Learned men, was of them friendly and lovingly entertained, both at Basil, and especially at Zurich of Mr. Bullinger, being his singular Friend. Where also he married his Wife, which was a Burgonian, and applied very studiously the Hebrew Tongue.

At length, when God saw it good to stay the bloody time of the six Articles, and to give us King Edward to Reign over this Realm, with some peace and rest unto the Gospel, amongst many other English Exiles, which then repaired homeward, Mr. Hooper also, moved in Conscience, thought not to absent himself, but seeing such a time and occasion, offered to help forward the Lords Work, to the uttermost of his ability. And so coming to Mr. Bullinger, and other of his Acquaintance in Zurich, (as duty required) to give them thanks for their singular kindness and humanity toward him manifold ways declared, with like humanity again purposed to take his leave of them at his departing, and so did. Unto whom Mr. Bullinger again (who had always a special favour to Mr. Hooper) spake on this wise; Mr. Hooper, said he, although we are sorry to part with you, yet for our own Cause, yet much greater Cause, we have to rejoice, both for your sake, and especially for the Cause of Christs true Religion, that you shall now return out of long Banishment into your Native Country again, where not only you may enjoy your own private Liberty, but also the cause and state of Christs Church by you may fare the better, as we doubt not but it shall.

Another Cause moreover why we rejoice with you and for you, is this, that you shall remove not only out of Exile into Liberty: but you shall leave here a barren, a fowre, and an unpleasant Country, rude and savage, and shall go into a Land flowing with Milk and Honey, replenished with all Pleasure and Fertility. Notwithstanding with this our rejoicing one fear and care we have, lest you being absent, and so far distant from us, or else coming to such abundance of wealth and felicity, in your new welfare and plenty of all things, and in your flourishing honours, where ye shall come peradventure to be a Bishop, and where ye shall find so many new Friends, you will forget us your old Acquaintance and Well-wishers. Nevertheless, howsoever you shall forget and shake us off, yet this persuade your self, that we will not forget our old Friend and Fellow Mr. Hooper. And if you will please not to forget us again, then I pray you let us hear from you.

Whereunto Mr. Hooper answering again, first gave to Mr. Bullinger and the rest right hearty thanks, for that their singular good will, and undeserved affection, appearing not only now, but at all times towards him: declaring moreover, that as the principal Cause of his removing to his Country was the matter of Religion; so touching the unpleasantness and barrenness of that Country of theirs, there was no cause therein, why he could not find in his heart to continue his Life there, as soon as in any place in the World, and rather than in his own Native Country, if there were nothing else in his Conscience that moved him so to do. And as touching the forgetting of his old Friends, although, said he, the remembrance of a mans Country naturally doth delight him, neither could he deny, but God had blessed his Country of England with many great Commodities: yet neither the nature of Country, nor pleasure of Commodities, nor newness of Friends should ever induce him to the oblivion of such Friends and Benefactors, whom he was so intirely bound unto: and therefore you shall be sure, said he, from time to time to hear from me, and I will write unto you how it goeth with me. But the last News of all I shall not be able to write: for there, said he, (taking Mr. Bullinger by the hand) where I shall take most pains, there shall you hear of me to be burned to ashes; and that shall be the last News, which I shall not be able to write unto you, but you shall hear of me, &c.

To this also may be added another like Prophetical Demonstration, foretelling before the manner of his Martyrdom wherewith he should glorifie God, which was this: When Mr. Hooper being made Bishop of Worcester and Gloucester, should have his Arms given him by the Herald, as the manner is here in England, every Bishop to have his Arms assigned unto him (whether by the appointment of Mr. Hooper, or by the Herald, I have not certainly to say) but the Arms which were to him allotted was this, A Lamb in a fiery Bush, and the Sun Beams from Heaven descended down upon the Lamb, rightly denoting, as it seemed, the order of his Sufferings, which afterward followed.

But now to the purpose of our Story again. Thus when Mr. Hooper had taken his farewell of Mr. Bullinger and his Friends in Zurich, he made his repair again into England in the Reign of King Edward the sixth, where he coming to London every continually to preach, most times twice, at least once every day, and never failed.

In his Sermons, according to his accustomed manner, he corrected sin, and sharply inveighed against the iniquity of the World, and corrupt abuses of the Church: the People in great Flocks and Companies daily came to hear his voice, as the moſt melodious ſound and tune of Orpheus's Harp; as the Proverb ſaith; Inſomuch, that oftentimes when he was preaching, the Church would be ſo full, that none could enter in, other than the doors thereof. In his Doctrine he was earneſt, in Tongue eloquent, in the Scriptures perfect, in Philoſophy ſagacious.

Theſe ſingular Virtues of Mr. Hooper
deſcribed,

Moreover, Beſide other his Gifts and Qualities, this is in him to be marvell'd, that even as he began, ſo he continued till unto his lifes end. For neither could his labour and pain-taking break him, neither promotion change him, neither duty fare corrupt him. His Life was ſo pure and good, that no kind of ſlander (although divers went about to reprove it) could faſten any fault upon him. He was of Body ſtrong, his Health whole and ſound, his Wit very pregnant, his invincible Patience able to ſuſtain whatſoever ſiniſter Fortune and Adverſity could do. He was conſtant of Judgment, a good Juſtice, ſpare of Diſcourſe of Words, and ſpare of Time. In Houſe-keeping very liberal, and ſometimes more free than his Living would extend unto. Briefly, of all thoſe Vertues and Qualities required of S. Paul in a good Biſhop, in his Epistle to Timothy, I know not one in this good Biſhop lacking. He bore in countenance and talk always a certain ſevere and grave Grace, which might peradventure be wiſhed ſometime to have been a little more Popular and Vaſcar-like in him; but he knew what he had to do beſt himſelf.

This by the way I thought to note, for that there was once an ſmall Citizen, and to me not unknown, which having in himſelf a certain conflict of Conſciences, came to his door for counſel, but being aſhamed at his auſtere behaviour, durſt not come in, but departed, ſeeking Remedy of his troubled Mind at other men hands, which he afterward, by the help of Almighty God, did find and obtain. Therefore, in my Judgment, ſuch as are appointed and made Governours over the Flock of Chriſt, to teach and inſtruct them, ought ſo to frame their Life, Manners, Countenance, and External Behaviour, as neither they themſelves too familiar and light, whereby to be brought into Contempt, nor on the other ſide again, that they appear more lofty and rigorous than appertaineth to the edifying of the ſimple Flock of Chriſt. Nevertheless, as every man hath his peculiar Gift wrought in him by Nature, ſo this diſpoſition of Fatherly Gravity in this man neither was exceſſive, neither did he bear it as Perſonage that was in him, without great conſideration. For it ſeemed to him peradventure, that this licentious and unbridled Life of the Common ſort ought to be chaffened, not only with words and diſcipline, but alſo with the grave and ſevere countenance of good men.

After he had thus practiſed himſelf in this popular and common kind of Preaching; at length, and that not without the great profit of many, he was called to preach before the Kings Maſteſty, and ſoon after made Biſhop of Glouceſter by the Kings Commandment. In that Office he continued two years, and behaved himſelf ſo well, that his very Enemies (except it were for his good doings, and ſharp correcting of ſin) could find no fault with him; and after that he was made Biſhop of Hereſter.

But I cannot tell what ſiniſter and unluckie Contention concerning the Ordering and Conſecration of Biſhops, and of their Appaſel, with ſuch other like Trifles, began to diſturb the good and luckie beginning of the godly Biſhop. For notwithstanding that godly Reformation of Religion that begun in the Church of England, beſides other Ceremonies more ambitious than probable, or tending to edification, they uſed to wear ſuch Garments and Appaſel as the Popiſh Biſhops were wont to do: Firſt a Chymere, and under that a white Rochet, then a Mathematical Cap with four Angles, dividing the whole World into four parts. Theſe Trifles, tending more to Superſtition than otherwiſe, as he could never abide, ſo in no wiſe could he be perſwaded to wear them. For this cauſe he made Supplication to the Kings Maſteſty, moſt humbly deſiring his Highneſſe, either to diſcharge him of the Biſhoprick, or elſe to diſpenſe with him for ſuch Ceremonial Orders. Whole Petition the King granted immediately, writing his Letter to the Archbiſhop after this tenor.

Right Reverend Father, and right truſty and welbelov'd, we greet you well. Whereas we, by the advice of our Council, have called and choſen our right welbelov'd and well worthy, Mr. John Hooper, Profeſſor of Divinity, to be our Biſhop of Glouceſter, as well for his great Knowledge, deep Judgment, and long Study both in the Scriptures, and other Prophane Learning, as alſo for his good Diſcretion, ready Utterance, and honeſt Life for that kind of Vocation: To the intent all our loving Subjects, which are in his ſaid Charge, and elſewhere, might by his ſound and true Doctrine learn the better their duty towards God, their Obedience towards Us, and love towards their Neighbours: ſrom Conſecrating of whom we underſtand you do ſay, becauſe he would have you own and let paſſe certain Rites and Ceremonies offenſive to his Conſcience, whereby ye think ye ſhould fall in Premunure of Law; we have thought good, by the advice aforeſaid, to diſpenſe and diſcharge you of all manner of Dangers, Penalties and Forfeitures you ſhall run and be in any manner of way, by omitting any of the ſame. And theſe our Letters ſhall be your ſufficient Warrant and Diſcharge therefore.

Beſides this Letter of the King, alſo the Earl of Warwick (which was afterward Duke of Northumberland) adjoyned his Letter to the ſaſeſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury to this purpoſe and effect, that Mr. Hooper might not be burdened with the Oath uſed then commonly in the Conſecration of Biſhops, which was againſt his Conſcience, as by the purpoſe of the Letter here is to be ſeen, as followeth.

After my moſt hearty Commendations to your Grace, A Letter of theſe may be to deſire the ſame, that in ſuch reaſonable things, wherein this Bearer, my Lord elect of Glouceſter, craveth to be borne withal at your hands; you would vouchſafe to ſhew him your Graces favour, the rather at this my inſtance: which thing partly, I have taken in hand by the Kings Maſteſties own motion. The matter is weigh'd by his Highneſſe, none other but that your Grace may ſaſely condeſcend unto. The principal cauſe is, that you would not charge this ſaid Bearer with an Oath burdensome to his Conſcience. And ſo for lack of time I commit your Grace to the tuition of Almighty God. From Weſtmiſter the 23. of July, 1555.

Your Graces moſt aſſured loving Friend,

J. Warwick.

Both this Grant of the King, and alſo the Earls Letters aforeſaid notwithstanding, the Biſhops ſtill ſtood earneſtly in the Defence of the aforeſaid Ceremonies, ſaying it was but a ſmall matter, and that the fault was in the abuſe of the things, and not in the things themſelves adding moreover, That he ought not to be ſo ſtubborn in ſo light a matter, and that his willfulneſſe therein was not to be ſuffered.

To be ſhort, whiſt both Parties thus contend'd about this matter more than reaſon would, in the mean time occaſion was given, as to the true Chriſtians to lament, ſo to the Adverſaries to rejoice. In Concluſion, this Theological contention came to this end, that the Biſhops having the upper hand, Mr. Hooper was ſaſin to agree to this Condition, That ſometimes he ſhould in his Sermon ſhew himſelf appaſſel'd as the other Biſhops were. Wherefore, appointed to preach before the King, as a new Player in Upon his head he had a Geometrical, that is a four-squared Capalbeit that his Head was round. What cause of Shame the strangeness hereof was that day to that good Preacher, every man may easily judge. But this private contumely and reproach, in respect of the publick profit of the Church, which he only fought, he bare and suffered patiently. And I would to God in like manner, they, which took upon them the other part of that Tragedy, had yielded their private cause, whatsoever it was, to the publick concord and edifying of the Church: for no man in all the City was one hair the better for that hot contention.

A Letter of Reconciliation sent by D. Ridley to B. Hooper.

M. Hooper
Bishop of Exeter Dioc.

I will name no body, partly for that his Oppugners being afterwards joynd in the most sure bond of friend-ship with him, in one and for one cause suffered Martyrdom; and partly for that I commonly use, according to my accustomed manner, to keep my Pen from presumptuous judging of any person, yet I thought to note the thing for this consideration, to admonish the Reader hereby, how wholesome and necessary the Croſs of Christ is sometime in the Church of Christ, as by the sequel hereof afterward did appear. For as in a civil Governance and Commonwealth, nothing is more occasion of war, than overmuch peace: so in the Church and among Churchmen, as nothing is more pernicious than too much quietness; so nothing more calamitous private Contentions oftentimes rising amongst them, than the publick Croſs of Perfection.

Furthermore, so I persuaded my self, the same not to be unexpedient, to have extant such Examples of holy and blessed men. For if it do nor a little appertain to our publick consolation and comfort, when we read in the Scriptures of the foul dissention between Paul and Bernaby; of the Fall of Peter, and of Davids Murder and Adultery: why may or should it not be as well profitable for our Posterity, to hear and know the Falls of these godly Martyrs, whereby we may the less despair in our infirmity, considering the fame or greater infirmities to reign in the holy Saints of God, both Prophets, Apostles, and Martyrs?

And thus by the way thou hast heard, good Reader, hitherto the weakness of these good men, plainly and simply, as the Truth was, declared unto thee, to the end their Fall may minister occasion to us either of eschewing the like, or else to take heart and comfort in the like fall and frailties of ours. Now again on the other part it remaineth to record, after the foresaid discord, the godly Reconciliations of these good men in time of Perfection, who afterward, being in Prison for the Truths sake, reconciled themselves again with most godly agreement, as appeareth by this Letter sent by B. Ridley to the said Bishop of Gloucester. The Copy whereof, as it was written with his own hand in Latin, hereafter followeth translated into English.

To my dear Brother and Reverend fellow Elder in Christ John Hooper, Grace and Peace.

MY dearly beloved Brother and fellow Elder, whom I reverence in the Lord, pardon me, I beseech you, that hitherto since your Captivity and mine, I have not saluted you by my Letters: whereas I do indeed confess, I have received from you (such was your gentleness) two Letters at sundry times: but yet at such time as I could not be suffered to write to you again; or if I might, yet was I in doubt how my Letters might safely come into your hands. But now, my dear Brother, forasmuch as I understand by your works, which I have but superficially seen, that we thoroughly agree and wholly consent together in those things which are the grounds and substantial points of our Religion, against the which the World so furiously rage in these our days, howsoever in time past by certain by-matters and circumstances of Religion, your wisdom and my simplicity (I grant) hath a little jarred, each of us following the abundance of his own sense and judgment; now, I say, be you assured, that even with my whole heart, God is my witness, in the bowels of Christ I love you in the Truth and for the Truths sake, which abideth in me, and, as I am persuaded, flourisheth by the grace of God, and so in for evermore.

And because the World, as I perceive, Brother, ceaseth not to play his Pageants, and insidiously conspireth against Christ our Saviour, with all possible force and power, Exalting high things against the knowledge of God; let us join hands together in Christ, and if we cannot overthrow yet to our power, and as much as in us lieth, let us shake those high Altitudes, not with carnal, but with spiritual Weapons: and whilst, Brother, let us prepare our selves to the day of our dissolution, by the which, after the short time of this bodily affliction, by the Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ we shall triumph together with him in Eternal glory.

I pray you, Brother, salute in my name your Reverend fellow Prisoner, and venerable Father D. City whom, since the first day that I heard of his most godly and fatherly Constancy in confessing the truth of the Gospel, I have conceived great consolation and joy in the Lord. For the integrity and uprightness of that man, his gravity and innocency, all England, I think, hath known long ago. Blessed be God therefore, which in such abundance of inquiry and decay of all godliness, hath given unto us in this Reverend Old age, such a witness for the Truth of his Gospel. Miserable and hard-hearted is he, whom the godliness and constant Confession of so worthy, so grave and innocent a Man, will not move to acknowledge and confess the Truth of God.

I do not now, Brother, require you to write any thing to me again: for I stand much in fear, lest your Letters should be intercepted before they can come to my hands. Nevertheless know you, that it shall be to me great joy to hear of your constancy and fortitude in the Lords quarrel. And albeit I have not hitherto written unto you, yet have I twice, as I could, sent unto you my mind touching the matter which in your Letters you required to know. Neither can I yet, Brother, be otherwise persuaded: I see me thinks so many perils, whereby I am earnestly moved to counsel you not to hasten the publishing of your Works, especially under the title of your own Name. For I fear greatly, lest by this occasion both your mouth should be stopped hereafter, and all things taken away from the rest of the Prisoners, whereby otherwise, if it so please God, they may be able to do good to many. Farewell in the Lords, my most dear Brother; and if there be any mo in prison with you for Christs sake, I beseech you, as you may, salute them in my Name. To whole Prayers I do most humbly and heartily commend my self and my fellow Prisoners and Captives in the Lords, and yet once again, and for ever in Christ, my most dear Brother. Farewell.

N. Ridley.

M. Hooper, after all these tumults and vexations sustained, about his Investing and Princely Vestures, at length entering into his Diocese, did there employ his time which the Lord lent him under King Edwards Reign, with such diligence as may be a Spectacle to all Bishops which shall ever hereafter succeed him, not only in that place, but in whatsoever Diocese through the whole Realm of England: so careful was he in his Cure, that he left neither pains untaken, nor ways unsought, how to train up the Flock of Christ in the true Word of Salvation, continually labouring in the same. Other men commonly are wont, for lucre or promotions sake, to aspire to Bishopricks, some hunting for them, and some purchasing or buying them as men use to purchase Lordships; and when they have them are loth to leave them, and thereupon also loth to commit that thing by worldly Laws, whereby to lose them.

To us of Men M. Hooper was clean contrary, who abhorred nothing more than gain, labouring always to save and preserve the Souls of his Flock. Who, being Bishop of two Dioceses, so ruled and guided either of them, and both together, as though he had in Charge but one Family. No Father in his Household, no Gardiner in his Garden, nor Husbandman in his Vineyard, was more or better occupied, than he in his Diocese amongst his Flock, going about his Towns and Villages in Teaching and Preaching to the People there.

That time that he had to spare from Preaching, he bestowed either in hearing publick Causes, or else in private study, Prayer, and visiting of Schools: with his continual Doctrine he alloyed due and discreet Correction, not so much severe to any, as to them which for abundance of riches, and wealthy state, thought they might do what they listed. And doubtless he spared no kind of People, but was indifferent to all men, as well Rich as Poor, to the great shame of no small number of men nowadays. Whereof many we see so addicted to the pleasing of great and rich Men, that in the mean time they have no regard to the meaner sort of Poor people, whom Christ hath bought as dearly as the other.

Doctrine

M. Hooper
Light to all Churchmen.

But now again we will return our talk to M. Hooper, all whose Life, in fine, was such, that to the Church and all Churchmen, it might be a Light and Example, to the rest a perpetual Lesson and Sermon. Finally, how virtuous and good a Bishop he was, ye may conceive and know evidently by this, That even as he was hated of none but of them which were evil, so yet the world of them all could not reprove his Life in any one jot.

The order and government of
M. Hooper's
House.

I have now declared his usage and behaviour abroad in the publick Affairs of the Church: and certainly there appeared in him at home no less Example of a worthy Prelate's life. For though he bestowed and converted the most part of his care upon the publick Flock and Congregation of Christ, for the which also he spent his Blood: yet nevertheless there lacked no provision in him, to bring up his own Children in Learning and good Manners; in so much that ye could not discern whether he deserved more praise for his Fatherly usage at home, or for his Bishop-like doings abroad. For every where he kept one Religion in one uniform Doctrine and Integrity. So that if ye entered into the Bishops-Palace, you would suppose your self to have entered into some Church or Temple. In every corner thereof there was some smell of Virtue, good Example, honest Conversation, and reading of Holy Scriptures. There was not to be seen in his House any courtly Rioting or Idleness: no Pomp at all, no dishonest Words, no Swearing could there be heard.

The care of
M. Hooper in instructing his Family.

As for the Revenues of both his Bishopricks, although they did not greatly exceed, as the matter was handled, yet if any thing furnished thereof, he purged nothings but bestowed it in hospitality. Twice I was, as I remember, in his House in Winchester, where, in his common Hall, I saw a Table spread with good store of Meats, and brist full of Beggars and poor Folk: and I asking his Servants what this meant, they told me, That every day their Lord and Masters manner was, to have customably to Dinner a certain number of poor Folk of the said City by course, who were served by four at a Mesa, with whole and wholome Meats: and when they were served (being before examined by him or his Deputies, of the Lords Prayer, the Articles of their Faith, and Ten Commandments) then he himself fate down to Dinner, and not before.

The Hospitality
of M. Hooper.

After this sort and manner M. Hooper executed the Office of a most careful and vigilant Pastor, by the space of two years and more, so long as the state of Religion in K. Edwards time did safely flourish and take place: And would God that all other Bishops would use the like diligence, care, and observance in their Function. After this, King Edward being dead, and Mary being Crowned Queen of England, Religion being subverted and changed, this good Bishop was one of the first that was sent for by a Purfivant to be at London: and that for two causes.

M. Hooper called up to London at Q. Mary's coming in.

First, To answer to D. Heath, then appointed Bishop of that Diocese, who was before in King Edwards days deprived thereof for Papistry.

Two causes
why Master Hooper was called up.

Secondarily, To render account to D. Bener Bishop of London, for that he in King Edwards time was one of his Accusers, in that he shewed himself not conformable to such Ordinances as were prescribed to him by the King and his Council, openly at Pauls-Cross. And although the said M. Hooper was not ignorant of the Evils that should happen towards them, (for he was admonished by certain of his Friends to get him away, and shift for himself) yet he would not prevent him, but carried still, saying: Once I did see, and take me to my feet; but now, because I am called to this Place and Vocation, I am strongly persuaded to tarry, and to live and dye with my Sheep.

M. Hooper refused to fly away.

And when at the day of his appearance, which was the first of September, he was come to London, before he could come to the aforesaid D. Heath and Bener, he was intercepted, and commanded violently against his will to appear before the Queen and her Council, to answer to certain Bonds and Obligations, wherein they said he was bound unto her. And when he came before them, Winchester, by and by, received him very opprobriously, and railing and rating of him, accused him of Religion. He again freely and boldly told his Tale, and purged himself. But in fine it came to this conclusion, that by them he was commanded to Ward (it being declared unto him at his departure, that the cause of his imprisonment was only for certain sums of Money, for which he was indebted to the Queen, and not for Religion.) This, how false and untrue it was, shall in his place more plainly appear.

The next year, being 1554. the 19 of March, he was called again to appear before Winchester, and other the Queens Commissioners: where, what for the Bishop, and what for the unruly Multitude, when he could not be permitted to plead his Cause, he was deprived of his Bishopricks. Which how, and in what order it was done, here now followeth to be seen by the Testimony and Report of one, which, being present at the doing, committed the same to Writing.

A Letter or Report of a certain godly man, declaring the order of M. Hoopers deprivation from his Bishopricks. Anno 1554. March 19.

Forasmuch as a Rumor is spread abroad of the Talk had at my Lord Chancellor, between him with other Commissioners: where appointed, and M. Hooper, clean contrary to the verity and truth thereof indeed, and therefore to be judged rather to be risen of Malice, for the discrediting of the Truth by false Suggestions and evil Reports, than otherwise: I thought it my duty, being present therat my self, in Writing to set forth the whole effect of the same: partly that the Verity thereof may be known to the doubtful People; and partly also to advertise them, how uncharitably M. Hooper was handled at their hands, which with all humility used himself towards them, desiring, that with patience he might have been permitted to speak; assuring all men, that where I stood in a manner and doubt, which of these two Religions to have credited, either that set forth by the Kings Majesty that is dead, or else that now maintained by the Queens Majesty; their unreverend behaviour towards M. Hooper did move me rather to credit his Doctrine, than that which they with railing and cruel words defended, considering that Christ was so handled before. And that this which I have written here, was the effect of their Talk, as I acknowledge it to be true my self: so I appeal to all the Hearers Consciences, that there were present (so they put affection away) for the Witness of the same.

A Letter reporting the order of
M. Hoopers deprivation.

The Bishops of Winchester, of London, of Duresin, of Landaff, of Chichester, late as Commissioners.

Lord Chancellor.

AT Master Hoopers coming in, the Lord Chancellor asked whether he was married. Hooper. Yea my Lord, and will not be unmarried, till Death unmarry me.

M. Hooper examined before the Commissioners.

Duresin. That is matter enough to deprive you. Hooper. That it is not, my Lord, except ye do against the Law.

The matter concerning Marriage was no more talked of then for a great space: but as well the Commissioners, as such as stood by, began to make such outcries, and laughed, and used such gesture as was unbecomly for the place, and for such a matter. The Bishop of Gloucester Doctor Day, called M. Hooper Hypocrite, with vehement words, and scornful countenance. B. Tunstall called him Beast; so did Smith, one of the Clerks of the Council, and divers other that stood by. At length the B. of Winchester said, that all men might live chaste that would, and brought in this Text, Castra verunt se propter regnum celorum. That is, There be that have gilded themselves for the Kingdom of Heaven, Matth. 19.

M. Hooper said, that Text proved not that all Men could live chaste, but such only to whom it was given; and read that which goeth before in the Text. But there was a clamour and cry, mocking and scornful, with calling him Deaf: that the Text could not be examined. Then M. Hooper said, that it did appear by the old Canons, that Marriage was not forbidden unto Priests, and named the Decrees. But the Bishop of Winchester sent for another part, namely the Clementines, or the Extravagants. But Bishop Hooper said, that book was not it which he named.

Then cried out the Bishop of Winchester, and said; You shall not have any other, until ye be judged by this. And then began such a Noise, Tumult, and speaking together of a great many that favoured not the cause, that nothing was done, nor spoken orderly, or Charitably. Afterwards Judge Morgan began to rail at Master Hooper a long time, with many opprobrious and foul words of his doing at Gloucester, in publishing of men, and said, there was never such a Tyrant as he was. After that, D. Day Bishop of Chichester said, that the Council of Ancyra, which was before the Council of Nice, was against the Marriage of Priests.

Then cried out my Lord Chancellor, and many with him, that M. Hooper had never read the Councils.

Yea my Lord, quoth Master Hooper, and my Lord of Chichester Doctor Day knoweth that the great Council of Nice, by the means of one Paphnutius, decreed that no Minister should be separated from his Wife. But such Clamours and cries were used, that the Council of Nice was not seen.

After this long brutish talk, Tonsfall Bishop of Duresm asked M. Hooper, whether he believed the Corporal presence in the Sacrament. And M. Hooper said plainly, that there was none such, neither did he believe any such thing.

Then would the Bishop of Duresm have read out of a book, for his purpose belike (what book it was I cannot tell: but there was such a Noise and confused talk on every side, that he did not read it. Then asked Winchester of M. Hooper, what Authority moved him not to believe the Corporal presence? He said, the Authority of Gods Word, and alleged this Text, Quem oportet calum suscipere, usque ad tempus resurrectionis omnium: i. Whom Heaven must hold until the Later day.

Then the Bishop of Winchester would have made that Text have served nothing for his purpose, and he said, he might be in Heaven, and in the Sacrament also.

Master Hooper would have said more to have opened the Text, but all men that stood next about the Bishop, allowed so his saying with Clamors and cries, that M. Hooper was not permitted to say any more against the Bishop. Whereupon they had the Notaries write that he was Married, and said, that he would not goe from his Wife, and that he believed not the Corporal presence in the Sacrament, wherefore he was worthy to be deprived of his Bishoprick.

This is the Truth of the matter (as far as I can truly remember) of the confused and troublesome talk that was between them, and except it were hasty and uncharitable words, this is the whole matter of their talk at that time. Aique hac ille habitus.

The true report of M. Hooper's entertainment in the Fleet, written with his own hand the seventh of January 1554.

The first of September, 1553. I was committed unto the Fleet from Richmond, to have the liberty of the Prison: and within six dayes after I paid for my liberty five pounds Sterling to the Warden for Fees: who, immediately upon the payment thereof, complained unto Steven Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, and so was I committed to close prison one Quarter of a Year in the Tower Chamber of the Fleet, and used very extremely. Then by the means of a good Gentlewoman, I had liberty to come down to Dinner and Supper, not suffered to speak with any of my friends: but as soon as Dinner and Supper was done, to repair to my Chamber again. Notwithstanding whilst I came down thus to Dinner and Supper, the Warden and his Wife picked quarrels with me, and complained untruly of me to their great friend the Bishop of Winchester.

After one quarter of a year and some what more, Babington the Warden and his Wife fell out with me for the wicked Mass: and thereupon the Warden referred to the Bishop of Winchester, and obtained to put me in to the Wards where I have continued a long time, having nothing appointed to me for my bed, but a little pad of straw and a rotten covering, with a tick and a few feathers therein, the Chamber being vile and stinking, until by Gods means good People sent me bedding to lie in. Of the one side of which prison is the sink and filth of the House, and on the other side the Town ditch, so that the stench of the House hath infected me with sundry diseases.

During which time I have been sick; and the Doors, Bars, Halps, and Chains being all closed, and made fast upon me, I have mourned, called and cried for help. But the Warden when he hath known me many times ready to dye, and when the poor men of the Wards have called to help me, hath commanded the Doors to be kept fast and charged that none of his men should come at me, saying; Let him alone, it were a good riddance of him. And, amongst many other times he did thus the 18. of October, 1553. as many can witness.

I paid alwaies like a Baron to the said Warden, as well in fees, as for my Board, which was 20. shillings a week, besides my mans Table, until I was wrongfully deprived of my Bishoprick, and since that time, have payed him as the best Gentleman doth in his House; yet hath he used me worse, and more vilely than the vilest slave that ever came to the Hall Commons.

The said Warden hath also imprisoned my man William Downton, and stripped him out of his clothes to search for letters, and could find none but only a little remembrance of good People's names, that gave me their alms to relieve me in prison; and to undo them also, the Warden delivered the same bill unto the said Steven Gardiner, Gods enemy and mine.

I have suffered imprisonment almost eighteen Months, my goods, living, friends, and comfort taken from me; the Queen owing me by just account 80. pounds or more. She hath put me in prison, and giveth nothing to find me, neither is there suffered any one to come at me whereby I might have reliefed am with a wicked man and Woman, so that I see no remedy (saving Gods help) but I shall be cast away in prison before I come to Judgment. But I commit my just cause to God, whole will be don, whether it be by life or death.

Thus much wrote he himself of this matter.

Another Examination of M. Hooper.

The 22. of January following, 1555. Babington the Warden of the Fleet was commanded to bring M. Hooper before the Bishop of Winchester, with other Bishops and Commissioners at the said Winchesters House at Saint Mary Overies, whereas in effect thus much was done.

The Bishop of Winchester in the name of himself and the rest, moved Master Hooper earnestly to forsake the evil and corrupt Doctrine (as he termed it) preached in the days of King Edward the sixth, and to return to the unity of the Catholik Church, and to acknowledge the Popes Holiness to be head of the same Church, according to the determination of the whole Parliament, promising, that as he himself, with other his Brethren, had received the Popes Blessing, and the Queens mercy; even so mercy was ready to be shewed to him and others, if he would arise with them, and condescend to the Popes Holiness.

M. Hooper answered, that forasmuch as the Pope taught the Doctrine altogether contrary to the Doctrine of Christ, he was not worthy to be accounted as a member of Christs Church, much less to be head thereof, wherefore he would in no wise condescend to any such usurped Jurisdiction, neither esteemed he the Church, whereof they call him head, to be the Catholik Church of Christ: for the Church only heareth the voice of her spouse Christ, and flieth the strangers. Howbeit (saith he) if in any point, to me unknown, I have offended the Queens Majesty, I shall most humbly submit my self to her mercy, if mercy may be had with safety of conscience, and without the displeasure of God.

Answer was made, that the Queen would shew no mercy to the Popes enemies. Whereupon Babington was commanded to bring him to the Fleet again: who did so, and shifted him from his former Chamber into another, near unto the Wardens own Chamber, where he remained vi days: and in the mean time, his former Chamber was searched by D. Martin and others, for Writings and Books, which Malster Hooper was thought to have made, but none was found,

The 28. of January, Winchester and other the Commissioners sate in Judgment at S. Mary Overies, whereas M. Hooper appeared before them at Afternoon again, and there, after much reasoning and Disputation to and fro, he was commanded aside, till M. Rogers (which was then come) had been likewise examined. Examinations being ended, the two Sheriffs of London were commanded, about four of the Clock, to carry them to the Counter in Southwark, there to remain till the morrow at Nine a Clock, to see whether they would relent and come home again to the Catholick Church. So M. Hooper went before with one of the Sheriffs, and Malster Rogers came after with the other, and being out of Church Door, Malster Hooper looked back, and stayed a little till Malster Rogers drew near, unto whom he said; Come Brother Rogers, must we two take this matter first in hand, and begin to frie these faggots? Yea Sir, said Malster Rogers, by Gods grace. Doubt not, said M. Hooper, but God will give strength. So going forwards, there was such a preals of People in the streets, which rejoiced at their constancy, that they had much a doe to pass.

By the way, the Sheriff said to M. Hooper; I wonder that ye were so hasty and quick with my Lord Chancellor, and did use no more patience: He answered, M. Sheriff; I was nothing at all impatient, although I was earnest in my Masters cause, and it standeth me so in hand, for it goeth upon life and death, not the life and death of this World only, but also of the World to come. Then were they committed to the keeper of the Counter, and appointed to severall Chambers, with commandment that they should not be suffered to speak one with another, neither yet any other permitted to come at them that night.

Upon the next day following, the 29. of January, at the hour appointed they were brought again by the Sheriffs before the said Bishop and Commissioners in the Church, where they were the day before. And after long and earnest talks, when they perceived that M. Hooper would by no means condescend unto them, they condemned him to be degraded, and read unto him his condemnation. That done, Malster Rogers was brought before them, and in like manner intreated, and so they delivered both of them to the secular power, the two Sheriffs of London, who were willed to carry them to the Clink, a prison not far from the Bishop of Winchesters House, and there to remain till night.

of M.
Hooper.

When it was dark, Malster Hooper was led by one of the Sheriffs, with many bills and weapons, first thorow the Bishop of Winchesters House, and so over London Bridge, thorow the City to Newgate. And by the way some of the Sergeants were willed to goe before, and put out the Costermongers Candles, who use to sit with lights in the streets: either fearing, of likelihood, that the People would have made some attempt to have taken him away from them by force, if they had seen him go to that prison; or else, being burdened with an evil conscience they thought darkness to be a most fit season for such a business.

But notwithstanding this device, the People having some foreknowledge of his coming, many of them came forth of their doors with lights, and saluted him, praising God for his constancy in the true Doctrine which he had taught them, and desiring God to strengthen him in the same to the end: Malster Hooper passed by, and required the People to make their earnest prayers to God for him, and so went thorow Cheshide to the place appointed, and was delivered as close prisoner to the keeper of Newgate, where he remained fix dayes, no Body being permitted to come to him, or talk with him, saving his keepers, and such as should be appointed thereto.

During this time, Boner Bishop of London, and other at his appointment, as Feknam, Chedsey, and Harpsfield, &c. reforted divers times unto him to assay if by any means they could perfwade him to relent, and become a member of their Antichristian Church. All the ways they could devise, they attempted. For, besides the disputations and allegations of Testimonies of the Scriptures, and of ancient Writers wrested to a wrong sense, according to their accustomed manner, they used also all outward gentleness and significations of friendship, with many great proffers and promises of Worldly commodities, not omitting also most grievous threatnings, if with gentleness they could not prevail; but they found him always the same man, steadfast and immovable. When they perceived that they could by no means reclaim him to their purpose, with such perfwasions and offers as they used for his conversion, then went they about by false rumors and reports of recantations (for it is well known, that they and their servants did spread it first abroad) to bring him and the Doctrin of Christ which he professed, out of credit with the People. So the bruit being a little spread abroad, and believed of some of the weaker sort, by reason of the often report of the Bishop of London and others, it increased more, and at the last came to Malster Hoopers ears. Where-with he was not a little grieved, that the People should give so light credit unto false rumors, having so simple a ground; as it may appear by a letter which he wrote upon that occasion, the Copie whereof followeth.

False rum-

Hoopers re-cantation.

A letter of Malster Hooper for the stopping of certain false rumors spread abroad of his recantation.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with all them that unfeignedly look for the coming of our Saviour Christ, Amen.

Dear Brethren and Sisters in the Lord, and my fellow-prisoners for the cause of Gods Gospel, I do much rejoyce and give thanks unto God for your constancy and perseverance in affliction, unto whom I with continuance unto the end. And as I do rejoyce in your faith and constancy in afflictions that be in prison; even so do I mourn and lament to hear of our dear Brethren that yet have not felt such dangers for Gods truth, as we have, and doe feel, and be daily like to suffer more, yea, the very extreme and vile death of the fire: yet such is the report abroad (as I am credibly informed) that I John Hooper, a condemned man for the cause of Christ, should now after sentence of death (being in Newgate prisoner, and looking daily for execution) recant and abjure that which heretofore I have preached. And this talk ariseth of this, that the Bishop of London and his Chaplains resort unto me. Doubtless, if our Brethren were as godly as I could wish them, they would think, that in case I did refuse to talk with them, they might have just occasion to say that I were unlearned, and durst not speak with learned men, or else proud and disdaind to speak with them. Therefore to avoid just suspicion of both, I have, and do daily speak with them when they come, not doubting but that they report that I am neither proud nor unlearned. And I would wish all men to do as I do in this point. For I fear not their Arguments, neither is death terrible unto me, praying you to make true report of the same, as occasion shall serve; and that I am more confirmed in the truth which I have preached heretofore, by their coming.

Therefore, ye that may tend to the weak Brethren, pray them that they trouble me not with such reports of recantations as they do. For I have hitherto left all things of the World, and suffered great pains and imprisonment, and I thank God I am as ready to suffer death, as a mortal man may be. It were better for them to pray for us, than to credit or report such rumors that be untrue. We have enemies enow of such as know not God truly. But yet the false report of weak Brethren is a double Cross. I wish you eternal salvation in Jesus Christ, and also require your continual prayers, that he which hath begun in us, may continue it to the end.

Anno 1555. I have taught the Truth with my tongue, and with my Pen heretofore, and hereafter shortly shall confirm the same by Gods Grace with my Blood. Forth of Newgate the second of February, Anno 1554.

Your Brother in Christ,
John Hooper.

Upon Monday morning the Bishop of London came to Newgate, and there degraded M. Hooper, the Sentence of which his degradation here followeth.

Degradatio Hooperi.

IN nomine Patris, Filii, & Spiritus Sancti; Amen. Quoniam per sententiam definitivam à Reverendo in Christo Patre & Domino Stephano permissione divina, Winton. Episcopo in & contra te Johan. Hooper Presbyterum, sue jurisdictionis ratione heresis & delicti infrascripti Diocesani Winton. notorie commissi existentem, super viis & legitimis prolatam, constat sufficienter & legitime nobis Edmundo Lond. Episcopo, te præsatum Joh. Hooper hereticum manifestum & obstinatum, ac pertinacem fuisse & esse, ac constare similiter tanquam hereticum fuisse modo per dictam sententiam pronunciatum & declaratum fuisse, majorisque Excommunicationis sententia ob id immodatam & involutum similiter esse, ac ab ordine tuo deponendum & degradandum, Curiaque seculari ob demerita tua hujusmodi tradendum fore, prout ex tenore dictæ sententia, ad quam nos in hac parte nos referimus, plenius, planius, & expressius liquet & apparet: Idcirco nos Edmundus Episcopus Lond. antedictus, quia nostra & universitatis etiam interest nostras hic partes interponere, & Vicariam operam mutuamque vicissitudinem impendere, in cuius etiam Diocesi tu Joh. Hooper per idem heresis crimen tunc & sepius, & ante & post commissisti, istis inquam & aliis predictis attentis, & exequendo omni meliori & efficaciori modo, quo possumus, sententiam predictam, sic ut præmittitur, latam in te qui infra fines & limites Diocesis nostræ Lond. notorie confisens, & in hac parte culpabilis & transgressor, etiam notorie existens, ad actualem degradationem tui præfati Joh. Hooper (culpa tua exigens ac iustitia id poscente) duximus procedendum fore, ac sic etiam realiter procedimus, ut deinde iuxta juris exigentiam & temporis retroacti morem laudabilem & normam consuetam, te in Arca Ecclesiæ manere nolentem Curia seculari recte & legitime ac effectualiter tradere possumus. Quod ipsum hoc fieri debere, nos per hanc nostram sententiam sive decretum decernimus, pronunciamus, & declaramus in his scriptis.

After the Sentence of Degradation thus declared, now let us see the form and manner of their degrading, which here also followeth. But first here is to be noted, that they, degrading this blessed Bishop, did not proceed against him as a Bishop, but as only against a Priest, as they termed him; for such as he was, these Baalamites accounted for no Bishop.

Here followeth the form and manner used in the degrading of B. Hooper.

THe fourth day of February, the year above-mentioned, in the Chappel in Newgate, the Bishop of London there sitting with his Notary and certain other Witnesses, came Alexander Andrews the Goaler, bringing with him M. Hooper and M. Rogers, being condemned before by the Chancellor: where the said Bishop of London, at the request of the foresaid Winchester, proceeded to the degradation of the parties above-mentioned, M. Hooper and M. Rogers, after this form and manner: First, he put upon him all the Vesture and Ornaments belonging to a Priest, with all other things to the same Order appertaining, as though (being reviled) they should solemnly execute their Office. Thus they being apparelled and revested, the Bishop begimeth to pluck off, first the uttermost Vesture, and by degree and order coming down to the lowest Vesture, which they had only in taking Bene and Colles; and so being stript and depofed, he deprived them of all order, benefit and priviledge belonging to the Clergy; and consequently that being done, pronounced, decreed, and declared the said Parties to degraded, to be given personally to the Secular Power, as the Sheriffs being for that year, M. Davy Woodroffe, and M. William Chester: who, receiving first the said M. Rogers at the hands of the Bishop, had him away with them, bringing him to the place of Execution where he suffered. The Witnesses there present were M. Harpfield Archdeacon of London, Robert Cofin, and Robert Willerton, Canons of Pauls, Thomas Mountague, and George How Clerks, Tristram Swadock, and Richard Clunney Sumner, &c.

The same Monday at Night, being the 4. of February, his Keeper gave him an inkling that he should be sent to Gloucester to suffer death, whereat he received very much, lifting up his eyes and hands unto Heaven; and praising God that he saw it good to send him amongst the People, over whom he was Pastor, there to confirm with his Death the Truth which he had before taught them; not doubting but the Lord would give him strength to perform the same to his glory: and immediately he went to his Servants house for his Boots, Spurs, and Cloak, that he might be in a readines to ride when he should be called.

The next day following, about four of the Clock in the Morning before day, the Keeper with others came to him and searched him, and the Bed wherein he lay, to see if he had written any thing, and then he was led by the Sheriffs of London and other their Officers forth of Newgate to a place appointed, not far from S. Dunstons Church in Fleetstreet, where six of the Queens Guards were appointed to receive him, and to carry him to Gloucester, there to be delivered unto the Sheriff, who with the Lord Shandous, M. Wicks, and other Commissioners, were appointed to see Execution done. The which Guard brought him to the Angel, where he brake his Fast with them, eating his Meat at that time more liberally than he had used to do a good while before. About the Break of the Day he went to Horse, and leapt cheerfully on Horseback without help, having a Hood upon his Head under his Hat that he should not be known, and so he took his Journey joyfully towards Gloucester, and always by the way the Guard learned of him where he was accustomed to Bait or Lodge, and ever carried him to another Inn.

Upon the Thursday following, he came to a Town in his Diocess called Cicester, 15 miles from Gloucester; about eleven of the Clock, and there Dined at a Womens house which had always hated the Truth, and spoken all evil the could of M. Hooper. This Woman, perceiving the cause of his coming, shewed him all the Friendship she could, and lamented his case with Tears, confessing that the before had often reported, That if he were put to the Trial, he would not stand to his Doctrine.

After Dinner he rode forwards, and came to Gloucester about five of the Clock, and a mile without the Town was much People assembled, which cried and lamented his estate, inasmuch that one of the Guard rode Post into the Town, to require Aid of the Mayor and Sheriffs, fearing lest he should have been taken from them. The Officers and their Retinue repaired to the Gate with Weapons, and commanded the People to keep their Houses, &c. but there was no man that once gave any signification of any such Rescue or Violence. So was he lodged at one Ingram's House in Gloucester, and that Night (as he had done all the way) he did eat his Meat quietly, and slept his first sleep soundly, as it was reported by them of the Guard and others. After his first sleep he continued all that Night in Prayer until the Morning, and then he desired that he might go into the next Chamber (for the Guard were also in the Chamber where he lay) that there being solitary he might pray and talk with God: so that all the day, saying a little at Meat, and when he talked at any time with such as the Guard licensed to speak with him, he bestowed in Prayer.

Amongst other that spake with him, Sir Anthony Kingston, Knight, was one. Who, seeming in time past his very Friend, was then appointed by the Queens Letters to be one of the Commissioners, to see Execution done upon him. M. Kingston being brought into the Chamber found him at his Prayers: and as soon as he saw M. Hooper, he burst forth in Tears. M. Hooper at the first blush knew him not. Then said M. Kingston, Why, my Lord, do you not know me an old Friend of yours, Anthony Kingston?

Anno 1555.

Yes, M. Kingston, I do now know you well, and am glad to see you in health, and do praye God for the same. But I am sorry to see you in this case; for as I understand you be come hither to die. But (alas) consider that life is sweet, and death is bitter. Therefore seeing life may be had, desire to live; for life hereafter may do good.

In ded it is true, M. Kingston, I am come hither to end this Life, and to suffer death here, because I will not gain-ly the former Truth that I have heretofore taught amongst you in this Diocese, and elsewhere; and I thank you for your friendly Counsel, although it be not so friendly as I could have wished it. True it is, M. Kingston, that death is bitter, and life is sweet: but (alas) consider that the death to come is more bitter, and the life to come is more sweet. Therefore for the desire and love I have to the one, and the terror and fear of the other; I do not so much regard this death, nor esteem this life, but have set myself through the strength of Gods Holy Spirit, patiently to pass through the Torments and Extremities of the Fire now prepared for me, rather than to deny the Truth of his Word, desiring you and others, in the mean time, to commend me to Gods Mercy in your Prayers.

Well, my Lord, then I perceive there is no Remedie, and therefore I will take my leave of you: and I thank God that ever I knew you, for God did appoint you to call me, being a lost Child: and by your good Instructions, where before I was both an Adulterer and a Fornicator, God hath brought me to the forsaking and detesting of the same.

If you have had the grace so to do, I do highly praise God for it: and if you have not, I pray God ye may have, and that you may continually live in his Fear. After these and many other words the one took leave of the other, M. Kingston with bitter tears, M. Hooper with tears also trickling down his Cheeks. At which departure M. Hooper told him, that all the Troubles he had sustained in Prison, had not caused him to utter so much Sorrow.

The same day in the Afternoon, a blind Boy, after long intercession made to the Guard, obtained Licence to be brought unto M. Hooper Speech. The same Boy not long afore had suffered Imprisonment at Glocester for confessing of the Truth. M. Hooper, after he had examined him of his Faith, and the Cause of his Imprisonment, beheld him stedfastly, and (the water appearing in his Eyes) said unto him, Ah poor Boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward sight, for what reason he best knoweth: but he hath given thee another sight much more precious, for he hath endued thy Soul with the eye of Knowledge and Faith. God give thee grace continually to pray unto him, that thou lose not that sight, for then shouldest thou be blind both in Body and Soul.

After that another came to him, whom he knew to be a very Papist and a wicked Man, which appeared to be sorry for M. Hoopers trouble, saying; Sir, I am sorry to see you thus. To seeme? Why, said he, art thou sorry? To see you, said the other, in this case. For I hear say, you are come hither to die, for the which I am sorry. Be sorry for thy self man, said M. Hooper, and lament thine own wickedness; for I am well, I thank God, and death to me for Christs sake is welcome.

The same Night he was committed by the Guard, their Commission being then expired, unto the custody of the Sheriffs of Glocester. The Name of the one was Jenkins, the other Bond, who with the Mayor and Aldermen repaired to M. Hoopers Lodging, and at the first meeting greeted him, and took him by the Hand. Unto whom Hooper spake in this manner. My Mayor, I give most hearty thanks to you, and to the rest of your Brethren, that you have vouchsafed to take me a Prisoner and a condemned man by the hand; whereby to my rejoicing it is found that you are not so far from Love and Friendship towards me, as many others extirpated: and I trust a lot that all the things I have taught you in these past are not utterly forgotten, which I was once, by the good King that did first appoint me to be your Bishop and Pastor. For the which most thank you, for your Defence, because I will not now count it dishonour and I have as many other men do, I thank them (as I am sure you know) by the Queens Commandment to take and outcome where I taught, to continue it with my Brethren. And now Mr. Sheriffs, I understand by these good Men, and my very Friends (meaning the Guard) at whose hands I have found so much favour and gentleness by the way hitherward, as a Prisoner could reasonably require (for the which also I most heartily thank them) that I am committed to your custody, as unto them that must see me brought to morrow to the place of Execution. My Request therefore to you shall be only, that there may be a quick Fire, shortly to make an end; and in the mean time I will be as obedient unto you, as your selves would wish. If you think I do amiss in any thing, hold up your Finger, and I have done. For I am not come hither as one enforced or compelled to die: For it is well known, I might have had my Life with worldly gain; but as one willing to offer and give away Life for the Truth, rather than to consent to the wicked Papistical Religion of the Bishop of Rome, received and set forth by the Magistrates in England, to Gods holy Discipline and Dishonour; and I trust by Gods Grace to morrow to die a faithful Servant of God, and a true obedient Subject to the Queen.

These and such-like words in effect used Mr. Hooper to the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, whereat many of them mourned and lamented. Notwithstanding the two Sheriffs went aside to confit, and were determined to have lodged him in the common Goal of the Town, called Nortgate, if the Guard had not made earnest intercession for him: who declared at large, how quietly, mildly and patiently he had behaved himself in the ways, adding thereto, that any Child might keep him well enough, and that they themselves would rather take pains to watch with him, than that we should be sent to the common Prison. So it was determined at the length he should still remain in Robert Ingrams House; and the Sheriffs and the Sergeants and other Officers did appoint to watch with him that Night themselves. His desire was, that he might go to bed that Night betimes, saying, that he had many things to remember: and so he did at five of the Clock, and slept one sleep soundly, and bestowed the rest of the Night in Prayer. After he got up in the morning, he desired that no Man should be suffered to come into the Chamber, that he might be solitary till the hour of Execution.

About eight of the Clock came Sir John Bridges Lord Shandoy, with a great band of men, Sir Anrony Kingston, Sir Edmond Bridges, and other Commissioners appointed to see Execution done. At nine of the Clock Mr. Hooper was willed to prepare himself to be in a readines, for the time was at hand. Immediately he was brought down from his Chamber by the Sheriffs, who were accompanied with Bills, Glives and Weapons. When he saw the multitude of Weapons, he spake to the Sheriffs on this wise; Mr. Sheriffs (said he) I am no Traitor, neither needed you to have made such a business to bring me to the place where I must suffer: For if ye had willed me, I would have gone alone to the Stake, and have troubled none of you all. Afterward looking upon the multitude of people that were assembled, being by estimation to the Number of 7000 (for it was Market-day, and many also came to see his Behaviour towards death) he spake unto those that were about him, saying; Alas, why be these people assembled and come together? Peradventure they think to hear something of me now, as they have in times past, but alas Speech is prohibited me. Notwithstanding the cause of my death is well known unto them. When I was appointed here to be their Pastor, I preached unto them true and sincere Doctrine, and that out of the word of God: Because I will not now account the same to be Heretic and Untruth, this kind of death is prepared for me.

So he went forward led between the two Sheriffs (as it were a Lamb) to the place of Slaughter in a Gown of his luffs, his Hat upon his Head, and a Staff in his Hand to stay himself withal. For the grief of the Setaria, which he had taken in Prison, caused him somewhat to halt. All the way, being straitly charged not to speak, he could not be perceived once to open his Mouth, but beholding the People all the way, which mourned bitterly for him; he would sometimes lift up his Eyes towards Heaven, and look very cheerfully upon such as he knew: and he was never known, during the time of his being amongst them, to look with so cheerful and ruddy a Countenance as he did at that present. the place appointed where he should dye, sittingly he beheld the Stake and preparation made for him, which was near unto the great Elm-Tree over against the Colledge of P. R. I. where he was wont to Teach. The place round about the House, and the Boughs of the Tree were replenished with People; and in the Chamber over the Colledge-Gate stood the Priests of the Colledge. Then kneeled he down (inasmuch as he could not be suffered to speak unto the People) to Prayer, and beckned six or seven times unto one whom he knew well, to hear the said Prayer, to make report thereof in time to come (pouring Tears upon his Shoulders and in his Bosom) who gave attentive Ears unto the same: the which Prayer he made upon the whole Creed, wherein he continued the space of half an hour. Now after he was somewhat entered into his Prayer, a Box was brought and laid before him upon a Stool, with his Pardon (or at least-wile it was found to be his Pardon) from the Queen, if he would turn. At the sight whereof he cried, If you love my Soul, away with it; if you love my Soul, away with it. The Box being taken away, the Lord Shandous said, Seeing there is no remedy, dispatch him quickly. Master Hooper said, Good my Lord, I trust your Lordship will give me leave to make an end of my Prayers.

Then said the Lord Shandous to Sir Edmund Bridges Son, which gave ear before to M. Hoopers Prayer at his request: Edmund, take heed that he do nothing else but Pray: If he do, tell me, and I shall quickly dispatch him. Whiles this Talk was, there stepped one or two uncalled, which heard him speak these words following:

M Hooper
Prayer.

Lord, (aid he, I am Hell, but thou art Heaven; I am full and a sink of Sin, but thou art a gracious God and a merciful Redeemer. Have mercy therefore upon me most miserable and wretched Offender, after thy great mercy, and according to thine ineffable goodness. Thou art ascended into Heaven, receive me Hell to be partakers of thy Joy, where thou fittest equal glory with thy Father. For well knowest thou, Lord, wherefore I am come hither to suffer, and why the wicked do persecute this thy poor Servant; not for my sins and transgressions committed against thee, but because I will not allow thy wicked doings, to the contaminating of thy Blood, and to the denial of the knowledge of thy Truth, wherewith it did please thee by thy Holy Spirit to instruct me: the which with as much diligence as a poor Wretch might (being thereto called) I have set forth to thy glory. And well I felt thou, my Lord and God, what terrible Pains and cruel Torments he prepared for thy Creature: such, Lord, as without thy strength none is able to bear, or patiently to pass. But all things, that are impossible with man, are possible with thee. Therefore strengthen me of thy goodness, that in the Fire I break not the rules of Patience; or else assuage the terror of the Pains, as shall seem meet to thy glory.

M Hooper
submitted himself to the Fire.

As soon as the Mayor had espied these men which made report of the former words, they were commanded away, and could not be suffered to hear any more. Prayer being done, he prepared himself to the Stake, and put off his Hofs Gown, and delivered it to the Sheriffs, requiring them to see it restored unto the Owner, and put off the rest of his Gear, unto his Doublet and Hose, wherein he would have burned. But the Sheriffs would not permit that, (such was their greediness) unto whose pleasures (good Man) he very obediently submitted himself; and his Doublet, Hose and Waistcoat were taken off. Then being in his Shirt, he took a Pardon from his Hofs himself, and trusted his Shirt between his Legs, where he had a pound of Gun-powder in a Bladder, and under each Arm the like quantity delivered him by the Guard. So desiring the People to say the Lords Prayer with him, and to pray for him (who performed it with Tears, during the time of his Pains) he went up to the Stake. Now when he was at the Stake, three Irons, made to bind him to the Stake, were brought; one for his Neck, another for his Middle, and the third for his Legs. But he refusing them said, Ye have no need thus to trouble your selves. For I doubt not, but God will give strength sufficient to abide the extremity of the Fire, without Bands: not withstanding, suspecting the frailty and weakness of the flesh, but having assured confidence in Gods strength, I am content ye do as ye shall think good.

So the Hoop of Iron prepared for his Middle was brought, which being made some what too short (for his Belly was swollen with Imprisonment) he shrank and put in his Belly with his hand, until it was fastened: and when they offered to have bound his Neck and Legs with the other two Hoops of Iron, he utterly refused them, and would have none, saying, I am well assured I shall not trouble you.

Thus being ready, he looked upon the People, of whom he might be well seen (for he was both tall, and stood also on an high Stool) and beheld round about him: and in every corner there was nothing to be seen but weeping and sorrowful People. Then lifting up his eyes and hands unto Heaven, he prayed to himself: By and by, he that was appointed to make the Fire, came to him, and did ask him forgiveness. Of whom he asked why he should forgive him, saying, that he knew never any offence he had committed against him. O Sir, (said the Man) I am appointed to make the Fire. Therein (said Mr. Hooper) thou dost nothing offend me; God for give thee thy sins, and do thine office I pray thee. Then the Reeds were cast up, and he received two bundles of them in his own hands, and placed them, kissed them, and put under either Arm one of them, and shewed with his hand how the reit should be bestowed, and pointed to the place where any should stick.

Anon commandment was given that the fire should be set to, and so it was. But because there were put on fewer green Fagots than two loads could carry upon their backs, it kindled not by and by, and was a pretty while also before it took the Reeds upon the Fagots. At length it burned about him, but the Wind having full strength in that place (it was a lowing and cold Morning) it blew the flame from him, so that he was in a manner no more but touched by the Fire.

Within a space after, a few dry Fagots were brought, and a new Fire kindled with Fagots (for there were no more Reeds) and that burned at the Nether parts, but had small power above, because of the Wind, saving that it did burn his Hair, and scorch his Skin a little. In the time of which Fire, even as at the first flame, he prayed, saying mildly and not very loud (but as one without pains) O Jesus the Son of David, have mercy upon me, and receive my Soul. After the second was spent, he did wipe both his Eyes with his hands, and beholding the People, he said with an indifferent loud voice: For Gods love (good People) let me have more Fire: And all this while his Nether parts did burn: for the Fagots were so few, that the flame did not burn strongly at his Upper Parts.

The third Fire was kindled within a while after, which was more extreme than the other two: and then the Bladders of Gun-powder brake, which did him small good, they were so placed, and the Wind had such power. In the which Fire he prayed with somewhat a loud voice, Lord Jesus have mercy upon me, Lord Jesus have mercy upon me: Lord Jesus receive my Spirit. And these were the last Words he was heard to utter. But when he was black in the Mouth, and his Tongue swollen, that he could not speak, yet his Lips went till they were shrunk to the Gums: and he knocked his Breast with his hands, until one of his Arms fell off, and then knocked still with the other, what time the Fat, Water and Blood dropped out at his Fingers ends, until by renewing of the Fire his strength was gone, and his hand did cleave fast in knocking to the Iron upon his Breast. So immediately, bowing forwards, he yielded up his Spirit.

The burning of M^r. Iohn Hooper, at Gloucester. Anno 1555. February 9.

The patient end of this holy Martyr.

Thus was he three quarters of an hour or more in the Fire. Even as a Lamb, patiently he abode the extremity thereof, neither moving forwards, backwards, or to any side: but having his Nether parts burned, and his Bowels fallen out, he died as quietly as a Child in his Bed: and he now reigneth as a blessed Martyr, in the joys of Heaven prepared for the Faithful in Christ, before the foundations of the World: for whose Constancy all Christians are bound to praise God.

A Letter
exhortatory of M. Hooper to certain of his Friends.

The Grace of God be with you. Amen. I did write unto you of late, and told you what extremity the Parliament had concluded upon concerning Religion, suppressing the Truth, and setting forth the Untruth, intending to cause all men by extremity to forswear themselves, and to take again, for the Head of the Church, him that is neither Head nor Member of it, but a very Enemy, as the Word of God and all ancient Writers do record: and for lack of Law and Authority, they will use force and extremity, which have been the Arguments to defend the Pope and Popery, since their Authority first began in the World. But now is the time of Trial, to see whether we fear more God or Man. It was an easie thing to hold with Christ whilst the Prince and World held with him: but now the World hateth him, it is the true Trial who be his.

The Popes
Religion stands only by force and extremity.

Wherefore in the name, and in the vertue, strength and power of his Holy Spirit, prepare yourselves in any case to Adversity and Constancy. Let us not run away when it is most time to fight; Remember none shall be crowned, but such as fight manfully; and he that endureth to the end shall be saved. Ye must now turn all your Cogitations from the peril you see, and mark the felicity that followeth the peril; either victory in this World of your Enemies, or else a surrender of this life to inherit the everlasting Kingdom. Beware of beholding too much the felicity or misery of this World, for the consideration and too earnest love or fear of either of them draweth from God.

Neither the felicity nor the misery of this World to be looked upon.

Wherefore think with your selves as touching the felicity of the World, it is good: but yet none otherwise than it standeth with the favour of God. It is to be kept; but yet so far forth as by keeping of it we lose not God. It is good abiding and tarrying still among our friends here: but yet so, that we tarry not therewithal in Gods displeasure, and hereafter dwell with the Devils in fire everlasting. There is nothing under God but may be kept, so that God, being above all things we have, be not lost.

Of Adversity judge the same. Imprisonment is painful, but yet liberty upon evil conditions is more painful. The Prisons stink; but yet not so much as sweet Houses, whereas the fear and true honour of God lacketh. I must be alone and solitary: it is better so to be and have God with me, than to be in company with the wicked. Loss of Goods is great: but loss of Gods grace and favour is greater. I am a poor simple Creature, and cannot tell how to answer before such a great sort of Noble, Learned and Wise men: it is better to make answer before the Pomp and Pride of wicked Men, than to stand naked in the sight of all Heaven and Earth before the just God at the latter day. I shall dye then by the hands of the Cruel man: he is blessed that loseth his life full of miseries, and findeth the life of eternal Joys. It is pain and grief to depart from Goods and Friends: but yet not so much, as to depart from Grace and Heaven it self. Wherefore there is neither felicity nor adversity of this World, that can appear to be great, if it be weighed with the joys or pains in the World to come.

I can do no more, but pray for you; do the same for me, for Gods sake. For my part (I thank the heavenly Father) I have made mine accounts, and appointed myself unto the will of the heavenly Father: as he will, so I will by his Grace. For Gods sake, as soon as ye can, send my poor Wife and Children some Letter from you, and my Letter also which I sent of late to D. do nothing in worldly things'. She is a godly and wife Woman. If my meaning had been accomplished, the should have had necessary things: but what I meant, God can perform, to whom I commend both her and you all. I am a precious Jewel, now and daintily kept, never so daintily: for neither mine own man, nor any of the servants of the house may come to me, but my Keeper alone, a simple rude man, God knoweth; but I am nothing careful thereof. Fare you well. The 21 of January 1555.

Your bounden,

John Hooper

AMongst many other memorable Acts and Notes worthy to be remembered in the History of Mr. Hooper, this also is not to be forgotten which hapned between him, and a braggling Friar, a little after the beginning of his Imprisonment: The Story whereof here followeth.

A Friar came from France to England with great vaunt, asking who was the greatest Heretic in England? thinking belike to do some great act upon him. To whom answer was made, that Mr. Hooper had then the greatest name to be the chiefest Ringleader, who was then in the Fleet. The Friar coming to him, asked why he was committed to Prison. He said for Debt. Nay, said he, it was for Heresie, which when the other had denied. What fault thou, quoth he, to Hoc est Corpus meum? Mr. Hooper, being partly moved at the sudden question, desired that he might ask of him another question, which was this; What remained after the Consecration in the Sacrament, any Bread or no? No Bread at all, said he. And when ye break it, what do you break; whether Bread or the Body, said Mr. Hooper? No Bread, said the Friar, but the Body only. If ye do so, said Mr. Hooper, ye do great injury, not only to the Body of Christ, but also ye break the Scriptures, which say, Ye shall not break of him one bone, &c. With that the Friar, having nothing belike to answer, recoyled back, and with his Circles and his Crofses began to use Exorcism against Mr. Hooper, as though, &c.

This and more wrote Mr. Hooper to Mrs. Wilkinson in a Letter, which Letter was read unto her by John Kelke.

Comparison between Mr. Hooper and Polycarpus.

When I see and behold the great patience of these blessed Martyrs in our days, in their sufferings so quietly and constantly abiding the Torments that are ministered unto them of Princes for Gods cause: methinks I may well and worthily compare them unto the old Martyrs of the Primitive Church. In the number of whom, if comparison be to be made between Saint and Saint, Martyr and Martyr: with whom might I better match this blessed Martyr John Hooper, through the whole Catalogue of the old Martyrs, than with Polycarpus the ancient Bishop Smyrna, of whom Eusebius maketh mention in the Ecclesiastical Story? For as both agreed together in one kind of punishment, being both put to the fire, so which of them shewed more patience and constancy in the time of their suffering, it is hard to be said.

And though Polycarpus being set in the flame (as the story saith) was kept by miracle from the torment of the fire, till he was stricken down with weapon, and so dispatched: yet Hooper by no less miracle, armed with patience and fervent spirit of Gods comfort, so quietly despised the violence thereof, as though he had felt little more than did Polycarpus in the fire flaming round about him.

Moreover, as it is written of Polycarpus when he should have been tied to the Stake, he required to stand untied, saying these words; Sinite me, qui namq; ignem ferre posse dedisti, dabit etiam ut sine vestra calvorum cautione immortem in rogo permaneam. That is, Let me alone I pray you, for be that gave me strength to come to this fire, will also give me patience to abide in the same without your tying. So likewise Hooper, with the like spirit, when he should have been tied to three Chains to the Stake, requiring them to have no such mistrust of him, was tied but with one; who, if he had not been tied at all, yet (no doubt) would have no less answered to that great Patience of Polycarpus.

And as the end of them was both much agreeing in the life of them both was such, as might seem not far different. In teaching, like diligent both, in zeal fervent, in life unpotted, in manners and conversation inculpable; Bishops and also Martyrs both. Briefly, in teaching so pithy and fruitful, that as they both were joined together in one Spirit, so might they be joined in one Name together, Hooperus, to wit, much fruitful, to which name also Polycarpus is not much unlike. In this the Martyrdom of Mr. Hooper may seem in suffering to go before, though in time it followed the Martyrdom of Polycarpus, for that he was both longer in Prison, and there also so cruelly handled by the malice of his Keepers, as I think none of the old Martyrs ever suffered the like. To this also add, how he was deprived by Boner, with such contumelies and reproaches, as I think in Polycarpus time was not used to any.

And as we have hitherto compared these two good Martyrs together, so now if we should compare the Enemies and Authors of their Death one with the other; we should find no inequality betwixt them both; but that the Adversaries of Mr. Hooper seemed to be more cruel and unmerciful. For they that put Polycarpus to death, yet ministered to him a quick dispatch, moved belike by some compassion not to have him stand in the torment: where the tormentors of Mr. Hooper suffered him without all compassion to stand three quarters of an hour in the fire. And as touching the chief doers and authors of his Martyrdom, what Consul or Proconsul was there to be conferred with the Chancellor here, which brought this Martyr to burning? Let this suffice.

This good Bishop and Servant of God, being in Prison wrote divers Books and Treatises, to the number of xxiv. whereof some he wrote to the Parliament in Latin, and one to the Bishop of Chichester Dr. Day: besides he wrote of the Sacraments, of the Lords Prayer, and of the Ten Commandments, with divers others.

Here follow certain of Mr. Hooper's Letters.

AS you have heard the whole Story of the Life and Martyrdom of this good man declared; so now let us consequently adjoin some part of his Letters; written in the time of his Imprisonment, most fruitful and worthy to be read, especially in these dangerous days, of all true Christians, which by true Mortification seek to serve and follow the Lord through all Tempests and Storms of this malignant World, as by the reading and perusing of the said Letters, you shall better feel and understand.

A Letter of Mr. Hooper to certain godly Professors and Lovers of the Truth, instructing them how to behave themselves in that woful Alteration and Change of Religion.

THe Grace, Mercy, and Peace of God the Father through our Lord Jesus Christ, be with you my dear Brethren, and with all those that unfeignedly love and embrace his holy Gospel, Amen.

It is told me, That the wicked Idol, the Mass, is established again by Law, and passed in the Parliament House. Earn the truth of it, I pray you, and what Penalty is appointed in the Act to such as speak against it: Also whether there be any compulsion to constrain men to be at it. The Statute thoroughly known, such as be abroad and at liberty may provide for themselves, and avoid the danger the better. Doubtless there hath not been seen before our time such a Parliament as this is, that as many as were suspected to be favourers of Gods Word, should be banished out of both Houses. But we must give God thanks for that truth he hath opened in the time of his blessed Servant K. Edward the sixth, and pray unto him that we deny it not, nor dishonour it with Idolatry; but that we may have strength and patience rather to die ten times than to deny him once. Blessed shall we be, if ever God make us worthy of that honour to shed our Blood for his Names sake; and blessed then shall we think the Parents which brought us into the World, that we should from this Mortality be carried into Immortality. If we follow the commandment of S. Paul, that faith, If ye then be ren again with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right hand of God. We shall neither depart from the vain transitory goods of this World, nor from this wretched and mortal life, with so great pains as others do.

Let us pray to our heavenly Father, that we may know and love his blessed will, and the glorious Joy prepared for us in time to come, and that we may know and hate all things contrary to his blessed Will, and also the Pain prepared for the wicked in the World to come. There is no better way to be used in this troublesome time for your consolation, than many times to have Assemblies together of such Men and Women as be of your Religion in Christ, and there to take and renew amongst your selves the truth of your Religion, to see what ye be by the Word of God, and to remember what ye were before ye came to the knowledge thereof, to weigh and confer the Dreams and false Lies of the Preachers, that now preach, with the Word of God that retaineth all Truth: and by such talk and familiar resorting together, ye shall the better find out all their Lies that now go about to deceive you, and also both know and love the Truth that God hath opened to us. It is much requisite, that the Members of Christ comfort one another, make Prayers together, confer one with another; so shall ye be the stronger, and Gods Spirit shall not be absent from you, but in the midst of you, to teach you, to comfort you, to make you wise in all godly things, patient in Adversity, and strong in Persecution.

Ye see how the Congregation of the wicked by helping one another, make their wicked Religion and themselves strong against Gods Truth and his People. If ye may have some Learned man, that can out of the Scriptures speak unto you of Faith, and true honouring of God, also that can shew you the descent of Christs Church from the beginning of it until this day, that ye may perceive by the life of our Fore-fathers these two things: the one, that Christs words, which said that all his must suffer persecution and trouble in the world, be true: the other, that none of all his, before our time, escaped trouble; then shall ye perceive that it is but a folly for one that professeth Christ truly, to look for the love of the World.

John 10.

Thus shall ye learn to bear Trouble, and to exercise your Religion, and feel indeed that Christs words be true, In the world ye shall suffer persecution. And when ye shall feel your Religion indeed, say, Ye be no better than your Fore-fathers; but be glad, that ye may be counted Souldiers for this War: and pray to God when ye come together, that he will use and order you and your doings in these three ends, which ye must take heed to: the first, that ye glorifie God; the next, that ye edifie the Church and Congregation; the third, that ye profit your own Souls.

In all your doings beware ye be not deceived. For although this time be not yet so Bloody and Tyrannous as the time of our Fore-fathers, that could not bear the Name of Christ, without danger of life and goods; yet is our time more perilous both for Body and Soul. Therefore of us Christ said, Think ye when the Son of man cometh, he shall find Faith upon the Earth? He said not, Think ye he shall find any Man or Woman Christened, and in Name a Christian? but he spake of the Faith that saveth the Christian man in Christ: and doubtless the scarcity of Faith is now more (and will, I fear, increase) than it was in the time of the greatest Tyrants that ever were; and no marvel why. Read the sixth Chapter of St. Johns Revelation, and ye shall perceive amongst other things, that at the opening of the fourth Seal came out a pale Horse, and he that sat upon him was called Death, and Hell followed him. This Horse is the time wherein Hypocrites and Dissemblers entered into the Church under the pretence of true Religion, as Monks, Friars, Nuns, Maling-Priests, with such others, that hath killed more Souls with Heresie and Superstition, than all the Tyrants, that ever were killed Bodies by Fire, Sword, or Banishment, as it appeareth by his name that sitteth upon the Horse, who is called Death: for all Souls that love Christ, and truft to these Hypocrites, live to the Devil in everlasting pain, as is declared by him that followeth the pale Horse which is Hell.

These pretended and pale Hypocrites have stirred the Earth-quake, that is to wit, the Princes of the World, against Christs Church, and have also darkened the Sun, and made the Moon bloody, and have caused the Stars to fall from Heaven, that is to say, have darkened with Mills, and daily do darken (as ye hear by their Sermons) the clear Sun of Gods most pure Word: the Moon, which be Gods true Preachers, which fetch only light at the Sun of Gods Word, are turned into Blood, Prisons, and Chains, that their Light cannot shine unto the World as they would: whereupon it cometh to pass, that the Stars, that is to say, Christian People fall from Heaven, that is to wit, from Gods most true Word to Hypocrites, most devilish Superstition and Idolatry. Let some Learned man shew you all the Articles of your Belief and monument of Christian Faith, from the time of Christ hitherto, and ye shall perceive that there was never mention of such Articles as these Hypocrites teach. God bless you, and pray for me as I do for you.

Out of the Fleet by your Brother in Christ,
John Hooper.

To Master Ferrar Bishop of St. Davids, D. Taylor, M. Bradford, and M. Philpot, Prisoners in the Kings Bench in Southwark.

The Grace of God be with you, Amen. I am advertised by divers, as well such as love the Truth, as also by such as ye be not come unto it, that ye and I shall be carried shortly to Cambridge, there to dispute for the Faith, and for the Religion of Christ (which is most true) that we have and do profess. I am (as I doubt not ye be) in Christ ready, not only to go to Cambridge, but also to suffer, by Gods help, Death it self in the maintenance thereof. Welton and his Complices have obtained for the Commission already, and speedily (most like) be will put it in execution. Wherefore, dear Brethren, I do advertise you of the thing before for divers causes. The one to comfort you in the Lord, that the time draweth near and is at hand, that we shall testify before Gods Enemies Gods Truth. The next, that ye should prepare your selves the better for it. The third, to shew you what ways I think our selves were best to use in this matter, and also to bear of you your better advice, if mine be not good. Ye know such as shall be Censors and Judges over us, breath and thirst for our Blood, and whether we, by Gods help, overcome after the Word of God, or by force and subtilty of our Adversaries be overcome, this will be the conclusion; our Adversaries will say, they overcome, and ye perceive how they report of those great Learned men and godly Personages at Oxford.

Commission
given out for M. Hooper and other to dispute at Cambridge.

Wherefore I mind never to answer them, except I the counsel have Books present, because they use not only false Allegation of the Doctors, but also a piece of the Doctors against the whole course of the Doctors mind. The next, that we may have sworn Notaries, to take things spoken indifferently: which will be very hard to have, for the Adversaries will have the oversight of all things, and then make their better than it was, and ours worse than it was. Then if we see that two or three, or more will speak together, or with Scoffs and Taunts illude and mock us: I suppose it were best to appeal, to be heard before the Queen and the whole Council, and that would much set forth the glory of God. For many of them know already the Truth, many of them err rather of Zeal than Malice, and the others that be indurate should be answered fully to their shame (I doubt not) although to our smart and blood-shedding. For of this I am assured, that the Commissioners appointed to hear us and judge us, mean nothing less than to hear the cause indifferently; for they be Enemies unto us and our cause, and be at a point already to give Sentence against us: so that if it were possible with St. Stephen to speak so that they could not resist us, or to use such silence and patience as Christ did, they will proceed to revenging.

Where-

Anno

1555.

Wherefore, my dear Brethren, in the mercy of Jesus Christ, I would be glad to know your advice this day or to morrow; for shortly we shall be gone, and I verily suppose that we shall not company together, but be kept one abroad from another. They will deny our Appeal, yet let us challenge the Appeal, and take witness thereof, of such as be present, and require for indifference of hearing and judgment, to be heard either before the Queen and the Council, or else before all the Parliament, as they were used in King Edwards days. Further, for my part I will require both Books and time to answer. We have been Prisoners now three quarters of a year, and have lacked our Books; and our Memories by close keeping and ingratitude of their Parts, be not so present and quick as theirs be. I trust God will be with us, yea, I doubt not but he will, and teach us to do all things in his cause godly and constantly. If our Adversaries, that shall be our Judges, may have their purpose, we shall dispute one day, be condemned the next day, and suffer the third day. And yet is there no Law to condemn us (as far as I know) and so one of the Convocation-House said this Week to Doctor Welton. To whom Welton made this Answer, It forceth not (quoth he) for a Law, we have Communion to proceed with them; when they be dispatched let their Friends sue the Law.

Note, how the Papists proceed against all Order and Law.

Now howson a man may have such a Commission as my Lord Chancellor hand, you know. It is as hard to be obtained as an Indictment for Christ at Caiphas hand. Besides that the Bishops having the Queen so upon their sides, may do all things both without the advice, and also the knowledge of the rest of the Lords of the Temporality; who at this present have found out the mark that the Bishops shot at, and doubtless be not pleased with their doing. I pray you help, that our Brother Sanders and the rest in the Marshalsey may understand these things, and send me your Answer betime. Judas non dormit; nec scimus diem neque horam. An Exhortation to Patience, sent to his godly Wife Anne Hooper: whereby all the true Members of Christ may take comfort and courage to suffer Trouble and Affliction for the Profession of his holy Gospel.

Math. 2.8.
An effectual Letter of M. Hooper sent to his Wife.

Our Saviour Jesus Christ (dearly Beloved, and my godly Wife) in S. Matthews Gospel said to his Disciples, That it was necessary, Scandals should come: and that they could not be avoided, he perceived as well by the condition of those that should perish and be lost for ever in the World to come, as also by their Affliction that should be saved. For he saw the greatest part of the people should contemn and neglect whatsoever true Doctrine or Godly ways should be shewed unto them, or else receive and use it as they thought good to serve their pleasures, without any profit to their Souls at all, not caring whether they lived as they were commanded by Gods Word or not; but would think it sufficient to be counted to have the name of a Christian man, with such works and fruits of his Profession and Christianity, as his Fathers and Elders, after their custom and manner, esteem and take to be good Fruits and faithful Works, and will not try them by the Word of God at all. These men, by the just Judgment of God, be delivered unto the craft and subtilty of the Devil, that they may be kept by one scandalous Stumbling-block or other, that they never come unto Christ, who came to save those that were lost; as ye may see how God delivereth wicked men up unto their own Lusts, to do one mischief after another, careless, until they come into a reprobate mind, that forgetteth it himself cannot know what is expedient to be done, or to be left undone, because they close their eyes, and will not see the light of Gods Word offered unto them: and being thus blinded, they prefer their own Vanities before the truth of Gods Word. Where such corrupt Minds be, there is also corrupt election and choice of Gods honour:

so that the mind of Man taketh Falshood for Truth, Superstition for true Religion, Death for Life, Damnation for Salvation, Hell for Heaven, and persecution of Christs Members for Gods Service and Honour. And as these men wilfully and voluntarily reject the Word of God; even so God most justly delivereth them into the blindness of Mind and hardness of Heart, that they cannot understand, nor yet consent to any thing that God would have preached, and set forth to his glory, after his own Will and Word: wherefore they hate it mortally, and of all things most detest Gods holy Word. And as the Devil hath entred into their hearts, that they themselves cannot nor will not come to Christ, to be instructed by his holy Word: even so can they not abide any other man to be a Christian man, and to lead his life after the Word of God, but hate him, persecute him, rob him, imprison him, yea, and kill him, whether he be Man or Woman, if God suffer it. And so much are these wicked men blinded, that they pass off no Laws, whether it be Gods or Mans, but persecute such as never offended, yea, do evil to those that have prayed daily for them, and wish them Gods Grace.

Error taken for Truth, and Persecution for Gods Service.

John 8.9.

In their Pharaenical and blind fury they have no respect to Nature. For the Brother persecuteth the Brother, the Father the Son; and most dear Friends, in devilish slander and offence, are become most mortal Enemies. And no marvel; for when they have chosen sundry Masters, the one the Devil, the other God, the one shall agree with the other, as God and the Devil agree between themselves. For this cause (that the more part of the World doth use to serve the Devil under cloaked Hypocritise of Gods title) Christ said, It is expedient and necessary, that Scandals should come, and many means be devised to keep the little Babes of Christ from the heavenly Father. But Christ saith, We be unto him by whom the Offence cometh: Yet is there no remedy, Man being of such corruption and hatred towards God, but that the evil shall be deceived, and persecute the good; and the good shall understand the Truth, and suffer Persecution for it unto the Worlds end. For as he that was born after the flesh, persecuted in times past him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Therefore forso much as we live in this life amongst so many great perils and dangers, we must be well assured by Gods Word how to bear them, and how patiently to take them as they be sent to us from God.

No respect of Nature with the persecuting Adversaries.

Math. 2.8.

Gen. 2.2.
Gal. 4.

We must also assure our selves, that there is no other remedy for Christians in the time of trouble, than Christ himself hath appointed us. In S. Luke he giveth us this commandment, Ye shall possess your lives in patience, faith be. In the which words he giveth us both commandment what to do, and also great comfort and consolation in all Troubles. He sheweth what is to be done, and what is to be hoped for in troubles: and when troubles happen, he biddeth us be patient; and in no case violently nor seditiously to resist our Persecutors, because God hath such care and charge of us, that he will keep in the midst of all troubles the very hairs of our head, so that one of them shall not fall away without the will and pleasure of our heavenly Father. Whether the Hair therefore any on the head, or fall from the head, it is the will of the Father. And seeing he hath such care for the hairs of our head, how much more doth he care for our life if self? Wherefore let Gods Adversaries do what they list, whether they take life or take it not, they can do us no hurt: for their cruelty hath no further power than God permiteth them; and that which cometh unto us by the will of our heavenly Father can be no harm, no loss, neither destruction unto us, but rather gain, wealth, and felicity. For all troubles and adversity that chance to such as be of God, by the will of the heavenly Father, can be none other but gain and advantage.

Luke 2.1.
Patience in Troubles, only the Christian mans remedy.

Rom. 2.

That the Spirit of man may feel these Consolations, the giver of them the heavenly Father must be prayed unto for the merits of Christs Passion: for it is not the nature of man that can be contented, until it be regenerated and possessed with Gods Spirit, to bear patiently the troubles of the mind or of the body. When the mind and heart of a man seeth on every side sorrow and heaviness, and the worldly eye beholdeth nothing but such things as be troublous and wholly bent to rob the Poor of that he hath, and also to take from him his life: except the man weigh these brittle and uncertain treasures that be taken from him, with the riches of the life to come, and this Life of the Body, with the Life in Christs Blood, and so for the love and certainty of the Heavenly Joys contemn all things present, doubtless he shall never be able to bear the loss of good's, Life, or any other thing of this World.

Therefore S. Paul giveth a godly and necessary Lesson to all men in this short and transitory Life, and therein sheweth how a man may best bear the iniquities and troubles of this World; If ye be risen again with Christ (saith he) seek the things which are above, where Christ sitteth at the right Hand of God the Father. Wherefore, the Christian mans Faith must be always upon the Resurrection of Christ, when he is in trouble; and in that Glorious Resurrection he shall not only see continual and perpetual Joy and consolation, but also the Victory and Triumph over all Perfection, Trouble, Sin, Death, Hell and the Devil, and all other Tyrants and Persecutors of Christ and of Christs People, the teares and weeping of the faithfull dried up, their wounds healed, their Bodies made immortal in Joy, their Souls for ever praying the Lord, in conjunction and society everlasting with the blessed company of Gods elect in perpetual Joy. But the Words of Saint Paul in that place, if they be not marked, shall doo little profit to the reader or hearer, and give him no patience at all in this impatient and cruel World.

In this first part S. Paul commandeth us, to think or set our affections on things that are above. When he biddeth us seek the things that are above, he requireth that our minds never cease from prayer and study in Gods Word, until we see, know, and understand the vanities of this World, the shortness and misery of this Life, and the Treasures of the World to come, the immortality thereof, the Joys of that Life, and so never cease seeking, untill such time as we know certainly and be persuaded, what a blessed man he is, that seeketh the one and findeth it, and careth not for the other though he lose it; and in seeking, to have right Judgment between the Life present and the Life to come, we shall find how little the pains, imprisonment, slanders, lies, and death it self is in this World, in respect of pains everlasting, the prison infernal, and Dungeon of Hell, the sentence of Gods just Judgment, and everlasting Death.

When a man hath, by seeking the Word of God found out what the things above be: then must he (as S. Paul saith) set his affections upon them. And this commandment is more hard than the other. For mans knowledge many times seeth the best, and knoweth that there is a life to come, better than this Life present, (as you may see how daily men and women can praise and commend, yea, and wish for Heaven, and to be at rest there) yet they set not their affection upon it: they doe more affect and love indeed a trifle of nothing in this World that pleaseth their affection, than the Treasure of all Treasures in Heaven, which their own Judgment saith is better than all Worldly things. Wherefore we must set our affections upon the things that be above; that is to say, when any thing, worse than Heaven, upon the earth, offereth it self to be ours, if we will give our good wils to it, and love it in our hearts, then ought we to see by the Judgment of Gods Word, whether we may have the World without offence of God, and such things as be for this Worldly Life without his displeasure. If we cannot, S. Pauls commandment must take place, set your affections on things that are above. If the riches of this World may not be gotten nor kept by Gods Law, neither our lives be continued without the denial of his Honor, we must set our affection upon the Riches and Life that is above, and not upon things that be on the earth. Therefore this second commandment of Saint Paul requireth, that our minds Judge heavenly things to be better than things upon the earth, and the Life to come better than the Life present; so we should chuse them before other, and prefer them, and have such affection to the best, that in no case we set the worst before it, as the most part of the World doth and hath done, for they chuse the best and approve it, and yet follow the worst.

But these things (my godly Wife) require rather meditation, and prayer; than words or talk. They be easie to be spoken of, but not so easie to be used and practised. Wherefore seeing they be Gods gifts, and none of ours, to have as our own when we would, we must seek them at our Heavenly Fathers Hand, who seeth, and is privy how poor and wretched we be, and how naked, how spoiled, and destitute of all his blessed gifts we be by reason of sin. He did command therefore his Disciples, when he shewed them that they should take patiently the state of this present Life full of troubles and persecution, to pray that they might well escape those troubles that were to come, and be able to stand before the Son of man. When you find your self too much oppressed (as every man shall be sometimes with the fear of Gods Judgment) use the 77. Psalm that beginneth, I will cry unto God with my voice, and he shall hearken unto me. In which Psalm is both godly doctrine and great consolation unto the man or woman that is in anguish of mind.

Use also in such trouble the 88. Psalm, wherein is contained the prayer of a man, that was brought into extreme anguish and misery, and being vexed with adversaries and persecutions, saw nothing but Death and Hell. And although he felt in himself that he had not only man, but also God angry towards him: yet he by prayer humbly referred unto God, as the only port of consolation, and in the midst of his desperate state of trouble, put the hope of his salvation in him, whom he felt his enemy. Howbeit, no man of himself can do this but the spirit of God, that striketh the mans heart with fear, prayeth for the man stricken and feared, with unspeakable groanings. And when you feel your self or know any other oppressed after such sort, be glad; For after that God hath made you so know what you be of your self, he will doubtless shew you comfort, and declare unto you what you be in Christ his only Son; And use prayer often, for that is the means whereby God will be fought unto for his gifts.

These Psalms be for the purpose, when the mind can take no understanding, nor the heart any Joy of Gods promises: and therefore were the Psalms also made, 6.22.30.31.38. 69. from the which you shall learn both patience and consolation. Remember, that although your life (as all Christian mens be) be bid, and appeareth not what it is, yet it is safe (as S. Paul saith) with God in Christ: and when Christ shall appear, then shall our lives be made open with him in glory. But in the mean time with seeking and stirring our affections upon the things that he above, we must patiently suffer whatsoever God shall send unto us in this Mortal Life. Notwithstanding, it might fortune some would say, who is so perfect, that can let all things pass as they come, and have no care of them; suffer all things, and feel nothing, be tempted of the Devil, the World, and the Flesh, and be not troubled? Verily no man living. But this I say, that in the strength of Jesus Christ things that come may pass with care, for we be worldly, and yet are we not carried with them from Christ, for we be in him godly. We may suffer things, and feel them as Mortal men, yet bear them and overcome them as Christian men. We may be tempted of the Devil, the flesh, and the world: but yet although those things pinch, they doe not pierce, and although they work sin in us, yet in Christ no damnation to those that be grafted in him. Hereof may the Christian man learn both consolation and patience.

Consolation, in that he is compelled both in his Body and goods to feel pain and loss, and in the soul heaviness and anguish of mind: howbeit none of them shall separate him from the love that God beareth him in Christ. He may learn patience, so far as he as his enemies both of Body and Soul, and the pains also they vex us withal for the time, if they tarry with us as long as we live, yet when death cometh, they shall avoid, and give place to such joys as be prepared for us in Christ: for no pains of the world be perpetual, and whether they shall afflict us for all the time of our mortal life, we know not; for they be servants of God to go and come, as he commandeth them. But we must take heed we meddle not forcibly nor sedulously to put away the persecution appointed unto us by God, remember Carills saying, Possess your lives by your patience. And in this commandment God requireth of every man and Woman this patient obedience. He saith not, it is sufficient that other Holy Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles, Evangelists and Myself continued their lives in patience, and patient suffering the trouble of this World: but Christ lieth to every one of his People, By your own patience ye shall continue your life: not that man hath Patience in himself, but that he must have it for himself of God, the only giver of it, if he purpose to be a godly man. Now therefore as our Protection and Religion requireth patience outwardly, without resistance and force; so requireth it patience of the Mind, and not to be angry with God, although he use us, that be his own Creatures, as him lieth.

We may not also murmur against God, but say always, his judgments be right and just, and rejoyce that it pleaseth him by troubles to use us, as he used heretofore such as he most loved in this World, and have a singular care to this Commandment, Gaudete & exultate, Be glad and rejoyce; for he sheweth great cause why, Your reward (saith he) is great in Heaven. These Promises of him that is the Truth itself shall (by Gods Grace) work both Consolation and Patience in the afflicted Christian person. And when our Saviour Christ hath willed men in trouble to be content and patient, because God in the end of trouble in Christ hath ordained eternal Consolation; he useth also to take from us all shame and rebuke, as though it were not an honour to suffer for Christ, because the wicked World doth curse and abhor such poor troubled Christians. Wherefore Christ placeth all his honourably, and faith, Even so persecuted they the Prophets that were before you. We may also see with whom the Afflicted for Christs sake be esteemed by S. Paul to the Hebrews, where as the number of the blessed and glorious company of Saints appear now to our Faith in Heaven, in Joy: yet in the Letter, for the time of this life, in such pains and contentment as was never more. Let us therefore consider both them and all other things of the World since the Fall of Man, and we shall perceive nothing to come to perfection, but with such confusion and disorder to the eye of the World, as though things were rather lost for ever, than like to come to any perfection at all. For of godly men, who ever came to Heaven (no not Christ himself) until such time as the World had thought verily, that both he and all his had been clean destroyed and cast away: as the Wife man faith of the wicked People, We thought them to be fools, but they be in peace.

We may learn by things that nourish and maintain us, both Meat and Drink, what loathsomeness and (in manner) abhorring they come unto, before they work their perfection in us. From life they are brought to the fire, and clean altered from that they were when they were alive; from the Fire to the Trencher and Knife, and all to hacked; from the Trencher to the mouth, and as small ground as the Teeth can grind them; and from the Mouth into the Stomach, and there so boiled and digested before they nourish, that whosoever saw the same, would loath and abhor his own nourishment, before it come to his perfection.

Is it then any marvel if such Christians as God delighteth in, be so mangled and defaced in this World, which is the Kitchen and Mill to boil and grind the flesh of Gods People in, till they achieve their perfection in the World to come? And as a man looketh for the nutriment of his Meat when it is full digested, and not before: So must he look for his Salvation when he hath passed this troublesome World and not before. Raw flesh is not Meat wholsome for man: and unmortified Men and Women be not Creatures meet for God. Therefore Christ lieth, that his People must be broken, and all to be torn in the Mill of this world, and so shall they be most fine Meal unto the heavenly Father. And it shall be a Christian mans part and the duty of a mind replenished with the Spirit of God, to mark the order of God in all his things, how he dealeth with them, and how they suffer, and be content to let God do his will upon them, as S. Paul saith, They wait until the number of the Elect be fulfilled, and never be at rest, but look for the time when Gods People shall appear in Glory.

We must therefore patiently suffer, and willingly attend upon Gods doings, although they seem clean contrary, after our judgment, to our wealth and salvation: As Abraham did, when he was bid to offer his Son Isaac, in whom God promised the blessing and multiplying of his Seed. Joseph at the last came to that which God promised him, although in the mean time, after the judgment of the world, he was never like to be (as God said he should be) Lord over his Brethren. When Christ would make the Blind man to see, he put Clay upon his Eyes, which after the judgment of Man, was a means rather to make him double blind, than to give him his sight; but he obeyed, and knew that God could work his desire, what means soever he used contrary to mans Reason: and as touching this World, he useth all his after the same sort. If any smart, his People be the first, if any suffer shame they begin; if any be subject to slander, it is those that he loveth; so that he sheweth no face or favour, nor love almost in this world outwardly to them, but layeth Clay upon their fore Eyes that be sorrowful: yet the Patient man seeth (as S. Paul saith) Life hid under these miseries and adversities, and Sight under foul Clay; and in the mean time he hath the testimony of a good Conscience; and believeth Gods Promises to be his Consolation in the world to come, which is more worthy unto him, than all the world is worth besides: and blessed is that man in whom Gods Spirit beareth record that he is the Son of God, whatsoever troubles he suffer in this troublesome world.

And to judge things indifferently (my good Wife) the Troubles be not yet generally, as they were in our good Fathers time, soon after the Death and Resurrection of our Saviour Jesus Christ, whereof he spake in S. Matthew. Of the which place you and I have taken many times great consolation, and especially of the latter part of the Chapter, wherein is contained the last Day and end of all troubles (I doubt not) both for you and me, and for such as love the coming of our Saviour Christ to Judgment. Remember therefore that place, and mark it again, and ye shall in this time see this great Consolation, and also learn much patience. Was there ever such Troubles, as Christ threatened upon Jerusalem? was there since the beginning of the world such affliction? who was then best at ease? The Apostles that suffered in body Persecution, and gathered of it ease and quietness in the Promises of God. And no marvel, for Christ saith, Lift up your heads, for your Redemption is at hand, that is to say, Your eternal Rest approacheth and draweth near. The World is stark blind, and more foolish than Foolishness is itself, and so be the People of the World. For when God saith, trouble shall come, they will have ease. And when God saith, Be merry and rejoyce in trouble, we lament and mourn, as which never though we were Cast-away. But this our flesh which is never merry with Virtue, nor sorry with Vice; never laugheth with Grace, nor ever weepeth with Sin) holdeth fast with the World, and letteth God slip. But (my dearly beloved Wife) you know how to perceive and to beware of the vanity and crafts of the Devil well enough in Christ. And that ye may the better have patience in the Spirit of God, read again the 24. Chapter of S. Matthew, and mark what difference is between the destruction of Jerusalem, and the destruction of the whole World, and you shall see, that then here were left alive many Offenders to repent: but at the later Day there shall be absolute judgment, and Sentence (never to be revoked) of Eternal life and Eternal death upon all men; and yet towards the end of the World we have nothing so much extremity as they had then, but even as we be able to bear. So doth the merciful Father lay upon us now Imprisonment, (and I suppose for my part shortly Death) now spoil of Goods, loss of Friends, and the greatest loss of all, the knowledge of Gods Word. Gods will be done. I with in Christ Jesus our only Mediator and Saviour, your Constancy and Consolation, that you may live for ever and ever, whereof in Christ I doubt not; to whom, for his most blessed and painful Passion, I commit you. Amen.

I thank you, dear Sister, for your most loving remembrance: and although I cannot recompense the same, yet do I with all my heart, that God would do it, requiring you not to forget your duty towards God in these peillous days, in the which the Lord will try us. I trust you do increase by reading of the Scriptures, the knowledge you have of God, and that you diligently apply your self to follow the same: for the Knowledge helpeth not, except the Life be according therunto. Further, I do heartily pray you, to consider the state of your Widowhood, and if God shall put in your mind to change it, remember the saying of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 7. It is lawfull for the Widow or Maiden to marry to whom they list, so it be in the Lord; that is to say, to such an one as is of Christs Religion. Dearly beloved in Christ, remember these words, for you shall find thereby great joy and comfort, if you change your state. Whereof I will, when I have better leisure (as now I have none at all) further advertise you. In the mean time I commend you to God, and the guiding of his good Spirit, who stablish and confirm you in all well-doing, and keep you blameless to the day of the Lord. Watch and pray, for this day is at hand.

To all my dear Brethren, my Relievers and Helpers in the City of London.

Another Letter of M. Hooper to his Friends in London.

THe Grace of God be with you, Amen. I have received from you (dearly Beloved in our Saviour Jesus Christ) by the hands of my Servant William Downson, your liberality, for the which I most heartily thank you, and I praise God highly in you for you, who hath moved your hearts to shew this kindness towards me, praying him to preserve you from all famine, scarcity, and lack of the Truth of his Word, which is the lively food of your Souls, as you preserve my Body from hunger, and other necessities which should happen unto me; were it not cared for by the benevolence and charity of godly People. Such as have taken all worldly Goods and Lands from me, and spoiled me of all that I had, have imprisoned my Body, and appointed not one half-penny to feed or relieve me: withal: but I do forgive them and pray for them daily in my poor Prayer unto God, and from my heart I wish their Salvation, and quietly and patiently bear their Injuries, wishing no farther extremity to be used towards us. Yet if the contrary seem best unto our Heavenly Father, I have made my reckoning, and fully resolved my self to suffer the uttermost that they are able to do against me, yea, Death it self, by the aid of Christ Jesus, who died the most vile death of the Cross for us Wretches and miserable Sinners. But of this I am assured, that the wicked World, with all his force and power, shall not touch one of the hairs of our Heads without leave and licence of our heavenly Father, whose will be done in all things. If he will life, Life be it: if he will death, Death be it. Only we pray, that our wills may be subject unto his will, and then although both we and all the World see none other thing but death, yet if he think life best, we shall not die, no, although the Sword be drawn out over our heads: as Abraham thought to kill his Son Isaac, yet when God perceived that Abraham had surrendered his will to Gods will, and was content to kill his Son, God then saved his Son.

Dearly beloved, if we be contented to obey Gods will, and for his commandments sake to surrender our Goods and our Lives to be at his pleasure, it maketh no matter whether we keep Goods and Life, or lose them. Nothing can hurt us that is taken from us for Gods cause, nor can any thing at length do us good, that is preserved contrary unto Gods Commandment. Let us wholly suffer God to use us and ours after his holy will, and beware we neither use nor govern our selves contrary to his will by our own wisdom: for if we do, our wisdom will at length prove foolishness. It is kept to no good purpose, that we keep contrary unto his Commandments. It can by no means be taken from us, that he would should tarry with us. He is no good Christian that ruleth himself and his, as worldly means serveth: for he that so doth shall have as many changes as chaneth in the World. To day with the World he shall like and praise the Truth of God, to morrow as the World will, so will he like and praise the falsehood of man; to day with Christ, and to morrow with Antichrist. Wherefore, dear Brethren, as touching your behaviour towards God, use both your inward Spirits and your outward Bodies, your inward and your outward Man (I say) not after the manners of Men, but after the infallible Word of God.

Refrain from Evil in both; and glorifie your heavenly Father in both. For if ye think ye can inwardly in the heart serve him, and yet outwardly serve with the world in external Service the thing that is not God, ye deceive your selves; for both the Body and the Soul must together concur in the honour of God, as S. Paul plainly teacheth, 1 Cor. 6. For if an honest wife be bound to give both Heart and Body to faith and service in Marriage, and if an honest Wifes Faith in the heart cannot stand with an whorish or defiled Body outwardly; much less can the true Faith of a Christian, in the service of Christianity, stand with the bodily service of external Idolatry: for the mystery of Marriage is not so honourable between Man and Wife, as it is between Christ and every Christian man, as S. Paul saith.

Therefore (dear Brethren) pray to the heavenly Father, that as he spared not the Soul nor the Body of his dearly Beloved Son, but applied both of them with extreme pain, to work our Salvation both of Body and Soul; so he will give us all grace to apply our Bodies and Souls to be Servants unto him: for doubtless he requirith as well the one as the other, and cannot be discontented with the one and well pleased with the other. Either he hateth both, or loveth both; he divideth not his love to one, and his hatred to the other. Let not us therefore, good Brethren, divide our selves, and say our Souls serve him, whatsoever our Bodies do to the contrary for civil Order and Policy.

But (alas) I know, by my self, what troubleth you, that is, the great danger of the World, that will revenge (ye think) your Service to God with Sword and Fire, with loss of Goods and Lands. But (dear Brethren) weigh of the other side, that your Enemies and Gods Enemies shall not do so much as they would, but as much as God shall suffer them, who can trap them in their own counsels, and destroy them in the midst of their furies. Remember ye be the Workmen of the Lord, and called into his Vineyard, there to labour till evening-tide, that you may receive your penny, which is more worth than all the Kingdoms of the Earth. But he that calleth us into his Vineyard, hath not told us how fore and how fervently the Sun shall trouble us in our labour: but hath bid us labour, and commit the bitterness thereof unto him; who can and will so moderate all Afflictions, that no man shall have more laid upon him, than in Christ he shall be able to bear. Unto whose merciful tuition and defence I commend both your Souls and Bodies. Septemb. 2. Anno 1554.

To a Merchant of London, by whose means he had received much Comfort in his great Necessity in the Fleet.

GRACE, Mercy, and Peace in Christ Jesus our Lord. I thank God and you for the great help and consolation I have received in the time of adversity by your charitable means; but most rejoyce that you be not altered from Truth, although Falshood cruelly seeketh to disdain her. Judge not, my Brother, Truth by outward appearance; for Truth now worse appeareth, and more vilely is rejected than Falshood. Leave the outward shew, and see by the Word of God what Truth is, and accept Truth, and dislike her not, though man call her Falshood. As it is now, so it hath been heretofore, the Truth rejected and Falshood received. Such as have professed Truth, for Truth have smarted, and the friends of Falshood laughed them to scorn. The trial of both hath been by contrary success: the one having the commendation of Truth by man, but the condemnation of Falshood by God, flourishing for a time, with endless destruction; the other afflicted a little season, but ending with immortal Joys. Wherefore, dear Brother, ask and demand demand of your Book, the Testament of Iesus Christ, in those woful and wretched days what you should think, and what you should stay upon for a certain Truth, and whatsoever you hear taught, try it by your Book, whether it be true or false. The days be dangerous and full of peril, not only for the World and worldly things, but for Heaven and heavenly things. It is a trouble to lose the Treasure of this life, but yet a very pain, if it be kept with the offence of God. Cry, call, pray, and in Christ daily require help, succour, mercy, wisdom, grace and defence, that the wickedness of this World prevail not against us. We began well, God preserve us until the end. I would write more often unto you, but I do perceive you be at so much Charges with me, that I fear you would think when I write, I Crave. The grace of God, and the comfort of his Holy Spirit be with you, Amen.

I am very glad to hear of your health, and do thank you for your loving Token. But I am a great deal more glad to hear how Christianly you avoid Idolatry, and prepare your self to suffer the extremity of the World, rather than to endanger your self to God. You do as you ought to do in this behalf, and in suffering of transitory Pains, you shall avoid permanent Torments in the World to come. Use your life, and keep it with as much quietness as you can, so that you offend not God. The ease that cometh of his displeasure, turneth at length to unspeakable Pains; and the gains of the World, with the loss of his Favour, is beggary and wretchedness. Reason is to be amended in this Cause of Religion: For it will chuse and follow an Error with the Multitude, if it may be allowed, rather than turn to Faith and follow the Truth with the People of God. Moses found the same fault in himself, and did amend it, chusing rather to be afflicted with the People of God, than to use the liberty of the Kings Daughter, that accounted him as her Son. Pray for Contentation and Peace, of the Spirit, and rejoice in such Troubles as shall happen to you for the Truths sake: for in that part Christ saith, you be happy. Pray also for me, I pray you, that I may do in all things the will of our heavenly Father: so whose tuition and defence I commend you.

The Grace of God be with you, Amen. I thank you for your loving and gentle friendship at all times, praying to God to shew unto you such favours, that whatsoever trouble and adversity happen, ye go not back from him. These days be dangerous and full of peril; but yet let us comfort our selves in calling to remembrance the days of our Forefathers, upon whom the Lord sent such troubles, that many hundreds, yea, many thousands died for the Testimony of Iesus Christ, both Men and Women, suffering with patience and constancy as much Cruelty as Tyrants could devise, and so departed out of this miserable World to the Bliss everlasting, whereas now they remain for ever, looking always for the end of this sinful World, when they shall receive their Bodies again in Immortality, and see the number of the Blest associated with them in full and consummate Joy: and as various Men suffering Martyrdom, and tarrying a little while in this World with pain, by and by, rested in Joy everlasting; and as their pains ended their sorrows, and began ease, so did their constancy and steadfastness animate and confirm all good People in the Truth, and gave them encouragement and lust to suffer the like, rather than to fall with the World to consent unto wickedness and Idolatry. Wherefore, my dear Friends, seeing God of his part hath illuminated you with the same gift and knowledge of true Faith, as even the Apostles and Evan-gels, and all Martyrs suffer a most cruel death; thank him for his grace in knowledge, and pray unto him for strength and perseverance, that through your own faith ye be not ashamed or afraid to confess it. Let ye be in the Truth and the gates of Hell shall never prevail against it, nor Antichrist with all his Imps can prove it to be false. They may kill and persecute, but never overcome. Be of good comfort, and fear God more than man. This life is short and miserable; happy be they that can point it to the glory of God. Pray for me, as I do for you, and commend me to all good Men and Women. Decemb. 22. Anno 1554.

Your Brother in Christ, John Hooper.

To my dearly Beloved Sister in the Lord, Mrs. Anne Warcop.

The Grace of God be with you, Amen. I thank you for your loving Token. I pray you bethink not your self too much. It were meet for me rather to bear a pain, than to be a hindrance to many. I did rejoice at the coming of this Bearer, to understand of your constancy, and how that you be fully resolved, by Gods Grace, rather to suffer extremity than to go from the Truth of God which you have professed. He that gave you Grace to be in so inflexible a Truth, will follow you in the same unto the end. But, my loving Sister, as you be travelling this perilous Journey, take this Letter with you, practised by wise men; whereas you may find in the second of S. Matthews Gospel. Such a Traveller to find Christ, followed only the Star, and as long as they saw it, they were assured they were in the right way, and had great mirth in their Journey. But when they entered into Jerusalem, whereas the Star led them not thither, but unto Bethel, and there asked the Citizens the Way, that the Star shewed before: as long as they tarried in Jerusalem, and would be instructed where Christ was born; they were not only ignorant of Bethel, but also lost the sight of the Star that led them before. Whereof we learn in any case, whilst we be going in this life to seek Christ that is above, to beware that we lose not the Star of Gods Word, that only is the mark that sheweth us where Christ is, and which way we may come unto him. But as Jerusalem stood in the way, and was an impediment to these Wise men: so doth the Synagogue of Antichrist, that beareth the name of Jerusalem, which by interpretation is called the Vision of Peace, and amongst the People now is called the Catholic Church, stand in the way that Pilgrims must go by through this world to Bethel, the House of purity and plentifulness, and is an impediment to all Christian Travellers; yea, and except the more grace of God be, will keep the Pilgrims still in her, that they shall not come where Christ is at all. And to stay them indeed, they take away the Star of Light, which is Gods Word, that it cannot be seen: as you may see how the Celestial Star was hid from the Wise men, when they asked of the Pharisees at Jerusalem, where Christ was born. Ye may see what great dangers happened unto these Wise men, whilst they were learning of Liars, where Christ was. First, they were out of their way, and next they lost their Guide and Conductor, the heavenly Star. Christ is mounted on his Throne in Heaven, and there we seek him (as we say), and let us go thitherward by the Star of his Word, beware we happen not to come into Jerusalem, the Church of Men, and ask the way for him. If we do, we go out of the way, and lose all our Conductor and Guide that only leadeth us thither.

The Poets write in Fables, that Jason, when he sought for the Golden Fleece, was preserved by the Dragon in the Isle of Colchus, was preserved by the Medicines of Medea, and so won the Golden Fleece. And they write also that Platon, whom they say to be the Son and Heir of the Light, Jupiter, would needs upon a day have the conclusion of the Sun round about the World; but, as they kindled, he missed or the accustomed course: whereupon when he went to light, he burned Heaven; and when he went to light, he burned the Earth and the Water. These prophesies hit us doth us, that be Christian men. For against the pillar of the Dragon used only the Medicine of Medea. What a shame is it for a Christian man against the pillar of the Devil, Herein and Sin, to use any other remedy than Christ and his Word? Pharaoh, for lack of Knowledge, was afraid of every Sign of the Zodiac, that the Sun passed by: wherefore he went now too low, and now too high, and at length fell down and drowned himself in the Sea. Christian men for lack of knowledge, and for fear of such dangers as Christian men must needs pass by, go clean out of order, and at length fall into the Pit of Hell.

Sister, take heed; you shall in your Journey towards Heaven meet with many a monstrous Beast: have salve of Gods Word therefore ready. You shall meet Husband, Children, Lovers and Friends, that shall if God be not with them (as God be praised he is, I would it were with all other alike) be very lets and impediments to your purpose. You shall meet with slander and contempt of the World, and be accounted ungracious and ungodly; you shall hear and meet with cruel Tyranny to do you all extremities; you shall now and then see the troubles of your own Conscience, and feel your own weakness; you shall hear that you be cursed by the Sentence of the Catholick Church, with such like Terrors: but pray to God, and follow the Star of his Word, and you shall arrive at the Port of eternal Salvation, by the Merits only of Jesus Christ: to whom I commend you and all yours most heartily.

¶ Unto these Letters of M. Hooper heretofore recited, we thought not inconvenient to annex also another certain Epistle, not of M. Hooper, but written to him by a famous Learned man Henry Bullinger, chief Superintendent in the City of Zurich. Of whose singular love and tender affection toward M. Hooper ye heard before in the beginning of M. Hooper's Life discoursed. Now how loving he writeth unto him, ye shall hear by this present Letter, as followeth.

To the most Reverend Father, Mr. John Hooper, Bishop of Worcester and Gloucester, and now Prisoner for the Gospel of Jesus Christ, my fellow-Elder, and most dear Brother in England.

A Letter of M. Bullinger to M. Hooper, translated out of Latin into English.

The Heavenly Father grant unto you, and to all those which are in Bonds and Captivity for his Names sake, Grace and Peace through Jesus Christ our Lord, with wisdom, patience, and fortitude of the Holy Ghost.

I have received from you two Letters, my most dear Brother, the former in the Month of September of the year past, the later in the Month of May of this present year, both written out of Prison. But I doubting lest I should make Answer to you in vain, whilst I feared that my Letters should never come into your hands, or else increase and double your Sorrow, did refrain from the duty of writing. In the which thing I doubt not but you will have me excused, especially seeing you did not vouchsafe, no not once in a whole year, to answer to my whole Libels rather than Letters, whereas I continued still notwithstanding in writing unto you: as also at this present, after I heard you were cast in Prison, I did not refrain from continual Prayer, beseeching our heavenly Father, through our only Mediator Jesus Christ, to grant unto you and to your fellow-Prisoners Faith and Constancy unto the end. Now is that thing happened unto you (my Brother) the which we did oftentimes prophecy unto our selves, at your being with us, should come to pass, especially when we did talk of the power of Antichrist, and of his felicity and victories. For you know the saying of Daniel, His power shall be mighty, but not in his strength, and he shall wonderfully destroy and make havock of all things, and shall prosper and practice, and he shall destroy the mighty and the holy People after his own will. You know what the Lord warned us of before-hand by Matthew, in the 10. Chapter, by John in the 15. Chapter, and the 16. and also what that chosen Vessel S. Paul hath written in the second of Timothy and the third Chapter. Wherefore I do nothing doubt (by Gods Grace) of your Faith and Patience, whilst I know that those things which you suffer are not I asked for, or come by chance; but that you suffer them in the best trust, and most holy quarrel: Anno 1555. for what can be more true and holy than our Doctrine, which the Papists, those worshippers of Antichrist, do persecute? All things touching Salvation we attribute unto Christ alone, and to his holy Institutions, as we have been taught of him and of his Disciples: but they would have even the same things to be communicated as well to their Antichrist, and to his Institutions. Such we ought no less to withstand than we read that Eliaz withstanded the Baalites. For if Jesus be Christ, then let them know, that he is the fulness of his Church, and that perfectly: but if Antichrist be King and Priest, then let them exhibit unto him that honour. How long do they halt on both sides? Can they give unto us any one that is better than Christ? or who shall be equal with Christ, that may be compared with him, except it be he whom the Apostle calleth the Adversary? But if Christ be sufficient for his Church, what needeth this patching and piecing? But I know well enough, I need not to use these Disputations with you which are sincerely taught, and have taken root in Christ, being persuaded that you have all things in him, and that we in him are made perfect.

Go forwards therefore constantly to confess Christ, and to despise Antichrist, being mindful of this most holy and most true saying of our Lord Jesus Christ: He that overcometh shall possess all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son: but the fearful, and the unbelieving, and the murmurers, and whomongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars, shall have their part in the Lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death. The first Death is soon overcome, although a Man must burn for the Lords sake: for they say well that do affirm this our Fire to be scarcely a shadow of that which is prepared for Unbelievers, and them that fall from the Truth. Moreover, the Lord granteth unto us, that we may easily overcome by his power the first Death, the which he himself did taste and overcome; promising withal such joys as never shall have end, unspeakable, and passing all understanding, the which we shall possess so soon as ever we do depart hence. For to again, faith the Angel of the Lord; If any man worship the Beast and his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or on his hand, the same shall drink of the wrath of God; yea, of the wine which is poured into the Cup of his wrath, and he shall be tormented in fire and brimstone before the holy Angels, and before the Lamb: and the smoke of their Torment shall ascend evermore, and they shall have no rest day nor night which worship the Beast and his Image, and who have received the print of his Name. Here is the patience of Saints; here are they that keep the Commandments of God, and the Faith of Jesus. To this he addeth by and by; I heard a voice saying to me, write, Blessed be the Dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth, or speedily, they be blessed, John 5. even so saith the Spirit; for they rest from their labours, but their works follow them: for our labour shall not be fruitless or in vain.

Therefore seeing you have such a large Promise, be strong in the Lord, fight a good fight, be faithful to the Lord unto the end: consider that Christ the Son of God is your Captain, and fighteth for you, and that all the Prophets, Apostles and Martyrs, are your fellow Soldiers. They that persecute and trouble us, are Men, sinful and mortal, whose favour a wise Man would not buy with the value of a Farthing: and besides, that our Life is frail, short, brittle and transitory. Happy are we, if we depart in the Lord, who grant unto you, and to all your fellow Prisoners, Faith and Constancy. Commend me to the most Reverend Fathers and holy Confessors of Christ, Dr. Cranmer Bishop of Canterbury, Dr. Ridley Bishop of London, and the good Old Father Dr. Latimer. Them and all the rest of the Prisoners with you for the Lords Cause, salute in my name, and in the name of all my fellow Ministers, the which do speak unto you the Grace of God, and constancy in the Truth.

Concerning the state of our Church, it remaineth even as it was when you departed from us into your Country. God grant we may be thankful to him, and that we do not only profess the Faith with words, but also express the same effectually with good works, to the praise of

The History of Doctor Rowland Taylor, which suffered for the truth of Gods Word, under the Tyranny of the Roman Bishop, Anno 1555. The 9. day of February

Hadley Town commenced

The Bishop.

The Town of Hadley was one of the first that received the Word of God in all England, at the preaching of Master Thomas Bilney: by whose industry the Gospel of Christ had such gracious success, and took such root there, that a great number in that Parish became exceeding well learned in the Holy Scriptures, as well Women as men, so that a man might have found among them many, that had often read the whole Bible through, and that could have said a great sort of S. Pauls Epistles by heart, and very well and readily have given a goodly learned sentence in any matter of controversy. Their Children and Servants were also brought up and trained so diligently in the right knowledge of Gods Word, that the whole Town seemed rather an University of the learned, than a Town of Cloth-making or labouring People. And that most isto be commended, they were for the more part faithful followers of Gods Word in their living.

D. Taylor a Doctor in both laws, and a Divine

In this Town was Doctor Rowland Taylor, Doctor in both the Civil and Canon Laws, and a right perfect Divine, Parson. Who at his first entering into his Benefice, did not, as the common sort of Beneficed men do, let out his Benefice to a Farmer, that shall gather up the Profits, and sit in an ignorant unlearned priest to serve the Cure, and so they have the fleece, little or nothing care for feeding the flock: But contrariwise, he forsook Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Cramer, with whom he before was in Household, and made his personal abode and dwelling in Hadley among the People committed to his charge. Where he as a good Shepherd, abiding and dwelling among his Sheep, gave himself wholly to the study of Holy Scriptures, most faithfully endeavouring himself to fulfill that Charge, which the Lord gave unto Peter saying; Peter lovest thou me? Feed my Lambs, Feed my Sheep, Feed my sheep. This love of Christ wrought in him, that no Sunday nor Holy-day passed, nor other time when he might get the People together, but he preached to them the Word of God, the Doctrine of his salvation.

Nor only was his Word a preaching unto them but all his life and conversation was an example of unfeigned Christian life and true holiness. He was void of all pride, humble and meek, as any Child: so that none were so poor but they might boldly, as unto their Father, resort unto him, neither was his Lowliness childish or fearful; but as occasion time and place required, he would be stout in rebuking the fustill and evil Doers, so that none was so rich but he would tell him plainly his fault, with such earnest and grave rebukes as became a good Catechist and Pastor. He was a man very mild, void of all rancour, grudge or evil will, ready to do good to all men, readily forgiving his enemies, and never fought to do evil to any.

To the poor that were blind, lame, sick, bedrid, or Feeble which had many Children, he was a very Father, a careful Patron, and diligent provider; inasmuch that he caused the Parishioners to make a general provision for them: and he himself (beside the continual relief that they always found at his House) gave an honest portion yearly to the common almshouse. His Wife also an honest discreet, and sober Matron, and his Children well nurtured, brought up in the fear of God and good learning.

To conclude, he was a right and lively image or pattern of all those virtuous qualities defcribed by S. Paul in a true Bishop, a good salt of the earth, favourably biting the corrupt manners of evil men, a light in Gods House set upon a Candlestick for all good men to imitate and follow.

Thus continued this good Shepherd among his flock, governing and leading them thorow the wilderness of this wicked World, all the days of the most innocent and Holy King of blessed memory, Edward the sixth. But after it pleased God to take King Edward from this vale of misery unto his most blessed rest, the Papists, who ever fumbled and dissembled, both with King Henry the eighth, and King Edward his Son, now seeing the time convenient for their purpose uttered their false hypocricy, openly refusing all good reformation made by the said two most godly Kings: and contrary to that they had all these two Kings days preached, taught, written and sworn, they violently overthrew the true Doctrine of the Gospel, and persecuted with sword and fire all those that would not agree to receive again the Roman Bishop as Supreme Head of the Universal Church, and allow all the Errors, Superstitions, and Idolatries, that before by Gods Word were disproved and justly condemned, as though now they were good Doctrine, virtuous, and true Religion.

In the beginning of this rage of Antichrist, a certain petty Gentleman after the sort of a Lawyer, called Foster, yet and John Clerk of Hadley, who were two notorious Papists, being a Steward and Keeper of Courts, a man of no great skill, but a bitter persecutor in those days, with one John Clerk of Hadley, which Foster had ever been a secret favourer of all Romish Idolatry, conspired with the said Clerk to bring in the Pope and his maumetrie again into Hadley Church. For as yet D. Taylor, as a good Shepherd, had retained and kept in his Church the godly Church Service and Reformation made by K. Edward, and most faithfully and earnestly preached against the Papish corruptions, which had infected the whole Country round about.

Therefore the foresaid Foster and Clerk hired one John Avert, Parson of Aldam, a very money Mammonist, a blind leader of the blind, a Papish Idolater, and an open Advouterer and Whoremonger, a very fit Minister for their purpose to come to Hadley, and there to give the onset to begin again the Papish Mass.

To this purpose they buided up with all hast possible the Altar, intending to bring in their Mass again, about the Palm Monday. But this their device took none effect: for in the night the Altar was beaten down. Wherefore they built it up again the second time, and laid diligent watch, lest any should again break it down.

On the day following came Foster and John Clerk, bringing with them their Papish Sacrificers, who brought with him all his implements and garments to play his Papish pageant, whom they and their men guarded with swords and bucklers, lest any man should disturb him in his Missal Sacrifice.

When Doctor Taylor, who (according to his custom) sat at his book studying the Word of God, heard the bells ring, he arose and went into the Church, supposing something had been there to be done, according to his Pastoral office: and coming to the Church, he found the Church Doors shut and fast barred, leaving the Chancel door, which was only latched. Where he entering in, and coming in the Chancel, saw a Papish Sacrificer in his ro us, with a broad new shaven Crown, ready to begin his Popish sacrifice, beset round about with drawn swords and bucklers, least any man should approach to disturb him.

Then said Doctor Taylor, Thou Divil, who made thee so bold to enter into this Church of Christ to prophane and defile it with this abominable Idolatry? With that start up Fister, and with an irefull and furious countenance said to Doctor Taylor, Thou Traitor, what dost thou here, to let and disturb the Queens proceedings? Doctor Taylor answered, I am no Traitor, but I am the Shepherd that God my Lord Christ hath appointed to feed this his flock: wherefore I have good Authority to be here; and I command thee thou Popish Wolf, in the Name of God to avoid hence, and not to presume here with such Popish Idolatry to poison Christs flock

Then said Foster, Wilt thou traitorously, Heretick, make a commotion, and resist violently the Queens proceedings?

D. Taylor answered, I make no commotion, but it is you Papists that make commotions and Tumults. I resist only with Gods Word against your Popish Idolatries, which are against Gods Word, the Queens honour, and tend to the utter subversion of this Realm of England. And further, thou dost against the law, which commandeth, that no Mass be said but at a consecrate Altar.

When the Parson of Aldam heard that, he began to shrink back, and would have left his saying of Mass: then start up John Clerk, and said, Master Averb, be not afraid, you have a superlatore, Goe forth with your business man.

Then Foster, with his armed men, took D. Taylor, and led him with strong hand out of the Church, and the Popish Prelate proceeded in his Romish Idolatry. D. Taylors Wife, who followed her Husband into the Church, when she saw her Husband thus violently thrust out of his Church, she kneeled down and held up her hands, and with a loud voice said; I beseech God the righteous Judge to avenge this injury, that this Popish Idolater to this day doth to the Blood of Christ. Then they thrust her out of the Church also, and shut the Doors; for they feared that the People would have rent their Sacrifice in pieces. Notwithstanding one or two threw in great stones at the Windows, and mislaid very little the Popish Masser.

Thus you see; how without consent of the People the Popish Mass was again set up with battell array, with swords and bucklers, with violence and Tyranny: which practice the Papists have ever yet used. As for reason, law, or Scripture, they have none on their part. Therefore they are the fame that say; The law of unrighteousness is our strength: Come, let us oppress the righteous without any fear, &c.

Within a day or two after, with all hast possible, this Foster and Clerk made a complaint of D. Taylor, by a letter written to Ste. Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, and L. Chancellor.

When the Bishop heard this, he sent a letter missive to D. Taylor, commanding him within certain days to come and to appear before him upon his allegiance, to answer such complaints as were made against him.

When Doctor Taylors friends heard of this they were exceeding forry and agrieved in mind: which when foreseeing to what end the same matter would come, seeing also all Truth and Justice were trodden under foot, and faithhood with cruel Tyranny were set aloft and ruled all the whole rout: his friends, I say, came to him and earnestly counselled him to depart and fly, alledging and declaring unto him, that he could neither be indifferently heard to speak his confidence and mind, nor yet look for Justice or favor at the said Chancellors hands, who, as it was well known, was most fierce and cruel; but must needs (if he went up to him) wait for imprisonment and cruel death at his hands.

Then said D. Taylor to his friends, Dear friends, I must heartily thank you, for that you have so tenderly care over me. And although I know that there is neither Justice nor Truth to be looked for at my Adversaries hands, I will not be afraid of imprisonment and cruel death: yet know I my cause to be so good and righteous, and the truth so strong upon my side, that I will by Gods grace go and appear before them, and to their beards resist their false doing.

Then said his friends, Master Doctor, we think it not best so to do. You have sufficiently done your duty, and refuted the truth both by your godly Sermons, and also in resisting the Parson of Aldam, with other that came hither to bring again the Popish Mass. And so much as our Saviour Christ willett and biddeth us, that when thy persecute us in one City, we should fly into another: we think, in flying at this time ye should do best, keeping your self against another time, when the Church shall have great need of such diligent Teachers, and godly Pastors.

Oh (quoth D. Taylor) what will ye have me to do? I am old, and have already lived too long to see these terrible and most wicked days. Fly you, and do as your conscience leadeth you; I am fully determined, with Gods grace, I to go to the Bishop, and to his beard to tell him refuteth to that he doth naught. God shall well hereafter raise up Teachers of his People, which shall with much more diligence and fruit teach them, than I have done. For God will not forsake his Church though now for a time he trieth and correcteth us, and not without a just cause.

As for me, I believe before God, I shall never be able to do God so good service, as I may do now; nor I shall ever have so glorious a calling as I now have, nor so great mercy of God profered me, as is now at this present. For what Christian man would not gladly dye against the Pope and his Adherents? I know that the Papacy is the Kingdom of Antichrist, altogether full of Lies, altogether full of falsehood, that all their Doctrin, even from Christs Cross be my speech, and Saint Nicholas unto the end of their Apocalypse, is nothing but Idolatry, Superstition, Errors, Hypochrisie and Lies.

Wherefore I beseech you, and all other my friends, to pray for me, and I doubt not but God will give me strength and his Holy Spirit, that all mine Adversaries shall have shame of their doings.

When his friends saw him so constant, and fully determined to go, they with weeping eyes commended him unto God, and he within a day or two prepared himself to his Journey, leaving his Cure with a godly old Priest, named Sir Richard Tooman, who afterwards for Gods Truth was burnt at Norwich.

There was also in Hadley one Alcocke, a very godly man, well learned in the Holy Scriptures, who after Sir Rich Tooman was driven away) used daily to read a Chapter, and to say the English Litany in Hadley Church. But him they fetcht up to London, and cast him in prison in Newgate; where after a years imprisonment he died.

But let us return to Doctor Taylor again, who being accompanied with a servant of his own, named John Hull, took his Journey towards London. By the way, this John Hull laboured to Counsel and persuade him very earnestly to fly, and not come to the Bishop, and profered himself to go with him to serve him, and in all perils to venture his life for him, and with him.

But in no wise would Doctor Taylor consent or agree therunto, but said, Oh John, shall I give place to thy counsel and Worldly perswasion, and I leave my flock in this danger? Remember the good Shepherd Christ, which not alone fed his flock, but also died for his flock. Him must I follow, and with Gods grace will do.

Therefore good John pray for me and if thou seekest me weak at any time, comfort me, and discourage me not in this my godly enterprise and purpose. Thus they came up to London, and shortly after D. Taylor presented himself to the Bishop of Winchester Steven Gardiner, then Lord Chancellor of England.

For this hath been one great abuse in England these many years that such offices as have been of most importance and weight, have commonly been committed to Bishops and other spiritual men, whereby 3 devilish mischiefes and inconveniences have hapned in this Realm, to the great dishonour of God, and utter neglecting of the flock of Christ; the which there be these.

First, they have had small leisure to attend to their Pastoral Cures, which thereby have been utterly neglected and undone.

Secondly, it hath also putt up many Bishops and other spiritual persons into such haughtines and pride, that they have thought no Noble man in the Realm worthy to be their equal and fellow.

Thirdly, where they by this means knew the very secrets of Princes, they being in such high offices, have caused the same to be known in Rome, afore the Kings could accomplish and bring their intents to pass in England. By this means hath the Papacy been so maintained, and things ordered after their wills and pleasures, that much mischief hath happened in this Realm and others, sometime to the Destruction of Princes, and sometime to the utter undoing of many Commonwealthes.

Now when Gardiner saw Dr. Taylor, he according to his common custom, all to reviled him, calling him Knave, Traitor, Heretick, with many other villainous reproaches; which all Dr. Taylor heard patiently, and at the last said unto him:

My Lord; quoth he, I am neither Traitor nor Heretick, but a true Subject, and a faithful Christian man, and am come, according to your commandment, to know what is the cause that your Lordship hath sent for me.

Then said the Bishop, Art thou come, thou Villain? How darest thou look me in the face for shame? Knowest thou not who I am?

Yes, quoth Dr. Taylor, I know who you are. Ye are Doctor Steven Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, and Lord Chancellor, and yet but a Mortal man I trow. But if I should be afraid of your Lordly looks, why fear you not God, the Lord of us all? How dare ye for shame look any Christian man in the face, seeing ye have forsaken the Truth, denied our Saviour Christ and his word, and done contrary to your own Oath and writings? With what countenance will ye appear before the Judgment seat of Christ, and answer to your Oath made first unto that blessed K. Henry the eighth of famous Memory, and afterward unto blessed King Edward the sixth his Son?

The Bishop answered, Tush, tush, that was Herod's Oath, unlawful; and therefore worthy to be broken: I have done well in breaking it; and I thank God, I am come home again to our Mother the Catholick Church of Rome, and so I would thou shouldst do.

Dr. Taylor answered, Should I forsake the Church of Christ, which is founded upon the true foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, to approve those Lies, Errours, Superstition and Idolatries, that the Popes and their company at this day so blasphemously do approve? Nay, God forbid.

Let the Pope and his return to our Saviour Christ and his word, and thrust out of the Church such abominable Idolatries as he maintaineth, and then will Christian men turn unto him. You wrote truly against him, and were sworn against him.

I tell thee, quoth the Bishop of Winchester, it was Herod's Oath, unlawful; and therefore ought to be broken, and not kept: and our holy Father the Pope hath discharged me of it.

Then said D. Taylor, But you shall not so be discharged before Christ, who doubtless will require it at your hands, as a lawful Oath made to our Leige and Sovereign Lord the King, from whose obedience no man can absolve you, neither the Pope nor any of his.

I fee, quoth the Bishop, thou art an Arrogant Knave, and a very fool.

My Lord, quoth Doctor Taylor, leave your unseemly railing at mee, which is not seemly for such an one in Authority as you are. For I am a Christian man, and you know, that he that saith to his Brother, Racha, is in danger of a Council, and he that saith, Thou Fool, is in danger of Hell Fire.

The Bishop answered, Ye are false, and lyars all the sort of you. Nay quoth Doctor Taylor, we are true men, and know that it is written, Os quod mentitur, occidit animam: And again, Perdes omnes qui loquuntur mendacium, i. The mouth that lieth, slayeth the soul: And again, Lord God thou shalt destroy all that speak Lies. And therefore we abide by the truth of Gods Word which ye contrary to your own consciences deny and forsake.

Thou art married (quoth the Bishop.) Yea, (quoth Doctor Taylor) that I thank God I am, and have had nine Children, and all in lawful Matrimony, and blessed be God that ordained Matrimony and commanded that every man, that hath not the gift of continency, should marry a Wife of his own, and not live in Adultery or Whoredom.

Then said the Bishop, Thou hast resisted the Queens proceedings, and wouldst not suffer the Parson of Adam, a very vertuous and devout Priest, to say Mass in Hadley. Dr. Taylor answered, My Lord, I am Parson of Hadley, and it is against all Right, Conscience and Laws, that any man should come into my charge, and presume to infect the Flock committed unto me, with venom of the Popish Idolatrous Mass.

With that the Bishop waxed very angry, and said, Thou art a blasphemous Heretick indeed, that blasphemest the blessed Sacrament (and putt off his cap) and speakst against the holy Mass, which is made a Sacrifice for the quick and the dead. Dr. Taylor answered, Nay, I blaspheme not the blessed Sacrament which Christ instituted, but I reverence it as a true Christian man ought to do, and confess, that Christ ordained the holy Communion in the remembrance of his death and passion, which when we keep according to his ordinance, we (through faith) eat the Body of Christ, and drink his Blood, giving thanks for our redemption, and this is our Sacrifice for the quick and the dead, to give thanks for his merciful goodness shewed to us, in that he gave his Son Christ unto the death for us.

Thou sayst well (quoth the Bishop.) It is all that thou hast said, and more too; for it is a propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead. Then answered Dr. Taylor, Christ gave himself to die for our redemption upon the Cross, whose Body there offered was the propitiatory Sacrifice full, perfect and sufficient unto Salvation for all them that believe in him. And this Sacrifice did our Saviour Christ offer in his own person himself once for all, neither can any Priest any more offer him, nor we need any more propitiatory Sacrifice; and therefore I say with Chrysostom, and all the Doctors: Our Sacrifice is only Memorative, in the remembrance of Christs death and passion, a Sacrifice of thanksgiving; and therefore the Fathers called it Eucharistia: And other Sacrifice hath the Church of God none.

It is true, quoth the Bishop, the Sacrament is called Eucharistia, a thanksgiving, because we there give thanks for our redemption, and it is also a Sacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead, which thou shalt confess ere thou and I have done. Then called the Bishop his men, and said, Have this fellow hence, and carry him to the Kings Bench, and charge the Keeper he be freightly kept. D. Taylor then kneeled Dr. Taylor down, and held up both his hands, and said, Good Lord I thank thee; and from the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable errours, Idolatries, and abominations, good Lord deliver us: And God be praised for good King Edward. So they carried him to prison to the Kings Bench where might he lay prisoner almost two years.

This is the sum of that first talk, as I saw it mentioned in a Letter that Dr. Taylor wrote to a friend of his, thanking God for his grace, that he had confessed his Truth, and was found worthy for Truth to suffer prison and bands, beseeching his friends to pray for him, that he persevere constant unto the end.

Being in prison, Doctor Taylor spent all his time in prayer, reading the holy Scriptures, and writing, and preaching, and exhorting the prisoners, and such as resorted to him, to repentance and amendment of life.

Within a few days after, were divers other learned and godly men in sundry countries of England committed to prison for Religion, so that almost all the prisons in England where become right Christian Schools and Churches; so that there was no greater comfort for Christian hearts, than to come to the prisons to behold their vertuous conversation, and to hear their prayers, preachings, most godly exhortations, and consolations.

Now were placed in Churches blind and ignorant Mass mongers, with their Latin babblings and Apish ceremonies; who like cruel Wolves spared not to murder all such, as any thing at all but once whiperd against their Popery. As for the godly Preachers which were in King Edwards time, they were either fled the Realm, or else as the Prophets did in King Sibbys days, they were privily kept in corners. As many as the Papists could lay hold on, they were sent into prison, there as Lambs waiting when the Butchers would call them to the slaughter.

When Doctor Taylor was come into the prison called the Kings Bench he found therein the veruons and vigilant man for his innocent and godly living, his devout and ver-tuous preaching, was worthily counted a miracle of our time, as even his Adversaries must needs confess. Finding this man in prison, he began to exhort him to faith, strength and patience, and to persevere constant unto the end. M. Bradford hearing this, thanked God that he had provided him such a comfortable prison-fellow:
and so they both together lauded God, and continued in prayer, reading, and exhorting one the other: Insumch that Doctor Taylor told his friends that came to visit him, that God had most graciously provided for him, to send him to that prison where he found such an Angel of God, to be in his company to comfort him.

Doctor Taylor brought forth to be deprived.

After that Doctor Taylor had lain in prison a while, he was cited to appear in the Archbis at Bow-Church, to answer unto such matter as there should be objected against him. At the day appointed he was led thither, his Keeper waiting upon him. Where when he came, he stoutly and strongly defended his Marriage, affirming by the Scriptures of God, by the Doctors of the Primitive Church, by both Lawes Civill and Canon, that it is lawfull for Priests to Marry, and that such as have not the gift of continency are bound in pain of Damna-tion to marry. This did he plainly prove, that the Judge could give no sentence of Divorce against him, but gave sentence he should be deprived of his Benefice, because he was Married.

You do me wrong then (quoth Doctor Taylor) and alleged many Laws and Constitutions for himself, but all prevailed not. For he was again carried into prison, and his Livings taken away, and given to other. As for Hadley Benefice, it was given or sold, I wot not whether, to one Master Newville, whose great vertues were altogether unlike to Doctor Taylor his predecessor, as the poor Parishioners full well have found.

Doctor Taylor brought again before Winchester, and other Bishops.

The Papists rule and reign.

After a Year and three Quarters, or there about, in the which time, the Papists got certain old Tyrannous Laws, which were put down by King Henry the Eighth; and by King Edward, to be again revived by Parliament: so that now they might, Ex officio, cite whom they would, upon their own suspicion, and charge him with what Articles they listed, and except they in all things agreed to their purpose, burn them: When these Laws were once established, they sent for Doctor Taylor with certain other prisoners, which were again convented before the Chancellor and other Commissioners about the 22. of January. The purport and effect of which talk between them, because it is sufficiently described by himself in his own Letter written to a friend of his,
I have annexed the said Letter here under, as followeth.

A Letter of Dr. Taylor, containing and reporting the talk had between him and the Lord Chancellor and other Commissioners about the 22. of January.

The pardon is proferred.

Whereas you would have me to write the talke between the King and Queens most Honourable Council and me on Tuesday, 22. of January, so far as I remember: First, my L. Chancellor said, You among other are at this present time (me far, to enjoy the Kings and Queens Majesties favour and mercy, if you will now rise again with us from the fall which we generally have received in this Realm, from the which (God be praised) we are now clearly delivered, miraculously. If you will not rise with us now, and receive mercy now offered, you shall have Judgement according to your desert. To this I answered, that so to rise, should be the greatest fall that ever I could receive: for I should so fall from my dear Saviour Christ to Antichrist. For I do believe, that the Religion set forth in King Edwards days, was according to the vein of the Holy Scripture, which containeth fully all the rules of our Christian Religion, from the which I do not intend to decline so long as I live, by Gods grace.

Then Master Secretary Bourne said, Which of the Religions mean ye of in King Edwards days? For ye know there were diverse Books of Religion set forth in his days. There was a Religion set forth in a Catechism by my Lord of Canterbury. Do you mean that you will stick to that?

I answered, My Lord of Canterbury made a Catechism to be translated into English, which Book was not of his own making; yet he set it forth in his own name; and truly that Book for the time did much good. But there was after that set forth by the most innocent King Edward (for whom God be praised everlastingly) the whole Church-service, with great deliberation, and the advice of the best learned men in the Realm, and authorized by the whole Parliament, and received and published gladly by the whole Realm: which Book was never reformed but once, and yet by that one reformation it was so fully perfected, according to the rules of our Christian Religion in every behalf, that no Christian conscience could be offended with any thing therein contained; I mean of that Book reformed.

Then my Lord Chancellor said, Didst thou never read the Book that I set forth of the Sacraments?

I answered, that I had read it.

Then he said, How likest thou that Book? Was that one of the Council (whose name I know not) said, My Lord, that is a good question: for I am sure, that Book stopperh all their mouths. Then said I, My Lord, I think many things be far wide from the truth of Gods Word in that Book.

Then my Lord said, They are a very variety. To that I answered, That is as it is Racha or Fume. Then my Lord said, Thou art an ignorant Beetle-braw.

To that I answered, I have read over and over again the holy Scriptures, and S. Augustines works through, S. Cyprian, Eusebius, Origen, Gregory Nazianzen, with divers other Books through; once therefore, I thank God, I am not utterly ignorant. Besides these, my Lord, I professed the Civil Law, as your Lordship did, and I have read over the Canon Law also.

Then my Lord said, With a corrupt Judgement thou readest all things: Touching my profession, it is Divinity, in which I have written divers Books. Then said I,
My Lord, ye did write one Book, De vera obedientia;
I would you had been constant in that: for indeed you never did declare a good conscience that I heard of, but in that one Book.

Then my Lord said, Tut, tut, tut, I wrote against Bucer in Priests Marriages: but such Books please not such wretches as thou art, which have been Married many years.

To that I answered, I am Married indeed, and I have had nine Children in Holy Matrimony, I thank God: and this I am sure of, that your proceedings now at this present in this Realm against Priests Marriages, is the maintenance of the Doctrine of Divorcel, against Natural law, Civil law, Canon law, general Councils, Canons of the Apostles, ancient Doctors, and Gods Law.

Then spake my Lord of Duresm saying, You have professed the Civil law, as you say. Then you know that Justinian writeth, that Priests should at their taking of Orders swear, that they were never Married; and he bringeth in to prove that, Canones Apostolorum.

To that I answered, That I did not remember any such Law of Justinian. But I am sure, that Justinian writeth in Titulo de indicata viduante, in God. That if one would bequeath to his Wife in his Testament a legacie, under a condition that she should never Marry again, and take an oath of her for accomplishing the same, it should be void.

I answered, By the plain words and sentences of S. Paul. both to Timothy, and to Titus, where he speaks most evidently of the Marriage of Priests, Deacons and Bishops. And Chrysfostom writing upon the Epistle to Timothy, saith, It is an Hereticke to say that a Bishop may not be Married.

Then said my Lord Chancellor, Thou liest of Chrysfostom. But thou dost, as all they Companions do be- lieve without shame both the Scriptures and the Doctors. Didst thou not also say, that by the Canon Law Priests may be married? which is most untrue, and the con- trary is most True.

I answered, We read in the Decrees, that the four general Councils, Nicene, Constantinopolitane Ephesine Chalcedone have the same Authority that the four Evan- gelists have. And we read in the same Decrees (which is one of the chief books of the Canon Law) that the Council of Nice, by the means of one Paphnutius, did allow Priests and Bishops Marriages: Therefore by the best part of the Canon Law, Priests may be Married.

To that said I, It is not like that the Pope would leave out any such sentence, having such Authority, and making so much for his purpose.

Dr. Taylor

And I said, by Gods grace I will never depart from Christs Church. Then I required that I might have some of my friends to come to me in prison: and my Lord Cham- cellor said, Thou shalt have Judgment within this week: and so was I delivered again unto my Keeper. My Lord of Duresme would that I should believe as my Fa- ther and my Mother did. I alledged S. Augustin, that we ought to prefer Gods Word before all men.

And thus much was contained in the foresaid letter of Dr. Taylor for that matter.

Besides this Letter, moreover he directed another writ- ing in like manner to another friend of his concerning the causes wherefore he was condemned, which we thought likewise here to expresse as followeth.

It is Hereticke to defend any Doctrine against the holy Scripture. Therefore the Lord Chancellor and Bishops con- senting to his sentence against me, be Heretics. For they have given sentence against the Marriage of Priests, knowing that St. Paul to Timothy and Titus writeth plainly, that Bishops, Priests, and Deacons, may be married; knowing also that, by S. Pauls Doctrine it is the Doctrine of Devils to inhibit Matrimony. And S. Paul willerth every faithful Minister to teach the People so, lest they be deceived by the marked Merchants, 1 Tim. 4.

Matt. 12.

They know that Christ would not be conceived, or born of his blessed Mother, the Virgin Mary, before she was espoused in Marriage, his own ordinance.

They know, by S. Cyprian and S. Augustin, that a Vow is not an impediment sufficient to let Matrimony or to divorce the same.

Chrysfostom,
it is Hereticke to deny Priests Marriage.
Ambrose 1.
Rusticus
12.

They know that S. Chrysfostom saith, it is Hereticke to affirm that a Bishop may not have a Wife.

They know that Ambrose will have no commandment but Counsel only to be given, touching the observing of Virginity.

They know that Christ with his blessed Mother and the Apostles were at a Marriage, and beautified and honoured the same with his presence, and first miracle.

To be short, they know that all that I have here written touching the Marriage of Priests, is true: and they know that the Papists themselves do not observe, touching that matter, their own Laws and Canons, and yet they continue marked in conscience with an hor- ror, as detestable Heretics in this behalf. The Lord give them grace to repent, if it be his good will, Amen.

My second cause why I was condemned an Hereticke, is, that I denied Transubstantiation and Concomitation, two juggling words of the Papists by the which they do believe and will compel all other to believe, that Christs Natural Body is made of Bread, and the Godhead by and by to bejoynted thereunto, so that immediately after the words (called the words of Consecration) there is no more Bread and Wine in the Sacrament, but the substance onely of the Body and Blood of Christ to- gether with his Godhead: so that the same being now Christ, both God and man, ought to be Worshipped with godly Honour, and to be offered to God, both for the quick and the dead, as a Sacrifice propitiatory and satisfactory for the same. This matter was not long de- bated in words: but because I denied the forsaide Popisti- call Doctrine (yea rather, plain, most wicked Idolatry, Blasphemy and Heresie, I was judged an Hereticke.

I did also in the Pope to be Antichrist, and Popery Antichristianity.

And I contended the Doctrine of the Bible to be sufficient Doctrine, touching all and singular matters of Christian Religion, and of Salvation.

I also alleged, that the Oath against the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, was a lawful Oath, and so was the Oath made by us all, touching the Kings or Queens pre-eminence. For Chrysostom saith, that Apostles, Evangelists, and all men in every Realm were ever, and ought to be ever, touching both Body, and Goods, in subjection to the Kingly Authority, with the Sword in his hand, as Gods principal Officer and Governour in every Realm. I desired the Bishops to repent for bringing the Realm from Christ to Antichrist, from light to darkness, from verity to vanity.

Thus you know the sum of my last Examination and Conformation. Pray for me, and I will pray for you.

God be praised, since my Condemnation I was never afraid to die; Gods will be done. If I shrink from Gods Truth, I am sure of another manner of death than had Judas Hades. But God be praised, even from the bottom of heart, I am immovably settled upon the Rock, nothing doubting, but that my dear God will perform and finish the work that he hath begun in me and others. To him be all honour both now and ever, through Christ our only and whole Saviour. Amen.

And thus much wrote D. Taylor, concerning this matter, to his Friend.

You heard in the former Answers a little before, certain Allegations touched of D. Taylor out of S. Cyprian, Augustine, Chrysostom and Ambrose, touching the lawfulness of Priests marriage. Now ye shall hear the places of the said Doctors cited and produced out of their own Books, as here ensueth.

The places of the Doctors alledged before in Doctor Taylor's Letter.

This question was asked of S. Cyprian, What should be done with those Religious persons, that could not keep their Chastity as they had vowed. He answered thus, I should ask what we do judge of Virgins, which, after they had decreed to live chaste, are afterward found in Bed with a Man. Of which thou saith, that one of them was a Deacon. We do with great sorrow see the great ruine of many Persons, which cometh by the reason of such unlawful and perillous companying together. If therefore, if they have dedicated themselves unto Christ, I saith, let us purely and chaste, then let them so remain in their vow, chaste and strongly and steadfastly abide the reward of virginity. But if they will not abide, or else cannot abide; then it is better to marry, than to fall into the fire of Conscience: And let them give to them, to the Brother and Sister, none occasion of scandal, &c. Cyprian in his 11. Epistle, Lib. 1.

Certain men do affirm, Those men to be Adulterers, that do marry after that they have vowed Chastity. But I do affirm, that those Men do grievously sin, who which do separate them, &c. Augustine, in his Book, De bono conjugali, ad Julianum.

Chastity of the Body ought to be desired of us, which, if we have, I do give for a Counsel, and do not command it expressly. For virginity is a thing which alone ought to be counselled, out not to be commanded: it is rather a thing of voluntarie will, and not a Precept. Ambrose 32. Quæst. 1. Capitulum 1. 1. 1.

A brief Recapitulation out of D. Taylors Causes as retouched, for the Reader more evidently to see how the Papists do against their own knowledge in forbidding Priests Marriage.

THe Popes Clergy, forbidding Ecclesiastical Persons to marry, do against their Conscience and Knowledge, as may well be proved by these Causes here-under following.

1. They know that Matrimony in the Old Testament, De jur. institut. civis, is indifferently permitted to all Men without any exception.

2. Secondly, they know that in the Old Testament; De facto, both Priests, Levites, Prophets, Patriarchs, and all others had their Wives.

3. Thirdly, they know that Matrimony was permitted and instituted of God for two principal ends; to wit, for Procreation, and avoiding of Sin.

4. Fourthly, they know that in the Old Testament God not only instituted and permitted Matrimony to be free, but also induceth and appointeth Men to marry and take Wives, in these words, It is not good for a man to be alone, &c.

5. Fifthly, they know that in the New Testament St. Paul permitteb the state of Matrimony free to all men, having not the gift of Continency, and forbiddeth none.

6. Sixthly, they know that in the New Testament the said St. Paul not only permitteb, but also expressly wilteb and chargeb Men, having not the gift to marry, saying, For avoiding Fornication, let every man have his Wife, &c.

7. Seventhly, they know that in the New Testament the said St. Paul not only permitteb and commandeth, but also commendeth and praiseth the state of Matrimony, Heb. 13. Calling it honourable, and the Bed-company to be undefiled, &c.

8. Eighthly, they know that in the New Testament Christ himself not only was not conceived nor born of the Virgin before she was espoused in Matrimony, but also that both he and his blessed Mother did beatifie and honour the state of Matrimony with their presence: yea, in the same began his first Miracle.

9. Ninthly, they know both by the Old Testament and New, that Marriage is no impediment to walk in the obedience of Gods Commandment; for both Abraham carried into the Land of Canaan his old, yea and barren Wife, the virtuous woman Sarah, with him: and also to Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David, and others, their Marriage was no impediment to them to talk with God; neither to other Levites, Bishops and Priests, in the time of both the Old Testament, and of the New. Again, neither was it a let to Peter, Philip, and others, both to have their Wives with them, and also to supply the Office of Apostleship.

10. Tenthly, they know both by the Old Testament and New, that sinful Fornication and Adultery depriveth Man of Gods Favour and Graces of the Holy Ghost, which Graces especially be requisite in the Men of the Church.

11. Eleventhly, they know in their own secret Conscience, and by experience, that neither they which enjoin this Vow of Chastity, nor they which take it, do observe the Vow of Chastity. Whereupon rise inconveniences more than can be expressed: but the Lord above knoweth all, besides the secret murders, peradventure, of many a poor Infant, &c.

12. Twelfthly, they know by S. Cyprian, Epist. 11. and S. Augustine, Lib. de bono conjugali, ad Julianum, that a Vow is no impediment sufficient to let Matrimony, or to divorce the same.

13. Thirteenthly, they know that Chrysostom affirmeth it to be an Heresie to say, that a Bishop may not have a Wife.

14. Fourteenthly, they know that S. Ambrose, 32. q. 1. Integratæ, will have no commandment, but counsel only to be given touching the observing of Virginity.

15. Fifteenthly, they know that before the time of Pope Hildebrand, that is, during the time of 1000 years after Christ, marriage was never restrained, by any forcible necessity of Vow, from Men of the Church.

16. Sixteenthly, they know that S. Paul calleth it the Doctrine of Devils, to forbid Meats and Marriage, which God hath left free, with Thanksgiving, for necessity of Man and Woman.

After that D. Taylor thus with great spirit and courage had answered for himself, and stoutly rebuked his Adversaries for breaking their Oath made before to King Henry and to King Edward his Son, and for betraying the Realm into the power of the Roman Bishop; they perceiving that in no case he could be stirred to their wills and purpose, that is, to turn with them from Christ to Antichrist, committed him thereupon to Prison again, where he endured till the last of January.

D. Taylor the fourth time, with M. Bradford, and M. Sanders, brought before Winchester and other Bishops.

English.

Upon which day and year aforesaid, Doctor Taylor and M. Bradford, and M. Sanders were again called to appear before the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishops of Norwich, of London, of Salisbury, and of Durham, and there were charged again with Heresie and Schism, and therefore a determinate Answer was required; Whether they would submit themselves, to the Roman Bishop, and abjure their Errors, or else they would according to their Laws proceed to their condemnation.

The Confession of these men.

When D. Taylor and his Fellows, M. Bradford and M. Sanders heard this, they answered stoutly and boldly, that they would not depart from the Truth which they had preached in King Edwards days, neither would they submit themselves to the Romish Antichrist; but they thanked God for so great Mercy, that he would call them to be worthy to suffer for his Word and Truth.

Sentence of Death given upon Innocent.

When the Bishops saw them so boldly, constantly, and unmoveably fixed in the Truth, they read the Sentence of Death upon them, which when they had heard, they most joyfully gave God thanks, and stoutly said unto the Bishops; We doubt not, but God the Righteous Judge will require our Blood at your hands, and the proudest of you all shall repent this receiving again of Antichrist; and your Tyranny that ye now shew against the flock of Christ.

D. Taylor
Condemned.

So was D. Taylor now condemned, committed to the Clink, and the Keepers charged straitly to keep him: for ye have now another manner of Charge (quoth the Lord Chancellor) than they had before: therefore look ye, take heed to it.

D. Taylor reminded from the Clink to the Counter by Night.

When the Keeper brought him toward the Prison, the People flocked about to gaze upon him: unto whom he said, God be praised (good People) I am come away from hence undefiled, and will confirm the Truth with my Blood. So was he befowed in the Clink till it was toward Night, and then he was removed to the Counter by the Poultrey.

D. Taylor cometh to the Counter to degrade
D. Taylor.

When D. Taylor had lain in the said Counter in the Poultrey a Seven-night or thereabouts Prisoner, the fourth day of February, Anno 1555. Edmund Boner Bishop of London, with others, came to the said Counter to degrade him, bringing with them such Ornaments as do appertain to their Massing-Mummery. Now being come, he called for the said D. Taylor to be brought unto him; the Bishop being then in the Chamber where the Keeper of the Counter and his Wife lay. So D. Taylor was brought down from the Chamber above that, to the said Boner. And at his coming, the Bishop said, Master Doctor, I would you would remember your self, and turn to your Mother holy Church; so may you do well enough, and I will sue for your Pardon. Whereunto M. Taylor answered, I would you and your Fellows would turn to Christ. As for me, I will not turn to Antichrist. Well, quoth the Bishop, I am come to degrade you: wherefore put on these Vestures. No, quoth D. Taylor, I will not. Wilt thou not, said the Bishop? I shall make thee ere I go. Quoth D. Taylor, Thou shalt not, by the Grace of God. Then he charged him upon his Obedience to do it, but he would not do it for him.

D. Taylor de-richeth the Popes Ma-sing Toys.

So he would another to put them upon his back, and when he was thoroughly furnished therewith, he set his hands to his side, walking up and down, and said; How say you, my Lords, am not I a goodly Fool? How say you, my Masters? If I were in Cheap, should I not have Boys enow to laugh at these apish Toys, and toying Trumpery? So the Bishop scraped his Fingers, Thumbs, and the Crown of his Head, and did the rest of such like devilish Observances.

At the last, when he should have given D. Taylor a stroke on the Breast with his Crozier-Staff, the Bishop, Chaplain said. My Lord, strike him not, for he will sure strike again. Yea, by S. Peter will I, quoth D. Taylor. The Cause is Christ, and I were no good Christian, if I would not fight in my Masters quarrel. So the Bishop laid his Curse upon him, but struck him not. Then D. Taylor said, Though you do curse me, yet God doth bless prayer against me. I have the witness of my Conscience, that ye have done me wrong and violence: And yet I pray God, if it be his will, forgive you. But from the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and his detestable Emormities, good Lord deliver us. And in going up to his Chamber, he still said, God deliver me from you, God deliver me from you. And when he came up, he told M. Bradford (for they both lay in one Chamber) that he had made the Bishop of London afraid: for, faith he laughingly, his Chaplain gave him counsel not to strike me with his Crozier-Staff, for that I would strike again; and, by ray Troth, said he, rubbing his hands, I made him believe I would do so indeed.

D. Taylor
said of D. Taylor.

The Night after that he was degraded, his Wife and his Son Thomas resorted unto him, and were by the gentleness of the Keepers permitted to sup with him. For this difference was ever found between the Keepers of the Bishops Prisons, and the Keepers of the Kings Prisons: That the Bishops Keepers were ever cruel, blasphemous, and tyrannous like their Masters: but the Keepers of the Kings Prisons shewed, for the most part, as much Favour as they possibly might.

Keepers of Prisons.

So came D. Taylor's Wife, his Son, and John Hall his Servant, to sup with him: and at their coming in afore-Supper, they kneeled down and prayed, saying the Litany.

After Supper walking up and down, he gave God Thanks for his Grace, that had so called him, and given him strength to abide by his holy Word: and turning to his Son Thomas, My dear Son (said he) Almighty God bless thee, and give thee his Holy Spirit, to be a true Servant of Christ, to learn his Words, and constantly to stand by his Truth all thy life long. And, my Son, see that thou fear God always. Esce from all Sin, and wicked living: be vertuous, serve God with daily Prayer, and apply thy Book. In any wise see that thou be obedient to thy Mother, love her and serve her: be ruled by her now in thy Youth, and follow her good Counsel in all things. Beware of lewd Company, of Young men that fear not God, but follow their lewd Lusts and vain Appetites. Fly from Whoredom, and hate all filthy living, remembering, that I thy Father do die in the defence of holy Marriage. Another day, when God shall bless thee, love and cherish the Poor people, and count that thy chief Riches is, to be rich in Alms: and when thy Mother is waxed old, forsake her not; but provide for her to thy power, and see that she lack nothing: For so will God bless thee, and give thee long life upon Earth and prosperity: whiche I pray God to grant thee.

his Wife.

Now the time is come that I shall be taken from you, and you discharged of the Wedlock-Bond towards me: therefore I will give you my Counsel what I think most expedient for you. You are yet a Child-bearing Woman, and therefore it will be most convenient for you to marry. For doubtless you shall never be at a convenient stay for your self and our poor Children, nor out of Trouble till you be married. Therefore as soon as God will provide it, marry with some honest faithful Man that feareth God. Doubt you not, God will provide an honest Husband for you, and he will be a merciful Father to you and to my Children: whom I pray you bring up in the Fear of God, and in Learning, to the uttermost of your power, and keep them from this Romish Idolatrie. When he had thus said, they with weeping Tears prayed together, and kissed one the other: and he gave to his Wife a Book of the Church-Service, let out by King Edward, which he in the time of his Imprisonment daily used. And unto his Son Thomas he gave a Latin Book containing the notable Sayings of the the old Martyrs, gathered out of Ecclesiastical History; and in the end of that Book he wrote his Testament and last Will, as hereafter followeth.

The last Will and Testament of Doctor Rowland Taylor, Parson of Hadley.

D. Taylor's Will and Testament, wrote in the Book which he gave to his Son. Job 1.1. APOC. 14. Luke 12.

I Say to my Wife, and to my Children; The Lord gave you unto me, and the Lord hath taken me from you, and you from me: blessed be the Name of the Lord. I believe that they are blessed which die in the Lord. God careth for Sparrows, and for the Hairs of our heads. I have ever found him more faithful and favourable, than is any Father or Husband. Trust ye therefore in him by the means of our dear Saviour Christs Merits: believe, love, fear and obey him: pray to him, for he hath promised to help. Count me not dead, for I shall certainly live, and never dye. I go before, and you shall follow after, to our long home. I go to the rest of my Children, Susan, George, Ellen, Robert and Zachary: I have bequeathed you to the only Omnipotent.

A pure Conscience fully quieted.

I say to my dear Friends of Hadley, and to all others which have heard me preach; that I depart hence with a quiet Conscience, as touching my Doctrine, for the which I pray you thank God with me. For I have after my little Talent, declared to others those Lessons that I gathered out of Gods Book, the blessed Bible. Therefore if I or an Angel from Heaven should preach to you any other Gospel than that ye have received, Gods great Curse upon that Preacher.

A grave warning against Popery.

Beware for Gods sake that ye deny not God, neither decline from the word of Faith, lest God decline from you, and so do ye everlastingly perish. For Gods sake beware of Popery, for though it appear to have in it Unity, yet the same is Vanity and Antichristianity, and not in Christs Faith and Verity.

The Sin against the Holy Ghost.

Beware of the Sin against the Holy Ghost, now after such a Light opened so plainly and simply, truly, throughly and generally to all England.

A godly Prayer.

The Lord grant all men his good and Holy Spirit, increase of his Wisdom, condemning the wicked World, hearty desire to be with God and the Heavenly Company, through Jesus Christ, our only Mediator, Advocate, Righteousness, Life, Sanctification and Hope, Amen, Amen. Pray, pray.

Rowland Taylor departing hence in sure hope, without all doubting of Eternal salvation, I thank God my Heavenly Father, through Jesus Christ my certain Saviour, Amen.

In thee, O Lord, have I trusted, let me never be confounded. Psal. 30.

On the next Morrow, after that D. Taylor had Supped with his Wife in the Counter, as is before expressed, which was the fifth day of February, the Sheriff of London with his Officers came to the Counter by Two of the Clock in the Morning, and so brought forth D. Taylor, and without any Light led him to the Woolfack, an Inn without Algate. Dr. Taylors Wife, suspecting that her Husband should that Night be carried away, watching all Night in S. Basilphs Church-Porch beside Algate, having with her two Children, the one named Elizabeth, of 13 years of Age (whom being left without Father or Mother, D. Taylor had brought up of Alms from three years old,) the other named Mary, Doctor Taylors own Daughter.

D. Taylor led from the Counter by Night towards Hadley.

Now, when the Sheriff and his Company came against S. Basilphs Church, Elizabeth cried, saying, O my dear Father; Mother, Mother, here is my Father led away. Then cried his Wife, Rowland, Rowland, where art thou? for it was a very dark Morning, that the one could not see the other. D. Taylor answered, Dear Wife, I am here, and stayed. The Sheriffs Men would have led him forth; but the Sheriff said, Stay a little Masters, I pray you, and let him speak to his Wife, and so they stayed.

Then came she to him, and he took his Daughter Mary in his Arms: and he, his Wife and Elizabeth kneeled down and said the Lords Prayer. At which fight the Sheriff wept apace, and so did divers others of the Company. After they had prayed, he rose up and kissed his Wife, and shook her by the hand, and said, Farewell my dear Wife, be of good comfort, for I am quiet in my Conscience. God shall stir up a Father for my Children. And then he kissed his Daughter Mary, and said, God bless thee and make thee his Servant: and kissing Elizabeth, he said, God bless thee. I pray you all stand strong and steadfast unto Christ and his Word, and keep you from Idolatry. Then said his Wife, God be with thee, dear Rowland, I will with Gods grace meet thee at Hadley.

And so was he led forth to the Woolfack, and his Wife followed him. As soon as they came to the Woolfack, he was put into a Chamber, wherein he was kept with four Yeomen of the Guard and the Sheriffs Men. D. Taylor, as soon as he was come into the Chamber, fell down on his Knees and gave himself wholly to Prayer. The Sheriff then, seeing D. Taylors Wife there, would in no case grant her to speak any more with her Husband, but gently desired her to go to his House and take it as her own, and promised her he should lack nothing, and sent two Officers to conduct her thither. Notwithstanding she desired to go to her Mothers, whither the Officers led her, and charged her Mother to keep her there till they came again.

Thus remained D. Taylor in the Woolfack, kept by the Sheriff and his Company, till 11. of the Clock. At which time the Sheriff of Essex was ready to receive: and so they set him on Horseback within the Inn, the Gates being shut.

At the coming out of the Gates, John Hull, before spoken of, stood at the Rails with Thomas, D. Taylors Son. When D. Taylor saw them, he called them, saying, Come hither my Son Thomas. And John Hull lifted the Child up, and set him on the Horse before his Father: and D. Taylor put off his Hat, and said to the People that stood there looking on him, Good People this is mine own Son, begotten of my body in lawful Matrimony: And God be blessed for lawful Matrimony. Then lifted he up his eyes towards Heaven and prayed for his Son, laid his Hat upon the Childs Head and blessed him, and so delivered the Child to John Hull, whom he took by the hand and said, Farewell John Hull, the faithfullest Servant that ever man had. And so they rode forth, the Sheriff of Essex, with four Yeomen of the Guard, and the Sheriffs Men leading him.

When they were come almost at Burnwood, one Arthur Fayite, a Man of Hadley, who before time had been D. Taylors Servant, met with them, and he, supposing him to have been at liberty, said, Master Doctor, I am glad to see you again at liberty, and came to him and took him by the hand. Soft Sir, quoth the Sheriff, he is a Prisoner; what hast thou to do with him? I cry you mercy, said Arthur, I knew not so much, and I thought it no offence to talk to a true Man. The Sheriff was very angry with this, and threatened to carry Arthur with him to Prison; notwithstanding, he bade him get quickly away, and so they rode forth to Burnwood: where they caused to be made for D. Taylor a close Hood, with two holes for his Eyes to look out at, and a slit for his Mouth to breath at. This they did, that no man should know him, nor he speak to any man. Which practice they used also with others. Their own Consciences told them, that they led innocent Lambs to the slaughter. Wherefore they feared, lest if the People should have heard them speak, or have seen them, they might have been much more

D. Taylor is joyful in his way.
All the way D. Taylor was joyful and merry, as one that accounted himself going to a most pleasant banquet or bridal. He spake many notable things to the Sheriff and Yeomen of the Guard that conducted him, and often moved them to weep through his much earnest calling upon them to repent, and to amend their evil and wicked living. Oftentimes also he caused them to wonder and rejoyce, to see him so constant and stedfast, void of all fear, joyful in heart, and glad to dye. Of these Yeomen of the Guard, three used D. Taylor friendly, but the fourth (whose name was Homes) used him very homely, unkindly, and churlishly.

Homes a notorious adversary to D. Taylor.
At Colmsford met them the Sheriff of Suffolk, there to receive him, and to carry him forth into Suffolk. And being at supper, the Sheriff of Elsex very earnestly laboured him to return to the Popish Religion, thinking with fair words to perfwade him, and said, Good Master Doctor, we are right sorry for you, considering what the loss is of such a one as ye might be, if ye would: God hath given you great Learning and Wisdom, wherefore ye have been in great favour and reputation in times past with the Council and Higheft of this Realm. Besides this, ye are a man of goodly personage, in your best strength, and by nature like to live many years, and without doubt, ye should in time to come be in as good reputation as ever ye were, or rather better. For ye are well beloved of all men, as well for your virtues as for your learning; and me think it were great pity you should cast away your self willingly, and to come to such a painful and shameful death. Ye should do much better to revoke your Opinions, and return to the Catholick Universal Church of Rome, acknowledge the Popes Holiness to be the Supreme Head of the Church, and reconcile your self to him. You may do well yet, if you will: doubt ye not but ye shall find favour at the Queens hands, I and all these your friends will be futers for your Pardon: which no doubt, ye shall obtain. This Counsel I give you, good M. Doctor, of a good Heart and Good-will toward you:
and thereupon I drink to you. In like manner said all the Yeomen of the Guard: upon that condition, M. Doctor, we will all drink to you.

D. Taylor makes a jest of death with a need answer for such Deceits and Counselors.
When they had all drank to him, and the Cup was come to him, he stayed a little, as one studying what answer he might give. At the last thus he answered and said, M. Sheriff, and my Masters all, I heartily thank you for your good will, I have hearkened to your words, and marked well your Counsels. And to be plain with you, I do perceive that I have been deceived my self, and am like to deceive a great many of Hadley of their expectation.
With that word they all rejoiced. Yea, good Master Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, Gods Blessing on your heart: hold you there still. It is the comfortabest word that we heard you speak yet. What? should ye cast away your self in vain? Play a wife mans part, and I dare warrant it, ye shall find favour. Thus they rejoiced very much at the word, and were very merry.

At the last, good Mr. Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, what meant ye by this, that ye say ye think ye have been deceived your self, and think ye shall deceive many one in Hadley? Would ye know my meaning plainly, quoth he?
Yea, quoth the Sheriff, good Mr. Doctor tell it us plainly.

Then said Doctor Taylor, I will tell you how I have been deceived, and as I think, I shall deceive a great many.
I am, as you see, a man that hath a very great Carcase, which I thought should have been buried in Hadley Church-yard, if I had died in my Bed, as I well hoped I should have done; but herein I see I was deceived: and there are a great number of worms in Hadley Churchyard, which should have had jolly feeding upon this Carion, which they have looked for many a day. But now I know we have been deceived, both I and they; for this Carcase must be burnt to ashes, and so shall they lose their bait and feeding, that they looked to have had of it.

Apeptheims of D. Taylor.
When the Sheriff and his Company heard him say so, they were amazed and looked one on another, marvel-ling at the mans constant mind, that thus without all fear made but a jest at the cruel Torment, and death now at hand prepared for him. Thus was their expectation clean disappointed. And in this appeared what was his resolution in his chiefest Wealth and Possession, namely, that he should shortly dye, and red wounds in his gavel which meditation if all our Bishops and spiritual men had used, they had not for a little worldly Glory forfaken the Word of God and Faith, which they in King Edwards days had preached and testified, not yet, to maintain the Bishop of Rome Authority, have committed so many to the fire as they did.

But let us return to Doctor Taylor, who at Colmsford was delivered to the Sheriff of Suffolk, and by him conducted to Hadley, where he suffered. When they were come to Lanham, the Sheriff stayed there two days; and thither came to him a great number of Gentlemen and Justices upon great horses, which all were appointed to aid the Sheriff. These Gentlemen laboured Doctor Taylor very sore to reduce him to the Romish Religion, promising him his Pardon, which, said they, we have here for you. They promised him great promotions, yea a Bishoprick if he would take it but all their labour and flattering words were in vain. For he had not built his house upon the sand in peril of falling at every puff of wind, but upon the sure and unmovable Rock, Christ. Wherefore he abode constant and unmoved unto the end.

After two days, the Sheriff and his Company led D.
Taylor towards Hadley, and coming within two miles of Hadley, he desired to light off his horse to make water: which done, he leapt, and let a frisk or twain, as men commonly do in dauncing. Why Master Doctor, quoth the Sheriff, how do you now? He answered: Well, God be praised, good Master Sheriff. Never better: for now I know I am almost at home. I lack not past two fitts to go over, and I am even at my Fathers House. But Master Sheriff, said he, shall we not go thorow Hadley? Yes, said the Sheriff, you shall go thorow Hadley. Then said he, O good Lord, I thank thee, I shall yet once ere I dye see my Flock, whom thou Lord knowest I have most heartily loved, and truly taught. Good Lord bless them, and keep them stedfast in thy Word and Truth.

When they were now come to Hadley, and came riding over the Bridge, at the Bridge foot waited a poor man with five small Children: who when he saw Doctor Taylor, he and his Children fell down upon their knees, and held up their hands, and cried with a loud Voice, and said, O dear Father and good Shephard, Doctor Taylor, God help and succour thee, as thou hast many a time succoured me and my poor Children. Such witness had the Servant of God of his virtuous and Charitable Alms given in his Life-time. For God would now the poor should testify of his good deeds to his singular comfort, to the example of others, and Confusion of his Persecutors and Tyrannous Adversaries. For the Sheriff and other that led him to death, were wonderfully astonished at this:
and the Sheriff fore rebuked the poor man for so crying.
The streets of Hadley were beset on both sides the way with Men and Women of the Town and Countrety, who waited to see him: whom when they beheld so led to Death, with weeping Eyes and lamentable Voices they cried, saying one to another, Ah good Lord!
there goeth our good Shephard from us, that so Faithfully hath taught us, so Fatherly hath cared for us, and so godly hath governed us. O Merciful God! what shall we poor scattered Lambs do? What shall come of this most Wicked World, Good Lord strengthen him, and comfort him: with such other most lamentable and piteous Voices.

Wherefore the People were sore rebuked by the Sheriff and Catchpoles his men, that led him: And D. Taylor evermore said to the people; I have Preached to you Gods Word and Truth, and am come this day to Seal it with my Blood.

Coming against the Almshouses, which he well knew, he cast to the poor People Money, which remained of that good People had given him in time of his Imprisonment.
As for his Living, they took it from him at his first going to Prison, so that he was sustained all the time of his Imprisonment by the Charitable Alms of good People that visited him.

Therefore the Money that now remained he put in a glove ready for the same purpose, and (as is said) gave it to the poor Almshouses standing at their doors to see him.

1555.

The Martyrdom of Doctor Taylor, burned at Hadley for the Testimony of the Gospel, February 9 Anno 1555.

And coming to the last of the Almshouses, and not seeing the poor that there dwelt, ready at their doors, as the other were, he asked: Is the blind man and blind woman, that dwelt here, alive? It was answered, Yea, they are there within. Then threw he glove and all in at the window, and so rode forth.

Note this custom.

Thus this good Father and Provider for the poor now took his leave of those, for whom all his Life he had a singular care and study. For this was his custom, once in a fortnight at the least, to call upon Sir Anthony Dayl, and others the rich Cloth-makers, to go with him to the Almshouses, and there to see how the poor lived; what they lacked in meat, drink, clothing, bedding, or any other necessities. The like did he also to other poor men that had many Children, or were sick. Then would he exhort and comfort them, and where he found cause, rebuke the unruly, and what they lacked, that gave he after his power: and what he was not able, he caused the rich and wealthy men to minister unto them. Thus shewed he himself in all things an example to his Flock, worthy to be followed; and taught by his deed, what a great treasure Alms is to all such as cheerfully for Christs sake do it.

Aldham
Common.

At the last, coming to Aldham Common, the place assigned where he should suffer, and seeing a great multitude of people gathered thither, he asked, What place is this, and what meaneth it that so much people are gathered hither? It was answered, It is Aldham Common, the place where you must suffer: and the people are come to look upon you. Then said he, Thanked be God, I am even at home, and so light from his horse, and with both his hands rent the hood from his head.

D Taylor is come home.

Now was his head noddled evil favouredly, and clipped much like as a man would clip a fools head; which cost the good Bishop Boner had bestowed upon him, when he degraded him. But when the people saw his reverend and ancient face, with a long white Beard, they burst out with weeping tears, and cried, saying, God save thee, good D. Taylor. Jesus Christ strengthen thee, and help thee. The Holy Ghost comfort thee; with such other like godly wilhes. Then would he have spoken to the people, but the Yeomen of the Guard were so busie about him, that as soon as he opened his mouth, one or other thrust a Tipstaff into his mouth, and would in no wise permit him to speak.

D Taylor could not be suffered to speak to the people.

Then desired he Licence of the Sheriff to speak; but the Sheriff denied it to him, and bad him remember his promise to the Council.

Well, quoth Doctor Taylor; promise must be kept. What this promise was, it is unknown: but the Common fame was, that after he and others were condemned, the Council sent for them, and threatened them they would cut their Tongues out of their Heads, except they would promise, that at their deaths they would keep silence, and not speak to the people. Wherefore they desirous to have the use of their Tongues, to call upon God as long as they might live, promised silence. For the Papists feared much, lest this mutation of Religion, from Truth to Lies, from Christs Ordinances to the Popish Traditions, should not so quietly have been received as it was, especially this burning of the Preachers: but they, measuring others minds by their own, feared lest any Tumult or Uprore might have been stirred, the people having so just a cause not to be contented with their doings, or else (that they most feared) the people should more have been confirmed by their godly Exhortations to stand stedfast against their vain Popish Doctrine and Idolatry. But thanks be to God, which gave to his Witnesses Faith and Patience, with stout and manly hearts to dispise all Torments: neither was there so much as any one man that once shewed any sign of disobedience towards the Magistrates. They shed their Bloods gladly in the defence of the Truth, so leaving example unto all men of true and perfect Obedience: which is to obey God more than men, and if need require it, to shed their own Blood rather than to depart from Gods truth.

The Gospel-lers are not feditious as the Papists commonly be.

Doctor Taylor perceiving that he could not be suffered to spake, sat down, and seeing one named Soyce, he called him, and said, Soyce, I pray thee come and pull off my Boots and take them for thy labour. Thou hast long looked for them, now take them. Then rose he up and put off his Clothes unto his shirt, and gave them away. Which done, he said with a loud voice, Good people, I have taught you nothing but Gods Holy Word, and those Lessons that I have taken out of Gods Blessed Book, the Holy Bible and I am come hither this day, to seal it with my Blood. With that Word, Homes, Yeoman of the Guard aforesaid, who had used Doctor Taylor very cruelly all the way, gave him a great stroke upon the head with a mallet, and said, Is that the keeping of thy promise, thou Heretic? Then he seeing they would not permit him to speak, knelt down and prayed, and a poor woman that was among the people stepped in and prayed with him; but her they thrust away, and threatened to tread her her down with Horfes: notwithstanding she would not remove, but abode and prayed with him. When he had prayed, he went to the Stake, and killed it, and fet himself into a Pitch-barrel, which they had fet for him to stand in, and so stood with his back upright against the Stake, with his Hands folded together, and his Eyes toward Heaven, and so he continually prayed.

Then they bound him with Chains, and the Sheriff called one Richard Donningham a Butcher, and commanded him to fet up Fagots: But he refused to do it, and said, I am lame Sir, and not able to lift a Fagot. The Sheriff threatened to fend him to Prison; notwithstanding he would not do it.

This King was also one of them which went which were burnt at Wey.

Then appointed he one Mulleine of Carsey, a man for his Vertues fit to be a Hangman, and Sejce a very Drunkard, and Warwick, who, in the Commotion time in King Edwards days, lost one of his Ears for his Seditious talk, amongst whom also was one Robert King a deceiver of Enterludes, who albeit was there present, and had doing there with the Gun-powder; what he meant and did therein (he himself faith he did it for the best, and for quick dispatch) the Lord knoweth, which shall judge all: More of this I have not to say.

These four were appointed to fet up the Fagots, and to make the Fire, which they most diligently did: and this Warwick cruelly cast a Fagot at him, which lighted upon his head, and brake his face, that the blood ran down his Visage. Then said Dr. Taylor, O Friend, I have harm enough, what needed that?

kelt words.

Furthermore, Sir John Shelton then standing by, as Dr. Taylor was speaking, and laying the Psalm Miserere in English, struck him on the Lips; Ye Knaves, said he, speak Latin, I will make thee. At the last they fet to fire; and Dr. Taylor, holding up both his hands, called upon God, and said, Merciful Father of Heaven, for Jesus Christ my Saviours sake, receive my Soul into thy hands. So hood he still without either crying or moving, with his hands folded together, till Sejce with a Halberd struck him on the head that the brains fell out, and the dead Corps fell down into the Fire.

Thus rendered the Man of God his blessed Soul into the hands of his merciful Father, and to his most dear and certain Saviour Jesus Christ, whom he most intirely loved, faithfully and earnestly preached, obediently followed in living, and constantly glorified in death.

is dead.

They that were present and familiarly conversant with this Doctor Taylor, reported of him, that they never did see in him any fear of death, but especially and above all the rest, which beides him suffered at the same time, always shewed himself merry and cheerful in time of his Imprisonment, as well before his Condemnation, as after; he kept one Countenance and like Behaviour. Whereunto he was the rather confirmed by the Company and Presence of Mr. John Bradford, who then was in Prison and Chamber with him.

An example of singular Courage in
Dr. Taylor.

The same Morning, when he was called up by the Sheriff to go to his burning (about three of the Clock in the Morning) being suddenly awaked out of his sound sleep, he fate up in his Bed, and putting on his Shirt, had these words, speaking somewhat thick after his accustomed manner, Ab horsen Thieves, ab horsen Thieves, rob God of his honour, rob God of his honour? Afterward being risen and tying his Points, he cast his Arms about a Balk which was in the Chamber between Mr. Bradford's Bed and his; and there hanging by the hands, said to Mr. Bradford; O Mr. Bradford, quoth he, what a notable way should I give if I were hanged? meaning for that he was a corpulent and big man. These things I thought good here to note, to set forth and declare to those that shall read this History, what a notable and singular gift of spirit and courage God had given to this godly and blessed Martyr.

At what time Dr. Taylor was deprived of his Benefice of Hadley, there was one called Sir Robert Bracher, a false pretended Protestant in King Edwards days, and afterward a deadly Enemy to the same Religion; who was also one of them that so unmercifully thrust Dr. Taylor's Wife and Children out of the doors, as she her self yet can testify: and notwithstanding the same now since became a Protestant again.

This Sir Robert Bracher aforesaid, coming to Hadley to the Burial of a certain Friend of his, and Gods great Enemy, one Walter Clarke, albeit he came somewhat too late to the Market (as he said) yet desirous to utter such Popish pelf and pack-ware as he brought with him, he opened there his Baggage of Peltitent Doctrine, preaching in the same Town of Hadley against Justification by Faith, of the Corporal Prefence, of Praying for the Dead, and Auricular Confession. Whereof Dr. Taylor having understanding by Letters, writeth again to them of Hadley, directing his Letter to his Wife in confirmation of the said Popish poysoned Sermon; the Copy of which Letter we thought not unworthy here in the end of this Story to be annexed, as under followeth.

A Letter of Dr. Taylor of Hadley, written to his Wife.

Dear Wife, I pray God be ever with us through Christ our only Mediator, Amen.

I thank you for my Cap; I am somewhat proud of it, for it is one step from the Clergy in these days. I thank God, my heart is clean divided from their Proceedings: for I know that no man can serve two Masters, specially if they agree no better than Christ and Antichrist do. I am glad that Hadley can skill of such packing ware as was brought thither the first day of May last past: Christs Sheep can discern Christs voice from the voice of Strangers, Thieves, or Hirelings. The Pack-bringer was sorry that he came too late to the Funeral Market of his faithful Friend. But here I will leave them both to Gods Judgment, and something touch the matter whereof the Pack-maker made mention on his opening day. At the first he called the Scripture (as I hear) full of dark Sentences, but indeed it is called of David, A Candle to our feet, and a Light to our paths. Our Saviour Christ calleth his Word, the Light which evil doers do flee from and hate, lest their deeds should be reproved thereby. S. Paul would have us to walk as Children of Light, and in any wise not to continue in Ignorance or Darknes. But all we in the World pertain to two Princes, either to the Father of Light and Truth, or else to the Prince of Darknes and Lies.

In these days Preachers declare evidently of whom they are feare, and with what spirit they speak, and to what Prince they belong. For they cry out against Gods Lights, Sun, Moon, Stars, Torches, Lamps, Lanthorns, Cressets, and Candles in Gods Book the Bible, provided of Gods great goodness and mercy to avoid all foul darknes, clouds and myles, or dangerous doubtful ways in this our Journey to our Heavenly Father, Long-home, Mansion-houses, and dearly purchased Heritage. Ejays, Gods faithful Messenger, faith, Wo be unto them that call sweet soures, good evil, and lights darknes. Therefore cometh my People into Captivity, because they have no understanding. Our Saviour Christ pronounceth Error and Heresies to remain among the People, so long as ignorance of the Scriptures remaineth. And hereby it appeareth to all good Consciences, what they mean, which defame or accuse Gods blessed Word being full of light, as though it were full of darknes. These Owls would have all day-lights scraped out of Books, Hearts, and Churches. O Lord turn their hearts and tongues; bow them from the way of darknes, lest they go to the Prince of Darknes, and be cast into the Pit of utter darknes, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth.

Now touching the Packs of Wooll, and the Packs of Cloth, I fear they were as all other Wares be, transubstantiated into stocks, even his very finest packing stuff against only Faith justifying, and for the Corporal Prefence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, for praying for Souls departed, and for Auricular Confession. Abrahams Justification by Faith, by Grace, by Promise, and not by Works, is plainly set forth both in the Epistle to the Romans, c. 4. and to the Galathians, c. 3. and Abrahams works of Obedience, in offering up his Son so long after his Justification, must needs be taken as a Fruit of a good Tree justifying before men, and not of justification before God; for then had man to glory in, then did Christ dye in vain.

And whereas Chap. 6. of Jobn was alleged, to prove that Christ did give his Body Corporally in his Supper, even as he had promised in the said Chapter, it is most untrue. For only he gave his Body Sacramentally, Spiritually, and effectually in his supper to the Faithful Apostles, and corporally he gave it in a Bloody Sacrifice for the Life of the World upon the Cross once for all. There in his own Person, in his own Natural Body he bare all our sins. By whose stripes we are healed, as S. Peter proceedeth, 1 Pet. 2. and Ezech. 53. The Mists

Description of the Pope's Kingdom.

But the Popish Mass is another matter. The Mass as it is now, is but one of Antichrists youngest daughters, in the which the Devil is rather present and received, than our Saviour, the Second Person in Trinity, God and Man. O Lord God Heavenly Father, for Christs sake, we beseech thee to turn again England to the right way it was in K. Edwards time, from this Babylonical, Jewish, spiritual whoredom, conspiracy, tyranny, detestable enormities, False Doctrine, Heresies, hardness of Heart, and contempt of thy Word and Commandments, from this evident and open idolatry, sacrifice, Symonie, Blasphemy, Superstition, Hypocrisy, Transubstantiate Angel of Light, and day-Devil, Kingdom of Lies, foul vain Schisms, Sects, Seditions, Apostasies, gay sweet Poyson, howled and fingered viperous venom, wily wolfishness, Satanical subtilty, and abomination in the sight of God and all such as put on the true Spectacles of Holy Scripture. I am the more plain now in this matter, because I fear greatly, that many will be too much ready to go from Christ to Antichrist, from the Bible, Gods true Service and Religion, to Latine lying Legends, Portraits, Mass Books, and Superstition. They say their Church cannot err in any point, when indeed they be not of Gods Church, and therefore they can do nothing but err, even as they do almost in all Cases of true Faith.

Christ's Popish applied.

But to come again to the Packer rather than Preacher, he bringeth S. Chrysostom, writing Ad populum Antiochenum where he maketh a comparison between Christs Flesh and Elias Cloak cast down to Elizeus, when Elias was taken up in the fiery Chariot; at length he saith, that Christ, ascending up to Heaven, took his Flesh with him, and also left his Flesh behind him in Earth.

The meaning of Chry-stom rightly expounded concerning Elias Cloak.
Of this memorial Cloak read before in D.
Ridley dis-putations.

The meaning of it is, he did ascend with his Flesh, and left a memorial Cloak of the same Body and Flesh, which he calleth his Flesh, as he in the Sacramental Phrase calleth Bread his Body, because it representeth his Body: & as in like manner of Sacramental speech, a Lamb was called the Passover, the Circumcision, Gods Covenant. He took up his Flesh corporally, and left his Flesh in Mystery and Sacrament Spiritually. Or it may be said, that he left his Flesh upon Earth, that is, his Mystical Body, his Faithful People; whom S. Paul calleth the Members of his Body, of his Flesh, of his Bones, Bpbes. 5.

The place of Genesis 49.

In the 49. Chapter of Genesis, there is no word of Christs Sacrament, but there is a prophecy of Christs Passion wherein his sole was bound, that is, his Body. And where he speaketh there of Grapes and Wine, it is as that is spoken of Christ in another place, where he saith, Ergo solus torcular calceavi, I alone did tread the Wine-press, meaning thereby, that Christ alone suffered painful Passion for the Remission of Sins, and for the consolation of his Faithful Soldiers.

Christs Natural Body cannot be divided.

It is not true that the Packer saith, that Christs infinite power may make his Body to be in a thousand places at once, as a Loaf to be in a thousand Bellies: for then may Christ divide the parts of his Body, as a Loaf is divided, and so consumed, and then might Scripture be false, appointing Christs Body to be but in one place. Acts 3. Phil. 3. Heb. 3. The Articles of our Faith tell us sufficiently where Christs Body is.

Christs Body was never in two places at once.

It was never in two places at once, neither ever shall be, neither ever can be corporally and naturally, neither ever was, is, can, or shall be eaten so with any corporal Mouths, as the Capernaïtes and the Papists most erroneously and heretically do judge. If our Saviour Jesus Christ hath no other Body natural than is made of the Substance of Bread, and is in a thousand places at once, as I have often said in Hadley, we are not yet redeemed, neither shall our Bodies rise again, and be made like unto his Glorious Body. We are sure that our Saviour Christs Body is made of none other substance than of his Mother the Blessed Virgin Maries substance. We are sure that he taketh not the nature of Angels, much less of Bread. Only he taketh on him the seed of Abraham, Heb. 2. In all things like unto us, sin only except.

Heb. 2.

And this is a comfortable Doctrine to us Christians, believing stedfastly, as the true Catholic Faith is, that Christ hath but two Natures, perfect God, and perfect Man. Upon this Rock Christs Church is builded, and the Gates of Hell shall never prevail against it, Matth. 16.

Anno 1555.

I speak nothing now of Auricular Confession, and praying for Souls departed, because I do not hear what Auricular confession. Praying for the dead. Sure I am that he can bring no Authentic and Canonical Warrant for such his practice. He may say what he will of Heretics and Greeks, and Flesh under forms, and not above forms, or above the board. He may conjure and convey, piss and repass, even what he will in such Clouds and Myths. He reproved the Scriptures as full of darkness, and yet is full of darkness himself. He did wilyly, to bring proofs out of Jewry, Turkey, and other strange places, for his round white Cake, for that such his pedlary self-pack is contrary to the plain simplicity of Christs Supper. He glanced at Priests marriage. He might against that have brought as ancient a Doctor as any be alledged out of Hebrew, for his Mass and Wafer Cake, that is Dr. Dives, 1 Tim. 4.

He meaneth

I marvel that he did not confute and confound S. Paul for the sentences written above the Altar, of the which he made mention in the Pulpit. For he and his Fellows of Oxford be so profound, so excellent, so glorious, and Triumphant Clerks, that they can easily prove a man an Ass, and writers in the Bible ignorant, simple, full of Errors, full of Heresies, and beggarly Fools. Yet they will be called Catholics, Faithful and true Christian People, Defenders of the Holy Mother the Church: but truly they take part with the Prince of darkness, with Antichrist, with Jezebel, Apoc. 2. They will not be called Papists, Pharisees, Jews, Turks, Heretics, and so forth: but whatsoever they will be called, Gods Religion had never more evident Adversaries, and that in all the chief points of it; no not then, when our Saviour Christ whips such Merchants out of the Temple, calling them a company of Thieves, Mat. 21. God give them Grace to repent. God be thanked that the Nobility feeling of late hath spied and stopped their Tyranny. O unhappy England! O more ungrateful People! sooner be- witched than the foolish Galaithians. We have now no excuse.

We have undoubtedly seen the true trace of the Prophetical, Apostolical, primitive Catholic Church. We are warned to beware, lest we be led out of that way, society, and Rule of Religion. Now we shall hear what Country Men we be, whether spiritual and Heavenly, or carnal and Worldly. We had as true knowledge as ever was in any Country, or at any time, since the beginning of the World, God be praised therefore. If Hadley, being so many years perverted in such Truth, will now willingly and wittingly forsake the same, and desire it self with the Cake-God, Idolatry, and other Antichristianity thereunto belonging, let it surely look for many and wonderful plagues of God shortly. Though another have the Benefice, yet as God knoweth, I cannot but be careful for my dear Hadley. And therefore as I could not but speak, after the first abominable Mass begun there, I being present no more, I cannot but write now being absent, hearing of the wicked prophannation of my late Pulpit by such a wily wolf. Gods love, mercy, goodness and favour hath been unspeakable, in teaching us the right way of Salvation and Justification, let us all have some zeal, some care how to serve him according to his good will written. The God of Love and peace be ever in Hadley, through Christ our only Advocate. Amen.

After that Steven Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, had got the Laws, and the secular Arm on his side, as ye have heard, with full Power and Authority to reign and rule as he listed, and had brought these godly Bishops and reverend Preachers afore said under foot, namely, the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury, Dr. Ridley Bishop of London, Master Latimer, Mr. Hooper Bishop of Worcester and Glocester, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Sanders, Doctor Taylor, and Master Bradford, all which he had now presently con- demned, and some also burned; he supposed now all had been cock-sure, and that Christ had been conquered for ever, so that the People, being terrified with example of these great Learned men condemned, never would, nor durst once trust against their violent Religion: not much unlike in this behalf, to the manner of the Turks, who when they cannot maintain their Sect by good Learning and Truth of Gods Word, think by violence of Sword to force whom they can to their Belief; and that done, afterward make Laws, no man under pain of Heresie to dispute, or once to call in question any of their Proceedings.

Even so, Steven Gardiner and his Fellows, when they see they cannot prevail by trial of Gods Word, and Discourse of Learning, neither are disposed simply to seek for Truth where it is to be found, they take Exceptions against Gods Word, affirming it to be intricate, obscure, and insufficient to be his own Judge, and therefore that of necessity it must be judged by the Popes Church; and so having Kings and Queens on their side, they seek not to persuade by the Word of God, nor to win by Charity, but instead of the Law of God, they use (as the Proverb faith) πρὸς τὸν θάνατον, compelling men by Death, Fire, and Sword (as the Turks do) to believe that in very deed they think not. And indeed after Flesh and Blood this seemeth to be a sure way. Neither peradventure are they ignorant how gaily this way thriveth with the Turks: and therefore think they to practise the same, at least wile to they do, upon what example soever they do it. And thus condemned they these godly Learned Preachers and Bishops aforesaid, supposing, as I said, that all the rest would soon be quailed by their example. But they were deceived: for within eight or nine days after that Steven Gardiner had given Sentence against Master Hooper, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Sanders, Dr. Taylor, and Mr. Bradford, being the eighth of February, six other good men were brought likewise before the Bishops for the same cause of Religion, to be examined, whose Names were William Pigot Butcher, Steven Knight Barber, Thomas Tomkins Weaver, Steven Hawke Gentleman, John Laurence Priest, William Hunter Apprentice.

Steven Gardiner seeing thus his Device disappointed, and that Cruelty in this case would not serve to his Expectation, gave over the matter as utterly discouraged, and from that day meddled no more in such kind of condemnations, but referred the whole doing thereof to Boner Bishop of London: who supplied that part right doubtfully, as in the further Process of this History hereafter evidently and too much may appear. Thus Bishop Boner, taking the matter in hand, called before him in his Confraternity at Pauls, the Lord Mayor, and certain Aldermen sitting with him, the six Persons afore-named, upon the eighth day of February in the year aforesaid, and on the next day, being the ninth of February, read the Sentence of Condemnation upon them, as appeareth in Boners own Registers: such quick these men could make in dispatching their Business at once. Notwithstanding, because the Death of these Condemned Martyrs did not follow incontinently before the next Month of March, I will defer the prosecuting of their matter, till I come by the Grace of the Lord, to the time and day of their Suffering.

In the mean time, what was the cause that their execution was so long deferred after their Condemnation, I have not precisely to say, unless peradventure the Sermon of Alphonfus the Spanish Friar, and the Kings Confessor, did some good. For so I find, that when those six Persons aforesaid were cast upon Saturday the ninth of February, upon Sunday following, which was the tenth of February, the said Alphonfus a Gray Frier preached before the King: in which Sermon he did earnestly inveigh against the Bishops for burning of men, saying plainly that they learned it not in Scripture, to burn any for his Conscience: But the contrary, that they should live and be converted, with many other things more to the same purpose. But touching the lingering of these mens death, as I have not certainly to affirm, so let it pass.

Upon the 14. of February Mr. Robert Ferrar, Bp. of S. Davids, was sent towards S. Davids, there to be condemned and executed. Touching whose Martyrdom, so much as it fell not before the Month of March, we will defer the History thereof till we come to the day and time of his Suffering.

Furthermore, this foresaid 14. day of February, the Lord Chancellor, and other his Fellow Bishops, caused the Image of Thomas Becket, that old Romish Traytor, to be set up over the Mercers Chappel door in Cheapside in London, in the Form and Shape of a Bishop, with Miter and Crozier. Howbeit within two days after his Erection, his two Blessing Fingers were first broken away, and on the next day (being the seventeenth of February) his Head also was stricken off: whereupon arose great trouble, and many were suspected: among whom one Mr. John Barnes Mercer, dwelling over against the same Chappel, was vehemently by the Lord Chancellor charged withal, as the doer thereof, and the rather, for that he was a Professor of the Truth. Wherefore he and three of his Servants were committed to Prison: and at his delivery (although it could not be proved upon him) he was bound in a great sum of Money as well to build it up again as often as it should be broken down, as also to watch and keep the same. And therefore at this his compelled charges the Image was again set up the second day of March then next ensuing: but (for lack be like of careful watching) the fourteenth day of the same Month in the night, the Head of that dangerous Beast, over whom there was such Charge given, was again the second time broken off: which thing was so heinously taken, that the next day, being the 15. day, there was a Pooclamation made in London, that whosoever would tell who did strike off his Head (though he were of counsel, and not the principal doer) he should have not only his pardon, but also one hundred Crowns of Gold, with hearty thanks. But it was not known who did it.

The 18. of February, Queen Mary at length, after long delay, made full Answer to the King of Denmarks Letters, who had written before two Letters to the said Queen, in the behalf of Mr. Coverdale, for his deliverance, who at that time went under Sureties, and was in great danger, had he not been rescued by the great suit and Letters of the said King of Denmark.

The Matter and Copy of which his Suit and Letters, as they came to our hands, we have here set forth and express, whereby the singular love of this good King, towards the Truth of Gods Word, and the Professors thereof, might the better appear to the World.

First, This virtuous and godly King Christianus, M. Coverdale hearing of the Captivity of Miles Coverdale, of whom he had had some knowledge before (being there in Denmark in King Henry the Eighths time) and lamenting his dangerous case, and partly through the Intercession of Mr. Machabaus, Superintendent in Denmark, who was partly of Kin to Mr. Coverdale's Wife, made Intercession by Letters to Q. Mary, desiring and requesting the said Miles Coverdale to be sent unto him. The date of which his Letters was about the Kalends of May, Anno Dom. 1554. The Copy whereof here followeth.

Itaque vestram opem implorat, ut quam ipse gratiam & favorem apud nos mereatur, hominis innoctens calamitati ac periculo (quod ipse non minus suum putat) accommodemus. Movemur profecto non temere illius viri (cui suo merito imprimis benevolamus) commiseratione, ejusque maxime testimonio de captivi Antistitis innocentia atque integritate: de qua quidem est, ut eo melius speremus, quod multis jam morte multatus fontibus, de ipso integram adhuc Deni esse voluit. Proinde non dubitavimus Serenitatem vestram quantam possumus diligentia atque animi propensione rogare, ut nostra causa captivi illius D. Milonis rationem clementer habere dignetur, cumque ut à sceleris, ita à pene etiam atrocitate alienum esse voluit, & temporum offensam, qua ipsum quoque affligi verisimile est, nobis nostraeque amicitiae regie & precibus, praeteritum hoc primo auditu, benigne condonare, saltem carnis, ut si forte hoc rerum statu gravi ejus praesentia sit, incolumis ad nos cum suis dimittatur. Id nobis summi beneficii loco, & Serenitati vestrae in florantissimi regni auspiciis (quae angusta, fausta, ac fortunata serenitati vestrae ex animo optamus) ad clementia laudem honorisq. erit: & nos dabimus operam, ut cum amicitiae nostrae habitam rationem intellexerimus, eo majore studio in mutam vicem gratitudinis omniumque officiorum erga Serenitatem vestram ejusque universum regnum & subditos incumbamus. Deum optimam maximam precamur, ut Serenitati vestrae ad gloriam sui nominis, & publicam salutem felices omnium rerum successus, & incolumitatem diuturnam largiatur. Data ex arce nostra Coldingeum, septimo Calendae Maij, Anno 1555.

Vester consanguineus, frater, & amicus, Christianus, Rex.

To these Letters of the King, Queen Mary answering again, declared that the said Miles Coverdale was in no such Captivity for any Religion, but for certain Debt: so neither plainly granting, or expressly denying his Request, but using a colourable excuse for shitting off the matter, as appeareth by his second Letter sent to the Queen, dated the four and twentieth day of September, as followeth.

Christianus Dei gratia Daniae, Norwegiae, Gottorum, & Vandalorum Rex: Sleswici, Holsatiae, Stormariae, ac Dithemae Dux; Comes in Oldenburgh & Delmenhorst, Serenit. Principi Dominae Mariae, Angliae, Franciae, & Hiberniae Reginae, fidei defensor. &c. Sorori & consanguineae nostrae charissimae salutem, & omnium rerum optatos & faustos successus.

Redita sunt nobis literae Serenitatis vestrae, quibus benigne admodum ad deprecationem nostram, qua pro D. Milonis Coverdali Ecclesiae Exoniensis nuper nominati Episcopi incolumitate usi sumus, respondetur: ita ut intelligamus, licet alterius causae quam quae nobis innoverat, periculum sustineat, tamen Serenitatem vestram nostrae intercessionis eam rationem habituram esse, ut illam sibi profuisse ipse Coverdalis sentiat. Cui quidem promissioni regiae cum tantum meritum tribuamus, ut ea freti non dubitaverimus ejus captivi propinquos (nobis imprimis charos) à merore ac solitudine ad spem atque expectationem certa salutis vocare, facere non potuimus, quin & gratias Serenitati vestrae pro tam prompta ac benigne voluntate, non modo hujus beneficii, sed etiam perpetuae inter nos ac regna nostra conservandae ac colendae amicitiae ageremus, & quantum in nobis esset, quod ad amplectandam persequendaque haec auspiciata initia perimeret, nihil praetermitteremus. Neque vero nobis de clementia ac moderatione Serenitatis vestrae unquam dubium fuit, quam Deus optimus maximus ad gloriam sui nominis & fructum publicae utilitati: ut magis ac magis efflorescere vellet, ex animo optamus. Proinde cum ob rationes varias, neque aliud gravius delictum D. Coverdali, teneri Serenitas vestra tribuit, est (aut ut ipsius causa letemur, eoque minus ambigamus, liberationem incolumitatemque ejus nostris precibus liberaliter donari. Nam & accepimus ipsum Episcopatum, cujus nomine arario obstrictus fuerat, cessisse, ut inde satisfactio peteretur: maxime cum neque diu eo potius fuisse, neque tantum emolumentum inde percepisse dicatur.

Quinetiam si qua rationum perplexitas, aut alia forte causa reperiri posset: tamen sollicitudinem ac habitationem nobis Serenitatis vestrae tam amice atque officio deferentes literae omnem excuserunt: ut existimemus Serenitatem vestram, quoad ejus fieri posset, magis honorem nostrum, quam quid ab eo exigi posset, consideraturam: Itaque Serenitatem vestram repetitis precibus urgere non constituimus: sed potius testatum facere, quam accepta nobis Serenitatem vestrae gratificatio sit, cujus talem eventum omnino speramus, ut ipse Coverdalis coram nobis sua incolumitatem à Serenitatem vestrae beneficium propediem representare possit. Illud vero imprimis Serenitatem vestrae vicissim persuasum esse cupimus, nos non solum referende gratias, sed etiam stabilendae providebendaeque inter nos ac regna utrinque nostra amicitiae ac necessitudinis mutuae occasionem aut facultatem nullam esse praetermissuros. Deus opt. max. Serenitatem vestrae diu feliciter ac beate incolumem esse velit. Data ex oppido nostro Ottonenfi, 24. Sept. Anno 1554.

Vester frater & consanguineus, Christianus.

¶ Christierne by the Grace of God King of Denmark, Norway, Gotland and of the Vandals; Duke of Sleswick, Holsten, Stormar, and Demmarh; Earl of Oldenburgh and Delmenhorst, &c. To the most noble Princeps and Lady Mary, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. Our most dearly beloved Sister and Cousin, wisheth prosperity with good and lucky success of all things.

WE have received your Majesties Letter, whereby answer is rendered, and that very graciously unto our Petition, which we made for the safeguard of Mr. Coverdale, late called Bishop of Exon. So that we perceive, though he be in danger for another cause than was signified unto us afore, yet your Majesty will so regard our Intercession, that Coverdale himself shall understand it to have done him good. To the which Regal Promise, seeing we (as reason would we should do) attribute so much, that trusting unto the same, we doubt not, whereas he being in Captivity, his Friends, whom we specially tender, are therefore in heaviness and care, your good Promise doth call them from such sorrow, and solitudine, to the hope and expectation of his assured welfare: we could not do otherwise, but render thanks unto your Majesty for such your ready and gracious good will, not only in respect of this benefit, but also of the conservation and keeping of perpetual Amity between us and our Realms, and so, as much as in us lieth, to omit nothing that to the nourishing and continuance of these fortunate beginnings might appertain. Neither had we ever any doubt concerning the clemency and moderation of your goodness, whom we heartily beseech Almighty God ever more and more to prosper, unto the glory of his Name, and profit of the Commonwealth. Wherefore seeing your Majesty writeth, that Mr. Coverdale is in danger for certain Accompts of Money, and not for any other more grievous Offence, we have cause on his behalf to rejoice: and therefore we doubt so much the less, that at our request he shall graciously have his deliverance given him, and be out of danger. For as touching the Bishoprick, by reason whereof he came in Debt, we understand he yielded it up, that no Payment might thereof be required, specially seeing he is reputed neither to have enjoyed it long, neither to have had at any time so great Commodity of it. Moreover, though it be possible to find some perplexity in the Account, or haply some other cause, yet your Majesties Letters, offering such favour and benignity, have taken from us all carefulness and doubt: Inasmuch, that we think your Majesty, as much as may be, will have more respect unto our honour, than to that which might of him be required. And therefore we purpose not to trouble your Majesty by repeating of our Petition, but to declare how greatly we esteem it, that your Majesty would gratifie us herein: whereof we plainly hope for an end, that Coverdale himself shall shortly in your Presence make declaration concerning the benefit of his welfare obtain'd of your Majesty. And of this we desire your Majesty to be specially assured again, that

¶ To these Letters it was a great while before the Queen would answer. At length through great suite made, the next year, the 18. of February, she answered again in this wise.

February 18. The office of Bishop Bener's intimation sent into his Diocesis, to receive the Cardinals Absolution, and to be reconciled to the Pope in Lent next following.

The same Month, the 19. day, was a certain intimation set forth and Printed in the name of Bener, wherein was contained a general moution, and streight charge given to every Man and Woman within his Diocesis, to prepare themselves against Lent then near approaching, to receive the glad tidings of Peace and Reconciliation sent from the Pope Julius the third, by Pool his Cardinal and Legate de Latere, and so receive also the joyful benefit of Absolution, being sent first from the Cardinal to Bener, and from him to every of his Archdeacons to be Ministered to every Private Person within his Diocesis, that would come the said holy time of Lent to his Pastor or Curate to be confessed, and to receive of him wholefom Counsel, Penance, and Absolution. Signifying moreover, that as he was authorized by the foresaid Cardinal, so he for the same purpose had induced with the like Authority all and singular Pastors and Curates within his Diocesis, to reconcile and assail from their former Heresie and Schism, and from the Censures of the Church, such as would resort unto them. And lest any scruple or doubt, rising peradventure in their Consciences, should be any stay or let in this behalf, he hath assigned and deputed therefore through his Diocesis certain learned men, to whom they might resort, or else might open their griefs to any of his Archdeacons, or else come to his own person, and so should be resolved.

And therefore all manner of doubts and obstacles set aside, he straitly willed and commanded every Man and Woman to come to Confession, and to enjoy this benefit of Reconciliation, and Absolution, against the first Sunday next after Easter ensuing, and not to fail. For the which purpose he had specially commanded the Pastors and Curates of every Parish to certify up in writing the names of every Man and Woman so reconciled, and so forth: The Copy of which intimation here under followeth.

The Declaration of the Bishop of London to be published to the Lay-people of his Diocesis, concerning their Reconciliation.

Edmund by the permission of God, Bishop of London, doth lend greeting in our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Whereas this noble Realm of England, dividing it self from the Unity of the Catholick Church, and from the agreement in Religion with all other Christian Realms, hath been, besides many other miseries and plagues, which Gods indignation hath poured upon it grievously also vexed, and sore infected with many and sundry sorts of Sects of Hereticks, as Arrians, Anabaptists, Libertines, Zuinglians, Lutherans, and many other, all which Sects be most repugnant; and contrary one against another, and all against Gods Truth, and Christs Catholick Faith; whereupon hath grown such slander to the Realm, such malice and disagreement among our selves, the Inhabitants thereof, such Treasons, Tumults, and Insurrections against our Prince, such Blasphemy and dishonour unto God, as no mans Tongue or Pen is able to express: It hath pleased the goodness of God to cast his eye of mercy and clemency upon us, and to move the Popes Holiness to send his most Godly Messenger, the most reverend Father in God, the Lord Cardinal Poole Legate de Latere, to bring us the glad tidings of Peace and Reconciliation, and to reduce and bring home unto the fold the lost sheep that were gone astray: whose message, as it hath been honourably received of the King and Queens Majesties, even so the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons at the last Parliament have received it, revoking all Laws the which in the time of Schism were promulged against the Authority of the Popes Holiness, and restoring the same and the Church of Rome to all that Power which they had in this Realm before the said Schism, the which Reconciliation was also most gladly and joyfully embraced, as well of all the Clergy and Convocation of the Province of Canterbury, as also of many other Persons; and being so great and necessary to be extended to every Person of the Realm, it hath pleased the said Lord Legates Grace to give and impart unto me the said Bishop of London, for my said Diocesis, and to all such as I shall appoint in that behalf, Power and Authority to absolve and reconcile all and every Person thereof, as well of the Clergy as of the Laity, and as well Men as Women, the which will renounce their Errors and (being penitent) will humbly require to be restored to the Unity of the Catholick Church, as by the Letters of the said Lord Legates Grace sent unto me, and from me sent unto every of the Archdeacons within my Diocesis, more at large may and doth appear. And so much as in mine own person, as well for the multitude of People, as distance of places, I cannot Minister this benefit unto every private Person my self, and for that also the holy time of Lent is now at hand, in which every true Christian Man ought to come unto his own Pastor and Curate, to be of him confessed, and to receive at his hand wholefom Counsel, Penance, and Absolution: these are therefore as well to give knowledge unto every one of you, as also to signify and declare, that for that purpose, I have by the said Authority chosen, named, and deputed, and so by these presents do chuse and depute all and singular Pastors and Curates having Cure of Souls within my Diocesis, and being themselves reconciled herein, that they and every of them by Authority hereof, shall have full Power and Authority to absolve all such as be Lay-persons of their Parishes from Heresie and Schism, and from the Censures of the Church, into which they be fallen by occasion thereof also, & to reconcile to the Church all such which shall declare themselves penitent, and desirous to enjoy the benefit of the said reconciliation. And whereas divers Pastors and Curates in Sundry Parishes peradventure be not able to satisfy theminds, and to appeale the Consciences of some of their Parishioners in Cases that shall trouble them, I have therefore given also Authority to every Arch-Deacon of my Diocesis within his Archdeaconry, to name and appoint certain of the best learned in every Deanery of their Archdeaconry, to supply that lack, so that every Man so troubled may repair to any one of them within the said Deanery, whom he shall like best, to be instructed and appeased in that behalf. And also I have appointed, that if this being done, there shall yet remain any scruple in the parties Conscience, and himself not satisfied, then the said party shall repair unto one of mine Archdeacons or Chaplains, unto whom his mind shall be most inclined, or else to repair unto mine own self, to be resolved in his said scruple or doubt, and to receive and take such order therein, as to one of the said Archdeacons, or unto me shall therein appear to be most expedient.

Further certifying and declaring unto you, that I have given commandment herein to all my Archdeacons, that they monish and command every Pastor and Curate within their Archdeacons, that they, having knowledge hereof, do on the first Holiday next then following, at the Mass time, when the Multitude of People is present, declare all these things unto their Parishioners, and exhort them that they esteem this Grace accordingly, and reconcile themselves to the Church before the first Sunday after Easter next ensuing: which thing I also do command by the tenor hereof, with intimation that the said time being once past, and they not so reconciled, every one of them shall have Process made against him, according to the Canons, as the cause shall require: for which purpose the Pastors and Curates of every Parish shall be commanded by their Archdeacon, to certify me in writing of every man and womans name that is not so reconciled.

Further, herewith I do signify and declare unto you, that our holy Father the Pope Julius the Third of that Name, like a most tender and natural Father, hearing of the return and recovery of his Prodigal Child this Realm of England, hath himself made much joy and gladness hereat, and also all other true Christian Realms have done the like. Exhorting you therefore in our Lord not to be unthankful your selves, or negligent in this behalf, but diligently to seek for it, joyfully to embrace it, and fruitfully to use it, remembering withal the monition and charge which came from me the last year, concerning your coming to Confession in Lent, and receiving the Sacrament at Easter: which monition to all effects and purposes I have now here repeated and renewed, charging you, and also all your Curates therewith. And because all our duties is earnestly and devoutly to pray for the prosperous estate of our Sovereigns, the King and the Queen of this Realm, I do finally require and pray you, as heartily as I can, to pray for their Majesties accordingly; and specially that it may please Almighty God, to send unto her Grace a good time, and to make her a glad Mother, which cannot be but unto us all great joy, much comfort and ineffable profit. Given at London the 19. day of the Month of February, in the year of our Lord God, after the computation of the Church of England, 1554. and of my Translation the 16th.

The Form of Absolution to be kept by the Pastors and Curates in private Confessions, concerning this Reconciliation.

The Absolution of B. Tenor to be used in his Diocese.

Our Lord Jesus Christ absolve you, and by the Apostolic Authority to me granted and committed, I absolve you from the Sentences of Excommunication, and from all other Censures and Pains, into the which you be fallen by reason of Heresy, or Schism, or any other ways: and I restore you unto the unity of our holy Mother the Church, and the Communion of all Sacraments, dispensing with you for all manner of irregularity; and by the same Authority I absolve you from all your sins, In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The lamentable History of Mr. James Hales Judge.

The History of Judge Hales.

IN the History of Mr. Hooper mention was touched a little before of Judge Hales, wherefore something would be said more in this place touching that matter. But because the Story of that man, and of his end, is sufficiently comprehended in our first Book of Acts & Monuments, we shall not greatly need to stand upon rehearsal of every particular matter touching the whole, but only taking the chiefest, and leaving the rest, we will report somewhat of the Communication between the Bishop of Winchester and him; declaring withal how false and untrue the excuse is of our Adversaries, which so precisely by the Law defend themselves, and say, that in all their doings they did nothing but by the Law, to bear them out. Which if it be so, how did they then to Anne Askew? What Law had they, when they had condemned her first for a dead woman, then afterward to rack her? By what Law did they call up Mr. Hooper, and prison him for the Queens Debt, when the Queen in very deed did owe him fourscore pounds, and kept him a year and a half in Prison, and gave him never a penny? By what Law did B. Boner condemn and burn Richard Mekins, a Lad of 15 years, when the first Jury had quit him, and he at the Stake revoked all Heresies, and praised the said Boner to be a good man; and also having him in Prison, would not suffer his Father and Mother to come to him, to comfort their own Child? What Law had they to put Mr. Rogers in Prison, when he did neither preach nor read Lecture after the time of the Queens Inhibition, and when they had kept him in his own House half a year, being not deprived of any Living, yet would not let him have an half penny of his own Livings to relieve him, his Wife and eleven Children? By what Law was Thomas Tomkins hand burnt, and afterward his Body consumed to Ashes? What good Law or Honesty was there to burn the three poor Women at Garsy, with the Infant Child falling out of the Mothers Womb, when as they all before their death recanted their words and opinions, and were never abjured before? So here likewise in this case, what order or right of Law did Steven Gardiner follow in troubling and imprisoning Judge Hales, when he had done nothing neither against Gods Law, nor Mans Law, in proceeding by Order of Law against certain presumptuous persons, which both before the Law, and against the Law then in force, took upon them to say their Mass? as ye shall hear in these his Answers and Communication had with Steven Gardiner here under ensuing.

The Communication between the Lord Chancellor and Judge Hales, being there among other Judges, to take his Oath in Westminster-Hall, An. 1553. Octob. 6.

M After Hales, ye shall understand, that like as the Queens Highness hath heretofore conceived good opinion of you, especially for that ye stood both faithfully and lawfully in her Cause of just Succession, refusing to set your Hand to the Book among others that were against her Grace in that behalf: so now, through your own late defects against certain her Highnesses doings, ye stand not well in her Graces favor; and therefore before ye take any Oath, it shall be necessary for you to make your purgation.

Hales. I pray you my Lord what is the cause?

Chan. Information is given, that ye have indicted certain Priests in Kent for saying Mass.

Hales. My Lord, it is not so, I indicted none; but indeed certain Indictments of like matter were brought before me at the last Assizes there holden, and I gave order therein as the Law required. For I have professed the Law, against which in cases of Justice I will never, God willing, proceed, nor in any wise dissemble, but with the same shew forth my Conscience, and if it were to do again, I would do no less than I did.

Cha. Yea, Mr. Hales, your Conscience is known well enough, I know you lack no Conscience.

Hales. My Lord, you may do well to search your own Conscience; for mine is better known to my self than to you: and to be plain, I did as well use Justice in your said Mass-case by my Conscience, as by Law, wherein I am fully bent to stand in trial to the uttermost that can be objected. And if I have therein done any injury or wrong, let me be judged by the Law; for I will seek no better defence, considering chiefly that it is my Profession.

Chan. Why Mr. Hales, although you had the rigour of the Law on your side, yet ye might have had regard to the Queens Highness present doings in that case. And further, although ye seem to be more than precise in the Law, yet I think ye would be very loth to yield to the extremity of such advantage as might be gathered against your proceedings in the Law, as ye have sometime taken upon you in place of Justice, and if it were well tried, I believe ye should not be well able to stand honestly thereto.

Hales. My Lord, I am not so perfect, but I may err for lack of knowledge. But both in Conscience, and such Knowledge of the Law as God hath given me, I will do nothing but I will maintain it, and abide in it: and if my goods and all that I have be not able to counterpoise the case, cate, my Body shall be ready to serve the turn; for they be all at the Queens Highnesss pleasure.

Cha. Ah Sir, ye be very quick and stout in your answers. But as it should seem, that which you did was more of a will favouring the Opinion of your Religion against the Service now used, than for any occasion or zeal of Justice, seeing the Queens Highness doth sit both as yet, willing all her Faithfull Subjects to embrace it accordingly: and where you offer both Body and Goods in your Trial, there is no such matter required at your Hands, and yet ye shall not have your own will neither.

Hales. My Lord, I feele not wilfull will, butto shew my self as I am bound in love to God and Obedience to the Queens Majesty, in whose Cause willingly for Justice sake, all other respects set apart, I did of late, as your Lordship knoweth, adventure as much as I had. And as for my Religion, I trust it be such as pleaseth God, wherein I am ready to adventure as well my Life as my Substance, if I be called thereunto. And so in lack of mine own Power and will, the Lords will be fulfilled.

Cha. Seeing you be at this point M. Hales, I will presently make an end with you. The Queens Highness shall be informed of your Opinion and Declaration. And as her Grace shall thereupon determine, ye shall have knowledge. Until such time as ye may depart as ye came, without your Oath, for as it appeareth, ye are scarce worthy the place appointed.

Hales. I thank your Lordship: and as for my Vocation, being both a Burden and a Charge more than ever I desired to take upon me; whensoever it shall please the Queens Highness to call me thither, I shall most humbly with due contentation obey the same, and so be departed from the Bar.

Not many days after this Communication or Colloquy in Westminster-Hall, which was October 5. Anno 1553. M. Hales at the commandment of the Bishop was committed to the Kings Bench, where he remained constant until Lent: then was he removed to the Counter in Breadstreet, and afterward from thence was carried to the Fleet.

Being in the Fleet, what it was that he had granted unto the Bishops, by their fraudulent assaults and persuasions; namely, of D. Day Bishop of Chichester, and of Judge Mortimer (as it is thought) overcome at last, I have not to say.

This is certain, that shortly after, calling himself better to remembrance, he was brought to great repentance and Terror of Conscience. Inasmuch, that for very anguish of Heart he was ready with his Penknife to kill himself there in the Prison, and had (no doubt) so done, had not the Merciful Providence of the Lord rescued him miraculously, as ye shall hear.

It hapned when supper time came, that he should be called down, M. Hales having little mind either to eat or to drink, gate him straightway to Bed, where he lay all the Night sobbing and groaning, and took (God knoweth) little rest or sleep. At length when morning came, about 6. of the Clock he sent his Servant for a Cup of beer, under pretence as though he were thirsty and desirous to drink; whether this Cause were true or feigned it is unknown: but this followed, that his man was scarce out of the Chamber, when he with his Penknife had wounded himself in divers places of his Body, and was purposed (no doubt) to have destroyed himself; had not the goodness of the Lord given present help in time of opportunity. Whereby it is evident for all men to understand, how Gods favour was not absent from the man, although he thought himself utterly forsaken for his denial, as by the sequel may well appear.

For as soon as he had sent his man out of his Chamber (see what God would have done) even afore the Chamber door creaks the Butler met him: who being desired to fill the drink, and taking the Cup, the other returned again unto his Master, at the same very time when he was working his own Destruction: whereby M. Hales at that time was stopp'd of his purpose, and preserved, not without Gods manifest good will and providence. When Winchester had knowledge of it, straightway he taketh occasion thereby to Blaspheme the Doctrine of the Gospel, which he openly in the Star-chamber called Doctrine of Desperation. Master Hales being within a while after recovered of those wounds, and delivered out of Prison, gotten himself home unto his House where he, either for the greatness of his sorrow, or for lack of good Counsel, or for that he would avoid the necessity of hearing Mass, having all things set in order, a good while before that pertaining to his Testament, casting himself into a shallow River, was drowned therein; which was about the beginning of the Month of February, or in the Month of January before Anno 1555.

The unhappy chance of this so worthy a Judge was surely the Cause of great sorrow and grief unto all good men, and it gave occasion besides unto certain Divines to stand something in doubt with themselves, whether he were reprobate or saved, about which matter it is not for me to determine either this way or that: for he that is our Judge, the time shall be his Judge; and he it is that will lay all things open when the time cometh. This in the mean time is certain and sure, that the Deed of the man in my mind ought in no wise to be allowed, which if he did wittingly, then do I discommend the mans reason. But if he did it in phrensie, and as being out of his wits, then do I greatly pity his Case.

Yet notwithstanding, seeing Gods Judgments be secret and we likewise in doubt upon what intent he did thus punish himself, neither again is any man certain, whether he did repent or no before the last Breath went out of his Body; me thinketh, their Opinion is more indifferent herein, which do rather disallow the example of the Deed, than despair of his Salvation.

Otherwise, if we will adjudge all those to Hell that have departed the World after this sort, how many examples have we in the first Persecutions of the Church, of those Men and Women, who being registred in the works of worthy Writers, have notwithstanding their praise and Commendation?

For what shall I think of those young men, who being sought for to do Sacrifice to Heathen Idols, did cast down themselves head-long, and break their own Necks, to avoid such horrible pollution of themselves? What shall I say of those Virgins of Antioch, who to the end they might not defile themselves with uncleanness, and with Idolatry, through the perswasion of their Mother, casting themselves head-long into a River together with their Mother, did foredo themselves, although not in the same water, yet after the same manner of drowning as this Master Hales did? What shall I say of the other two Sisters, which for the self-same quarter did violently throw themselves head-long into the Sea, as Eusebius doth record? In whom, though perchance there was no less confidence to bear out the pains which should be ministered of the wicked unto them, yet that their good desire to keep their Faith and Religion unspotted was commended and praised.

Another like example of Death is mentioned by Nicophorus, and that in another Virgin likewise, whose name is expressed in Hierom to be Brasyl Dyrrachina, who to keep her Virginity feigned her self to be a Witch, and so conventing with the young man which went about to deflower her, pretended that she would give him an herb which should preserve him from all kind of Weapons; and so to prove it in her self, laid the herb upon her own throat, bidding him smite, whereby she was slain, and so with the loss of her Life her Virginity was saved.

Hereunto may be joyned the like Death of Sophronia, a Matron of Rome, who when she was required of Mazentius the Tyrant to be defiled, and saw her Husband more slack than he ought to have been in saving her honestly, bidding them that were sent for her to tarry a while till she made her ready, went into her Chamber, and with a Weapon thrust her self through the Breast, and dyed. Now who is he that would reprehend the worthy Act of Achete, which biting off his own Tongue spit it out into the Harlots Face?

These Examples I do not here infer, as going about either to excuse, or to maintain the hainous fact of M. Hales, which I would with rather by silence might be drowned in oblivion; but yet notwithstanding, as touching the Person of the man, whatsoever his fact was, because we are not sure whether he at the last Breath repented again, because we do not know, nor are able to comprehend the bottomless depth of the Graces and Mercies

The History of Thomas Tomkins, who having first his hand burned, after was burned himself by Bishop Boner, for the constant testimony of Christ's true Profession.

March 18.
The History of Thomas Tomkins
Martyr.

Mention was made before of six Prisoners, brought and examined before Bishop Boner the 8. of February, whose names were Tomkins, Pigot, Knight, Hawkes, Lawrence, and Hunter. All which, though they received their Condemnation together the next day after, yet because the time of their Execution was then driven off from February till the next Month of March, I did therefore refer the Story of them to this present Month of March aforesaid, wherein now remaineth severally to intreat of the Martyrdom of these six Persons, as the order and time of their Sufferings severally do require. Of the which six aforesaid Martyrs, the first was Thomas Tomkins burned in Smithfield, the 16. day of March, Anno 1555.

The godly life and disposition of Tom Tomkins.

This Thomas Tomkins, a Weaver by his Occupation, dwelling in Shore ditch, and of the Diocess of London, was of such Conversation and Disposition so godly, that if any woman had come to him with her Webbs, as sometime they did, three or four in a day, he would always begin with Prayer. Or if any other had come to talk of Anno any matter, he would likewise first begin with Prayer. 1555. And if any had sought unto him to borrow Money, he would shew him such Money as he had in his Purse, and bid him take it.

And when they came to repay it again, so far off was he from seeking any Usury at their hand, or from freight exaction of his due, that he would bid them keep it longer, while they were better able. And these were the Conditions of Thomas Tomkins, testified yet to this present day by the most part of all his Neighbours, and almost of all his Parish which knew him, as Mr. Skinner, Mr. Leeke, and other more. Of whom more than half a dozen at once came to me, discreet and substantial men, reporting the same unto me, recording moreover as followeth: That Dr. Boner Bishop of London, kept the said Tomkins with him in Prison half a year: during which time the said Bishop was so rigorous unto him, that he beat him bitterly about the face, whereby his face was swelled. Whereupon the Bishop caused his Beard to be shaven, and gave the Barber Twelve pence.

Touching which shaving of Thomas Tomkins Beard, this is more to be added; Bishop Boner having Tomkins with him Prisoner at Fulham, in the Month of July, did set him with his other Work-folks to make Hay. And seeing him to labour so well, the Bishop sitting him down, said, Well, I like thee well, for thou labourst well: I trust thou wilt be a good Catholicke. My Lord, said he, S. Paul saith, He that doth not labour, is not worthy to eat. Boner said, Ah, S. Paul is a great man, and so with thee. And so after such other talk, the Bishop inferring moreover, withed his Beard off, saying, that so he would look like a Catholicke. My Lord, said Tomkins, before my Beard grew, I was, I trust, a good Christian, and so I trust to be, my Beard being on. But Boner in fine sent for the Barber, and caused his Beard to be shaven off. The very cause was for that Boner had plucked off a piece of his Beard before.

The burning of Thomas Tomkins hand by Bishop Boner.

The notable Confiscancy in a true Christian Soulier.

The rage of this Bishop was not so great against him, but the Confiscancy of the Party was much greater with Patience to bear it: who, although he had not the Learning as other have, yet he was so indued with Gods mighty Spirit, and so constantly planted in the perfect knowledge of Gods Truth, that by no means he could be removed from the Confession of Truth, to Impiety and Error. Whereupon, Boner the Bishop being greatly vexed against the poor man, when he saw that by no Perswasions he could prevail with him, devised another practice not so strange as cruel, further to try his Confiscancy, to the intent, that seeing he could not otherwise convince him by Doctrine of Scriptures, yet he might overthrow him by some foreseeing and terror of death. So having with him Mr. Harpsfield, Mr. Templeton, Doctor Chedsey, Master Willerton, and other standing by, he called for Thomas Tomkins, who coming before the Bishop, and standing as he was wont to do, of his Faith, the Bishop fell from beating to burning. Who, having there a taper or wax candle in place or four wicks standing upon the Table, thought meet to represent unto us as it were, the old Image of King Perennis. For as he burned the hand of Scavola, so this Catholick Bishop took Tomkins by the fingers, and held his hand directly over the flame, supposing that by the smart and pain of the fire being terrified, he would leave off the defence of his Doctrine, which he had received.

The burning of the blessed Martyr Thomas Tomkins.

Tomkins thinking no otherwise, but there presently to dye, began to commend himself unto the Lord, saying, O Lord, into thy hands I commend my Spirit, &c. In the time that his hand was in burning, the same Tomkins afterward reported to one James Hulse, that his Spirit was so wrapt, that he felt no pain. In the which burning he never shrunk, till the veins shrunk, and the sinews burst, and the water did spirt in Master Harpsfield's face. Inasmuch that the said M. Harpsfield, moved with pity, desired the Bishop to stay, saying, that he had tried him enough. This burning was in the Hall at Fulham.

And where the Bishop thought by that means to drive him from his Opinions, it proved much otherwise: for this Christian Scavola so valiantly did despise, abide, and endure that burning, that we have left Cause hereafter to marvel at the manliness of that Roman Scavola: I would to God the other had aswell followed the example of that Hercules Tyrant. For he, after the left hand of Scavola was halfburned, either satisfied with his punishment, or overcome by his manhood, or driven away by fear, sent him home safe unto his people: whereas Bonner, hitherto not contented with the burning of his Hand, relted not until he had consumed his whole Body into ashes, at London in Smithfield.

But before we come to his Suffering, we will first intreat of some part of his Examination and Articles, with his answers and confession thereunto annexed, as it is credibly in Register recorded.

The first Examination of Thomas Tomkins.

The first examination of Thomas Tomkins before Bonner Bishop of London.

His Faithful and valiant Souldier of God Thomas Tomkins, after he had remained the space (as is said) of half a year in prison, about the 8. day of February was brought with certain other before Bonner sitting in his Consistory, to be examined. To whom first was brought forth a certain Bill or Schedule subscribed (as appeareth) with his own hand, the fifth day of the same Month last before, containing these words following.

The confession of Thomas Tomkins subscribed with his own hand.

Thomas Tomkins of Shoreditch, and of the Diocess of London, hath believed and doth believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Iesus Christ in Substante, but only a token and remembrance thereof, the very Body and Blood of Christ being only in Heaven, and no where else.

By me Thomas Tomkins.

Tomkins confessed to his Faith.

Whereupon he was asked, whether he did acknowledge the same subscription to be of his own hand. To the which he granted, confessing it so to be. This being done the Bishop went about to persuade him (with words, rather than with reasons) to relinquish his opinions, and to return again to the unity of the Catholick Church, promising if he would so do, to remit all that was past. But he constantly denied so to do. When the Bishop saw he could not so convince him, he brought forth and read to him another writing, containing Articles and Interrogatories, whereunto he should come the next day and answer: in the mean time he should deliberate with himself what to do, and so the next day, being the 9. day of March, at eight of the Clock in the morning to be present in the same place again, to give his determinate answer what he would do in the premises, and then either to revoke and reclaim himself, or else in the afternoon the same day to come again and have Justice (as he called it) ministred unto him. This Copy of which Articles here followeth.

Articles objected and ministred the 8. day of February against Thomas Tomkins; with his own hand subscribing to the same.

Thou dost believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not, by the Omnipotent power of Almighty God, and his holy Word, really, truly and in very deed, the very true and natural Body of our Saviour Iesus Christ, as touching the Substante thereof, which was conceived in the Womb of the Virgin Mary, and hanged upon the Cross, suffering passion and death there for the life of the World.

I do so believe.

Thou dost believe, that after the Consecration of Bread & Wine prepared for the use of the Sacrament of the Altar, there doth remain the Substante of material Bread, and material Wine, not changed nor altered in Substante by the Power of Almighty God, but remaining as it did before.

I do so believe.

Thou dost believe, that it is an untrue Doctrine, and a false Belief, to think or say, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is, after Consecration of the Bread and Wine, the Substante of Christ's Natural Body and Blood, by the Omnipotent Power of Almighty God, and his Holy Word.

I do so believe.

Thou dost believe, that thy Parents, Kinsfolke, Friends, and Acquaintance, and also thy Godfathers and Godmothers, and all People did err, and were deceived, if they did believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there was, after the Consecration, the Body and Blood of Christ, and that there did not remain the Substante of material Bread and Wine.

I do so believe.

By me Thomas Tomkins.

The second Examination of Thomas Tomkins.

The next day being the 9. of February, at 8. of the Clock before noon, the said T. Tomkins (according to the former Commandment) was brought again unto the place aforesaid, before the Bishop and other his Assistants, where the foresaid Articles were propounded unto him: whereunto he answered as followeth:

To the first he said, that he did so believe, as in the same is contained.

To the second he said, that it was only Bread and a participation of Christ's death and passion, and so do the Scriptures teach.

To the third he said and did believe, it was a false Doctrine, to believe and think as is contained in this Article.

To the fourth, he did also believe the same.

After this answer, he did also subscribe his name to the said Articles. Whereupon, the Bishop drawing out of his bosom another confession subscribed with Tomkins's own hand, and also that Article that was the first day objected against him, caused the same to be openly read, and then willed him to revoke and deny his said opinions; the which he utterly refused to do; and therefore was commanded to appear before the Bishop again in the same place at two of the Clock in the Afternoon.

The Bishop repeareth again the confession of Thomas Tomkins, written before by the said Bishop of London, and subscribed by the said Tomkins, the 26. of September, Anno, 1554. which is this.

I Thomas Tomkins of the Parish of Shoreditch, in the Diocess of London, having confessed and declared openly heretofore to Edmund Bishop of London mine Ordinary, that my belief hath been many years past, and is as this present; that the Body of our Saviour Iesus Christ

Articles ministred against T. Tomkins.

Substante of Bread & Wine in the Sacrament.

The Natural Presence of Christ in the Sacrament.

The error of the Foredecessors touching the Sacrament.

The second Examination.

Answer of Tomkins to the Articles.

The first confession of Tomkins offered to 22. Nov. and now here again repeat: ed.

Christ is not truly and in every deed in the Sacrament of the Altar, but only in Heaven; and so in Heaven; that it cannot now indeed be really and truly in the Sacrament of the Altar.

The Mass fall of Sapition & Idolatry.

And moreover, having likewise confessed and declared to my said Ordinary openly many times, that although the Church, called the Catholick Church, hath allowed, and doth allow the Mass and Sacrifice made and done therein, as a wholesome, profitable, and a godly thing; yet my belief hath been many years past, and is at this present, that the said Mass is full of Superstition, plain Idolatry, and unprofitable for my Soul, and so have I called it many times, and take it at this present.

Baptism ought to be ministered in the vulgar Tongue.

Having also likewise confessed and declared to my said Ordinary, that the Sacrament of Baptism ought to be only in the vulgar Tongue, and not otherwise ministered, and also without any such Ceremonies, as accustomed are used in the Latin Church, and otherwise not to be allowed.

Tompkins constantly furnished to the Truth of the Gospel.

Finally, being many times and oft called openly before my said Ordinary, and talked withal touching all my said Confessions and Declarations, both by the said mine Ordinary and divers other Learned men, as well as Chaplains as other, and counselled by all them to embrace the Truth, and to recant mine Error in the Premises, which they told me was plain Heresie and manifest Error; do testifie and declare hereby, that I do and will continually stand to my said Confession, Declaration, and Belief, in all the Premises, and every part thereof, and in no wise recant or go from any part of the same. In witness whereof I have subscribed, and passed this writing the 26. day of September, the year aforesaid.

By me Tho. Tompkins aforesaid.

The Name of them that sate upon Thomas Tompkins at this Session, were these; Edmund Boner, John Fecknam Dean of Pauls, John Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, John Morwen Master of Arts, Thomas Marton Parson of Fulham, Tristram Swadell, Thomas More, Thomas Bekinslow, James Cline, Clerks.

The Last Appearance of Thomas Tompkins before Boner and the Commissioners.

The last appearance and condemnation of T.
Tompkins.
Martyr.

The same day and place, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon, he was (the last time) brought before the Bishops of London, Bathes, and St. Davids, with others; where he was earnestly exhorted by the said Bishop of Bathes to revoke and leave off his Opinions. Unto whom he answered, My Lord, I was born and brought up in Ignorance until now of late years; and now I know the Truth, wherein I will continue unto the death.

Sentence
read against Thomas Tompkins,
March 26.

Then Boner caused all his Articles and Confession to be again openly read, and so in his accustomed manner perswaded with him to recant. To whom he finally said, My Lord, I cannot see but that you would have me forsake the Truth, and to fall into Error and Heresie. The Bishop seeing he would not recant, did proceed in his Law, and so gave Sentence of Condemnation upon him.

The Martyrdom of Th Tompkins in Smithfield
A.D. 1555.
March 26.

Then he delivered him to the Sheriff of London, who carried him thither unto Newgate, where he remained most joyous and content until the 16. day of March next after: on which day, he was by the said Sheriff conveyed into Smithfield, and there sealed up his Faith in the flaming Fire, to the Glory of Gods holy Name, and Confirmation of the Weak.

A notable History of William Hunter, a young man of 19 years, pursued to death by Justice Brown for the Gossels sake, worthy of all young Men and Parents to be read.

Will. Hunter
an Apprentice and Martyr.

The 26. day of the said Month of March, the year aforesaid, followed the Martyrdom of William Hunter a right godly young man, of the Age of 19. years, and born of like godly Parents: by whom he was not only instructed in true Religion and Godliness, but also confirmed by them unto death, after a rare and strange example worthy to be noted and had in admiration of all Parents. Wherein may appear a singular Spectacle, not only of a marvellous Fortitude in the party so young, but also in his Parents, to behold Nature in them striving with Religion, and overcome of the same. Whereby Christian Parents may learn what is to be done not only in their Children, but also in themselves, if need at any time do require, or godliness should demand the duty of a Christian man against natural Affection. Example whereof in the sequel of this History we have here present before our eyes. Which History, as it was faithfully drawn out by Robert Hunter his own Brother (who being present with his Brother William, and never left him till his death, sent the true Report unto us) we have here with like faithfulness placed and recorded the same, as followeth.

William Hunter, being an Apprentice in London in the first year of Queen Mary, was commanded at the Easter next following to receive the Communion at a Mass, by the Priest of the Parish where he dwelt, called Colemanfreer; which because he refused to do, he was very much threatened that he should be therefore brought before the Bishop of London. Wherefore William Hunters Master, one Thomas Taylor, a Silkweaver, required William Hunter to go and depart from him, lest that he should come in danger because of him, if he continued in his House. For the which causes, William Hunter took leave of his said Master, and thence came to Burnwood where his Father dwelt, with whom he afterward remained about the space of half a quarter of a year.

After this it hapned within five or six weeks, that William going into the Chappel of Burnwood, and finding there a Bible lying on a Desk, did read therein. In the mean time there came in one Father Arwell a Sumner, which hearing William read in the Bible, said to him, What meddlest thou with the Bible? Knowest thou what thou readest? and canst thou expound the Scriptures?

To whom William answered and said, Father Arwell, I take not upon me to expound the Scriptures, except I were dispensed withal; but I finding the Bible here when I came, read in it to my comfort. To whom Father Arwell said, it was never merry world since the Bible came abroad in English.

To the which words William answered, saying, Father Arwell, say not so for Gods sake: for it is Gods Book, out of the which every one that hath Grace may learn to know both what things please God, and also what displeaseth him. Then said Father Arwell, Could we not tell before this time as well as now, how God was served? William answered, No, Father Arwell, nothing so well, as we may now, if that we might have his blessed Word amongst us still as we have had. It is true, said Father Arwell, if it be as you say.

Well, said William Hunter, it liketh me very well, and I pray God that we may have the blessed Bible amongst us continually. To the which words Father Arwell said, I perceive your mind well enough; you are one of them that misliketh the Queens Laws: and therefore you came from London, I hear say. You learned these ways at London: but for all that, said Father Arwell, you must turn another Leaf, or else you, and a great sort more Hereticks will broil for this gear, I warrant you. To the which words William said, God give me Grace, that I may believe his Word, and confess his Name, whatsoever come thereof. Confess his Name, quoth old Arwell? No, no, ye will go to the Devil all of you, and confess his Name.

What, said William? You say not well Father Arwell. At the which words he went out of the Chappel in a great fury, saying, I am not able to reason with thee: but I will fetch one straight way which shall talk with thee, I warrant thee, thou Heretick. And he leaving William Hunter reading in the Bible, straight-ways brought one Thomas Wood, who was then Vicar of Seabwell, which was at an Alehouse even over against the said Chappel; who, hearing old Arwell say, that William Hunter was reading of the Bible in the Chappel, came by and by to him, and finding him reading in the Bible, took the matter very heinously, saying; Sirra, who gave thee leave to read in the Bible, and to expound it?

Anno 1558. Then William answered, I expound not the Scriptures, Sir, but read them for my comfort. What meddlest thou with them at all, said the Vicar? It becometh not thee, nor none such to meddle with the Scriptures.

But William answered, I will read the Scriptures (God willing) while I live; and you ought, Master Vicar, not to discourage any man for that matter, but rather exhort men diligently to read the Scriptures for your discharge and their own.

Unto the which the Vicar answered, It becometh thee well to tell me what I have to do. I see thou art an Heretic by thy words. William said, I am no Heretic for speaking the Truth. But the Vicar said, It is a merry World when such as thou art shall teach us what is the Truth. Thou art meddling, Father Aswell tells me, with the sixth of John, wherein thou maist perceive how Christ saith, Except that ye eat the flesh of Christ, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. William said, I read the sixth of John indeed; howbeit, I made no exposition on it.

Then said Father Aswell, When you read it, I find, that you there might understand how that in the Sacrament of the Altar is Christs very natural Body and Blood: unto the which you answered, how that you would take the Scriptures as they are, and that you would meddle with no great Exposition, except that ye were dispensed withal.

Ah, said the Vicar, What say you to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar? Believest thou not in it, and that the Bread and Wine is transubstantiated into the very Body and Blood of Christ? William answered, I learn no such thing in the sixth of John as you speak of. Why, said the Vicar, dost thou not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar? I believe, said William Hunter all that Gods Word teacheth. Why, said the Vicar, thou maist learn this which I say, plainly in the sixth of John.

Then said William, You understand Christs words much like the carnal Capernaimites, which thought, that Christ would have given them his flesh to feed upon: which opinion our Saviour Christ corrected, when he said, The words which I speak to you, are spirit and life.

Now, quoth the Vicar, I have found you out: now I see that thou art an Heretic indeed, and that thou dost not believe in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then said William Hunter, whereas you doubt my belief, I would it were tried whether that you or I would stand faster in our Faith. Yea, thou Heretic (said the Vicar) wouldst thou have it so tried? William Hunter answered, That which you call Herefie, I serve my Lord God withal.

Then said the Vicar, Canst thou serve God with Herefie? But William answered, I would that you and I were even now fast tied to a Stake, to prove whether that I or you would stand strongest to our Faith. But the Vicar answered, It shall not be so tried. No, quoth William, I think so: for if I might, I think I know who would fittest recant; for I durst set my foot against yours, even to the death. That we shall see, quoth the Vicar, and so they departed; the Vicar threatening William much, how that he would complain of him; with other much Communication which they had together.

Immediately after, this Vicar of Welde told Mr. Brown of the Communication which William Hunter and he had together. Which when Mr. Brown understood, immediately he went for Williams Father and the Constable, one Robert Salmon. For immediately after William Hunter and the Vicar had reasoned together, he took his leave of his Father and fled, because Wood the Vicar threatened him. Now when the Constable and Williams Father were come, and were before Mr. Brown, he asked where William Hunter was. His Father answered, saying, If it please you, Sir, I know not where he is become: No, quoth Master Brown? I will make thee tell where he is, and fetch him forth also ere I have done with thee. Sir, said Williams Father, I know not where he is become, nor where to seek for him.

Then said Mr. Brown, Why didst thou not bring him when thou hadst him? I promise thee if thou wilt not fetch him, I will send thee to Prison, till I shall get him. Wherefore see that thou promise me to fetch him, or else it is not best to look me in the face any more, nor An carelesse yet to rest in Burniswood. Well, quoth M. Brown to Williams Father, see that thou seek him faithfully and bring him to me.

Williams Father answered, Sir, would you have me seek my Son to be burned? If thou bring him to me, quoth M. Brown, I will deal well enough for that matter, thou shalt not need to care for the matter. Fetch him, and thou shalt see what I will do for him.

Moreover, if thou lackest money, quoth he, thou shalt have some, and bade the Constable M. Salmon to give him a Crown, but Williams Father took none of him. Howbeit M. Brown would never rest, till Williams Father had promised him to seek out his Son. And thus Mr. Brown sent the Constable home again, and Williams Father, commanding him to seek out William Hunter, and then to come again and bring him to him.

After that Old Father Hunter had ridden two or three days journey to satisfy M. Browns expectation, it happened that William met with his Father in the High way as he travelled, and fast he seeing his Father came to him, and spake to him, and told him how that he thought that he sought for him: and then his Father confounding it, went fore, and said, that Mr. Brown charged him to seek him, and bring him to him; howbeit, said he, I will return home again, and say I cannot find you. But Williams said; Father I will go home with you, and save you the harmless, whatsoever cometh of it.

And thus they came home together; but Williams, as soon as he was come home, was taken by the said Constable, and laid in the Stocks till the day. Master Brown, hearing that William Hunter was come home, sent for him to the Constable, who brought him immediately to Master Brown.

Now when William was come, Mr. Brown said to him, Ah, Sir, are ye come? and then by and by he commanded the Bible to be brought and opened it, and then began to reason with William on this manner, saying; I hear say you are a Scripture-man, you, and can reason much of the sixth of John and expound as pleaseth you, and turned the Bible to the sixth of S. John, and then he laid in his charge what an exposition he made, when the Vicar and he talked together. And William said, He urged me to say so much as I did.

Well quoth Mr. Brown, because you can expound that place so well; how say you to another place, turning to the 22. of S. Luke and Mr. Brown said, Look here (quoth he) for Christ saith, that the Bread is his Body.

To the which William answered, the Text saith, how Christ took Bread, but not that he changed it into another substance, but gave that which he took, and brake, that which he gave, which was Bread as is evident by the Text. For else he should have had two Bodies, which to affirm I see no reason, said William.

At the which answer Mr. Brown was very angry, and took up the Bible and turned the leaves, and then flung it down again in such a fury, that William could not well find the place again whereof they reasoned.

Then M. Brown said, Thou naughty boy, wilt thou not take things as they are, but expound them as thou wilt? Dost thou not call the Bread his Body plainly, and thou wilt not believe, that the Bread is his Body after the Consecration? Thou goest about to make Christ a liar.

But William Hunter answered; I mean not so, Sir, but rather more earnestly to search what the mind of Christ is in that Holy Institution, wherein he commeth unto us the remembrance of his death, passion, resurrection, and coming again, saying, This do in the remembrance of me. And also though Christ call the Bread his Body as he doth also say, that he is a Vine, a Door, &c. yet is not his Body turned into Bread, no more than he is turned into a Door or Vine. Wherefore Christ called the Bread his Body by a figure.

At that Word Mr. Brown said, Thou art a villain indeed. Wilt thou make Christ a liar yet still? and was in such a fury with William, and so raged, that William could not speak a word, but he crossed him, and scoffed at every word. Wherefore William seeing him in such fury, desired him that he would either hear him quietly, and suffer him to answer for himself, or else

B. says words to W. Hunter.

After that he had read the Letter, and the Constable returned home again, the Bishop caused William to be brought into a Chamber, where he began to reason with him in this manner: I understand, William Hunter, quoth he, by Mr. Brown's Letter, how that you have had certain Communication with the Vicar of the Ward, about the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and how that ye could not agree; whereupon Mr. Brown sent for thee to bring thee to the Catholick Faith, from the which, he saith that thou art gone. Howbeit if thou wilt be ruled by me, thou shalt have no harm for any thing that thou hast said or done in this matter.

William answered, saying; I am not fallen from the Catholick Faith of Christ (I am sure) but do believe it, and confesse it with all my heart.

Why, quoth the Bishop, how sayest thou to the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar? Wilt thou not recant thy saying, which thou confessedst before Mr. Brown, how that Christs Body is not in the Sacrament of the Altar, the same that was born of the Virgin Mary?

To the which William answered, saying; My Lord, I understand that Mr. Brown hath certified you of the talk which he and I had together, and thereby ye know what I said to him, and the which I will not recant by Gods help. Then said the Bishop, I think thou art ashamed to bear a fagot, and recant openly; but if thou wilt recant thy sayings, I will promise thee that thou shalt not be put to open shame: but speake the word here now between me and thee, and I will promise thee it shall go no further, and thou shalt go home again without any hurt.

William answered and said, my Lord, if you will let me alone, and leave me to my Conscience I will go to my Father and dwell with him, or else with my Master again, and so if no Body will disquiet nor trouble my Conscience, I will keep my Conscience to my self.

Then, quoth the Bishop, if you will not do so, I will make you sure enough, I warrant you. Well, quoth William, you can do no more than God will permit you. Well, quoth the Bishop, wilt thou not recant indeed by no means? No, quoth William, never while I live, God willing.

Then the Bishop (this talk ended) commanded his men to put William in the Stocks in his gatehouse, where he fate two daies and nights, only with a crust of brown Bread and a Cup of Water.

At the two daies end the Bishop came to him, and finding the Cup of Water and the crust of Bread still by him upon the Stocks, said to him; Take him out of the Stocks, and let him break his fast with you. Then they let him forth of the Stocks, but would not suffer him to eat with them, but called him Heretic. And he said, he was as loth to be in their Company, as they were to be in his.

After the breakfast the Bishop sent for William, and demanded whether he would recant or no. But William made him answer, how that he would never recant that which he had confessed before men, as concerning his Faith in Christ.

Then the Bishop said that he was no Christian, but he denied the Faith in which he was Baptized. But William answered; I was Baptized in the Faith of the Holy Trinity, the which I will not go from, God assisting me with his Grace.

Then the Bishop sent him to the convict Prison and commanded the Keeper to lay Irons upon him as many as he could bear: and moreover asked him, how old he was; and William said that he was nineteen years old.

Well, said the Bishop, you will be burned ere you be 20 years old, if you will not yield your self better than you have done yet. William answered, God strengthen me in his Truth: and then he parted, and the Bishop allowing him a half-penny a day to live on in Bread or drink.

Thus he continued in Prison three quarters of a year. In the which time he had been before the Bishop five times, besides the time when he was Condemned in the Consistory in Pauls the 9. day of February: at the which time his Brother Robert Hunter was present, when and where I heard the Bishop condemn him, and five other more.

And then the Bishop calling William, asked him if he would recant, and so read to him his Examination and confession, as is above rehearsed, and then rehearsed how that William confessed that he did believe, that he received Christs Body spiritually, when he did receive the Communion. Dost thou mean, quoth the Bishop, that the Bread is Christs Body spiritually?

These 5. were Tenkies, Tiges, Kings, Hawks, and Lances.

William answered; I mean not so, but rather when I receive the Holy Communion rightly and worthily, I do feed upon Christ spiritually through Faith in my Soul, and am made partaker of all the benefits which Christ hath brought unto all faithful Believers through his precious death, passion and resurrection, and not that the Bread is his Body, either spiritually or corporally.

Then said the Bishop to William; Dost thou not think (holding up his Cap) that for example here of my Cap, thou mayst see the squareness and colour of it, and yet that not to be the Substance, which thou judgest by the Accidents?

William answered; if you can separate the Accidents from the Substance, and shew me the Substance without the Accidents, I could believe. Then said the Bishop, Thou wilt not believe that God can do any thing above mans capacity. Yes, said William, I must needs believe that: for daily experience teacheth all men that thing plainly: but our question is not what God can do, but what he will have us to learn in his holy Supper.

The question is not what God can do, but what he would have us to believe

Then the Bishop said, I always have found thee at this point, and I see no hope in thee to reclaim thee unto the Catholick Faith, but thou wilt continue a corrupt number, and then pronounced Sentence upon him, how that he should go from that place to Newgate for a time, and so from thence to Burntwood, where, said he, thou shalt be burned.

liam Hunter.

Then the Bishop called for another, and so when he had condemned them all, he called for William Hunter, and perfwade with him, saying if thou wilt yet recant, I will make thee a free man in the City, and give thee 40. pound in good money to set up thine occupation withal: or I will make thee Steward of my House, and set thee in Office; for I like thee well, thou hast wit enough, and I will prefer thee if thou recant.

But William answered, I thank you for your great offers: Notwithstanding, my Lord, said he, if you cannot perfwade my Conscience with Scriptures, I cannot find in my heart to turn from God for the love of the World; for I count all things Worldly but loss and dung, in respect of the Love of Christ.

W. Hunter

Christ for the World.

Then said the Bishop, if thou diest in this mind thou art Condemned for ever. William answered, God judgeth righteously, and justifieth them whom man condemneth unjustly.

Thus William and the Bishop departed, William and the rest to Newgate, where they remained about a Month, which afterward were sent down, William to Burntwood, and the others into divers places of the Countrey. Now when William was come down to Burntwood, which was the Saturday before the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary that followed on the Monday after, William remained till the Tuesday after, because they would not put him to death then, for the holiness of the day.

His Father and Mother came to comfort him.

In the mean time Williams Father and Mother came to him, and desired heartily of God that he might continue to the end in that good way which he had begun, and his Mother said to him, that she was glad that ever he was so happy to bear such a Child, which could find in his heart to lose his Life for Christs Names sake.

His Father and Mother to be constant.

Then William said to his Mother; For my little pain which I shall suffer, which is but a thorn braid, Christ hath promised me, Mother (said he) a Crown of Joy; may you not not be glad of that, Mother? With that his Mother kneeled down on her knees, saying, I pray God strengthen thee my Son, to the end. Yea, I think thee as well befitted as any Child that ever I bare.

At the which words Mr. Higbed took her in his Arms, saying, I rejoyce (and so said the others) to see you in this mind, and you have a good cause to rejoyce. And his Father and Mother both said, that they were never of other mind, but prayed for him, that as he had begun to confesse Christ before men, he likewise might so continue to the end. Williams Father said, I was afraid of nothing, but that my Son should have been killed in the Prison by hunger and cold, the Bishop was so hard to him. But William confessed, after a Month that his Father was charged with his Boord, that he lacked nothing, but had meat and cloathing enough, yea, even out of the Court, both money, meat, cloaths, wood and coals, and all things necessary.

Thus they continued in their Inn, being the Swan in Burntwood in a Parlor, whither resorted many People of the Country to see those good men which were there: and many of Williams Acquaintance came to him, and reasoned with him, and he with them, exhorting them to come away from the abomination of Popish Superstition and Idolatry.

Thus passing away Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, on Monday at night it hapned that William had a dream about two of the Clock in the Morning, which was this: How that he was at the place where the Stake was pitcht, where he should be burned, which (as he thought in his Dream) was at the Towns end where the Butts stood, which was so indeed: and also he dreamed that he met with his Father as he went to the Stake, and also that there was a Priest at the Stake, which went about to have him recant.

To whom he said (as he thought in his Dream) how that he bade him, away false Prophet, and how that he exhorted the People to beware of him, and such as he was: which things came to pass indeed. It hapned that William made a noise to himself in his Dream, which caused Mr. Higbed and the others to awake him out of his sleep, to know what he lacked. When he awaked he told them his Dream in order, as is said.

Now when it was day, the Sheriff Mr. Brocket called on to set forward to the burning of William Hunter. Then came the Sheriffs Son to William Hunter, and embraced him in his right Arm, saying, William, be not afraid of these men which are here present with Bows, Bills and Weapons, ready prepared to bring you to the place where you shall be burned. To whom William answered, I thank God I am not afraid; for I have cast my count what it will cost me already. Then the Sheriffs Son could speak no more to him for weeping.

Then William Hunter plucked up his Gown and stepped over the Parlor groundell, and went forward cheerfully, the Sheriffs Servant taking him by one Arm, and his Brother by another, and thus going in the way, he met with his Father according to his Dream, and he spake to his Son, weeping and saying, God be with thee Son William: and William said, God be with you good Father, and be of good comfort; for I hope we shall meet again when we shall be merry. His Father said, I hope so William, and so departed. So William went to the place where the Stake stood, even according to his Dream, whereas all things were very unready. Then William took a wet Broom Fagot, and kneeled down thereon, and read the 51 Psalm, till he came to these words, The Sacrifice of God is a contrite spirit, a contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

Then said Mr. Tyrill of the Braches, called William Tyrill, Thou liest (said he) thou readest false; for the words are an humble spirit. But William said, The Translation saith a contrite heart. Yea, quoth Mr. Tyrill, the Translation is false, ye translate Books as ye list your selves, like Hereticks. Well, quoth William, there is no great difference in those words. Then said the Sheriff, Here is a Letter from the Queen. If thou wilt recant thou shalt live; if not, thou shalt be burned. No, quoth William, I will not recant, God willing. Then William rose and went to the Stake, and stood upright to it. Then came one Richard Ponde a Bayliff, and made fast the Chain about William.

Then said Mr. Brown, Here is not wood enough to burn a Leg of him. Then said William, Good People pray for me; and make speed and dispatch me quickly; and pray for me while you see me alive, good People, and I will pray for you likewise.

Now, quoth Mr. Brown, pray for thee? I will pray no more for thee, than I will pray for a Dog. To whom William answered; Mr. Brown, now you have that which you sought for, and I pray God it be not laid to your charge in the last day: howbeit I forgive you. Then said Mr. Brown, I ask no forgiveness of thee. Well, said William, if God forgive you, I shall not require my Blood at your hands.

Then said William, Son of God shine upon me; and immediately the Sun in the Element shone out of a dark Cloud so full in his Face, that he was constrained to look another way: wherat the People mused, because it was so dark a little time afore. Then William took up a Pagot of Broom, and embraced it in his Arms.

Then the Priest, which William dreamed of, came to his Brother Robert with a Popish Book to carry to William, that he might recant, which Book his Brother would not meddle withall.

Then William seeing the Priest, and perceiving how he would have shewed him the Book, said, Away thou false Prophet. Beware of them, good People, and come away from their Abominations, lest that you be partakers of their Plagues. Then, quoth the Priest, look how thou burnest here, so shalt thou burn in Hell. William answered, Thou liest thou false Prophet; Away thou false Prophet, away.

Then was there a Gentleman which said, I pray God have mercy upon his Soul. The People said, Amen, Amen. Immediately fire was made.

Then William cast his Psalter right into his Brothers hand, who said, William, think on the holy Passion of Christ, and be not afraid of Death.

And William answered, I am not afraid. Then lift he up his hands to Heaven, and said, Lord, Lord, receive my Spirit; and casting down his Head again into the smothering Smoak, he yielded up his Life for the Truth, sealing it with his Blood to the Praise of God.

Now by and by after, Mr. Brown commanded one old Hunt to take his Brother Robert Hunter, and lay him in the Stocks till he returned from the burning of Higbed at Hornden on the Hill, the same day. Which thing old Hunt did. Then Mr. Brown (when Robert Hunter came before him) asked if he would do as his Brother had done. But Robert Hunter answered, If I do as my Brother hath done, I shall have as he hath had. Marry, quoth Mr. Brown; thou maist be fire of it.

Then Mr. Brown said, I marvel that thy Brother stood so to his Tackling; and moreover, he asked Robert, if William, Master of London were not at his burning. But Robert said, that he was not there; but Mr. Brown bare him in hand that his Master was there, and how that he did see him there, but Robert denied it. Then Mr. Brown commanded the Constable and Robert Hunter to go their ways home, and so had no further talk with them.

Here followeth the History of Mr. Higbed and Mr. Caulton, two worthy Gentlemen of Essex, which for their sincere Confession of their Faith under Boner Bishop of London, were martyred and burned in Essex, Anno 1555.

Although the Condemnation of Mr. Higbed and Mr. Caulton followed after the Condemnation of those other Martyrs which were condemned with Tomkins and Hunter above mentioned, yet because the time of their Execution was before the burning of the foresaid four Martyrs, so much that they suffered the same day that William Hunter did, which was the 26. of March, I thought therefore next after the Story of the said William Hunter, following the order of time, here to place the same.

This Master Higbed and Master Caulton, two worshipful Gentlemen in the County of Essex, the one at Hornden of the Hill, the other of the Parill of Thundurst, being zealous and religious in the true Service of God; as they could not dissemble with the Lord their God, nor flatter with the World, so in time of blind Superstition and wretched Idolatry, they could not long lye hid and obscure in such a number of malignant Adversaries, Accusers, and Servants of this World, but at length they were perceived and detected to the foresaid Edmund Boner Bishop of London, peradventure not without the same organ which sent up William Hunter, as is above declared. By reason whereof, by commandment they were committed to the Officers of Colchester to be safely kept, and with them also a Servant of Thomas Caulton, who in this praise of Christian Godliness was nothing inferior to his Master.

Boner the foresaid Bishop, perceiving these two Gentlemen to be of worshipful Estate, and of great estimation in that Country, lest any tumult should thereby arise, came thither himself, accompanied with Mr. Peckham, and certain others, thinking to reclaim them to his faction and fustion: so that great labour and diligence was taken therein, as well by terrors and threatnings, as by large promises and flattering, and all fair means, to reduce them again to the Unity (as they termed it) of the Mother Church.

In fine, when nothing could prevail to make them assent to their doings, at length they came to this point, that they required certain respite to consult with themselves what was best to do. Which time of deliberation being expired, and they remained still constant and unmoveable in their professed Doctrine, and setting out also their confession in writing, the Bishop seeing no good to be done in tarrying any longer there, departed thence, and carried them both with him to London, and with them certain other Prisoners also, which about the same time in those quarters were apprehended.

It was not long after this, but these Prisoners being at London committed to freight Prison, and there attempted sundry ways by the Bishop and his Chaplains to revoke their Opinions: at length, when no persuasions would serve, they were brought forth to open examination at the Confraternity in Pauls, the 17. day of February, Anno 1555. Where they were demanded as well by the said Bishop, as also by the Bishop of Barbe, and others, whether they would recant their Errors and perverse Doctrine (as they termed it) and so come to the Unity of the Popish Church. Which when they refused to do, the Bishop assigned them likewise the next day to appear again, being the 18. of February.

On the which day, among many other things there said and passed, he read unto them severally certain Articles, and gave them respite until the next day to answer unto the same, and so committed them again to Prison. The Copy of which Articles hereunder followeth.

Articles objected and ministered by Boner Bishop of London, severally against Thomas Caulton, and Thomas Higbed of Essex.

Item, That at that time, and also before, it was taken for a Doctrine of the Church, Catholic and True, and every where in Christendom then allowed for Catholic and True, and to be the Profession of Christian men, to believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the Forms of Bread and Wine, after the Consecration, there was, and is by the Omnipotent Power and Will of Almighty God, and his Word, without any Substance of Bread and Wine there remaining, the true and natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ in Substance, which was born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered upon the Cross, really, truly, and in very deed.

Anno 1555. believe, and think in all the same as the said Church did therein believe.

Item, That thy self hast had no just cause or lawful ground to depart or swerve from the said Religion or Faith, nor any occasion at all, except thou wilt follow and believe the erroneous Opinion or Belief, that hath been against the common order of the Church, brought in by certain disordered persons of late, at the uttermost within the thirty or forty years last past.

Item, That thou dost know, or credibly hast heard, and dost believe, that Dr. Robert Barnes, John Frith, Thomas Gerrard, Hierome Lassels, Anne Askew, John Hooper late Bishop of Gloucester, Sir Laurence Sanders Priest, John Bradford, Sir John Rogers Priest, Sir Rowland Taylor Priest, Sir John Laurence Priest, William Pygot, Stephen Knight, William Hunter, Thomas Tomkins, and Thomas Hawkes, have been heretofore reputed, taken, and accounted as Hereticks, and also condemned as Hereticks, and so pronounced openly and manifestly; specially in holding and believing certain damnable Opinions, against the Verity of Christ's Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, and all the same persons, saving John Bradford, Sir John Laurence, William Pygot, Stephen Knight, William Hunter, Thomas Tomkins, and Thomas Hawkes, have suffered Pains of Death by Fire, for the maintenance and defence of their said Opinions and Mabeliers.

Item, That thou dost know, or credibly hast heard, and dost believe, that Thomas Cranmer, late Archbishop of Canterbury, and Nicholas Ridley, naming himself Bishop of London, Robert Furrar late Bishop of S. Davids, and Hugh Latimer sometime Bishop of Worcester, have been, and are at this present reputed, accounted, and taken as Hereticks and Mabeliers, in maintaining and holding certain damnable Opinions against the Verity of Christ's Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Item, That thou hast commended and praised all the said persons, so erring and believing (or at the leastwise some of them) secretly, and also openly, taking and believing them to be Faithful and Catholick People, and their said Opinions to be good and true, and the same to be the best and uttermost of thy power thou hast allowed, maintained, and defended at sundry times.

Item, That thou having heard, known, and understood all the Premises, thus to be as is aforesaid, hast not regarded all or any part thereof, but contrary to the same and every part thereof, hast attempted and done, condemning, transgressing, and breaking the Promise, Faith, Religion, Order, and Customs aforesaid, and hast become, and art an Heretick and Mabelier in the Premises, denying the Verity of Christ's Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, and obliquately affirming, That the Substance of the Material Bread and Wine are there remaining, and that the Substance of Christ's Body and Blood, taken of the Virgin Mary, are not there in the said Sacrament really and truly being.

Item, That all the Premises be true, notorious, famous, and manifest, and that upon all the same, there have and be amongst the said and good People of the City of London, and Diocese of the same, in great Multitude, commonly and publicly, a common and publick fame and opinion, and also in all places where thou hast been, within the said Diocese of London.

¶ These Articles being given to them, in writing by the Bishop, the next day following was assigned to them to give up and exhibit their Answers unto the same.

The third day Session upon the Examination of Mr. Causton and Mr. Higbed.

¶ Upon the which day, being the first day of March, the said Thomas Causton and Thomas Higbed Gentlemen, being brought before the Bishop in the Consistory, there exhibited their Answers to the Articles aforesaid; the tenor of which Answer her: followeth.

The Answers of Thomas Causton and Thomas Higbed, severally made to the foresaid Articles objected as before.

To the first, they answer and confess the same to be true.

To the second, they answer and believe the same to be true.

To the third, they answer and believe the same to be true.

To the fourth, they answer and think the same to be true.

To the fifth, until this clause (and so was it in very deed): they answer and believe the same to be true. And unto that clause (and so was it in very deed) they answer negatively, and believe that it was not in very deed.

To the sixth, seventh, and eighth, they answer and believe the same to be true.

To the ninth, they answer and say, that they think they have a just and lawful cause and ground to swerve and go from the said Faith and Religion, because they have now read more Scripture, than either themselves, or their Parents and Kinsfolk, Godfathers or Godmothers have read or seen heretofore in that behalf.

To the tenth, they answer, say, and believe, that the said persons articulate have been named, taken, and counted for Hereticks, and so condemned for Hereticks. yet about three years past, they were taken for good Christian Persons. And forasmuch as these Respondents did never hear them preach concerning the Sacrament of the Altar, they say that they preached well, in that they said and preached that Christ is not present really and truly in the Sacrament, but that there is remaining the Substance of Bread and Wine.

To the eleventh, they answer and say, that howsoever other Folks do repute and take the said persons articulate, yet these Respondents themselves did never, nor yet do so account and take them. And further they say, that in case the said persons articulate named in this Article have preached, that in the Sacrament of the Altar is very material Wine, and not the Substance of Christ's Body and Blood under the Forms of Bread and Wine, then they preached well and truly, and these Respondents themselves do so believe.

To the twelfth, they answer and say, that where other folk have dispraised the said persons articulate, and disallowed their Opinions, these Respondents (for ought that they at any time have heard) did like and allow the said persons, and their sayings.

To the thirteenth, they answer and say, that they have not broken or condemned any promise made by their Godfathers and Godmothers for them at their Baptism, and that they are no Hereticks nor Mabeliers, in that they believe that there remaineth only Bread and Wine in the Sacrament of the Altar, and that Christ's Natural Body is not there, but in Heaven; for they say, that the Scriptures so teach them.

To the fourteenth, they answer and believe, that the Premises before by them confessed by true, notorious, and manifest.

After these Answers exhibited and perused, then the Bishop speaking unto them after this sort, beginneth first (as he did ever before) with Thomas Causton. Because ye shall not be suddenly trapped, and that men shall not say that I go about to seek Liars to put you away: I have hitherto inspired you that you should weigh and consider with your self your state and condition, and that you should, while ye have time and space, acknowledge the Truth, and return to the Unity of the Catholick Church. Then the Bishop, reading their former Articles and Answers to the same, asked them if they would recant: which when they denied, they were again dismissed and commanded to appear the Wednesday next after, at two of the Clock at Afternoon, there to receive their definitive Sentence against them: which thing (as it seemeth) was yet deferred.

Another Examination of Mr. Causton and Mr. Higbed.

Another Examination.

Mr. Causton denieth to recant.

Mr. Higbed called forth, denieth to abjure.

Mr. Causton still believeth with the manner of the Sacrament.

Mr. Causton and Mr. Higbed appear again before the Bishop.

Mr. Causton and Mr. Higbed do exhibit a Confession of their Faith.

The Confession of Mr. Causton. Abrenunciation of the world. The Articles of the Creed. The Commandments.

The Lords Prayer.

The Catholick Church.

The Church of itself is given himself, to make it to himself a glorious Congregation without fault in his sight.

The next Friday, being the 8. day of March, the said Thomas Causton was first called to examination before the Bishop, Fecknam and Dr. Stempe being in his Palace, and there had read unto him his foresaid Articles with his Answers thereunto, and after certain Exhortations to recant his former Profession, and to be conformable to the Unity of their Church, they promised him (so doing) willingly to receive him again thereunto. To whom he answered, You go about to catch us in Snares and Gins. But mark, by what measure ye measure us, look you to be measured with the same again at Gods hands. The Bishop still perswaded with him to recant. To whom he answered, No, I will not abjure. Ye said that the Bishops that were lately burned be Hereticks: but I pray God make me such an Heretick as they were.

The Bishop then leaving Mr. Causton, calleth for Mr. Higbed: using with him the like perswasions that he did with the other: But he answered, I will not abjure. For I have been of this mind and opinion that I am now, these sixteen years, and do what ye can, ye shall do no more than God will permit you to do, and with what measure you measure us, look for the same again at Gods hands.

Then Fecknam asked him his opinion in the Sacrament of the Altar. To whom he answered, I do not believe that Christ is in the Sacrament as ye will have him, which is of mans making: Both their answers thus severally made, they were again commanded to depart for that time, and to appear the next day in the Consistory at Pauls, between the hours of one and three of the Clock at Afternoon.

The last appearance of Mr. Causton and Mr. Higbed before Boner.

At which day and hour, being the ninth day of March, they were both brought thither: Where the Bishop caused Mr. Thomas Caustons Articles and Answers first to be read openly, and after perswaded with him to recant and abjure his Heretical Opinions, and to come home now at the last to their Mother the Catholick Church, and save himself.

But Mr. Thomas Causton answered again, and said, No, I will not abjure: For I came not hither for that purpose; and therewithal did exhibit in writing unto the Bishop (as well in his own name, as also in Thomas Higbeds name) a Confession of their Faith, to the which they would stand: and required leave to read the same, which (after great suite) was obtained, and so he read it openly in the hearing of the People, as followeth.

The Confession and Faith of Thomas Causton and Thomas Higbed, which they delivered to the Bishop of London, before the Maier and Sberiffs, and in the Presence of all the People there assembled, Anno 1555. the 9. of March, and were condemned for the same in the said Consistory in Pauls Church, the year and day above said.

1. First, we believe and profess in Baptism, to forsake the Devil and all his Works and Poms, and the Vanities of the wicked World, with all the sinful Lusts of the Flesh.

2. We believe all the Articles of our Christian Faith.

3. We believe, that we are bound to keep Godsholy Will and Commandments, and to walk in the same all the days of our Life.

4. We believe, that there is contained in the Lords Prayer all things necessary both for Body and Soul, and that we are taught thereby to pray to our Heavenly Father, and no other Saint or Angel.

5. We believe, that there is a Catholick Church, even the Communion of Saints, Built upon the Foundation of the Prophets and Apostles (as S. Paul saith) Christ being the Head Corner-stone. For the which Church Christ gave himself, to make it to himself a glorious Congregation without fault in his sight.

6. We believe, that this Church of her self, and by her own merits is sinful, and must needs say, Father forgive us our sins: but through Christ and his Merits, she is freely forgiven: For he in his own person (saith S. Paul) hath purged her sins, and made her faultless in his sight. Besides whom, there is no Saviour, saith the Prophet: Neither is there Salvation, saith S. Peter, in any other Name.

7. We believe, as he is our only Saviour, so he is our Christ our only Mediator. For the Apostle S. Paul saith, There is one God, one Mediator between God and Man, even the Man Jesus Christ. Wherefore seeing none hath this Name, God and Man, but Jesus Christ, therefore there is no Mediator but Jesus Christ.

8. We believe, that this Church of Christ is and hath been persecuted, by the words of Christ, saying, As they have persecuted me, so shall they persecute you: For the Disciple is not above his Master. For it is not only given unto you to believe in Christ, saith S. Paul, but also to suffer for his sake. For all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, must suffer Persecution.

9. We believe, that the Church of Christ teacheth the Word of God truly and sincerely, putting nothing to, nor taking any thing from: and also doth minister the Sacraments according to the Primitive Church.

10. We believe, that this Church of Christ suffereth all men to read the Scriptures, according to Christs Commandment, saying, Search the Scriptures: for they testify of me. We read also out of the Acts, that when St. Paul preached, the Audience daily searched the Scriptures, whether he preached truly or no. Also the Prophet David teacheth all men to pray with understanding: For how shall the unlearned, saith S. Paul, say Amen, at the giving of Thanks, when they understand not what is said? And what is more allowed than true Faith, which, S. Paul saith, cometh by hearing of the Word of God?

11. We believe, that the Church of Christ teacheth, that God ought to be worshipped according to his Word, and not after the Doctrine of Men. For in vain, saith Christ, ye worship me, teaching nothing but the Doctrine of Men.

Also we are commanded of God by his Prophet, saying, Walk not in the Traditions and Precepts of your Elders: but walk, saith he, in my Precepts: do that I command you: put nothing thereunto, neither take any thing from it. Likewise saith Christ, Thou shalt forsake Father and Mother, and follow me. Whereby we learn, that if our Elders teach otherwise than God commanded, in that Point we must forsake them.

12. We believe, that the Supper of the Lord ought not to be altered and changed, forasmuch as Christ himself, being the Willom of the Father, did institute it. For it is written, Cursed is he that changeth my Ordinances, and departeth from my Commandments, or takeeth any thing from them.

Now we find by the Scriptures, that this holy Supper is so abused.

First, In that it is given in one kind, where Christ gave it in both.

Secondly, In that it is made a Private Mass, where The Lords Supper how many ways it is abused.

Thirdly, In that it is made a Sacrifice for the quick and the dead, whereas Christ ordained it for a remembrance of the everlasting Sacrifice, which was his own Body offered upon the Altar of the Cross once for all, as the holy Apostle saith, Even the full and perfect price of our Redemption: and where there is remission of sin (saith he) there is no more sacrifice for sin.

Fourthly, In that it is worshipped contrary to the Commandment, saying, Thou shalt worship nothing that is made with hands.

Fifthly, In that it is given in an unknown Tongue, whereby the People are ignorant of the right use thereof, how Christ died for our sins, and rose again, for our justification, by whom we be set at peace with God, and received to his favour and mercy by his promise, whereof this Sacrament is a sure Seal and Witnes.

Besides this, it is hanged up, and shut in a box 4 yea, many times so long, that Worms breed in it, and so it putteth: whereby the rude People have an occasion to speak unreverently thereof, which otherwise would speak reverently.

Therefore they that thus abuse it, bring up the slander, and not we, which pray daily to God to restore it to the right use, according to Christs Institution.

Christs words, Hoc est corpus meum, ac demum, hoc expounded.

This phrase of Scriptures expounded by other phrases.

Now concerning Christs words, This is my Body, we deny them not; but we say, that the mind of Christ in them must be searched out by other open Scriptures, whereby we may come to the spiritual understanding of them, which shall be most to the Glory of God: For as the H. Apostle saith: There is no scripture that hath any private Interpretation. Besides this, the Scriptures are full of the like figurative speeches: as for example, Christ saith, This Cup is the New Testament in my Blood. The Rock is Christ (saith S. Paul.) Whosoever receiveth a Child in my name (saith our Saviour Jesus Christ) receiveth me.

Which Sentences must not be understood after the Letter, lest we do err, as the Capernaïtes did, which thought that Christs Body should have been eaten with their teeth, when he spake of the eating thereof. Unto whom Christ saith, Such a fleshly eating of my Body profiteth nothing: it is the Spirit (saith our Saviour Jesus Christ) that quickeneth; the Flesh profiteth nothing: for my words are Spirit and Life.

The words of our Saviour ought to be taken spiritually, and not literally. Christ is to be eaten spiritually.

Thus we see that Christs Words must be understood spiritually, and not literally. Therefore he that cometh to this worthy Supper of the Lord, must not prepare his Jaw, but his Heart, neither Tooth nor Belly; but, Believe (saith S. Augustine) and thou hast eaten it: so that we must bring with us a spiritual hunger, and as the Apostle saith; Try and examine our (selves), whether our Conscience do testify unto us, that we do truly believe in Christ, according to the Scriptures; whereof if we be truly certified, being new born from our old Conversation in Heart, Mind, Will, and Deed, then may we boldly with this Marriage Garment of our Faith come to the Feast.

The Substance of Bread not changed.

In Consideration whereof we have invincible Scriptures, as of Christ himself; This do in remembrance of me. And S. Paul; As often (saith he) as ye eat of this Bread, and drink of this Cup, ye shall remember the Lords death which will be come. Here is no change, but Bread still. And Saint Luke affirmeth the same. Also Christ hath made a just promise, saying; He who shall not have always with you, I leave the World, and go to my Father: For if I should not depart, the comforter which I will send, cannot come unto you. So according to his promise he is ascended as the Evangelists testify. Also Saint Peter saith; That Heaven shall keep him until the last day also.

Christs Body but in one place at once.

Now as touching his Omnipotent Power, we confess and say with S. Augustine, that Christ is both God and Man. In that he is God, he is every where; but in that he is Man, he is in Heaven, and can occupy but one place: whereunto the Scriptures do agree. For his Body was not in all places at once when he was here; for it was not in the Grave when the Woman sought it, as the Angel saith: neither was it at Bethania where Lazzarus died, by Christs own words, saying, I am glad I was not there. And thus we conclude with the Scriptures, that Christ is in his Holy Supper Sacramentally and Spiritually in all them that worthily receive it, and Corporally in Heaven, both God and Man.

Their protestation.

And further, we make here our Protestation before God (whom we call to record in this matter) that this which we have said, is neither of stubbornness, nor wilful mind, as some judge of us; but even of very Conscience, truly (we trust) grounded on Gods Holy Word. For before we took this matter in hand, we besought God from the bottom of our Hearts, that we might do nothing contrary to his Holy and Blessed Word. And in that he hath thus shewed his Power in our weakness, we cannot worthily praise him, unto whom we give hearty thanks, through Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

M. Cawton and M. Higbed content to death in their Confession.

When he had thus delivered and read their Confession, the Bishop still perishing sometime in fair promises, sometime threatening to pronounce Judgment, asked them whether they would stand to this their Confession and other Answers? To whom Cawton said, Yea, we will stand to our Answers written with our hands, and to our Belief therein contained. After which answer the Bishop began to pronounce Sentence against him.

Then he said; that it was much rashness, and without all Love and Mercy to give Judgment without answering to their Confession by the Truth of Gods Word, xi. Cawton whereunto they submitted themselves most willingly. And therefore I, quoth Cawton (because I cannot have Justice at your hand, but that ye will thus rashly condemn me) do appeal from you to my L. Cardinal.

D. Smith readily to receive their Confession, but could not be satisfied. Sentence pronounced against Mr. Cawton and Higbed.

Then D. Smith said, that he would answer their Confession. But the Bishop (not suffering him to speak) willed Harpsfield to say his mind, for the stay of the people; who taking their Confession in his hand, neither touched nor answered one sentence thereof.

Which done, the Bishop pronounced Sentence, first against the said Thomas Cawton, and then calling Thomas Higbed, caused his Articles and Answers likewise to be read. In the reading whereof Higbed said, Ye speak Blasphemy against Christs Passion, and ye go about to trap us with your subtilties and snares. And though my Father and Mother, and other my Kinsfolk did believe, as you say, yet they were deceived in so believing.

And further, where you say, that my Lord, named Crammer (late Archbishop of Canterbury) and others specified in the said Articles, be Hereticks; I do wish that I were such an Heretick as they were, and be. Then the Bishop asked him again, whether he would turn from his Error, and come to the Unity of their Church? To whom he said, No; I would ye should recant: for I am in the Truth, and you in Error.

Well (quoth the Bishop) if ye will return, I will gladly receive you.

No, said Higbed, I will not return as you will have me, to believe in the Sacrament of the Altar your God.

Whereupon the Bishop proceeded, and gave Judgment upon him, as he had done before upon Thomas Cawton. When all this was thus ended, they were both and sent delivered to the Sheriffs, and so by them sent to Newgate, where they remained by the space of 14. days, praised be God, not so much in Afflictions as in Comfortations.

For the increase whereof they earnestly desired all their good Brethren and Sisters in Christ to pray, that God for his Sons sake would go forth with that great mercy, which already he had begun in them, so that they might persevere unto the end, to the praise of the eternal God, and comfort of all their Brethren.

These 14. days (after the condemnation) once expired, they were the 23. day of this Month of March fetched from Newgate at four of the Clock in the morning, and so led through the City to Algate, where they were delivered unto the Sheriff of Essex, and there being fast bound in a Cart, were shortly after brought to their several appointed places of burning: that is to say, Thomas Higbed to Hornden on the Hill, and Thomas Cawton to Rayly (both in the Countrey of Essex) where they did most constantly, the 26. day of the same Month, Seal their Faith with shedding of their Blood by most cruel fire, to the Glory of God, and great rejoicing of the Godly.

M. Cawton and M. Higbed brought from Newgate into Essex.

The constant Martyrdom of M. Thomas Cawton, and M. Higbed, Martyrs.

At the burning of which M. Higbed Justice Brown was also present, as is above specified, and divers Gentlemen in the Shire were commanded to be present, for fear belike, lest they should be taken from them. And thus much touching the Apprehension, Examination, Confession, Condemnation, and burning of these two Godly and constant Martyrs of God.

William Pygot, Stephen Knight, and John Laurence, with their Examination and constant Martyrdom.

IN the story before of Thomas Tomkins and his fellow; March 23. mention was made of six which were Examined, and Condemned together by Bishop Boner, the 9. day of February. Of the which six Condemned Persons, two, which were Tomkins and William Hunter (as ye heard) were executed, the one upon the 26. of February, and the other upon the 26. day of March. Other three, to wit, William Pygot, and Stephen Knight, suffered upon the 28. day, and John Laurence the 29. of the said Month of March.

William Pygot, Stephen Knight, John Laurence, Martyrs.

Touching

Touthing the which three Martyrs, now something to say of their Examinations: It was first demanded of them, what their opinion was of the Sacrament of the Altar. Whereunto they severally answered, and also subscribed, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very Substance of the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, but a special partaking of the Body and Blood of Christ: the very Body and Blood of Christ being only in Heaven, and no where else. This Answer thus made, the Bishop caused certain Articles to be read unto them, tending to the same effect, as did the Articles before of Tomkins and of M. Causton. The tenor whereof here followeth.

Articles or Interrogatories objected by the Bishop of London to William Pygot, Stephen Knight, and John Laurence, the 8. of February. 1555.

Articles objected to William Pygot a 11. b. 1. col. 45.

WHether do you think, and stedfastly believe, that it is a Catholick, Faithful, Christian, and true Doctrine, to teach, preach, and say, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is without any Substance of Bread and Wine there remaining, by the Omnipotent Power of Almighty God, and his Holy Word, really, truly, and in very deed the true and natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, the self same in Substance (though not in outward form and appearance) which was born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered upon the Croas, yea, or nay?

Belief of their forefathers.

Whether do you think, and stedfastly believe, that your Parents, Kinsfolks, Friends, and Acquaintance, here in this present Realm of England, before your Birth a great while, and also after your Birth, professing and believing the said Doctrine and Faith, concerning the said Sacrament of the Altar, had a true Christian Faith, and were Faithful and true Christian People, or no?

Belief of their Godfathers and Godmothers.

Whether do you think, and stedfastly believe, that your Godfathers and Godmothers, professing and believing the said Doctrine and Faith, concerning the said Sacrament of the Altar, had a true Christian Faith, and were Faithful and true Christian People, or no?

Belief of their young Age.

Whether do you think, and stedfastly believe, that your own self in times past, being of the Age of 14. years, and above, did think and believe concerning the said Sacrament of the Altar in all points, as your said Parents, Kinsfolks, Friends, Acquaintance, Godfathers, and Godmothers, did then think and believe them, or no?

Belief of the King and Queen, and Nobility.

Whether do you think, and stedfastly believe, that our Sovereigns the King and the Queen of this Realm of England, and all the Nobility, Clergy, and Laity of this Realm, professing and believing the said Doctrine and Faith, as other Christian Realms do, concerning the said Sacrament of the Altar, have a true Christian Faith and believe as the Catholick and true Church of Christ hath always taught, preached, and taught, or no?

Belief of the true and Catholick Church.

Whether do you think, and stedfastly believe, that our Saviour Christ, and his Holy Spirit hath been, is, and shall be with his Catholick Church, even to the Worlds End, governing and ruling the same in all things especially in the necessary points of Christian Religion, not suffering the same to err, or to be deceived therein?

The true Presence and Substance.

Whether is it true, that you being suspected, or inflamed to be culpable and faulty in speaking against the Sacrament of the Altar, and against the very true Presence of Christs Natural Body, and the Substance thereof in the said Sacrament, and thereupon called before me upon complaint made to me against you, have not been a good space in my House, having freely Meat and Drink, and also divers times instructed and informed, as well by one being our Ordinary, as also by my Chaplains and divers other learned men, some whereof were Bishops, some Deans, and some Archdeacons, and every one of them learned in Divinity, and minding well unto you, and desiring the safeguard of your Soul, and that you should believe and believe the Doctrine of the Catholick Church, as afore said concerning the said Sacrament of the Altar, and whether you did not at all times since your last coming to me, intend, intend to follow and believe the said Doctrine concerning the said Sacrament?

Whether can you now find in your heart and conscience to conform, your self in all points to the said Faith and Catholick Church concerning the said Sacrament of the Altar, faithfully, truly, and plainly, without any dissimulation, believing therein, as our said Sovereigns, with the Nobility, Clergy, and Laity of this Realm, and other Christian Realms, and other persons afore said, and also the said Catholick Church, have and do believe in that behalf?

In case you so cannot, what ground have you to maintain your opinion, and who is of the same opinion with you, and what conference have you had therein with any, what comfort and what relief have you had therein by any of them, and what are their Names and Surnames, and their dwelling places?

Their Answers to these Articles were not much different from Tomkins, and other like Martyrs above mentioned, as here followeth to be seen.

The Answers of Stephen Knight, and William Pygot, to the afore said Articles.

Answers to the Articles afore said.

TO the first Article, they believe, that the contents of this Article is not agreeable to Scripture.

To the second, they answer and believe, that their Parents and other expressed in the said Article, and so believing as is contained in the same, were deceived.

To the third they answer, that they so believed, but they were deceived therein, as they now believe.

To the fourth they say, that they have heretofore believed as is contained in the said Article, but now they do not so believe.

To the fifth they say, that if they so believe, they are deceived.

To the sixth, they believe the same to be true.

To the seventh they answer, and believe the contents of the same to be true.

To the eighth they answer, that they can no whit conform themselves to the Faith and Doctrine contained and specified in this Article, until it be proved by Scripture.

To the ninth they say, that they have no ground to maintain their said opinions, but the Truth, which (as they said) hath been perfwaded by Learned Men, as D. Taylor of Ladley, and such other.

Their Answers being made and exhibited, they were commanded to appear again the next day, at eight of the Clock in the Morning, and in the mean while to be think themselves what they would do.

Another appearance of the said Prisoners before Boner.

THe next day in the Morning, being the 9. of February, before their open appearance, the Bishop sent for William Pygot, and Stephen Knight into his great Chamber in his Palace, where he perfwaded with them to recant, and deny their former Profession.

Another appearance.

Who answered, that they were not perfwaded in their Consciences to return and abjure their opinions, whereunto they had subscribed. Within a while after, they were all three, with Thomas Tomkins, and William Hunter (afore named) brought openly into the Consistory, the 9. day of February afore said, and there had the same Articles propounded unto them, which were before propounded unto the fore said Thomas Tomkins (as appeareth in the discourse of his History) and thereto also subscribed their words, I do so believe.

The Bishop also used certain talk unto John Laurence only; Whereunto he answered in this manner; that he was a Priest, and was consecrated and made a Priest about 18. years past, and that he was sometime a Black Friar professed; that also he was assured unto a maid, whom he intended to have married.

Talk between Boner and John Laurence Priest. John Laurence sometime a Friar.

And being again demanded his opinion upon the Sacrament, he said, that it was a remembrance of Christs Body, and that many have been deceived in believing the true Body of Christ to be in the Sacrament of the Altar, and that all such as do not believe as he doth, do err. And after this talk and other fair words and threatenings, they were all of them commanded to appear again at afternoon.

degraded.

At the which hour they came thither again; and there after the accustomed manner were exhorted to recant and revoke their Doctrine, and receive the Faith. To the which they constantly answered they would not, but would stick to that Faith that they had declared and subscribed unto, for that they did believe that it was no Error which they believed; but that the contrary thereof was very Heretic.

When the Bishop saw that neither his fair flatterings, nor yet his cruel threatnings would prevail, he gave them severally their Judgments. And because John Laurence had been one of their anointed Priests, he was by the Bishop there (according to their order) solemnly degraded, the manner whereof you may see in the History of Mr. Hooper afore-said.

Their Sentence of Condemnation, and this Degradation once ended, they were committed unto the custody of the Sheriffs of London, who sent them unto Newgate, where they remained with joy together, until they were carried down into Essex, and there the 28. day of March the said William Pygot was burned at Braintree, the Stephen Knight at Mauldon, who at the Stake, kneeling on the ground, said this Prayer which here followeth.

The Prayer that Stephen Knight, said at his death upon his Knees, being at the Stake, at Mauldon.

A godly prayer of Ste. Knight at his Martyrdom.

O Lord Jesus Christ, for whose love I leave willingly this Life, and desire rather the bitter death of thy Cross, with the loss of all earthly things, than to abide the Blasphemy of thy most Holy Name, or to obey men in breaking thy holy Commandment: Thou seest, O Lord, that where I might live in Worldly Wealth to worship a false God, and honour thine enemy, I choose rather the torment of the Body, and the loss of this Life, and have counted all things but vile, dust, and dung, that

I might win thee; which death is dearer unto me, than thousands of Gold and Silver. Such love, O Lord, hast thou laid up in my Breast, that I hunger for thee, as the Deer that is wounded desireth the Soy. Send thy holy comforter, O Lord, to aid, comfort, and strengthen this weak piece of earth, which is empty of all strength of itself. Thou rememberest, O Lord, that I am but dust, and able to do nothing that is good: Therefore, O Lord, as of thine accustomed goodness, and love thou hast bidden me to this banquet, and accounted me worthy to drink of thine own Cup amongst thine elect; even so give me strength, O Lord, against this thine Element, which is to my fight it is most irksome and terrible, so to my mind it may at thy Commandment (as an obedient servant) be sweet and pleasant; that through the strength of thy holy Spirit, I may pass through the rage of this fire into thy bosom, according to thy promise, and for this mortal receive an immortal, and for this corruptible put on incorruption: Accept this burnt Sacrifice, and Oil rings, O Lord, not for the Sacrifice, but for thy dear Son Jesus Christ, thy Saviour, for whose Testimony I offer this my Body, offering with all my heart and with all my strength, O Heavenly Father, forgive me my Sins, as I forgive the World. O sweet Son of God my Saviour, spread thy wings over me. O Blessed and Holy Ghost, through whose merciful inspiration I am come hither, conduct me into everlasting Life. Lord, into thy hands I commend my Spirit. Amen.

fire the young Children came about the fire, and cried, as well as young Children could speak, saying; Lord strengthen thy Servant, and keep thy promise, Lord strengthen thy Servant, and keep thy promise: which things, as it is rare, so it is no small manifestation of the Glory of God, which wrought this in the hearts of these little ones; nor yet a little commendation to their Parents, which from their youth brought them up in the knowledge of God and his Truth.

The History of Dr. Robert Farrar, Bishop of S. Davids in Wales, who most constantly gave his Life for the Testimony of the Truth, March 30. Anno 1555.

The next day after, which was the 30. day of the said Month of March, followed the worthy and constant Martyrdom

The burning of Dr. Robert Farrar, Bishop of S. Davids, and Martyr. 56. Articles against Bishop Farrar in K. Edwards time, devised by Thomas Young, Chancellor, and other his Adversaries. Tho. Young Son in law to Confessor.

Martyrdom of the Bishop of S. Davids in Wales, called Robert Farrar, who was the next Bishop in this Catalogue of Christian Martyrs, that suffered after Mr. Hooper. This aforesaid Farrar, by the favour and good will of the Lord Protector, was first called and promoted to that Dignity. This man I may well call twice a Martyr, not only for the cruel death of the fire, which he suffered most constantly in the days of Q. Mary, unto the shedding of his Blood, but also for divers other injuries and molestations in K. Edwards time, which he no less firmly than unworthily sustained at the hands of his enemies after the fall of the Duke of Somerset. Of these his vexations and troubles, with the wrangling Articles and Informations laid against him, to the number of 56. and of the malice conceived against him by certain covetous Canons of the Church of Carmarthen, and what were the proceedings of both parts, as well of the innocent, as of the crafty Adversaries, and what were their Names, in their Articles against him, in order here followeth.

The Principal Articles against Bishop Farrar.

1. George Constantine, David Walter his Servant, Thomas Young Chaunter of the Cathedral Church, who was afterward Archbishop of York, Rowland Merriack Doctor of Law, who was afterward Bishop of Bangor, Thomas Lee, and Hugh Rawlins, &c.

Through the procurement and instance of these his Adversaries, joyning and confederating together, one Hugh Rawlins Priest, and Thomas Lee Brother in Law to the said George Constantine, did exhibit to the Kings most honourable Counsel certain Articles and Informations, conceived and devised by the persons before named, to the intent to blemish the Bishops credit, and utterly (as they thought and made their boast) to pull him from his Bishoprick, and to bring him in a Premunire. The Copy of which Articles we thought here good to express, and so after them to set his answers to the same.

Articles and Informations to the Kings Honourable Council, put up and exhibited by Hugh Rawlins and Thomas Lee, against the Blessed Man of God, Master Farrar Bishop of S. Davids.

Abuse of the Authority to him committed.

1. Item, when the said Bishop first came to his Diocese, he appointed his Chancellor by his Letters of Commission, omitting the Kings Majesties Seale and Authority, and grounded his said Commission upon forraign usurped Laws and Authority, by force of which Authority his said Chancellor did visit certain Deaneries of his said Diocese, and monished the Chaunter and Chapter of the Cathedral Church of S. Davids aforesaid, against a certain day and place, for like intent and purpose, contrary to the Kings Highnesss Laws and Statutes, and in derogation of his Highnesss Supremacy.

2. Item, that the said Chaunter and Chapter, perceiving the fault of the said Commission, took the same from the Register into their custody, refusing to appear by vertue thereof, and by secret and charitable ways and means did admonish the said Bishop of the unlawfulness and faults of the said Commission, and of the danger that he had incurred for granting and executing the same, opening also unto him the effect of the Statute made in the 28. year of our late Sovereign Lord Henry the 8. Which Monitions notwithstanding, the said Bishop neglecting the same, and continuing in his malicious doing or inexcusable ignorance, about the 20. day of August, in the fourth year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord that now is, did confer unto one John Evans the Vicarage of Pembryn, instituting him by Authority of the old forraign usurped Law, making no mention of the Kings Highnesss Authority, in contempt and derogation of the same.

3. Item, whereas the Chancellor and Vicar General to the said Bishop, did upon a lawful Title, and by the Kings Highnesss Supream Authority, admit and institute one John Gough into the Rectory of Haskard with the appurtenances, and gave out in the Kings Name under his Highnesss Seal Ecclesiastical appointed for that Office, with the Teste of the said Bishop, and subscription of the said Chancellor, a Mandate to induct accordingly; by vertue whereof the said John Gough was inducted by the Official there, into the real possession of the same Rectory, with the rights and appurtenances to the same belonging; whereupon the Register of the said Diocese, at the request of the fore said Chancellor did signify the premises, with all the circumstances, before divers persons to the forenamed Bishop: Who notwithstanding did institute and cause to be inducted one Harry Goddard unto the same Parsonage, making no mention of the Kings Majesties Authority nor Supremacy; in contempt and derogation of the same his Highnesss Crown and Dignity, and in extolling the forraign usurped Authority, contrary to the form of the Statute, &c.

4. Item, the said Bishop, immediately after the unlawful Institution and Induction of Goddard aforesaid, molested the said John Gough, lawfully instituted and inducted as before, citing him from place to place, objecting no matter unto him of long season, till at length he arried. Among which Articles was contained, Item, interrogatur quo titulo venet Restoriam de Haskard: So taking upon him the cognition of the Title of the whole fruits and Patronage, in contempt of the Kings Highnesss Regal Crown and Dignity, and in derogation of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

5. Item, He hath commonly made his Collations and Institutions, as he did his first Commission, in his own name and Authority, without expressing the Kings Supremacy.

6. Item, He made under his Seal one Collation, two Institutions, and three Mandates to induct, in one vacation of one Benefice, three several persons, without order of Law, or revocation of any of them, giving to every one like Authority, Title and Right. Whereby, except good foresight, as well of Justices of the Peace, as of the Friends had not been, there had ensued much inconvenience amongst the partakers of the intituled Incumbents in that behalf.

7. Item, the said Bishop decreeing Caveats to be made in Benefices, thereby knowing the Titles Litigious, instituted and caused to be inducted without Trial of any Title or due order of Law.

8. Item, He directeth his Mandates of Induction unto private men, and not to the Archdeacons nor their Officials; contrary to the Law and Custom used in that behalf. Notwithstanding he hath been Counseled to the contrary of men that be learned.

9. Item, having no manner of knowledge nor practice in the Law, he hutch every day in Harvest, and other times, upon causes without assistance of learned in the Law, having with him only an unlearned Boy, which is no Notary, to his Scribe, neither observing the Law, nor yet, reasonable order. And therefore doth no good, but trifles the time, as may appear by his Acts, if he have them to be shewed.

10. Item, He and his Officers, by his knowledge, useth to dispense with Marriages, to be Solemnized without Banes, contrary to the Laws and Ordinances in that behalf.

11. Item, Whereas one Thomas Pritchard, a Chaplain of his, solemnized Matrimony in a private House without Banes, and that betwixt a Priest, and a Sister of hers that was appointed to be married with the said Priest that day; he also being a Parson, and leaving his Cure unperfected that day being Sunday: and notwithstanding that one of the Kings Council in the Marches of Wales informed the said Bishop of the same Misdemeanours, requiring due reformation thereof, He hath done nothing therein, but put the same Chaplain in Office, and made him his Commissary General since that time, bearing a special favour to the rest of the offenders.

12. Item, Whereas one Meredith ap Thomas, his Household-servant, was accused of one Sage Hugh, to have been Father of her Child: the said Bishop, without purgation of his Servant, caused him to sue the Parents of the said Sage of Infamy, first in his principal Consistory, and from thence before a Commissary of his, being his Household Chaplain, and at the last took the matter before himself, so railing against all his Officers, because they proceeded not after his partial affection, and against the Anno 1555. the Law, that honest men of Carmarthen, where he then fate upon the Cause, judge him to be, or at the least to have been detract of his wit, and by this partial handling, the Cause remaineth unfinished, and the Child without Father.

13. Item, Whereas one Jeskin Ph. accused William Chambers, a Servant of the Bishops that found this William in adulterous manner with his Wife, by reason whereof the Bishop expelled the Wife out of his House, the said Infamy not purged, the parties have been both again in the Bishops House and Service since that time, to the evil example of other.

14. Item, By his unlawful sequestration of the fruits of the Benefices of Langatock, and Lamybangel, by the undiscreef handling of the same, there were raised the number of four hundred people or more, which bickered sundry times together, to the great danger of the Inhabitants thereof, had it not been pacified by the discreet means of Sir Roger Vaughan Knight.

15. Item, By his like unlawful collation of the Prebend of Lambister to one Stephen Green, a Chaplain of his, by covenant and promise to maintain the Sute, by whose crafty and undiscreef handling of the same, there was raised in the Country of Radnor the 19. day of August last past, about three or four hundred men to like danger, but that the matter was stayed by John Bradshaw, Rice ap Glin, and Stephen ap Rice, Justices of the same County. Who with great danger to themselves and theirs, pacified the matter, committing an hundred of the offenders to ward.

16. Item, such as he oweth displeasure unto, he citheth from place to place, and day to day, only for their vexation, laying no matter against them; and being divers times required the Copy of his proceedings against them, to the intent they might answer accordingly, and be at their lawful defence; he denied to all such persons the Copies of his proceedings.

17. Item, He and his Officers wink at the manifest and open crimes of his Fautors and Adherents, to the evil example of the whole Diocess, and abuse the Censures of Excommunication and Suspension, making it an Instrument of revenging against such as they do not favour.

18. Item, Having received payment of the Kings Majesties Subsidy, due in October, the 4. year of his Graces Reign, of the foresaid Chaunter of the Cathedral Church of S. Davids, and Rowland Meyrike, two of the Rectors there, before Christmas last, he unjustly of a repented mind and purpose afterward certified them for Recusants, to their undoing, if they had not been admonished of his cruel purpose, and provided lawful defence for the same.

19. Item, The said Bishop celebrating Matrimony in his own person, dispensed contrary to the Book of Ordinance, with the parties married, for not receiving the holy Communion; the parties both being young, and lusty persons, having no reasonable cause wherefore they should abstain. At which celebration the Bishop Communicated not himself. And further, the Communion was celebrated by a Chaplain of his, with superstitious blowings, kneelings, and knockings both of the Chaplain that Ministred, and of all the company, onely one other Priest Communicating for the manner.

20. Item, Where the Official of the Archdeacon of Carmarthen, in his visitation within Carmarthen, found, contrary unto the said Ordinance, an Altar set up in the Body of the Church, for celebration of the Communion, and caused the said Altar to be taken away, and a table to be set in the middle of the Church; the Bishop after the same commanded the Vicar of Carmarthen to set the Table without the Chancel again for the Ministrations of the Communion.

21. Item, He being often in Carmarthen, and other places in the Chancel at the time of holy Communion, not only tarried there himself, neither Communicating nor Ministring bareheaded and uncovetied, reverently kneeling; but also permiteth the people there to continue, the Chancel and Quire full, kneeling and knocking their Breasts. Which manner is yet used in all the Diocess, without any reformation or gainstay of him or any of his Officers.

22. Item, Whereas superstitious praying upon beads is not only ungodly; but reproved in the Kings Majesties Injunctions; the said Bishop meeting many with Beads in their hands never rebuked any of them.

23. Item, The said Bishop being in the Pulpit, and seeing Croffes there within the Church, with a great number of lights upon them, never spake against any of them.

24. Item, Whereas the Ordinance willeth, that no Children be Baptized but upon the Sunday; or Holy day (only Cause of necessity excepted) he, having two Children himself born without danger, caused one of them to be Baptized on the work day. And by his example, without any contradiction or motion of reformation, it is used, as it hath been customed, in all the Diocess commonly, contrary unto the Book of Ordinance in that behalf.

25. Item, From his first coming into the Diocess, he hath had and yet hath his only study, labour, and practice, to survey Land, and to look for Mines, &c. neglecting his own bounden duty to apply to his Book and Preaching.

26. Item, He keepeth no manner of Hospitality, but hath his Servants Table in one Parlour with him, left any Stranger should approach his Servants being at their meat.

27. Item, He is commonly talking not of Godliness, but of Worldly matters; as baking, brewing, inclosing, ploughing, mining of Mill-Stones, discharging of Tenants and such like, not only at his Table, but also most commonly at other places.

28. Item, He hath warned divers Tenants out of their Lands, which they and their elders have enjoyed for their rents these Hundred years, and more, and occupied with tillage; which he saith he will inclose, and being sued to of poor men, because of quietness, he answered; The Crows shall eat the Corn, rather than ye shall have any profit thereof.

29. Item, When the Vicars Choral of Saint Davids, for relief of their Hospitality, had an lland of his called the Bishops Ile, for 40. s. rent, he hath set it to a Chaplain of his for five pound by year. And where, at the suit of the said Vicars, it was granted by the Bishop in the whole Chapter, that the Vicars should have it for years at 40. s. rent, and pay 20. li. entry; he now covetously, and against his promise openly made, denieth the same, except the Vicars would give 50. pound.

30. Item, He caused the Curate of S. Davids to warn their Tenants out of their said Lands in the Pulpit, to the great Offence of the People, which were wont to have Gods Word Preached there; and so they said to the Curate at that time.

31. Item, To the Plowing of a Pasture not above ten days work, in Lent, Anno 1549. he had 32 Ploughs in one day, and those Ploughs the Priest bade in the Church, contrary to the Statute of Gomoriba in that behalf provided, and to the evil example of Gentlemen in that Country.

32. Item, Where the Kings Majesty of godly remembrance, Henry the eighth, appointed at Brecknock a Schoolmaster, Usher, Reader of Divinity, a Minister, and certain Scholars, and for the maintenance thereof appointed xl. and xii. li. of the pensions and revenues of Brecknock: the Bishop finding it so furnished, hath neither Reader nor Minister there, covetously converting their stipends to his own use.

33. Item, The Bishop was twice in one day presented in the great Court, holden in the Court of Carmarthen, for inclosing and covetous incroaching of the Kings High-Way.

34. Item, He covetously occupieth purchasing of Lands, buying of Cattel, Merchandise, and other things, being indebted a notable sum to the Kings Majesty, as may by his accounts in the Court of Tenths and first fruits appear.

35. Item, Whereas one Lewis John Tho. Boal, putting from him his lawful wedded Wife, upon Christmas Even last past, without banns had Marriage Solemnized with a Concubine of his in a Church within three miles of the Bishops abode at that time: The Bishop since knowing the premises, hath not only of a covetous mind entered familiarity with the said Lewis, and bought a piece of Land of him, but also ever since hath (to have his Lands lands good cheap) left both the parties and Priest unpunished, using him so familiarly, that whereas a Sumner cited the parties to appear among other criminals for the same fact; the Bishop commanded the said Sumner to let him alone, and so they all remain unpunished.

36. Item, Whereas the whole Chapter of S. Davids (as it was thought) was in assured amity with the Bishop, they all being his Officers or Chaplains, he procured them to be impleaded with a Writ of Quo Warranto in the Kings Bench, keeping the Writ with him secretly, at the least three Months, not delivering it, but only ten days before the day of their appearance, the parties being seven days journey distant from London.

37. Item, He is a wilful wrong doer, and troubler of men in their rights, entering upon their lawful possessions, stirring thereby much contention, and so notably known, to the offence of the Country.

wilful negligence.

38. Item, Whereas the Bishop aforesaid was appointed in August, Anno 1547. and consecrated in September following, he never came into the Diocese himself, nor sent or appointed any Officer there before the Month of April, Anno 1558. to the great disorder of the Kings Majesties Subjects, lack of reformation, and Ministration of Justice.

39. Item, During his visitation, the said Bishop did not endeavor himself to see reformation, but rode surveying of Lands, appointing vain inclosures, and such other things. Which are no part of the Office to him committed, nor yet convenient, namely at that time.

40. Item, The visitation finished, he neither appointed his Officers to examine the Clergy of the places of Scripture to them appointed to be studied in the same visitation, nor hath hitherto effectually gone about any godly reformation, according to the ordinance of this Realm.

41. Item, The Bishop since his coming to the Diocese never Ministrated the Communion, saving only at two times, that he ordered certain Deacons; but in every thing (save that he otherwhiles preacheth) ordereth himself like no Minister, nor man of his vocation.

42. Item, He hath so alienated himself from study, that he Preacheth undiscernedly, discrediting the Office, not only utterly reporting the Scriptures, but also Preaching the ten Commandments in one place in declaration of the eighth of them, for lack of stuff, the pith of his matter was Matrimony of Priests.

43. Item, the 13. day of September last, he ordained certain Deacons, and making his exhortation, he taught that a man was not bounden to forgive, but him that asketh forgiveness; and being admonished by a Letter better to declare the same, because that divers were offended with that Doctrine; he hath hitherto deferred so to do, to the maintenance of malicious hearts in these parts.

44. Item, Since the first day of August, Anno 1549. unto the feast of Candlemas last, he hath Preached but two or three Sermons, of which one was Preached at Aberguilly upon Saint Stephens day last, to a great Audience that understood no English, being but a mile from Carmarthen, an English Town, and chief of his Diocese.

45. Item, Since his ordinary visitation, which was finished in July, Anno 1548. he hath neither Preached, nor caused to be Preached in the Towns of Tenby, Pembroke, nor Haverford, being English Towns, not much distant from the place of his most continuance.

46. Item, The Churches appropriate to the Bishop have no Paraphrases in English, and few of them Bibles.

47. Item, The Churches of the Diocese for the most part, and the Clergy almost every one lack Paraphrases, notwithstanding there hath been these two years, and yet be a great number of them to be sold in the Diocese.

Folly.

48. Item, To declare his folly in riding, he useth a Bristle with white studs and snaffle, white Scottish stirrups, white spurs, a Scottish pad with a little staff of three quarters long, which he hath not only used Superstitiously these four or five years, in Communication oftentimes boasting what Countreys he hath compassed and measured with the same staff.

49. Item, he hath made a vow, that he will never wear a cap; for he saith, it is comely wearing of a hat, and so cometh in his long gown and hat, both in to the Cathedral Church, and to the best Town of his Diocese, sitting in that sort in the Kings great Sessions, and in his Consistory, making himself a mock to the People.

50. Item, He said that he would go to the Parliament on foot: And to his friends that dissuaded him, alleging that it is not meet for a man in his place; he answered, I care not for that, it is no Sin.

51. Item, having a Son, he went before the Midwife to the Church, presenting the Child to the Priest, and giving his Name Samuel, with a solemn interpretation of the Name, appointing also two Godfathers and two Godmothers, contrary to the ordinance, making his Son a monster, and himself a laughing stock throughout all the Country.

52. Item, He daily useth whistling of his Child, and saith that he understood his whistle, when he was but three days old. And being advertised of his friends, that men laughed at his folly, he answered; They whistle their hories and dogs, and I am contented; they might also be contented that I whistle my Child, and so whistle him daily, all friendly admonition neglected.

53. Item, In his ordinary visitation among other his sins, he surveyed Milford Haven, where he espied a Seal-fish tumbling. And he crept down to the water side, and continued there whistling by the space of an hour, perfwading the company that laughed fast at him, that by his whistling he made the fish to tarry there.

54. Item, speaking of scarcity of Herrings, he laid the fault to the covetousness of Fishers, who in time of plenty took so many, that they destroyed the Breeders.

55. Item, Speaking of the alteration of the Coin, he wished that what metal soever it were of, the penny should be in weight worth a penny of the same metal.

56. For a conclusion, the said Bishop in all his doings, since he came to his Diocese, hath behaved himself most unmeet for a man of his vocation, being for a Minister of Justice, an abuser of the Authority to him committed, for a teacher of the Truth, and reformer of Superstition, a maintainer of Superstition without any Doctrine of reformation, for a liberal and hospital, an unfatiable covetous man: for a diligent over-seer, wilful and negligent: for an example of godly Wisdom, given wholly to folly: for merciful, a cruel revenger. And further, for a peace-maker, a fower of discord. And so in all his behaviour a discreditor and slanderer of his vocation, and a deceiver of all men, that had hope that he should do any reformation. For he yet hath neither brought into his Diocese, nor hath belonging unto him any learned Preacher. But such learned Preachers as he found in the Diocese at his entry, he so vexeth and disquieteth, that they cannot attend to apply their preaching, for the defence of their livings, against his quarrellous inventions and unjust certificates.

After these wrangling Articles and Informations were given up, then was the Bishop called for to answer, the hearing whereof was committed unto Dr. Watson, and Sir John Mason Knight, who likewise received the Bishops answers to the forsaide Articles, the Copy and effect of which answers hereafter follow.

D. Watson and Sir John Mason Contradictors for the hearing of the Bishops matter.

The Answer of Robert, Bishop of S. Davids, to the Articles Ministrated unto him.

TO the first Article he saith, that after lawful Ministration in the Kings Majesties Name and Authority, from the said Bishop (being then at London) given to the Chaunter and Chapter of S. Davids, for visitation at a certain day there to be entred; the said Bishop himself for such purpose coming into the Diocese, knowing also that the Chaunter, and one of the Canons of that Church, and late before Commissaries in that Diocese, had not only by their own evil example and winking at the faults of other, or neglecting to correct the same, left there among Priests and others, much detestable whoredom; but had also spoiled the Cathedral Church of Croffes, Chalice, and Censers, with other Plate; Jewels, and Ornaments of the Church, to the value of five hundred Marks or more, for their own private lucre (the Church remaining even yet very vile, & in great decay) and had also made further under their Chapter Seal many blankes, to the number number of twelve or more, Sede vacante, without the Kings licence or knowledge; Therefore he brought with him one Edmund Farlee, Bachelour of Law, by Dr. Tung and Dr. Neofen to him commended, as a man sufficient in faithful truth and learning, to be his Chancellor. To whom he granted and sealed a Commission for that purpose, giving credit to him in his faculty, concerning the draught and form thereof. But the Kings Majesty's title of Supremacy was fully set forth in the same Commission. Whether there were any default of formal words in setting forth of the Kings Authority therein, he is not certain. For he committed the doing thereof to his Chancellor, who was commended to him for a learned man. And the Bishop saith, that he did never ground the Commission upon any foreign usurped Laws or Authority: Neither did his said Chancellor by force of such Authority visit any Deany of the said Diocess, nor gave any Monition to the Chaunter and Chapter there, by force of that Commission for any like intent or purpose, but only offered in the Kings Majesty's Name and Authority (to the said Bishop committed) to enter Visitation of the Chaunter and Chapter of the Cathedral Church, at another day to be executed by the Bishop himself, for reformation of the Chapter Church, and Ministers there, according to the Kings gracious Ordinances and Injunctions in that behalf. But the aforesaid Chaunter and Canon of the Church, before the sight of any Commission, stubbornly answered the said Chancellor, that they would not receive him, nor any other to Visit them, except he were one of their Chapter. And further, desiring to see his Commission, he delivered the same into their hands, who would not deliver it him again. And so it may appear that he did nothing by force of that Commission.

2. To the second Article he saith, that they opened not unto him the danger of any Statute, to his knowledge and remembrance. Nevertheless, he not knowing any default in the said Commission, and certainly minding with all diligence the faithful execution of his office of Preaching, and Visiting the whole Diocess in his own person, by the Kings Majesty's Authority, for the conservation of Gods peace and the Kings, in that dangerous time of Rebellion, then beginning to arise in other places, did neglect and lay apart the stubborn behaviour and ungodly doings of the said Chaunter and Canon, and agreed with them, omitting all contempts and reproaches toward him and his said Chancellor, and all manner of contention by them done, fearing else that through their unquietness some Tumult might have risen among the People thereof and did also make the said Chaunter his Chancellor, and Canon his Commissary, according to their ambitious desires, to appease their malice in that dangerous time. And further, he saith, that he made Collation to Sir John Evans of the Vicarage of Pembrin, what day or time he remembereth not, not by any old foreign usurped Authority, but by the Kings Authority only, making full mention of the Kings Title and Authority in the same Collation.

3. and 4. To the third and fourth he saith, that whereas he had granted to George Constantine the office of a Register, who brought unto him a Commission for the Chancellorship, to be sealed and delivered to the aforesaid Chaunter of Saint Davids, desiring the said Bishop to seal it, he utterly refused so to do, because the said George had put therein a clause of admitting Clerks into Benefices: the which Authority the said Bishop would not in any wise grant, reserving the examination and admission of Clerks only to himself, for the avoiding of wicked bribery and partiality. Whereupon the said George and the Chaunter promised the said Bishop by their faith and truth, afore three or four honest witnesses, not to execute that clause of Institution into Benefices, but only to those Clerks whom the Bishop did first examine and admit, and send unto them to be instituted and inducted; upon which promise the Bishop sealed the said Commission. And after that time, the Parsonage of Haskard being void, and by the reason of Lapse devolved to the Bishops gift for that time, he conferred it to one Sir Henry Godberd, with a Collation of Institution by the Kings Authority, not extolling any foreign usurped Authority. In the which Collation or Institution is fully mentioned the renunciation of the Bishop of Rome, and all foreign powers and Authority, with the full stile of his Majesty's Supremacy. And this Collation of the Church of Haskard he gave, before he understood or knew that his Chancellor had given out the like, and he surely thinketh his Collation was the first. That notwithstanding, the said George Constantine, and the said Chaunter having a Vowson determined by reason of Lapse, admitted and instituted one John Gough, to the said Parsonage of Haskard, by Vertue of their expired Vowson, and Sealed his Institution with a wrong Seal (because they had not the right Seal of Office to that purpose) contrary to their former earnest promise, and the Bishops Right, and without any manner of warning or fore-knowledge thereof to him given, which thing by them untruly done, the said George Constantine nevertheless came to the Bishops House and there did write with his own hand the Letters of Induction for the said Sir Henry Godberd Priest, comprising in the same the whole Sum of the Institution or Collation which the said Bishop had made, and the same George did Seal the said Letters of Induction with his own hand, finding no manner of fault therein, nor making any word or mention of his and the Chaunters former wrong doing, but so departed for that time. And afterward he came again, and shewed the Bishop what they had done before concerning the Parsonage aforesaid. And further, the said Defendant saith, that he did not molest the said John Gough, but lawfully did call him in the Kings Majesty's Name, not for any Title of Patronage, but to know whether he were Parson of Haskard, and how he was thereto admitted, and instituted, and inducted, and by what Authority he presumed to preach there, without the Kings Majesty's licence, with other like lawful demands, whereunto he sturdily refused to give Answer; and saith, that the Article contained in his accusation, saying thus: Item interrogator quo titulo tenet Rectorem de Haskard, was not mislaid unto the party in that sort, so far as he knoweth, but in these words or like, Quomodo intravit in Rectorem, &c.

5. To the fifth he saith, that albeit George Constantine Register, did wilfully withdraw his bounden Service due to the Kings Highness, and to the said Defendant in the Kings Name, refusing to attend either by himself, or his sufficient Deputy for writing of Records and other Instruments, yet the said Defendant made his Collations and Institutions in his own Name, not by his own Authority, nor by another, save only the Kings Authority, according as he hath declared in his Answer to the first Article, expressing in them the Kings Supremacy with the Bishops own Name and Seale of Office, as he ought to do, according to the provision of the Kings Statute in such a case.

6. To the sixth he saith, that the Vicar of Pembrin being void, he, as right Patron thereof to his knowledge, conferred it to John Evans Clerk, with Letters of Institution and Induction; and after, when the Kings Presentation came to him for one David Jenkins Clerk, he desired fourteen days respite at that time, either to shew ancient record for his right, and then the matter to stand to the Determination of the Law, or else if he shewed not, both he and his Clerk to give place to the Kings Clerk, Which condition was by Sir Thomas Jones Knight, Doctor M. and the said David Jenkins received, and an Institution with an Induction was made conditionally to be put into the hands of Sir Thomas Jones Knight, for safe custody of the Kings Clerks behoof, after the fourteen dayes to be executed at the hands of the said Defendant, if he failed to shew. Within which time the said Defendant did shew an old ancient Record, declaring the full right of Patronage on the said Defendants behalf, and so that Institution and Induction was never by the said Defendant put in execution. Nevertheless, the said David Jenkins (contrary to his promise and Oath giving thereupon his right hand to the said Sir Thomas Jones Knight) took Advantage by the said writing, without knowledge of the said Defendant. After which time the Lord Chancellor, by his Letters written to the said Defendant, advertised him, to admit one John Ap Powell Clerk presented by vertue of a Vowson which the Lord Chancellor judged to be good, and so to be admitted notwithstanding his former pretension, whereby he would not abate the others mans right. And so this Defendant made one Collation, two Institutions, and three Mandates, doing no wrong thereby to his knowledge. And further he saith, that there was no business nor unquietness about the possession of the said Vicarage, but this Defendant giving place, was content to lose his right for that time.

7. To the seventh he saith, that as he now remembereth, he never decreed any Caveats to be made in Benefices, neither did institute nor cause to be inducted any into Benefices, being known to him litigious.

8. To the eighth he saith, that because the Archdeacons be absent from their Offices, and have not had faithful diligent Officials, he hath directed his Mandates to them or their Officials, or to other lawfull persons in that behalf, so far as he knoweth.

9. & 10. The ninth and tenth Articles he denieth as very untrue.

11. To the eleventh he saith, that whereas Sir Thomas Jones Knight advertised him, that Thomas Pritchard had celebrated Matrimony in a private House, betwixt a certain Priest and a Woman, whose Sister had refused the same, the said Pritchard leaving his own Cure unserved on that Sunday, this Defendant did put the same Thomas Pritchard to penance for so doing, Marrying them without Rance. And whereas he made the said Thomas Pritchard, who is a Bachelor of law, his Commissary; it was for the respect of learning in the law, thereby faithfully to execute his office according to Justice. And the said Defendant did never favor nor bear with any man wrongfully in his wrong doings. He confesseth that the Matrimony was solemnized in a private Church, and that the Cure was that day unserved.

12. To the twelfth he saith, that it is slanderous and utterly untrue. And that one Sir John Hughes, Priest, made Sage Hughes (daughter to his Stepmother) an Heiress at seven years of age, and after Married openly to another man, being Minister thereof himself. After which doing he took her away from her Husband again, and kept her, alledging a former contract. And when the said John Hughes was lawfully convicted before the said Bishop, in open Court at Carmarthen, of that his abominable Adultery, claiming the Kings pardon thereof, yet the said Sage confessed, that he had to do with her the night before that day of appearance. Which later crime he denied. Nevertheless shee proved with Child, affirming, both before the Birth and after, the Child to be his, the Midwife and others being Witnesses thereof. Yet notwithstanding, George Constantine, as a wicked Bolsterer of the said Priest in his naughty doings, with the help of the aforesaid Chaunter, first uttered that Meredith Thomas was Father of the said Child: which matter was ordered in the Ecclesiastical Court according to Justice, without any partial affection of the said Bishop, or of any other to his knowledge.

13. To the 13. he saith, it is utterly false so far as he knoweth.

14. To the 14. he saith, that by lawfull sequestration in the Kings Majesty's name, he committed the custody of the fruits of Llangethoke and Llanvihangel to two honest men, for the behoof of the Kings first fruits and tenths, and of the next incumbent, and further he did not meddle nor Minister any cause of unquietness in that behalf.

15. To the 15. he saith, that he made a collation, lawfull (as he supposeth) of the Prebend of Lanbister, to Stephen Graene his Chaplain, without any covenant or colour, and further he did not meddle in that behalf.

16. To the 16. he saith, it is untrue as far as he knoweth.

17. To the 17. he saith, it is untrue for his own part, and his Officers, as far as he knoweth.

18. To the 18. he saith, it is untrue as far as he knoweth, and that he did certify the Recusants justly, as he thinketh, because they refused wilfully to pay the Kings whole Subsidy of their whole dividends, as it standeth in the Kings booke, pertaining to the Canons Resident.

19. To the 19. he saith, that after travel of fourteen miles, being not able fasting to celebrate the communion, in a Chappel within the House of Sir Thomas Jones

Knight, one of the Kings Majesty's Honourable Council of the Marches of Wales, this Defendant celebrated Matrimony without receiving the Communion for the causes aforesaid, betwixt M. Giffith Rice, and the Daughter of the said Sir Thomas Jones, according to the Kings Ordinances. And Thomas Pritchard Priest, administered the holy Communion there without any Superstition; to this Defendants knowledge: and the Married persons not disposed to receive the holy Communion, he could not compel them against their Consciences, and saith, that he did not dispense with them, as it is contained in the Article.

To the slanderous and untrue title of maintenance of Superstition, &c. he saith, that he did not maintain any Superstition, contrary to the Kings Ordinances and Injunctions, but abhorring in his heart all Superstition, hath Travelled and doth Travel to Abolish the same by True Doctrine, and doing as much as he can, with the Kings peace, among his People there.

20. To the 20. he saith, that George Constantine in the third year of the Kings Maiesties Reign not regarding the dangerous time of Rebellion in other places, rashly caused to be pulled down, without any Authority known to this Defendant, the Communion Altar in Carmarthen Church, by his own presumptuous mind, appointing the use thereof in another place of the Church, not without grudge of the People. Wherefore the Bishop fearing Tumult, commanded the Vicar to set up the Communion Table (for the time) near to the place where it was before.

21. To the 21. he saith, that he hath been divers times in the Quire of Carmarthen, and hath tarried there in the Communion time, not communicating himself, and that in every Church where he cometh on the Holy day to preach, or to pray, he kneeleth in the Quire barcheaded, as well at Matins before the Communion, as at Evensong after, without any Superstition: he thinketh it not necessary for the Communion sake to leave kneeling to Christ. But he hath diligently taught the People not to kneel nor knock to the visible shew; or external shew of the Sacrament. And the Quires of Carmarthen and other places there, are not close at the sides, so that the People may come in and forth at their pleasure. Moreover the Kings Ordinances do not Authorize him to rebuke the People for knocking on their breasts, in token of repentance of their sins; nor for kneeling, in token of submission to God for mercy in Christ.

22. To the 22. he saith, that in the time of Rebellion in Devonshire and Cornwall, threatening to come into Wales, he teaching the People the true form of Prayer, according to Gods holy Word, and declaring the Prayer upon Beads to be vain and superstitious, yet durst not for fear of Tumult forcibly take from any man his Beads, without Authority. And touching the not reproving of such as he should meet, wearing Beads, he remembereth not that he hath so done, unless it were in the Rebellion time, at which time he durst not rebuke such Offenders.

23. To the 23. he saith, that he being in the Pulpit, his face towards the People; did not see the lights, if any were set up about the Corps behind his back till after that he came down from the Pulpit. But he with George Constantine and the aforesaid Chanter, sitting in the Church in Carmarthen to hear Causes, and seeing the Vicar with other Priests, with song and lights bringing a Corps up to the Church, called forth with the Vicar and Priests, and rebuked them in open Court, as Cormorants and Ravens, flying about the dead carcass for lucre sake.

24. To the 24. he saith, that he caused the one Child being born with great peril of death to the Mother, and itself lying for dead a certain space after, to be christened on the working day: the other Child was christened on the working day, because both Father and Mother, and all other People there were in peril of death by reason of the sudden sweat, which all men feared at that time. And touching the rest of the accusation, which is, that by that example, it is used after the old accustomed fashion, he knoweth no such thing.

Anno

1555.

To the Title of Covetousness, he saith; His doings prove the contrary, as his Neighbours know.

25. And the 25. Article he utterly denieth.

26. To the 26. he saith, That his Hall at Abergilly being ruinous, he useth for his Hall a great Chamber adjoining, for himself and his Servants, and all manner of Strangers, and besides twenty Persons in house daily. What other Hospitality he keepeth, honest Neighbours can tell.

27. To the 27. he saith, That his Talk is according to his Hearers, that is to say, reverently and truly of Faith, Love, and honest Life, according to the Scripture to like Auditors; and to other unreverend and rash Tumblers of Scriptures and holy Doctrine, he doth talk of honest worldly things with godly intent; and that he doth not most commonly talk of such things as are expressed in this Article, but when he hath honest occasion so to do.

28. The 28. he saith is untrue, and that he hath wretched no man out of their Lands; but where he is definite of necessary provision, and would have part of his own Demain from certain Freeholders, having it only from year to year at pleasure, he cannot obtain it without brawling. Wherefore he suffereth them to keep it even yet still, against right and reason. And touching the rest, that he had rather the Crows should eat it, &c. he never spake any such word.

29. To the 29. he saith, That whereas his Predecessor Bishop Barlow did let to farm the Isle of Ramsay to one William Brown, after whose hands this Defendant received it into his own possession, the Vicars of S. David's being dispossessed of it long before; he did let it over to Stephen Green for 40 Shillings the Ground, as it was before, and 3 Pounds more for Seals, Conveys, and Fowls there; and he knoweth of no right the Vicars Choral had therein, who did refuse when this Defendant did diligently upon reasonable Conditions offer the same unto them: and this Defendant made no Promise unto them, as is contained in the Article.

30. To the 30. he saith, He knoweth not but that he advertised his Bailiff to warn the Freeholders; and others having his Demain in Rent, during pleasure, to leave it at a lawful day to this Defendants necessary use; and did not cause the Curate to do as is contained in the Article to his remembrance.

31. To the 31. he saith, That he knoweth not what the Priest bade in the Church, nor how many Plows there came, undesired of this Defendant. But he knoweth certainly, that he desired no mans labour but for his Money.

32. To the 32. he saith, That he knoweth not any such appointment of Schools and Revenues there, but he found there (after the departing of Bishop Barlow) a Schoolmaster, an Usher being a Priest, and 20 Scholars, which he hath hitherto maintained better than he found it, to his knowledge: he did never convert any Penny thereof to his own use, albeit he might lawfully have done the same.

33. The 33. he saith, is all untrue, so far as he knoweth.

34. To the 34. Article he saith, He never purchased more than three Parcels, whereof one was two Shillings eight Pence by the year; the second, three Shillings four Pence; and the third, six and twenty Shillings and eight Pence, or thereabout, by year; the rest he denieth.

35. To the 35. he saith, That he never bought of Lewis John Thomas his Land good cheap, but after 40 years purchase, not knowing at that time any such thing as is contained in the Article against the said Lewis John. Either bade he the Sumner to let him alone, but as soon as he heard any thing of it, commanded the Sumner to cite him; and so he was cited in this Defendants House, occasioning him to break his bargain: to the which Lewis this Defendant said these words, If you would give me your Land with an House full of Gold, I cannot, nor will I suffer you to keep a Lemman. Then the said Lewis affirming the latter Woman to be his wife, and the first unknown to this Defendant, he caused the said Lewis to be called to the Consistory for Trial, where it hangeth yet: And also by lawful Process Excommunicated the first Woman, for that she would not by any means appear in the Court to claim or to countenance Marriage with the said Lewis, and so the standeth this day at the point of Signification.

36. To the 36. he saith, That whereas the Chantor, and R.M. with other Canons there, would not obey the Kings godly Injunctions, concerning the finding of a School for Poor mens Children, a Lecture of Divinity, Sermons on the Sundays, Repairing of their Church and Mansion Houses, decent Order and Ministration there; but stubbornly counted themselves (with the Chantor) to be a Body Politick, without regard of the Bishop and his lawful Monitions, being himself named in their Shire Statutes, Decanus & quasi Decanus, having all their Dean-Stall in the Quire with a Prebend thereunto annexed, and the chief place in the Chapter-House, with a Key of their Chapter-Seal, being also by the Kings Majesties Commission appointed their Ordinary: yet would they not in any wise deliver unto him a Book of their Statutes, for the better knowledge of his and their Duties, nor shew unto him their Records and Monuments, for declaration of the Kings Right and his. For which cause this Defendant, by Writ of Quo warranto, lawfully called them to answer, which yet lieth asleep, to the loss of the Kings Majesties Right. The time of delivery of the said Writ, he remembereth not.

37. The 37. he saith is all false, as far as he knoweth.

To the Title of Wilful Negligence; he saith, that he hath used to his power Willing Diligence.

38. To the 38. he saith, That he being attendant according to his bounden duty) to serve the Kings Highness during the time of the Parliament, from the first unto the last day; then immediately after repaired into his Diocese, and he might not trust R.M. the Chantor, and George Constantine to execute faithfully the Jurisdiction, because they had before (through their slanderous life, and not punishing Misdoers) left the Country in great enormity of filthy Whoredom. And saith farther, that one cause why he appointed not an Officer, &c. was for that he lacked his Letters of Authority of Jurisdiction.

39. 40. The 39 and 40. he saith are untrue.

41. To the 41. he saith, That how often he did minister the Communion he doth not remember; but in all other things so far as he knoweth, he hath studied to order himself according to his vocation, as far as he believeth, he goeth like a Minister.

42. To the 42. he saith, That he hath not alienated himself from study, neither preached undirectly, nor reported the Scriptures untruly to his knowledge: (but he hath been very much hindered both from Study and Preaching, by the malicious, crafty, and covetous behaviour of the forenamed Persons.) And that he did set forth the Doctrine of honest Marriage, as well of all other men as of Priests, even as the Scripture then rehearsed did minister occasion.

43. To the 43. he saith, That reciting the words of Luke, If thy Brother have offended against thee, blame him, and if he repent forgive him, and if he have offended against thee seven times in one day, and seven times in the day be converted unto thee, saying, I am sorry, forgive him: He said farther these words in effect, It appeareth by this place of Scripture, that we are not bound (except he repent) to forgive him; but we are bound to pray God to forgive him; and to give him grace to repent, that he may forgive him.

44. To the 44. he saith, That he hath preached right often at Carmarthen, as well as at other places; and he saith, that a great number at Abergilly do understand English very well.

45. To the 45. he saith, That after he had preached first at Brecknock, Carmarthen, Swansea, Laugharne, Tinly, Pembroch, Hereford, St. Davids, Cardigan, with other notable Towns; he hath since that time preached to a great many other poor Churches, but not in Tinly nor Pembroch: but for Hereford he standeth in doubt. And whereas he brought with him at the first a learned Preacher, of godly life, the ungodly stubborn behaviour of the persons before named wearied him away. And whereas, he had waded another Learned man to come into his Diocess to preach, George Constantine by his discouragement advised him from this Defendant.

46. To the 46. he saith, That in all his Churches appropriately ingrossed into his hands a great number of Paraphrases; and this Defendant hath admonished the Clergy to buy every one, for his discharge: and if the said George being Official of two Archdeaconries, and other Officials in their Office would declare unto him what Churches do lack Bibles or Paraphrases, he would cause it to be amended as much as in him lieth.

To the title of Folly, he saith, That his desire is in true simple manner of his words, deeds, and other honest behaviour, through Gods Grace to shew godly Wisdom.

48. TO the 48. he saith, That he thinketh no folly in the decent colour or fashion with honest use of Saddle, Bridle, Stirrups, Staff, and other like necessary or convenient things; and saith, that he used a Saddle made after the Scotish fashion, with Stirrups of Iron unvarnished and like Spurs: and black Bridle without Studs, the Bit and Saddle white as other mens be.

49. To the 49. he saith, That when he goeth abroad in Winter, he weareth a Hat to bear off Rain and Snow, and in Summer to shadow him from the Sun, without any vow of Superstition or offence of the People.

50. To the 50. he saith, That all is one to him, to ride or go, as cause requireth; and whether he saith as is contained in the Article or not, he remembereth not. Howbeit he doth use to go a foot.

51. To the 51. he saith, That after lawful Prayer he pleased God to give him a Son begotten and born in honest Marriage; whom he therefore caused to be named Samuel, presenting him to the Minister to be received into Christs Church, as a poor Member of Christ: by the holy Sacrament of Baptism was this done openly in the Cathedral Church, with earnest gravity, and without offending any man; and also two Wives, being before at variance, desired both to be Godmothers, which were both received to make Unity between them, not knowing any Law to the contrary, nor any Offence thereby conceived of the People.

52. To the 52. he saith, That he doth use with gravity all honest loving entertainment of his Child, to encourage him hereafter willingly at his Fathers mouth, to receive wholesome Doctrine of the true Fear and Love of God; and saith, that he hath whistled to his Child, but said not that the Child understood it, and that he answered to one that found fault with it, as is contained in the Article.

53. To the 53. he saith, That he was never Surveyor, but went to see Milford Haven for honest purpose, and not to survey it; and for that he at the sight of a Seal whistled in his fist, such as meant folly might turn it to their purpose. And it is not true, that he stood whistling an hour to the Seal, nor that any fault was found with it, nor any such answer made by him to his knowledge.

54. To the 54. he saith, That if he did say, The destroying of the Fry letteth plenty of Fish, he thinketh the same not against reason; but he remembereth not to have said, as is contained in the Article.

55. To the 55. he saith, That he remembereth not that ever he said as they alledge.

To the flandrous, untrue, and ungodly conclusion he saith, that George Constantine with other his Adversaries belied, and their Adherents, not regarding the Fear of God, and their bounden duty of loving Obedience towards G. M. and the Kings, and his true Ministers, have too much flanderously with false Tongues, contumacious words, and false deeds, laboured by all means to discredit and cease the Kings gracious Authority to him committed. Who, ever since he came to the Diocess, hath endeavoured himself to shew his faithful Ministry by his true honest doing, and to use his Authority according to his Vocation, to Gods glory and the Kings honour. And that he hath been diligent in reaching of Truth, reforming of Superstition, free of Hospitality, diligent in overseeing with godly wisdom, peace, and mercifulness, as he trusteth in God, may be truly approved. And he is able justly to charge his Adversaries with all the Faults herein by them most unjustly and slanderously against him objected. And he doth marvel greatly, that George Constantine, with other his Adherents, are not ashamed maliciously to object (for the intent to slander him) molesting of Preachers found there. For truth it is that he hath molested none, but hath justly brought under Significavit, one Morice a Preacher, living lewdly, for his stubborn Behaviour and malicious Contempts, even yet continuing in his wilful contempt and irregularity. And he hath (to his knowledge) justly certified Hugh Rawlins, Parson of Tinby, for his wilful Recusancy of two other Parsonages, shamefully deceiving the Kings Majesty by colour of Commission, as appeareth by the same. And as for the railing, contemptuous Preaching of R. M. and the unlearned arrogant Preaching of the Chantor, he referreth to discreet Hearers, which were offended thereat, as they shewed this Defendant. And this Deponent brought into his Diocess both Learned Preachers, and Learned men in the Law, to his very great charges, which men George Constantine with his Adherents hath wearied away.

After these Answers thus exhibited by the virtuous and godly Bishop against the quarrelling and frivolous Articles of his foresaid Adversaries, to wit, Hugh Rawlins, and Thomas Lee: then came in for witnesses, upon the said Articles and Informations, George Constantine, and the Chantor of S. Davids: against whom the Bishop laid first Exceptions, then also exhibited matter Justificatory, the tenour and process whereof here followeth in order to be seen, first concerning the exceptions, and after the matter Justificatory.

Exceptions general, laid and proposed on the behalf of Robert, Bishop of S. Davids, against all and singular the pretended Witnesses, produced on the behalf of Hugh Rawlins Clerk, and Thomas Lee, upon their untrue surmised Articles by them exhibited unto and before the Kings most honourable Council, by the device and procurement of the Chantor, and George Constantine, with R. M. Clerk, against the said Bishop.

Left, the said Bishop saith and alledgeth, That by Law there ought no faith or credence to be given unto the Depositions and Sayings of the said Witnesses, or any part thereof, because they are infamous, false, perjured, and in some part of their Depositions discording, partial, conducted, subornate, instructed, and for favour of the Informers and their Bolsterers, have deposed of malice more than the Articles whereupon they were produced to contain; and beside, and without the compass of the same Articles, and in divers other parts of their Depositions, they depose unum & eundem præmeditatum sermone, as by their said Depositions doth appear, unto the which the said Bishop referreth himself as much as it shall be expedient for him, and none otherwise. And further, for other causes particularly and specially, as is declared in the Book of Exceptions.

Exceptions against the unlawful proceedings of Hugh Rawlins Clerk, and Thomas Lee, promoters of the foresaid untrue Articles, in executing of their Commission for proof of the same.

Item, The said Thomas Lee for himself and the other Promoter did contrary to Justice, at the Execution of their Commission, examine certain of the Witnesses himself, in the house of his Brother in Law George Constantine, and the said Lee, and David Walter the Bishops mortal Enemy, and Servant to the said George Constantine, did write these Depositions upon the Articles at their own pleasures, and also after the device of the said George Constantine, and the Chantor and R. M. the Bishops mortal Enemies, and the very devisers and procurers of the Informations, and bolsterers and bearers of the Promoters in the suit thereof. These are the names of the Witnesses so examined, 1555.

Anno

Anno 1555. examined, which are already known: David ap Si Richard of Gethin, a perjured and an adulterous Person, standing in the number for two Witnesses, written in two places of the Book.

Item, ap Rudds, of Kennarthe, Griffith ap Howell, Guyne of Kennarthe, Lawes David Clerk, David ap Harvey Clerk, Sir Gogbe, alias Morgan, &c.

Item, One John Draper of Carmarthen, and an adherent of the foresaid Adversaries and Enemies to the said Bishop, did also, contrary to the tenor of their Commission examine certain Witnesses, and had to his Clerk one William Davids, Servant in Livery unto the foresaid Griffith Donne, the Bishops utter Enemy: by which shameful partiality they have written more matter, more words, other Terms and Sentences, than some of the Deponents have deposed or could depose. Humphrey Toy the fifth Deponent, Rice Gough the fourteenth Deponent, William ap Jenkins the sixteenth Deponent, John Bengay the 48th Deponent, Richard Parson the 39th, which are already known what manner of Men the Promoters are.

Item, The said Hugh Rawlins was not present at the Bishops Sermon, whereof his Information maketh mention, neither yet at their cutting off the Commission for the proof thereof: for the foresaid Adversaries did devise the same, and gave it unto the said Rawlins to promote, chusing him for the same purpose, knowing him to be a man willing (and finding his whole delight) to work mischief, both with word and deed, who abuseth his Tongue most shamefully, with most unfitting words, ever railing upon the said Bishop to every man that will hear him, without either respect or reverence of the Kings Majesties Authority to the said Bishop committed. And the said Rawlins hath four or five Benefices about the value of 200 Marks a year, and is resident upon none of them, but spendeth his Living to the hindrance of other men, going about here and there, wandering to and fro, without either Man or Boy waiting on him, more like a light Person, than a man of such Livelyhood and of his Vocation, being a Preacher. And indeed he is taken for a Jewd Fellow of all that know his behaviour, inasmuch that when a certain Man objected unto the Adversaries, That it was ill done to put so Jewd a Fellow as Rawlins to promote their Cause: They answered and reported his honesty with these words, We know Rawlins to be a very Knave, and so meet for no purpose as he is to set forward such a matter: of which Report there is a sufficient Witness. And it is thought that he hath done much ill with his spiteful Tongue: for he speaketh as boldly in this furnished matter to all the Council, as though it were true, and much for the Kings profit.

Item, The other Promoter Thomas Lee is a Merchant, who hath sold his Ware and spent his Money, and now for want of other business is become a Promoter of the foresaid Articles, having his Costs and Charges born by the said principal Adversaries, as it is alleged in the Bishops Exceptions, which shall be proved if Commission might be awarded for the purpose.

And thus much concerning the Exceptions against his pretended Accusers: next followeth the matter Justification exhibited by the said Bishop, in defence of his own Cause, as by the effect here appeareth.

Certain Articles ministered by Robert Bishop of S. Davids, against a furnished Information exhibited by Thomas Lee, to the Kings Majesty his most Honourable Council, against the said Bishop.

Inprimis, viz. That there ought none advantage to be taken against the said Bishop, of the Contents of the said pretended Information, for the Causes particularly following. And first, whereas it is objected against the said Bishop, in the first, second, and fifth Articles of the same Information, that he contrary to the Kings Highness Laws and Statutes, and in the derogation of his Highness Supremacy, passed a certain Commission, Institutions, and Collations to Benefices, in his own name, making no mention of the Kings Highness Authority, whereas of truth the said Bishop, if he had passed out the Commission, Institutions, and Collations in his own name, and without the Kings Majesty his Stile, as is furnished (as he did not) yet had he offended neither the Laws nor Statutes of this Realm therein, as doth and may appear evidently in the same Statutes and Laws, to the which he referreth himself.

Item, Whereas it is deduced in the third Article of the said pretended Information, that the Chancellor of the said Bishop did admit and institute J. Gough into the Rectory of Hawards, and gave a Mandate for the induction of the said John, under the Kings Majesties Seal Ecclesiastical, for the Diocese of S. Davids, with the Teste of the said Bishop and Subscription of the said Chancellor, which thing so deduced, if it be true, yet the said Bishop cannot be worthily blamed thereof. But the Chantor (thet his Chancellor unworthy) shewed himself therein very ignorant of the Kings Statutes of Parliament, wherein it is expressly provided, that in such cases the Ordinary ought to pass all such Institutions and Inductions in his own Name, and under his own Seal, and not in the Kings Majesties Name, nor under his Seal. And further, of very truth, the said Chancellor in admitting and instituting the said Clerk to the said Benefice, without the knowledge and consent of the said Bishop, did exceed his Commission, for as much as the said Bishop, at the granting of his Commission of his Chancellorthip unto the said Chantor, had restrained him expressly from the admitting and instituting of any Clerk to any Benefice within the said Diocese, except the same Clerk were first examined, found worthy, and admitted by the said Bishop himself to the same Benefice.

Item, Whereas in the fourth Article of the said Information it is contained, that the said Bishop, after the admitting and instituting of the said John Gough, as is aforesaid, objected Articles against him, amongst the which it was contained in effect.

Item, interrogatur quo titulo tenet Rectorem de Hawards.

TRue it is that the said Bishop, without molestation of the said Gough, otherwise than Law did permit, and without taking upon him the cognition of the Title of the said Fruits and Patronage of the said Benefice, in contempt of the Kings Majesties Regal Crown and Dignity, and without any derogation of the Kings Majesties Laws and Statutes of this Realm, did Interrogate the said John Gough, how he held the said Benefice, being admitted and instituted to the same without his knowledge or consent, as he might lawfully do, and as it meet every Ordinary should know how Pastors are admitted to any Cure within their Diocese.

Item, Touching the Contents of the sixth Article of the said Information, the said Bishop alledgeth that the Vicaridge of Pembrin, in the Diocese of S. Davids being void, he as Patron thereof, to his knowledge, conferred it to John Evans Clerk, with Letters of Institution and Induction, and afterwards when the Kings Presentation came to him for one David Jenkins Clerk, he desired 14 days respite, at that day either to shew ancient Record for his Right, and then the matter to stand to the determination of the Law, or else if he shewed not, both he and his Clerk to give place to the Kings Clerk: which Condition was by Sir Thomas Jones Knight, Dr. Merike, and the said David Jenkins received; and an Institution with an Induction was made conditionally, to be put into the hands of Sir Thomas Jones Knight, for safe custody for the Kings Clerk his behoof, after the 14 days to be executed at the hands of the said Bishop, if he failed to shew within which time the Bishop did shew an old ancient Record, declaring the full right of Patronage on the said Bishops behalf, and so that Institution and Induction was never put in execution by the said Bishop.

Nevertheless the said David Jenkins (contrary to his Promise and Oath giving thereupon his Right hand to Sir Thomas Jones Knight) took advantage by the said Writing without knowledge of the said Bishop; after which time the Lord Chancellor, by his Letters written to the said Bishop, advertised him to admit one John ap Howell Clerk, presented by virtue of a Vowlon, which the Lord Chancellor adjudged to be good, and so to be admitted, notwithstanding his former Presentation, whereby he would not abate the other mans Right. And so the said Bishop made one Collation, two Institutions, and three proved by the Statutes.

Proved by the Statutes.

Ad. adducit possit.

Mandates, doing no wrong thereby to his knowledge. And further, there was no business nor uneasiness about the possession of the said Vicarage. But the said Bishop giving place, was content to lose his right for that time.

Item, Whereas Sir Thomas Jones advertised the said Bishop, that Thomas Pritchard Clerk had celebrated Matrimony in a private House, betwixt a certain Priest and a Woman whose Sister had refused the same (as it is deduced in the 11th Article of the firmized Articles laid in against the said Bishop) the said Pritchard leaving his own Cure unserved that Sunday, he did put the said Thomas Pritchard to Penance for such his misdoings, and the said Pritchard did such Penance as was enjoined him to do. And whereas the said Bishop made the said Tho. Pritchard (who is Bachelor of Law) his Commissary, it was for the respect of his Learning in the Law, thereby faithfully to execute his Office, according to Justice, and none otherwise.

Item, In the 14th Article of the said firmized Information, it is untruly declared, that through the unlawful Sequestration of the Fruits of the Benefices of Longrooke and Lanvibangei Cundy, and the undiscreeit handling of the said Bishop, there were raised a great number of People, to the great danger of the Inhabitants thereabouts. Truth it is, that the said Bishop upon good and lawful Considerations, and specially for that the Kings Majesty should be truly answered of his First-Fruits and Tenths of the said Benefices, did lawfully (and as he was bound to do) sequester the said Fruits in the Kings Majesties Name, and by his Authority, and committed the custody thereof for a time unto two honest Men, to the effect aforesaid, and none otherwise, without any occasion of tumult or gathering the People through his default or folly.

Item, Whereas it is alleged in the 19th Article of the Information, that the Bishop did celebrate Matrimony in his own person, without receiving or ministering the Communion to the Persons married, it is true, for that the said Bishop had travelled fourteen long Welsh Miles, and not able to celebrate the holy Communion fasting, and for other reasonable and lawful Causes him moving, did in a Chappel within the House of Sir Thomas Jones Knight (one of the Kings Honourable Council of the Marches of Wales) solemnize Matrimony betwixt Mr. Griffith Rice, and the Daughter of the said Sir Thomas Jones, without either receiving the holy Communion himself, or ministering the same to the Persons married, being as then not disposed so to do lawfully and godly, without any superfluous Knockings or Blessings, or other uncomely gestures, as is deduced in that Article.

Item, Touching the Contents of the residue of all the said Articles, contained in the said Information, the said Bishop, partly for the avoiding of tediousness, and partly for that some of them be untrue and meer false, some other general, obscure, frivolous, vain, and of none effect, but of malice and evil-will, contrary to Truth conceived, leaveth them particularly unanswered unto.

Item, The said Bishop alledgeth, that he hath not by all the time that he hath been Bishop, used any Superstitions or Papistry, as it is untruly furnished against him, but hath and doth to the uttermost of his power, wit and cunning, set forth, maintain teach and preach the true Doctrine of the Gospel, and such laudable Doctrine as he ought to do by the Kings Laws, Injunctions and Proceedings, and for such a Teacher he hath been and is commonly known, named, reputed, taken, and accepted notoriously.

And where the said Chantor and George perceived their Depositions to be insufficient, they required, and had Commission into the Country to examine further Witnesses, which they executed very partially and unlawfully, as is alleged in the Bishops Exceptions, above-mentioned. And whereas the said Rawlins and Lee were awarded two several Commissions, they by favour of the Officers, and for sparing of Costs, conjoined both in one, and had three Months to make return, as appeareth by the Copy of their Commission, which hereafter followeth.

A Copy of the Commission awarded down into the Country, for the Examination of Witnesses.

Martem.

During all this time of the Examination of the Witnesses, the said Bishop was stayed at London, upon the Allegation of the said Adversaries, which was, That if the said Bishop should depart into his Diocese, he would let them of their Proofs.

And at the return of their Commission it was signified unto the Council what a great number of Witnesses they had examined, viz. Sixscore and seven, which sounded very heinous in the Councils ears.

And about three Weeks after, publication of their Witnesses was granted, and after that, it was a fortnight ere the Bishop could get a Copy written of their Depositions, because the Book thereof is so huge and monstrous.

Then the Bishop desired time, First, to enquire of what condition the Persons were that had witnessed against him, and to make Exceptions and Matters to justify direct contrary, and to have a Commission for the proof thereof, which was then granted. And now it is objected, That the Bishop was appointed so to travel with the expedition of his matter, that he should have sued out his Commission, and have made return thereof at All-Hallowtide last past; but there was no such Decree put in writing. And it was not possible for the Bishop to do it in so short a time, these Causes considered which he could not avoid, as followeth.

First, it was the latter end of July ere he came home to S. Davids, where he began his Visitation, which before was appointed.

Secondly, He was by force of Law constrained to answer at the Bar daily, during all the time of the great Sessions at Carmarthen, in defence of his just Cause against the pretended matter of Præmunire, which his Adversaries of meer malice have procured against him.

Thirdly, The said Adversaries, to molest him further, did privily pack a Quest of ignorant Persons of no Reputation, and indicted him upon the words of Rawlins Information, as appeareth by a Copy of the Indictment, intending thereby to make the matter found more heinous, notwithstanding that the same Cause dependeth before the Kings high Council undetermined.

Fourthly, He was appointed by the Commissioners, before his departure from London, to pay two Hundred pound (which was Arrearages) into the Courty of First-Fruits and Tenths at Bartholomew day then next following, which payment he made accordingly, notwithstanding that his Adversaries wrought means to have made him break his day; namely, one Edward Harbert Gent. who hath a Parsonage of his to Farm, kept back his Rent

Anno 1555. to the very last day, because that Money should not help to serve his turn; and so by crafty cavillation detaineth it still in his hand with a years Rent and an half more: for the said Edward Harbert is an Adherent of the said Bishops Adversaries.

Fifthly, The Book of their Depositions is so great, that it asketh a long time to peruse. And also the greatest part of their Witnesses were utterly unknown of the Bishop and all his: And also dwelling in so many sundry places of the Diocess among the Mountains and elsewhere, scarcely within the circuit of two hundred Miles.

Item, Another great Sessions holden at Carmarthen in the Month of October last, during which time he was attendant there, as is aforesaid. All which Causes considered, being also in the time of his ordinary Visitation, which he did execute himself, he could not make ready his Exceptions in shorter time.

The said Bishop dispatched his Man towards London the three and twentieth day of October, who ever since hath been and is attendant in the same Suit, for the obtaining the Commission for proof of this matter against his Adversaries.

A Copy of a certain Letter written by the Bishop of S. Davids.

Most humbly sheweth unto your Honour, your poor Orator Robert, Bishop of S. Davids, That whereas one Thomas Lee (by the procurement of Thomas Young and Rowland Merick, being both Canons of S. Davids, and George Constantine Register to the said Bishop) hath exhibited unto your Honour against him certain Articles, in the which are mentioned many trifling things, unworthy to be declared in your honourable Audience, and also their pretended weighty Articles (as they have alledged there) are utterly untrue: for proof whereof the said Thomas Lee hath had his Commissions into the Country: Therefore it may please your Honour of your favourable goodness, to grant unto your said Orator a like Commission for the Examination of Witnesses, in defence of his Truth and Honesty against the said Thomas Lee, George Constantine, and the forenamed Rowland Merick, and all other Persons, with their unjust Articles, Attestations and Sayings, which have deposed against him. And in tender consideration that your said Orator standeth bounden, and Sureties with him, in the Sum of 1000 Marks, to appear before the Kings Justice in the Sessions at Carmarthen, in July next coming, to answer to a forged matter of Præmunire, by the procurement and counsel of his forenamed Adversaries, maliciously furnished against him to his utter undoing. And furthermore, your Orator being in debt to the Kings Majesty, by reason of the malicious Vexation of his forenamed Adversaries, cannot (if he remain here) satisfy the same: for whereas there be Arrearages to a great Sum (as well of the Kings Money as of his own Rents) he can receive none thereof, his Adversaries have made such ill Report to his discredit, bearing the People in hand, that he shall come no more thither. By reason of which bruit, neither his own Tenants will pay their Rents and Arrearages, nor the Priests their Arrearages due to the Kings Majesty, as well for Anno secundo and tertio, as for quarto and quinto. In consideration of all which things, it may please your honourable goodness to licence your said Orator to depart into the Diocess, for these Affairs and other. And he is ready at all times, at your honourable commandment and pleasure, to repair again, and ever to pray to the Lord Jesus for the perpetual conservation of your Honour, to his glory.

Another Letter written by the Bishop of S. Davids.

Right Honourable, and my very special good Lord, with humble Service and hearty Thanks to God, and to you for your godly favour towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your Fatherly Letters, most lovingly to admonish me to incline unto that which is very necessary, as charitable Concord and Unity: This is, further to beseech your Lordship for the Lords sake not to be grieved, but benignly to hear, and gravely to ponder that weighty matter, which, appearing (to other)

but a light grief to me, is in very deed a right grievous offence to God, with no little hindrance of his holy Word, and disturbance of the Kings godly proceedings, and may be a great occasion of much Inobedience and disorder of good life. Wherefore I am straitly bounden for the true Zeal I ought to bear unto Gods Word of Life, Christian Religion, the Kings Majesties Honour, and the godly quiet state of his People, not faintly to let fall the burthen of diligent redress to be sought at his Majesties hands by the godly wisdom of his most honourable and upright Counsel, but with hearty affection to bear it up against those high-minded, arrogant, stubborn, ambitious, covetous Canons, trusting in their biting Tongues, with crafty prevention, and utterly untrue surmises, to stop the Light that their ungodly misdoing in darkness shall either not be seen, or at the least may seem to appear in colourable appearance of Right. Inasmuch that I do not a little marvel at these qualities in M. Chantor, the Canon, and the Dean of Worcester, whose ungentle and untrue behaviour I have not only known, but expertly proved, and sensibly felt in two of the first to my great losses, whereof I make no Complaint. But I wonder in my mind, and lament in my heart, the strange alteration and wilful going back of of my old faithful Brother George Constantine, the which (knowing them all three to have been in times past either obstinate Enemies to the true bearers of the Cross of Christ, or at least private lurkers under pretence of favour towards the Gospel, to sting the poor Followers thereof, seeking but their own lucre and pleasure in all their doings) would so earnestly cleave unto them in their wrong Deeds, as to betray me with his Tongue, become untrue of his Promise, and a bearer of filthy sin for Lawres sake, even yet still persisting in the same (namely) in things manifestly known unto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited. And as for their Præmunire, both George and they at my first coming, ungently detaining from M. Farlee his Commission for the Chancellorship, would have faced me down with Præmunire, because it was written in my own Name according to the Statute: yet was I fain, for the zeal of Unity, not to see their uncourteous Deeds, departing with M. Farlee for the avoiding of their Malice and Envy, and gave that Office, for the amity of George, unto Mr. Chantor his Son in Law, and to D. Merick the Office of Cardigan. But seeing afterward their covetous respect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the Reformation of Sin, and specially of themselves Whoredom, I was compelled to remove them fore against their wills: and whereas I desired many and sundry times Charitable redress of their wrong doings in the Vacation time, I obtained many fair words, and nothing in deed. Also desiring to have sight of the Book of Statutes of the Church, for the knowledge of my duty and theirs, I could not obtain it. Desiring to have a Key of the Chapter Seal, as my Lord of Bathe had, they would not deliver it but upon Conditions; yet was I content to be bridled, receiving it as pleased them to give it. And further, requiring the sight of necessary Evidences, for the declaration of divers things in traverse of my Right, they would in no wise grant it. And thereupon considering their ungentleness, I moved the Quo warranto, knowing right well, that if they should shew any substantial Grant under the Kings Seal for their Corporation, it must therein appear the Bishop to be the Head, and ever hath been under the King; for other they never have, nor had, except they would return to Rome again, as I trust they will not. And yet perceiving afterward that they had no special Grant to shew, or else such as they would not shew, I myself for the respect of Unity wrote my Letters to the Kings Attorney, by reason whereof the Quo warranto was stayed, and so yet remaineth.

But touching the Certificate, the Kings Subsidy being due at Michaelmas last, and forborn till after Christmas, and lawfully demanded afore they did utterly refuse to pay both to my Vice-Collector and to myself, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowing where to ask the rest, and it is committed to me in the Kings Roll a whole Sum in gross, to be received of the Canons Residentaries for their dividend: who because they cannot agree in dividing, would have the Kings Majesty to tarry for his Money, till they can agree to make division, civilian; and I cannot demand it of any particular person, nor at any particular place.

Wherefore I most humbly beseech your Fatherly goodness, for the Lords sake, to persist and continue my good Lord and Friend unto such time as ye find me either desiring to be defended in my wrong, or not willing to put the Judgment of my right Cause into your hands. And because that the residue of matters touching them and their ungentle, untrue, and ungodly doings is too long, and I have molested you too much with this my tedious Letter, I shall now forscake; humbly beseeching your good Lordship to accept in good part this my boldness proceeding of necessity, and to pardon it for the love of our Lord Jesus, who save and keep you in health, comfort, and honour long to endure, for the advancement of his glory. Written at Aberguily this Ninth of March.

Your Lordships to command during life, R.F.

And thus you have heard the first trouble of this blessed Martyr of the Lord in King Edward's days, with the whole discourse thereof. Which we thought the rather here to express, to give other good Bishops warning to be more circumspect, whom they should trust and have about them. Briefly, in few words to conclude this Process, B. Farrar partly upon the importunate sute of his Adversaries, partly upon the sinister and infortunate Fall of the good Duke of Somerset, by whom he had been before promoted and maintained, having but small favour shewed, was detained in Prison till the death of King Edward, and the coming in of Queen Mary and Popish Religion, whereby a new trouble rose upon him, being now accused and examined for his Faith and Doctrine. The Process of which his trouble here likewise followeth.

After that the foresaid Mr. Farrar Bishop of St. Davids had been long detained in custody under Sureties, in the Reign of King Edward, not for any just cause for his part defended, but by reason that he had been promoted by the Duke of Somerset; and now after his Fall he found fewer Friends to support him against such as hunted after his Bishoprick, at length after the decease of King Edward, by the coming in of Queen Mary, the state of Religion begun to be changed and altered. Whereby a new Trouble rose upon him, being now accused and examined, not for any matter of Præsumption, but for his Faith and Doctrine. Whereupon he was called before the Bishop of Winchester, with Mr. Hooper, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Bradford, Mr. Smyler, and others aforesaid, the fourth of February. On the which day he should also with them have been Condemned: but because leisure or list did not so well then serve the Bishop, his Condemnation was deferred, and he sent to Prison again, where he continued till the 14. day of the laid month of February. What his Examinations and Answers were before the said Bishop of Winchester, so much as remained and came to our hands, I have here annexed in manner as followeth.

The Answer of Robert Farrar, Bishop of St. Davids, before Winchester and others.

The Talk of
B. Farrar
before the Bishop of Winchester and other Commissioners.

AT his first coming and kneeling before my Lord Chancellor, the Bishop of Durham, and the Bishop of Worcester, who sat at the Table; and Mr. Rochester, Mr. Scutbvel, Mr. Bourne, and others standing at the Tables end; the Lord Chancellor said unto him on this sort:

Winchester, Now Sir, have you heard how the World goeth here?

Farrar, If it like your Honour, I know not.

Win. What say you? Do you not know things abroad, notwithstanding you are a Prisoner?

Far. No, my Lord, I know not.

Winch. Lo, what a froward Fellow is this?

Farrar, If it please your Lordship, how should I know any thing abroad, being a Prisoner?

Winch. Have you not heard of the coming in of the Lord Cardinal?

Farrar, I know not my Lord Cardinal; but I heard that a Cardinal was come in, but I did not believe it, and I believe it not yet.

Worcester. I pray your Lordship (said the Bishop of Worcester) tell him your self, that he may know what is done.

Winch. The Queens Majesty and the Parliament hath restored Religion into the same state it was in at the beginning of the Reign of our King Henry the Eighth. Ye are in the Queens debt, and her Majesty will be good unto you, if you will return to the Catholick Church.

Farrar, In what state I am concerning my Debts to the Queens Majesty, in the Court of Exchequer, my Lord Treasurer knoweth: and the last time that I was before your Honour, and the first time also, I shewed you that I had made an Oath never to consent nor agree, that the Bishop of Rome should have any Power or Jurisdiction within this Realm: and further, I need not rehearse to your Lordship, you know it well enough.

Bourne, You were once abjured for Heresie (said M. Bourne) in Oxford.

Farrar, That was I not.

Bourne, You were.

Far. I was never, it is not true.

Bourne, You went from S. Davids to Scotland.

Far. That I did not.

Bourne, You did.

Far. That did I never, but I went from Tork into Scotland.

Bourne, Ah, so said I; you went with Barlow.

Farrar, That is true, but never from Saint Davids.

Bourne, You carried Books out of Oxford, to the Archbishop of Tork, L. Lee.

Farrar, That did I not.

Bourne, You did.

Farrar, I did not, but I carried old Books from S. O. of Windsor to the Bishop of Tyrk.

Bourne, You supplanted your Master.

Farrar, That did I never in my life.

Bourne, By my Faith you did.

Farrar, Forsooth, I did not, never in my life, but did shield and save my Master from danger, and that I obtained King Henry the Eighth, for my true Service, I thank God therefore.

Bourne, My Lord (said Mr. Bourne to my Lord Chancellor) he hath an ill Name in Wales as ever had any.

Farrar, That is not so. Whosoever saith so, they shall never be able to prove it.

Bourne, He hath deceived the Queen in divers sums of Money.

Farrar, That is utterly untrue, I never deceived King nor Queen of one Penny in my life, and you shall never be able to prove that you say.

Winch. Thou art a false Knave.

Farrar, Then Farrar stood up unbidden (for all that while he knelt) and said, No, my Lord, I am a true man, I thank God for it. I was born under King Henry the Seventh, I served King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth truly, and have served the Queens Majesty, that now is, truly with my poor heart and word: more I could not do, and I was never false, nor shall be by the Grace of God.

Winchester, How wilt thou, wilt thou be reformed?

Farrar, My Lord, if it like your Honour, I have made an Oath to God, and to King Henry the Eighth, and also to King Edward, and in that to the Queens Majesty, the which I can never break while I live; to die for it is.

Durham, You have made another Oath before.

Farrar, No my Lord, I never made another Oath before.

Durham, You made a Vow.

Farrar, That did I not.

Winch. You made a Profession to live without a Wife.

Farrar, No, my Lord, if it like your Honour, that did I never; I made a Profession to live chaste, not without a Wife.

Worcester. You were sworn to him that was Master of your House.

Farrar. I am as it pleaseth your Honour to call me; but I cannot break my Oath which your Lordship your self made before me, and gave in example, the which confirmed my Conscience. Then I can never break that Oath whilst I live to die for it.

Dursm. Well, saith he, he standeth upon his Oath: call another.

My Lord Chancellor then did ring a little Bell, and Mr. Farrar said, I pray God save the King and Queens Majesties long to continue in honour to Gods glory and their comforts, and the comfort of the whole Realm; and I pray God save all your Honours, and so departed.

After these Examinations thus ended, Bishop Farrar so remained in Prison uncondemned, till the fourteenth day (as is aforesaid) of February, and then was sent down into Wales, there to receive Sentence of Condemnation. Who then upon the six and twentieth of February, in the Church of Carmarthen, being brought by Griffith Lestyn Esquire Sheriff of the County of Carmarthen, was there personally presented before Henry Bishop of S. Davids, and Constantine the publick Notary: which Henry there, and then discharged the said Sheriff, and received him into his own custody, further committing him to the keeping of Owen Jones, and thereupon declared unto the said Mr. Farrar the great mercy and clemency, that the King and Queens Highness pleasure was to be offered unto him, which he there did offer unto the said Mr. Farrar: that is to say, That if he would submit himself to the Laws of this Realm, and conform himself to the Unity of the Universal Catholick Church, he should be received and pardoned: after that, seeing the said Mr. Farrar to give no answer to the Premises, the said Bishop ministred unto him these Articles following.

B. Farrar brought before Dr.
Morgan, pretended Bishop of
S. Davids.

Articles devised against Bishop Farrar.

Articles objected against
B. Farrar.

1. First, Whether he believeth the Marriage of Priests lawful by the Laws of God, and Holy Church, or no?

2. Item, Whether he believeth, that in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration duly pronounced by the Priest, the very Body and Blood of Christ is really and substantially contained, without the substance of Bread and Wine?

The Answer of Bishop Farrar.

Unto the which Articles the said Bishop required the said Mr. Farrar to answer upon his Allegiance.

To which he said, he would answer when he saw a lawful Commission, and would make no further answer at that time. Whereupon the said Bishop taking no advantage upon the same Answer, committed him to the said Keeper, to be kept in Prison until a new Monition, and in the mean time to deliberate with himself for his further answer to the Premises.

Another Examination of the Bishop of S. Davids, before Henry Morgan the pretended Bishop of Saint Davids, George Constantine his Register, and others, the last of February, An. 1555.

Another Examination of
B. Farrar.

This day and place, Morgan the pretended Bishop of S. Davids sitting as Judge, ministred unto Bishop Farrar there personally present before him, certain Articles and Interrogatories in writing: which being openly read and ministred unto him, the said Bishop Farrar refused to answer, till he might see his lawful Commission and Authority. Whereupon the aforesaid pretended Bishop of S. Davids, did pronounce him as Contumax, and for the punishment of this his Contumacy to be counted pro confesso, and so did pronounce him in writing. Which being done, he committed the said Bishop to the custody of Owen Jones, until Monday next, being the fourth of March, then to be brought again into the same place, between one and two.

Another appearance of the said Bishop Farrar, before Morgan the pretended Bishop of S. Davids.

Item, The day and place appointed, the said Bishop appearing again before the pretended Bishop, humbly submitting himself as ready to answer to the Articles and Positions above-mentioned, gently required the Copy of the Articles, and a competent term to be assigned unto him, to answer for himself: which being granted unto him, and the Thursday next being assigned unto him between One and Three to answer precisely and fully; so he was committed again to Custody, as above.

Another
appearance of the said
B. Farrar.

Another Appearance of the said Bishop.

ON Thursday, as was appointed, which was the seventh of March, the said Bishop personally again appeared, where he exhibited a certain Bill in writing, containing in it his Answer unto certain Articles objected and ministred unto him before. Then after Henry the pretended Bishop of S. Davids, offered him again the said Articles as before: the tenor whereof tendeth to this effect, First, That he willed him being a Priest to abrenounce Matrimony.

Another
appearance of the said
B. Farrar.

Secondly, To grant the Natural presence of Christ in the Sacrament, under the forms of Bread and Wine.

Thirdly, That the Mass is a propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead.

Fourthly, That general Councils lawfully congregated never did, nor can erre.

Fifthly, That men are not justified before God by Faith only, but that Hope and Charity are also necessarily required to Justification.

6. Sixthly, That the Catholick Church which only hath Authority to expound Scriptures, and to define Controversies of Religion; and to ordain things appertaining to publick Discipline, is visible, and like unto a City set upon a Mountain for all men to understand.

To these Articles thus objected to him, he refused to subscribe, affirming that they were invented and excogitated by man, and pertain nothing to the Catholick Faith. After this, the Bishop above-named, delivered unto him the Copy of the Articles, signing him Monday next following, to answer and subscribe to the same, either Affirmatively or Negatively.

Another Appearance of Bishop Farrar.

UPON the which Monday, being the 11 of March, he appearing again before the Bishop, and the aforesaid Notary George Constantine, exhibited in a written Paper his mind and answer to the foresaid Articles, which the Bishop had twice now objected against him before, to the which Articles and Answers he did so subscribe, adding these words, as tenens se de aequitate & iustitia esse Episcopum Menevensem, that the Bishop assigned the next Wednesday, in the Fore-noon, to hear his final and definitive Sentence.

The last Appearance of Bishop Farrar.

THE which day and place the said Bishop and true Servant of God Mr. Farrar, personally there appearing, was demanded of Henry the pretended Bishop of S. Davids, whether he would renounce and recant his Heresies, Schisms, and Errors (as he called them) which hitherto he had maintained, and if he would subscribe to the Catholick Articles, otherwise than he had done before.

After this the said godly Bishop, Mr. Farrar, did exhibit a certain Schedule written in English, and remaining in the Acts; appealing withal by express word of mouth from the Bishop, as from an incompetent Judge, to Cardinal Pools, &c.

All which notwithstanding, the said Bishop proceeding in his rage, pronounced the definitive Sentence against him contained in Writing, and there left in the Acts: by the which Sentence he pronounced him as an Heretick Excommunicate, and to be given up forthwith to the Secular Power, namely, to the Sheriff of the Town

Thus this godly Bishop being condemned and degraded, was committed to the Secular Power, who not long after was brought to the place of Execution in the Town of Carmarthen, where he in the Market place in the South-side of the Market-Cross, the thirtieth day of March, being Saturday next before Passion-Sunday, most constantly sustained the torments and passion of the Fire.

The cruell burning of Doctor Farrar, Bishop of S. Davids.

The burning of Rawlins White, Martyr.

Touching the which Constancy of this blessed Martyr, this is moreover to be added and noted, that one named Richard Jones, a Knights Son, coming to M. Farrar a little before his death, seemed to lament the painfulness of the Death he had to suffer; unto whom the Bishop answered again to this effect, saying, That if he saw him once to stir in the pains of his Burning, he should then give no credit to his Doctrine. And as he said, so he right well performed the same; for so patiently he stood, that he never moved, but even as he stood, holding up his Stumps, so still he continued, till one Richard Gravell with a Staff dashed him upon the head, and so struck him down.

A memorable Example of Constancy in this blessed Bishop and Martyr.

¶ Letters.

As touching the Letters of M. Farrar, we do not find many that he did write. And peradventure in Queen Maries time his imprisonment was so strait, that at no time it was permitted him to write. Albeit in his other Troubles in King Edwards time, certain Letters he wrote to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Cramer, and to the Earl of Warwick: which Letters although they might be well referred to the first Edition of this story; yet because in the said Letters is contained briefly and in few

Anno 1555. few lines, the whole discourse of his unjust vexation at that time wrought by his Adversaries, I thought good not to pass them over, but to communicate them unto the Reader, for the better understanding both of the innocency of that blessed Bishop, and of the crafty iniquity of his conspired Enemies; as in the said Letters here following to the indifferent Reader may easily appear.

The Copy of a certain Letter of the Bishop of Saint Davids, written belike to the Lord Chancellor Doctor Goodrick Bishop of Ely.

Molt humbly sheweth unto your Honour, your poor Orator Robert Bishop of Saint Davids, That whereas one Thomas Lee (by the procurement of Thomas Young, and Rowland Merick being both Canons of Saint Davids, and George Constantine Register to the said Bishop) hath exhibited unto your Honour against him certain Articles, in the which are mentioned many trifling things, unworthy to be declared in your Honourable Audience, and also their pretended weighty Articles (as they have alleged there) are utterly untrue: for proof whereof the said Thomas Lee hath had Committions into the Country. Therefore I may please your Honour of your favourable goodness, to grant unto your said Orator a like Committion for the Examination of witnesses, in defence of his Truth and honesty against the aforementioned Thomas Lee, George Constantine, Thomas Young, Rowland Merick, and all other persons with their unjust Articles, attestations, and sayings, deposed against him. And in tender consideration that your said Orator standeth bounden, and Sureties with him in the sum of a Thousand Marks, to appear before the Kings Justice, in the Sessions at Carmarthen, in July next coming to answer to a forged matter of Premunire, by the procurement and counsel of his forenamed Adversaries, maliciously furnished against him to his utter undoing. And furthermore that your Orator being in debt to the Kings Majesty, by reason of the malicious vexation of the forefaid Adversaries, cannot (if he remain here) satisfy the same: for whereas there be Arreages to a great sum. (as well of the Kings money as of his own rents) he can receive none thereof, his Adversaries have made such ill report to his discredit, bearing the People in hand, that he shall come no more thither. By reason of which bruit, neither his own Tenants will pay their Rents and Arreages, nor the Priests their Arreages due to the Kings Majesty, as well for Anno secundo, and tertio, as for quarto, and quinto. In consideration of all which things, it may please your Honourable goodness to licence your said Orator to depart into the Dioceses, for these affairs and other. And he shall be ready at all times, at your honourable commandment and pleasure, to repair again, and ever to pray to the Lord Jesus for the perpetual conservation of your Honour, to his glory.

Besides this letter he wrote another likewise to the said Lord) who was, as I remember, Dr. Goodrick L. Chancellor afore mentioned) wherein he declareth the whole cause of his trouble, how it rose against him by his Adversaries, as here followeth.

Another Letter written by the Bishop of S. Davids to the Lord Chancellor afore said.

R ight honourable, and my very special good Lord, with humble service and hearty thanks to God, and to you for your godly favor towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your Fatherly Letters, most lovingly admonishing me to incline unto that which is very necessary, as charitable concord and Unity; This is further to beseech your Lordship for the Lords sake not to be grieved, but benignly to hear, and gravely to ponder that weighty matter, which, appearing to other but a light grief, to me is in very deed a right grievous offence to God-ward, with no little hinderance of his holy Word, and disturbance of the Kings godly proceedings, and may be a great occasion of much disobedience, and disorder of good life.

Wherefore I am straitly bounden to the true Zeal that I am to bear unto the Word of Life, Christian Religion, the Kings Majesty's honour, and the godly quiet state of his People, not faintly to let fall the burden of diligent redress to be sought at his Majesty's hands by the godly wisdom of his most honourable and upright counsel, but with hearty affection to bear it up against those high-minded, arrogant, stubborn, ambitious, covetous Canons, trusting in their biting tongues, which crafty prevention, and utterly untrue surmises, to stop the light that their ungodly misdoings in darkness shall either not be seen, or at the least may have a colourable appearance of right. In so much that I do not a little marvel at these qualities in Master Chaunter, the Canon, and the Dean of Worcester, whose ungentle and untrue behaviour I have not only known, but expertly proved, and sensibly felt in two of the first to my great losses whereof I make no complaint.

But I wonder in my mind and lament in my heart the strange alteration and wilful going backward of mine old faithful Brother George Constantine, the which (knowing them all three to have been in times past either obstinate enemies to the True bearers of the Cross of Christ, or at the least privy lurkers under pretence of favour towards the Gospell, to sting the poor followers thereof, seeking but their own lucre and pleasure in all their doings) would so earnestly cleave unto them in their wrong deeds, as to betray me with his tongue, become untrue of his promise, and a bearer of filthy Sin for Laurels sake, even yet stiffly persisting in the same, namely, in a thing manifestly known unto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited.

And as for their premunire, both George and they at this time my first coming, urgently detaining from M. Farlee his committion for the Chancellorship, would have faced me down with premunire, because it was written in my own name according to the Statute: yet was I fair, for the Zeal of Unity, not to see their uncourteous deeds, departing with M. Farlee for the avoiding of their malice and envy, and gave that office for the amity of George unto M. Chaunter his Son in Law, and to M. Merick the Office of Cardigan. But seeing after their covetous respect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the reformation of Sin, and especially of shameless whoredom, I was compelled to remove them, fore against their wils: and whereas I desired many and sundry times charitable redress of their wrong doings in the vacation time, I obtained many fair words, and nothing in deed.

And desiring to have sight of the Book of Statutes of the Church, for the knowledge of my duty and theirs, I could not obtain it. Desiring to have a key of the Chapter House Seal, as my Lord of Bath had, they would not deliver it but upon conditions; yet was I content to be bridled, receiving it as it pleased them to give it. And further requiring the sight of necessary Evidences, for the declaration of divers things in traverse of my rights, they would in no wise grant it. And thereupon considering their ungentleness, I moved the Quo warranto, knowing right well, if they should shew any substantial grant under the Kings Seal for the Corporation, it must therein appear the Bishop to be the Head, and ever hath been under the King: for other they never have, nor had, except they would return to Rome again, as I trust they will not. And yet perceiving afterward, that they had no special grant to shew, or else such as they would not shew, I myself for the respect of Unity, wrote my Letters to the Kings Attourney, by reason whereof the Quo warranto was stayed, and so yet remaineth.

But as touching the certificate, the Kings Subsidy being due at Michaelmas last, and forborn till after Christmas, and lawfully demanded afore, they did utterly refuse to pay both to my Vice-chancellor and to my self, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowing where to ask the rest, and it is committed unto me in the Kings Roll a whole sum in gross, to be received of the Canons Residentiaries for their dividend: who, because they cannot agree in dividing, would have the Kings Majesty to tarry for his money, till they could agree to make division; and I cannot demand it of any particular person, nor at any particular place.

Wherefore I most humbly beseech your Fatherly goodness for the Lords sake, to purfuit and continue my good Lord and friend unto such time as ye find mee either desiring to be decended in my wrong, or not willing to put the Judgement of my right cause into your hands. And because that the residue of matters touching them and their ungentle, untrue, and ungodly doings is too long, and I have molested you too much with this my tedious Letter, I shall now suffice. Humbly beseeching your good Lordship to accept in good part this my boldness proceeding of necessity, and to pardon it for the Love of our Lord Jesus, who save and keep you in health, comfort, and Honour long to endure, for the advancement of his glory Written at Aburgully this 9. of March.

The Historie of one Rawlins White, burned at Cardiffe in Wales about the Month of March, for the Testimony of Christs Gospel, reported by L. Dane being yet alive, who was almost continually with him during his trouble, unto his death.

Rawlins White Martyr, but not at Cardiffe in Wales.

For so much as we have here passed the History of Master Farrar, burned at the Town of Carmarthen in Wales, I thought to adjoyn and accompany with the same the History also of one Rawlins White, a Fisher-Man, which both in the like cause, and in the same Country of Wales, and also about the same Month of March, and year aforesaid, gave his Life like a Valiant Soldier of Jesus Christ to Martyrdom, and was burned at Cardiffe, the process of whose story here followeth expressed more at large.

This Rawlins was by his calling and occupation a Fisherman, living and continuing in the said trade by the space of Twenty years at the least, in the Town of Cardiffe, being (as a man of his vocation might be) one of a very good Name, and well accounted amongst his Neighbors. As touching his Religion at the first, it cannot otherwise be known, but that he was a great partaker of the Superstition and Idolatry that then was used, I mean in the Reign of King Henry the Eighth. But after that God of his mercy had raised up the light of his Gospel, through the blessed Government of King Edward the sixth, here in this Realm of England, this Rawlins began partly to mislike that which before he had embraced, and to have some good opinion of that which before by the iniquity of the time had been concealed from him: and the rather to bring this good purpose and intent of his to pass, he began to be a diligent hearer, and a great teacher out of the Truth.

But because the good man was altogether unlearned, and withall very simple, he knew no ready way how he might satisfy his great desire. At length it came in his mind to take a special remedy to supply his necessity which was this: He had a little Boy which was his own Son, which Child he set to School to learn to read English. Now after the little Boy could read indifferently well, his Father every night after supper, Summer and Winter, would have the Boy to read peice of the holy Scripture, and now and then of some other good Book. In which kind of Vertuous Exercise the old man had such a delight and pleasure, that as it seemed, he rather practised himself in the study of the Scripture, than in the Trade or Science which before time he had used: so that Rawlins within few years in the said time of King Edward, through the help of his little Son, a special Minister appointed by God (no doubt) for that purpose, and through much conference besides, profited and went forward in such sort, that he was able not only to resolve himself touching his own former Blindness and Ignorance, but was also able to Admonish and Instruct others: and therefore when occasion served he would goe from one place to another Visiting such as he had best hope in. By which his doing he became in that Country, both a notable and open Professor of the Truth, being at all times and in all such places, not without the Company of his little Boy, whom (as I have said) he used as an assistance to this good purpose. And to this his great industry and endeavour in the study of the Scripture, God did also add in him a singular gift of Memory, so that by the benefit thereof he would and could do that in vouching and rehearsing of the Text, which men of ripe and more profound knowledge, by their notes and other helps of Memory could very hardly accomplish. Inasmuch that he, upon the alledging of Scripture, very often would cite the book, the lease, yea and the very sentence; such was the wonderful working of God in this simple and unlearned Father.

Now when he had thus continued in his profession the space of five years, King Edward died, upon whose decease Queen Mary succeeded, and with her all kind of Superstition and Papistry crept in. Which thing being once perceived, Rawlins did not altogether use open instruction and admonition (as before he was wont) and therefore oftentimes in some private place or other he would call his trusty Friends together, and with earnest Prayer and great lamentation pass away the time, so that by his Vertuous instructions, being without any blemish of Error, he converted a great number, which number (no doubt) had greatly increased, had not the cruel storm of persecution been.

The extremity and force whereof at the last he pursued this good Father Rawlins, that he looked every hour to go to prison: whereupon many of those, which had received comfort by his instructions, did resort unto him, and by all means possible began to perswade him to shift for himself, and to dispose his goods by some reasonable order to the use of his Wife and Children, and by that means he should escape that danger, which was imminent over his head.

But Rawlins nothing abashed for his own part through the iniquity of the time, and nothing at all moved with these their fleshly perswasions, thanked them most heartily for their good will, and told them plainly that he had learned one good lesson touching the confession and denial of Christ, advertising them, that if he upon their perswasions should presume to deny his Master Christ, Christ in the last day would deny and utterly condemn him: and therefore (quoth he) I will by favourable grace confess and bear witness of him before men, that I may find him in everlasting life.

Notwithstanding which Answer, his Friends were very importunate with him. Howbeit Father Rawlins continued still in his good purpose so long, till at the last he was taken by the Officers of the Town, as a man suspected of Heresie; upon which apprehension he was conveyed before the Bishop of Landaffe that then was, the said Bishop lying then at his House besides Chepstow: by whom after divers combats and conflicts with him and his Champions, this good Father Rawlins was committed to prison in Chepstow. But this his keeping, whether it were by the Bishops means, because he would rid his hands of him, or through the favour of his Keeper, was not so severe and extreme, but that (if he had so listed) he might have escaped oftentimes.

But that notwithstanding, he continued still, inasmuch that at the last he by the aforementioned Bishop was removed from Chepstow to the Castle of Cardiffe, where he continued by the space of one whole year: During which time, this Reporter resorted to him very often, with Money and other reliefe from this Reporters Mother (who was a great favourer of those that were in affliction in those days) and other of his Friends: which he received not without great thanks and praises given to the Name of God. And albeit that he was thus troubled and imprisoned as ye have heard, to his own undoing in this World, and to the utter decay of his poor Wife and Children: yet was his heart so set to the instruction and furtherance of others in the way of Salvation, that he was never in quiet, but when he was perswading or exhorting such of his familiar Friends as commonly came unto him. Inasmuch that on the Sundays and other times of leisure, when his Friends came to visit him, he would pass away the time in prayer and exhortations, admonishing them always to beware of false Prophets which come in Sheeps Clothing.

Now when he had continued in Cardiffe Castle by the space of one whole year (as I have said) the time of his further trial was at hand. Whereupon the forenamed Bishop of Landaffe caused him to be brought again from the Castle of Cardiffe unto his own House besides Chepstow and whilst he continued there, the Bishop assayed many ways how to reduce him to some conformity. But Exhortation of Rawlins to his Friends.

Anno 1555. Rawlin by no means could be reduced to Popery. when all means either by their threatening words, or flattering promises, were to no purpose: the Bishop would him to advise, and be at a full point with him, either to recant his Opinions, or else to abide the rigour of the Law, and thereupon gave him a day of determination. Which day being come, the Bishop with his Chaplains went into his Chappel, not without a great number of other By-dwellers, that came to behold the manner of their doings. When the Bishop, with his Retinue were placed in order, poor Rawlins was brought before them. The Bishop after a great deliberation in addressing himself (as it seemed, and silence forewarned to the rest that were there present) used a long kind of Talk to him, declaring the cause of his sending for, which was for that he was a man well known to hold Heretical Opinions, and that through his Instruction many were led into blind Error. In the end he exhorted him to consider his own estate wherein he stood: for (said the Bishop) Rawlins, you have oftentimes since your first trouble, both here in my house, and elsewhere been travell'd withal touching your Opinions, and that notwithstanding ye seem altogether obdurate and wilful. Now hereupon we thought good to send for you, to see if there were any conformity in you: so that the matter is come to this point, That if you will shew your self Repentant for that which you have done against God and the Princes Laws, we are ready to use favour towards you; but if by no means we can persuade with you touching your Reformation, we are minded at this time to minister the Law unto you, and therefore advise with your self what you will do.

When the Bishop had made an end of his long Tale, this good Father Rawlins spake boldly to him, and said, My Lord, I thank God I am a Christian man, and I hold no Opinions contrary to the Word of God; and if I do, I desire to be reformed out of the Word of God, as a Christian man ought to be. Many more words in like sort were between the Bishop and Rawlins, which this Reporter doth not well remember. But in the end, when Rawlins would in no wise recant his Opinions, the Bishop told him plainly, that he must proceed against him by the Law, and condemn him as an Heretic.

Proceed in your Law a Gods name, said Rawlins; but for an Heretic you shall never condemn me while the World standeth. But (said the Bishop to his Company) before we proceed any further with him, let us pray unto God that he would send some spark of Grace upon him, (meaning Rawlins) and it may so chance, that God through our Prayer will here turn and convert his heart. When Rawlins heard the Bishop say so; Ah my Lord, quoth he, now you deal well and like a goodly Bishop, and I thank you most heartily for your great charity and gentleness. Christ faith, Whereas two or three be gathered together in my Name, I will be in the midst of them: and there be more than two or three of you. Now if it be so that your Request be godly and lawful, and that ye pray as ye should pray, without doubt God will hear you. And therefore my Lord go to, do you pray to your God, and I will pray to my God, I know that my God will both hear my prayer, & perform my desire.

By and by the Bishop with his Company fell to Prayer. And Rawlins, turning himself to a Pew that stood somewhat near him, fell down upon his Knees, covering his Face with his hands: and when they had prayed a while, the Bishop with his Company arose from Prayer. And then also arose Rawlins, and came before the Bishop.

Then said the Bishop, Now Rawlins, how is it with thee? Wilt thou revoke thy Opinions, or no? Surely (said Rawlins) my Lord, Rawlins you left me, and Rawlins you find me, and by God's Grace Rawlins I will continue. Certainly if your Petitions had been just and lawful, God would have heard them: but you honour a false God, and pray not as ye should pray; and therefore hath not God granted your desire. But I am one poor simple man, as you see, and God hath heard my complaint, and I will be strengthened in my own Cause.

The Bishop, when he perceived that this Hypocrite of theirs took no effect, then with hot words he reproved him, and forthwith was ready to read the Sentence. Howbeit, upon some advice given to him by his Chaplains that were there present, he thought best first to have a Mass said, which was done by the doing some wonderful work should be wrought in Rawlins, and thereupon a Mass began a Mass.

In the mean time poor Rawlins betook himself to Prayer in a secret place there by, until such time as the Priest came to the Sacring, as they term it, which is a principal point of their Idolatry. When Rawlins heard the Sacring, (Jell ring (as the use was) he rose out of his place, and came to the Quire-door, and there standing a while, turned himself to the People speaking these words, Good People, if there be any Brethren amongst you, or at the least, if there be but one Brother amongst you, the same one bear witness at the Day of Judgment, that I bow not to this Idol (meaning the Host that the Priest held over his Head.)

The Mass being ended, Rawlins afterwards was called for again. To whom the Bishop used many persuasions; but the blessed Man continued so steadfast in his former Profession, that the Bishops Talk was altogether in vain, and to no purpose. Whereupon the Bishop caused the definitive Sentence to be read. Which being ended, Rawlins was dismissed, and from thence he was by the Bishops commandment carried again to Cardiff, there to be put into the Prison of the Town, called Cockmarch, a very dark, loathsome, and most vile Prison.

Rawlins in the mean time passed away the time in Prayer, and chiefly in singing of Psalms: which kind of godly Exercise he always used, both at Cardiff Castle, and in all other places.

Now after he had thus continued a Prisoner in Cockmarch Prison at Cardiff (as is aforesaid) a good space, about three weeks before the day wherein he suffered, the Head Officers of the Town, that had the charge of his Execution, were determined to burn him, because they would be sooner rid of him; having not indeed a Writ of Execution awarded, as by the Law they should have. Whereupon one H. Lewes, the Recorder of the Town that then was, seeing that they went about to burn him without any Warrant by Writ, came to them and told them, That if they did burn him before they had the Writ, De Hereticis comburendis, the Wife of the said Rawlins would upon just cause, by Law, call their doings into question.

Immediately upon this Advertisement, they sent to London for the Writ above-named: upon the receipt whereof they made some speed to the Execution of the said Rawlins. Now when the day was come, wherein the good Father should perform and accomplish the last act of this his worthy conflict, he was the Night before willed to prepare himself.

Now when he perceived his time was no less near than it was reported unto him, he sent forthwith to his Wife, and willed her by the Messenger, that in any wife she should make ready and send unto him his Wedding-garment, meaning a Shirt, which afterward he was burned in. Which request, or rather commandment of his, his Wife with great sorrow and grief of heart did perform, and early in the Morning did send it to him, which he received most gladly and joyfully.

Now when the hour of his Execution was come, this good and constant Father Rawlins was brought out of Prison, having on his Body the long Shirt, which (as you heard before) he called his Wedding-garment, and an old Rusty-Coat which he was wont to wear. Besides this, he had upon his Legs an old pair of Leather-Buskins, which he had used long afore. And thus being brought out of Prison (as I have said) he was accompanied, or rather guarded with a great company of Bills and Glieves. Which sight when he beheld, Alas quoth he, what meaneth all this? All this needeth not. By God's Grace I will not start away: but I with all my heart and mind give unto God most hearty Thanks, that he hath made me worthy to abide all this for his holy Names sake.

So he came to a place in his way, whereas his poor Wife and Children stood weeping, and making great lamentation: the sudden sight of whom so pierced his heart that the very Tears trickled down his Face. But he soon after, as though he had misliked this Infirmary of his flesh, began to be as it were altogether angry with himself: Inasmuch, that striking his Breast with his hand, he used these words, Ah Flesh, thyself thou me so? wouldest thou gain prevail? Well, I tell thee do what thou canst, thou shalt not, by God's Grace, have the Victory.

Rawlin, some what moved at the sight of his Wife and Children. Rawlin, who then was against his flesh.

By this time the poor Innocent came to the very Altar of his Sacrifice ('I mean the place appointed for his death) and there found a Stake ready set up, with some Wood toward the making of the Fire. Which when he beheld, he set forward himself very boldly; but in going toward the Stake, he fell down upon his knees and kissed the ground; and in rising again, the Earth a little sticking on his Nose, he said these words, Earth unto Earth, and Dust unto Dust: thou art my Mother, and unto thee I shall return. Then went he cheerfully and very joyfully, and set his Back close unto the Stake; and when he had stood there a while, he cast his eye upon this Reporter, and called him unto him, and said, I feel a great fighting between the Flesh and the Spirit, and the Flesh would very fain have his swing; and therefore I pray you, when you see me any thing tempted, hold your finger up to me, and I trust I shall remember my self.

As he was thus standing with his Back close unto the Stake, a Smith came with a great Chain of Iron: whom when he saw, he cast up his hand with a loud voice, and gave God great thanks. Then the Smith cast a Chain about him, and as he was making it fast on the other side, Rawlins said unto him, I pray you good Friend knock in the Chain fast; for it may be that the Flesh would strive nightly, but God of thy great mercy give me strength and patience to abide the extremity.

Now when the Smith had made him sure to the Stake, the Officers began to lay on more Wood, with a little Straw and Reed: wherein the good Old man was no less occupied than the best; for as far as he could reach his hands, he would pluck the Straw and Reed, and lay it about him in places most convenient for his speedy dispatch. Which thing he did with such a cheerful Countenance and familiar Gesture, that all men there present were in a manner astonished.

Thus when all things were ready, so that there lacked nothing but the putting to of the Fire, directly over against the Stake, in the face of Rawlins, there was a Standing erected, whereon stood up a Priest, addressing himself to speak to the People, which were many in number, because it was Market-day. When Rawlins perceived him, and considered the cause of his coming, he reached a little Straw unto him, and made two little Stays and set them under his Elbows. Then went the Priest forward in his Sermon, wherein he spake of many things touching the Authority of the Church of Rome. In the mean time Rawlins gave such good ear and attention, that he seemed nothing at all moved or disquieted. At the last, the Priest came to the Sacrament of the Altar, and there he began to inveigh against Rawlins Opinion in which his Invection he cited the common place of Scripture, and thereupon made a Clergly Interpretation.

Now when Rawlins perceived that he went about not only to teach and preach the People false Doctrine, but also to confirm it by Scripture, he suddenly start up, and beckoned his hands to the People, saying twice; Come hither good People, and hear not a false Prophet preaching: and then said unto the Preacher, Ah thou naughty Hypocrite, dost thou presume to prove thy false Doctrine by Scripture? Look in the Text what followeth; Did not Christ say, Do this in remembrance of me? After which words, the Priest being rather amazed than interrupted, forthwith held his peace.

Then some that stood by cried out, Put fire, set to fire; which being set to, the Straw and Reed, by and by, cast up both a great and sudden flame. In the which flame this good and blessed man bathed his hands so long, until such time as the Sinews shrunk, and the Fat dropped away, saving that once he did, as it were, wipe his Face with one of them. All this while, which was somewhat long, he cried with a loud voice, O Lord, receive my Soul; O Lord, receive my Spirit, until he could not open his mouth. At the last the extremity of the Fire was so vehement against his Legs, that they were consumed almost before the rest of his Body was burned, which made the whole Body fall over the Chain into the Fire sooner than it would have done. During which time of his burning, it cannot be said that he felt any great pain, considering that not without his perfect memory he abode both quietly and patiently, even unto the departing of his life. Thus died this goodly and old man Rawlins.

for the Testimony of Gods Truth, being now rewarded, Anno no doubt, with the Crown of eternal Life.

It is recorded furthermore of the said good Father Rawlins, by this Reporter, that as he was going to his death, and standing at the Stake, he seemed in a manner to be altered in Nature. For as before he was wont to go stooping, or rather crooked, through the infirmity of Age, having a sad Countenance and a very feeble Complexion, and wical very soft in Speech and Gesture, now he went and stretched up himself not only bolt upright, but also bore withal a most pleasant and comfortable Countenance, not without great courage and audacity both in Speech and Behaviour. He had (of which thing I should have spoken before) about his Head a Kerchief, the Hairs of his head (somewhat appearing beneath his Kerchief) and also of his Beard, were more inclining to white than to gray, which gave such a shew and countenance to his whole Person, that he seemed to be altogether Angelical.

It is also said by this Reporter, that a little before the Fire flashed up to his Body (as ye have heard) many of his Friends came to him, and took him by the hand, amongst whom the Reporter of this story held him so long by the hand, till the flame of the Fire rose and forced them to sunder. In the mean time the Priest, of whom I spake afore, cried out and said, that it was not lawful for any man to take him by the hand, because he was an Heretic, and condemned by the Church. The chief cause of his Trouble, was his Opinion touching the Sacrament of the Altar. He was at that time of his death of the Age of Threescore years, or thereabouts.

The sum of the words spoken by Queen Mary to certain of her Counsellors, March 28. An. 1555. touching the restitution of Abby-Lands.

Before I pass over this Month of March, I cannot but leave a little Memorandum of the words or consultation of Q. Mary, used to certain of the Council the 28. day of the said Month of March, touching the restoring again of the Abby-Lands. Who after the had called unto her presence four of her Privy Council, the day and month aforesaid (the names of which Counsellors were these)

1. William, Lord Marquess of Winchester, High Treasurer of England.
2. Sir Robert Rochester Knight, the Queens Controller.
3. Sir William Peter Knight, Secretary.
4. Sir Francis Inglesfield Kt. Master of the Wards.

The said Queen Mary inferred these words, the principal effect and sum whereof here followeth. You are here of our Council, and we have willed you to be called unto us, to the intent you might hear of me my Conscience, and the resolution of my mind, concerning the Lands and Possessions as well of Monasteries, as of other Churches whatsoever, being now presently in my possession.

First, I do consider, that the said Lands were taken away from the Churches aforesaid in the time of Schism, and that by unlawful means, such as are contrary both to the Law of God and of the Church. For the which cause my Conscience doth not suffer me to detain them; and therefore I here expressly refuse either to claim or to retain the said Lands for mine, but with all my heart freely and willingly, without all paction or condition, here and before God I do surrender and relinquish the said Lands and Possessions, or Inheritances whatsoever, and do renounce the same with this mind and purpose, that order and disposition thereof may be taken, as shall seem best liking to our most holy Lord the Pope, or else his Legate the Lord Cardinal, to the honour of God, and wealth of this our Realm.

And albeit you may object to me again, that considering the state of my Kingdom and the Dignity thereof, my Crown Imperial cannot be honourably maintained and furnished without the possessions aforesaid: yet notwithstanding I set more by the salvation of my Soul, than by ten Kingdoms; and therefore the said Possessions I utterly refuse here to hold after that sort and title, and give most hearty thanks to Almighty God, who hath given me an Husband, whom I love, with no less affection in this behalf, than I am my self.

Anno 1555. Wherefore I charge and command, that my Chancellor (with whom I have conferred my mind in this matter before) and you four, to morrow together do resort to the most Reverend Lord Legate, and do signifie to him the Premises in my name, and give your attendance upon him for the more full declaration of the state of my Kingdom, and of the foresaid Possessions accordingly, as you your selves do understand the matter, and can inform him in the same.

This Intimation being given by the Queen, first unto the Councillors, and then coming to the Cardinals hand, he drawing out a Copy thereof in Latin, sent the same to the Pope: which Copy drawn in Latin, and coming afterward to my hand, I have thus translated into English, as you have heard.

Furthermore, here by the way it is to be understood, that in the Month before, which was February, and in the 19 day of the said Month, the Bishop of Ely, with the Lord Mountacute and Seven score Horle, were sent as Embassadors from the King and Queen unto Rome. For what cause, in story it is not exprest; but by conjecture it may be well supposed to be for the same cause of Abby-Lands, as by the sequel thereof may probably appear.

For it was not long after, but the Pope did set forth in print a Bull of Excommunication for all manner of such Persons, without exception, as kept any of the Church or Abby-Lands; by virtue of which Bull, the Pope Excommunicated as well such as had any of the Church or Abby-Lands as also all such Princes, Bishops, and Noblemen, Justices of Peace and other in Office, who had not, or did not forthwith put the same Bull in Execution. Albeit this execution (God be thanked) yet to this day was never put in practise.

Wherein again it is to be observed another Catholick fetch, not unworthy (perchance) of marking. For where this kind of Catholicks by rigor and force may overmaster, they spare for no cost, but lay on load enough. This well appeared, and still doth appear in burning the poor patient Christians, whom because they see to be destitute of power and strength to resist them, and content with patience to receive whatsoever is put unto them, where they play the Lions, and make no end of burning and persecuting. But where they spy themselves to be over-matched, or fear to receive a foil in presuming too far, there they keep in, and can stay the execution of their Laws and Bulls, be they never so Apostolical, till they spy their time convenient for their purpose, as in this case is evident for all the world to see.

For notwithstanding that the Popes Bull, coming down with full Authority for restitution of Abby-Lands, did so thunder out most terrible Excommunication, not only against them which detained any such Lands, but also against all other that did not see the Popes commandment to be executed; yet neither Winchester, nor any of all the Popes Clergy, would greatly stir in that matter, perceiving the Nobility to be too strong for them to match withal; and therefore were contented to let the Case fall, or at least to stay for a time, while time might better serve them.

Yea, and moreover under a crafty pretence, that the Nobility and men of Lands at the first coming out of the Bull should not be exasperate too much against them, they subtilly abused the Pulpits, and dissembled with the People, affirming that the said Popes late Bull, set forth in print for restitution of Abby-Lands, was not meant for England, but for other foreign Countries: where in very deed the meaning of that Bull, was only for England, and no Country else, as both by this Intimation of Queen Mary here mentioned, and by many other conjectures, and also by Mr. Fockens; Ballet of Carvats Emptors, may appear. Whereby it is easie for all men to understand that the purpose of those men was to do, if time, which they observed, might have served their Devotion. But to let this matter pass of the Popes Bull, the time now serveth to intreat of Pope Julius death, forsomuch as he made his end about the latter end of this foresaid Month of March.

Concerning the Deeds and Acts of which Pope, to make a full declaration, it were not so much tedious to the Reader, as horrible to all good Ears. Under this Julius flourished the Archbishop of Beneventum; a Florentine, named Johannes à Casa, Dean of the Popes Chamber, and chief Legate to the Venetians: who well declaring the fruit of that filthy See, so far forgot both Honesty and Nature, that he shamed not only to play the filthy Sadomite himself, and to boast openly of the same; but also took upon him most impudently in Publick Metre, to all mens ears, to set forth the praise and commendation of that beastly Iniquity, saying, That he himself never used other: and this Book was printed at Venice by one Trojanus Nervus; and yet the Pope could suffer this so great Iniquity and shameless Beastliness, even under his nose in his own Chamber, which could not abide the true Doctrine of Christ in Christian Books.

Amongst other Franks and Deeds of this foresaid Pope, in his Jubilee, and in the Synod of Trent, and in confirming of the Idol of Lauretane, this is also reported of him in his life, that he delighted greatly in Pork-flesh and Peacocks. Upon a time when he was admonished of his Physician to abstain from all Swines-flesh, for that it was noysom for his Gout, and yet would not follow his counsel; the Physician afterward gave warning to his Steward or Orderer of his Diet, that he should set no more Pork-flesh before him.

Whereupon when the Pope perceived the said Pork-flesh to be lacking in his accustomed service: Where (said he) is my Pork? And when his Steward had answered that his Physician had forbidden any Pork to be served: then the Pope bursting out into a great rage, saith these words, Bring me, said he, my Pork-flesh, Al dispetto de Dio, that is to say in English, In the despite of God.

At another time, he sitting at Dinner, pointing to a Peacock upon his Table, which he had not touched; Keep (said he) this cold Peacock for me against Supper, and let me sup in the Garden: for I shall have Guests. So when Supper came, and amongst other hot Peacocks, he saw not his cold Peacock brought to his Table: the Pope, after his wonted manner, most horribly blaspheming God, fell into an extrem rage, &c. Whereupon one of his Cardinals sitting by, desired him, saying, Let not your Holiness, I pray you, be so moved with a matter of so small weight. Then this Julius the Pope answering again, What, said he, if God was so angry for an Apple, that he cast our first Parents out of Paradise for the same, why may not I, being his Vicar, be angry then for a Peacock, since a Peacock is a greater matter than an Apple? Behold here (good Reader) by this Pope, the holiness of that blasphemous See: and yet thou shalt see here what affection was born to this Pope here in England, by the Dirige, Hearies, and Funerals commanded to be had and celebrated in all Churches by the Queen and her Council, as may appear by the Copy of their Letters here following.

A Letter from the Bishop of Winchester (being Lord Chancellor) unto Boner Bishop of London, touching the celebrating of the Popes Funeral.

After my hearty Commendations to your good Lordship, the King and Queens Majesty having certain knowledge of the death of the Popes Holiness, thought good there should be at well solemn Obsequies said for him throughout the Realm, as also these Prayers (which I send you herewith enclosed) used at Mass time in all places at this time of Vacation, and therefore willed me to signifie their pleasures unto you in this behalf, that thereupon ye might proceed to the full accomplishment thereof, by putting the same in due execution within your own Diocesse, and sending word to the rest of the Bishops, to do the like in theirs.

Thus doubting not but that your Lordship will use such diligence in this matter at this time, as shall be necessary, I bid your Lordship heartily well to fare. From my House at Alther, the tenth of April 1555.

A Woman of S. Magdalen Imprisoned for not praying for the Pope.

Upon this Commandment, on Wedneseday in Easter Week there were Hearths set up, and Diriges sung for the said Julius in divers places. At which time it chanced a Woman to come into S. Magnes Church at the Bridge-foot in London, and there seeing an Hearth and other preparation, asked what it meant: and other that stood by, said that it was for the Pope, and that she must pray for him. Nay (quoth she) that will I not, for he needeth not my Prayers: and seeing he could forgive us all our Sins, I am sure he is clean himself; therefore I need not to pray for him. She was heard speak these words of certain that stood by: which, by and by, carried her unto the Cage at London-Bridge, and bid her cooler self there.

A Spectacle for all Christians to behold, and so take heed of the Popes blasphemous Doctrine.

By many and sundry ways Almighty God hath admonished Men of all Nations in these our later years to embrace, and not violently to repugn against the light of his Gospel: as firstly by preaching of his Word; secondly, by the Blood of the Martyrs; and thirdly, by terrible Examples shewed from time to time upon his Adversaries. In the number of whom cometh here to be remembered the notable working of Gods hand upon a certain Priest in Kent, named Nightingal, Parson of Crondall besides Canterbury: who upon Shrove-Sunday, of which was about the third day of the said Month of March, and Year of our Lord aforesaid, rejoicing belike not a little at this alteration of Religion, began to make a Sermon to his Parishioners, taking his Theme out of the words of S. John; He that saith that he hath no sin, is a liar, and the truth is not in him, &c. And so upon the same very imperiently declared to them all such Articles as were set forth by the Popes Authority, and by the commandment of the Bishops of this Realm; saying moreover unto the People in this wise, Now Masters and Neighbourhoods rejoice and be merry, for the Prodigal Son is come home. For I know that the most part of you be as I am, for I know your hearts well enough. And I shall tell you what hath happened in this Week past: I was before my Lord Cardinal Poles Grace, and he made me as free from Sin, as I was at the Font-stone: and on Thursday last being before him, he hath appointed me to notify (I thank him for it) the same unto you. And I will tell you what it is. And so reading the Popes Bull of Pardon that was sent into England, he said, he thanked God that ever he had lived to see that day; adding moreover that he believed, that by the virtue of that Bull he was clean from Sin, as that Night that he was born: and immediately upon the same fell suddenly down out of the Pulpit, and never stirred hand nor foot, and so lay he. Testified by Robert Austen of Caribam, which both heard and saw the same, and is witnessed also by the whole Country round about.

John Awcock.

April 2.
John Awcock
died.

In the beginning of April, and the second day of the said Month, died in Prison John Awcock, who after was buried in the Fields as the manner of the Papists was, to deny their Christian Burial to such as died out of their Popish Antichristian Church.

Now forsomuch as having passed the Month of March; we are carried into the Month of April, to set down in order out of publick Records what happened in the said Month, here followeth to be noted: That the first day of April, Anno 1555. a Letter was sent to the Sheriff of Kent, to apprehend Thomas Wodgat and William Maynard, for Preaching secretly, and to send them up to the Council.

The seventh day of the said Month, another Letter was sent to the said Sheriff for the apprehension of one Harwich, who went about with a Boy with him, Preaching from place to place.

The

Anno 1555.

The 15. of April a letter was directed to Sir Nicolas Hare, and Sir Thomas Cornwallis, willing them to examine M. Flower, a Las Branch, what he meant to wear about his neck written, Deum time, Idolum fuge and whom else he knew to wear the like, praying them also to speak to Boner Bishop of London, speedily to proceed against him for his Religion according to the Laws, and that the Justices of Peace of Middlesex should likewise proceed against him for Shedding of Blood in the Church, according to the Statute, so as if he continue his opinion, he might be executed at the farthest by the latter end of this week, and that his Right Hand be the day before his execution, or the same day, stricken off.

The 22. of April there was a like letter sent to the Justices of Peace of Middlesex, with a Writ for the Execution of the said Flower, commanding them to see his Hand stricken off before his burning.

The 20. of April, M. Robert Horneby, Servant than to the Lady Elizabeth, was converted before the Council for his Religion; and standing constantly to the Truth, notwithstanding their threats and other persecutions, was therefore committed to the Marshalsea.

A declaration of the life, examination, and burning of George Marth, who suffered most constant Martyrdom for the profession of the Gospel of Christ at Westminster, the 24. day of April, Anno 1555.

April 24:
Marth's
Martyr.

THe said George Marth was born in the Parish of Deane, in the County of LANCASTER, and was well brought up in learning and honest trade of living by his Parents, who afterwards about the 25. year of his age took to Wife an honest maiden of the Country; with whom he continued, earning their living upon a Farm, having Children between them lawfully begotten: and then God taking his Wife out of this World, he being most desirous of godly studies (leaving his Household and Children in good order) went unto the University of Cambridge, where he studied, and much increased in learning and godly Vertues, and was a Minister of Gods Holy Word and Sacraments, and for a while was Curate to Lawrence Saunders, as himself reporteth. In which condition of life he continued for a space, earnestly setting forth Gods true Religion, to the defacing of Antichrists false Doctrin, by his godly readings and Sermons, as well there as in the Parish of Deane, as elsewhere in Lancashire.

In Court of Chesser, a persecutor of G. Marth detained.

Whereupon at length, by detection of certain Adversaries, he was apprehended, and kept in close prison by George Cotes then Bishop of Chesser, in strict prison in Chesser, within the precinct of the Bishops House, about the space of four Months, being not permitted to have relief and comfort of his Friends; but charge being given unto the porter, to mark who they were, that asked for him, and to signify their Names unto the Bishop, as by the particular Description of his Story, testified and recorded with his own pen, more evidently may appear in the process hereunder following.

The handling, Intreating, and Examination of George Marth, being sent first by the Earl of Darby to Doctor Cotes, Bishop of Chesser.

The examination of G. Marth written with his own hand. M.
Barton gentleman, and persecutor.

ON the Monday before Palm-sunday, which was the 12. day of March, it was told me at my Mothers House, that Roger Winstone, with other of M. Bartons Servants did make diligent search for me in Bolton, and when they perceived that I was not there, they gave strict charge to Robert Ward and Robert Marth, to find and bring me to M. Barton the day next following, with others, to be brought before the Honourable Earl of Darby, to be examined in matters of Religion, &c.

G. Marth
advertised by his Friends
to flee.

I knowing this, by relation of divers of my Friends was diversly affected; my Mother, and other my Friends advising me to flee, and to avoid the peril, which thing I had intended afore after a week then next ensuing, if this in the mean while had not chanced; seeing that if I were taken, and would not recant in matters of Religion, as they thought I would not, and as God strengthening and assisting me with his Holy Spirit I never will it would not only have put them to great sorrow, heaviness and losses, with costs and charges, to their shame and rebuke in this World, but also mine own self, after troubles and painful imprisonment, unto shameful Death.

This considered, they advised me and counselled me to depart and flee the Country, as I had intended to have done, if this had not happened. To whose Counsel my weak Flesh would gladly have consented, but my Spirit did not fully agree; thinking and saying thus to my self, that if I fled away, it would be thought, reported, and said, that I did not only flee the Country, and my Nearest and Dearest Friends: but much rather from Christs Holy Word, according as these years past I had with my heart, or at least with mine outward living professed, and with my mouth and word taught, according to the small talent given me of the Lord. I being thus with their Counsel and Advice, and the Cogitations and Counsels of mine own mind drawn as it were divers ways, went from my Mothers House, saying, I would come again at evening.

In the mean time I ceased not by Earnest Prayer to ask and seek Counsel of God (who is the giver of all good gifts) and of other my Friends, whose godly Judgments and knowledge I much trusted unto. After this, I met with one of my said Friends on Dean Moor, about Sun going down: and after we had consulted together of my business, not without Hearty Prayer kneeling on our knees, we departed. I not fully determining what to do, but taking my leave with my Friend, said, I doubted not but God (according as our Prayer and trust was) would give me such Wisdom and Counsel, as should be meet to his Honour and Glory, the Profit of my Neighbors and Brethren in the World, and obtaining of mine Eternal Salvation by Christ in Heaven.

This done, I returned to my Mothers House again, where had been divers of M. Bartons Servants seeking charged to seek him. after me; who, when they could not find me, strictly charged my Brother and William Marth to seek me that night, & to bring me to Smethehills the next day: who being so charged, were gone to seek me in Adderton, or elsewhere I know not. Thus intending afore to have been all night with my Mother, but then considering that my tarrying there would disquiet her with her Household, I departed from thence, and went beyond Dean Church, and there tarried all night with an old Friend of mine, taking ill rest, and consulting much with my self of my Trouble.

So at my first awaking, one came to me from a faithful Friend of mine with Letters, which I never read nor yet looked on, who said this: My Friends Advice was that I should in no wise flee, but abide and boldly Confess the Faith of Jesus Christ. At whose Words I was so confirmed and established in my Conscience, that from thenceforth I consulted no more, whether it were better to fly or to tarry; but was at a point with my self, that I would not fly, but to go to M. Barton who did seek for me, and there present my self, and patiently bear such Cross as it should please God to lay upon my shoulders. Whereupon my Mind and Conscience afore being much unquieted and troubled, was now merry and in quiet Estate.

So betimes in the Morning I arose, and after I had said the English Litany (as my custom was) with other Prayers, kneeling on my knees by my Friends bed side, I prepared my self to go toward Smethehills: and as I was going thitherward, I went into the Houses of Henry q. Marth Widowes, of my Mother in Law, of Ralph Teton, and of the Wife of Thomas Richardson, desiring them to pray for me, and have me commended to all my Friends and to comfort my Mother, and be good to my little Children: for (as I supposed) they should not see my face any more before the last day: and so took my leave of them not without tears shed on both parts, and came to Smethehills about nine of the Clock, and presented my self afore M. Barton: who shewed me a Letter from the Earl of Darby, wherein he was commanded to send me with others to Latham.

Whereupon he charged my Brother and William Marth to bring and deliver me the next day by ten of the Clock, before the said Earl or his Counsel: made earnest suite with other special Friends, which I had there at the same time, to M. Barton, that he would take some one of them, or them all bound by Recognizance or otherwise, for mine appearing before the said Earl or his said Council, thus that my brother and William Marth might be at home, because it was the closest time of feeding, and their ploughs could no go to work they were not at home; but nothing could be obtained.

G. Marth said that he leave of his Mother.

So we went to my Mothers, and there I dined and shifted part of my Cloths, and in praying, took my leave of my Mother, the Wife of Richard Marth, and both their Households, they and I both weeping, and so departed from them, and went toward Latham, and were all night a mile and an half on this side Latham. So the next day, which was Wednesday, we arose, prayed, and came to Latham betimes, and tarried there till four of the Clock at Afternoon.

G. Marth brought before the Earl of Darby.

Then was I called by Roger Mokinson to my Lord and his Council, and so I was brought into the Chamber of presence, where was present Sir William Nares, Sir Pierce Ale, Master Sherburn the Parson of Grappal, Malter More, with others. Where when I had tarried a little while, my Lord turned him toward me, and asked what was my name: I answered, Marth.

Then he asked, whether I was one of those that sowed evil seed and dissention amongst the People: Which thing I denied, desiring to know mine accusers, and what could be laid against me: but that I could not know.

G. Marth examined before the Earl of Darby.

Then, said he, he would with his Council examine me themselves, and asked me whether I was a Priest: I said no. Then he asked me, what had been my living. I answered I was a Minister, served a Cure, and taught a School. Then said my Lord to his Council, this is a wonderful thing. Afore he said he was no Priest, and now he confesseth himself to be one. I answered, by the Laws now used in this Realm (as farre as I do know) I am none.

Then they asked me who gave me Orders, or whether I had taken any at all. I answered, I received Orders of the Bishop of London and Lincoln.

Then said they one to another, those be of these new Hereticks, and asked me what acquaintance I had with them? I answered, I never saw them but at the time when I received Orders.

They asked me how long I had been Curate, and whether I had Ministred with a good Conscience, I answered, I had been Curate but one year, and had Ministred with a good Conscience, I thanked God, and if the Laws of the Realm would have suffered me, I would have Ministred still; and if the Laws at any time hereafter would suffer me to Minister after that sort, I would Minister again.

The blasphemous mouth of the Parson of Grappal.

Whereat they murmured, and the Parson of Grappal said, this last Communion was the most Devilish thing that ever was devised. Then they asked me what my Belief was.

I answered, I believed in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, according as the Scriptures of the old and new Testaments do teach, and according as the four Symbols or Creeds, that is to wit, the Creed Commonly called Apostolorum, the Creed of Nice Council, of Athanasius, and of Aufin, and Ambrose do teach. And after a few Words, the Parson of Grappal said; But what is thy Belief in the Sacrament of the Altar?

G. Marth believed in the Sacrament.

I answered, I believed that whosoever, according to Christs Institution, did receive the Holy Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, did eat and drink Christs Body and Blood with all the Benefits of his Death and Resurrection to their Eternal Salvation; for Christ (said I) is ever present with his Sacrament.

Then asked they me, whether the Bread and Wine, by the Virtue of the words pronounced by the Priest, were changed into the Flesh and Blood of Christ, and that the Sacrament, whether it were received or reserved, wasthe very Body of Christ;

Darby, and to the Earl of Marth.

Whereunto I made Answer, I knew no further than I had shewed already. For my knowledge is imperfect said I; desiring them not to ask me such hard and unprofitable questions, whereby to bring my Body into Danger of death, and to suck my Blood. Whereat they were not a little offended, saying, they were no Blood-Suckers, and intended nothing to me but to make me a good Christian.

So after many other Questions, which I avoided as well as I could, remembering the saying of Paul, Foolish and unlearned questions avoid, knowing they doe but ingender strife; my Lord commanded me to come to the Board, and gave me pen and ink in my hand, and commanded me to write mine Answers to the Questions of the Sacrament above named; and I wrote as I had answered before. Whereat he being much offended, commanded me to write a more direct Answer, saying, I should not chafe but do it.

Then I took the Pen and wrote, that further I knew not. Whereat he being fore grieved, after many threatnings, said, I should be put to shamefull death like a Traytor, with such other like words; and sometimes giving me fair words if I would turn and be conformable as other were, how glad he would be.

In conclusion, after much ado, he commanded me to ward in a cold, windy, stone house, where was little room; where I lay two nights without any bed, having a few great canvas tent-clothes, and the done, I had a pair of sheets, but no woollen clothes, and so continued till Palm-sunday, occupying my self as well as I could in meditation, Prayer and study; for no man could be suffered to come to me but my Keeper twice a day when he brought me meat and drink.

Another examination of Gorge Marth before the Earl of Darby.

ON Palm-sunday after dinner I was sent for to my Lord and his Council (saying Sir William Nares and Sir Pierce Ale were not then present in place) amongst whom was Sir John Beram, and the Vicar of Prescot. So they Examined me yet once again of the Sacrament. And after I had communed apart with the Vicar of Prescot a good space concerning that matter, he returned to my Lord and his Council with me, saying; That Answer which I had made before, and then did make (as it is above written) was sufficient for a beginner, and as one which did not profess a perfect knowledge in that matter, until such time as I had learned further. Wherewith the Earl was very well pleased, saying, he doubted not but by the means and help of the Vicar of Prescot I would be conformable in other things. So after many fair words he commanded I should have a bed, with fire, and liberty to go amongst his Servants, so that I would do no harm which my communication amongst them.

And so after much other communication I departed, much more troubled in my spirit than afore, because I had not with more boldness confessed Christ, but in such sort as mine Adversaries thereby thought they should prevail against me; whereat I was much grieved: For hitherto I went about as much as in me lay, to rid my self out of their hands: if by any means without open denying of Christ and his word that could be done.

This considered, I cried more Earnestly unto God by Prayer, desiring him to strengthen me with his Holy Spirit, with Boldness to confess him: and to deliver me from their enticing words, and that I were not spoiled through their Philosophy and deceitful vanity after the Traditions of men and Ordinances of the World, and not after Christ.

And so after a day or two I was sent for to the Vicar of Prescot, and the Parson of Grappal; where our most communication was concerning the Mass: and he asked what offended me in the Mass. I answered, the whole Mass did offend me, first because it was in a strange language, whereby the People were not edified, contrary to St. Pauls Doctrine, 1 Corin. 14. and because of the manifold and intolerable abuses and Errors contained therein, contrary to Christs Priest-hood and Sacrifice.

Then they asked me in what place thereof and I named certain places; which places they went about with gentle and far sought interpretations to mitigate, saying those places were understood far otherwise than the words did purport, or than I did take them.

I answered, I did understand them as they did purport, and as their own books do comment & gloss upon them.

They said, Sacrificium or Oblatio did not in the Mass signifie any thing else, than either a sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving, or else a memorial of a Sacrifice or Oblation. So they caused a Mass-book to be sent for

Sacrificium
Missæ quid sit

Anno 1555. for, and shewed me where in some places of the Mass was written: Sacerdos laudat. Whereunto I answered, that it followed not therefore that in all places it signified a Sacrifice or oblation of praise or thanksgiving; and although it did, yet was not a Sacrifice of praise or thanksgiving to be offered for the sins of the People, for that did Christ by his own passion once offer on the Cross: where the words of the Mass were, that the Priest did offer an oblation and Sacrifice for the sins and offences both of himself, and of the People; for them that were dead, and for the salvation of the living; and that the communion of the Body and Blood of Christ was health both of Body and Soul.

The Vicar Answered, that was to be understood of the communion of Christs Body and Blood with his Church or People. So after much exhortation unto me that I should be conformable to the true Catholick Church (which, as they meant was the Romish Church) I departed, not consenting unto them.

So within a day or twain came to me Master More, bringing with him certain Articles, whereunto Doctor Cromwell had consented and subscribed in the presence of certain witnesses in the days of K. Henry the Eighth, and willed me to read them over, and asked me whether I would consent and subscribe unto those Articles: and after communication had of one or two of the said Articles, I confessed plainly I would in no wise consent and subscribe to those Articles: for then I did against mine own Conscience; and so he departed.

So within a short space after, which was on Shier-thurday, the said Parson and Vicar sent for me again, saying, my Lord would be at a short point with me: for if I would not consent and subscribe unto four Articles drawn out of the Articles aforesaid, I must go to prison straightways.

The first was, whether the Mass now used in the Church of England was according to Christs Institution, and with faith, reverence, and devotion to be heard and seen?

The second, whether the Almighty, by the words pronounced by the Priest, did change the Bread and Wine after the words of Consecration into the Body and Blood of Christ, whether it were received or reserved?

Thirdly, whether the lay People ought to receive but under the form of Bread only, and that the one kind was sufficient for them?

Fourthly, whether Confession to the Priest now used in England were godly and necessary?

These four Questions or Articles they delivered me in writing, and bade me go to my chamber and subscribe my Answers with mine own hand, and come again. So within one half hour I came to them again, and delivered them the Questions with mine Answers. The first I denied. The second I answered, as I did to my Lord afore, and as is above written. To the third I answered, that the lay People by Christs institution ought to receive under both kinds, and that it sufficeth not them to receive under the one kind only. Fourthly, that though confession auricular were a commodious mean to instruct the rude People, yet it was not necessary nor commanded of God.

They much exhorted me then to leave mine opinions, saying; I was much deceived, understanding the Scriptures amiss, and much counselled me to follow the Catholick Church of Christ, and to do as other did. I answered, my Faith in Christ conceived by his holy Word I neither could nor would deny, alter, or change, for any living creature whatsoever he were, desiring them to speak to my Lord, that during my life and imprisonment my Poor Friends might be suffered to relieve me with necessary things according to their powers. And so after much exhortation of them, to do and believe as the Catholick Church did, we departed; I from thence forth continuing in the Porters ward, not coming forth of my chamber, saving at noon and night while I dined and supped.

Upon one of the Easter Holy days Master Sherburn and Master More sent for me, perswading me much to leave mine opinions; saying, all the bringers up and favourers of that Religion had evil luck, and were either put to death or in prison, and in Danger of Life. Again, the favourers of the Religion now used had wondrous good luck and prosperity in all things: with many other Wordly reasons of mans Wisdom; for as for the Scriptures M. Sherburn confessed himself Ignorant.

I answered, that I believed and leaned only to the Scriptures, not judging things by Prosperity or Adversity: but they earnestly advised me to refuse mine opinions, and not to let for any Worldly Shame.

I answered, that that which I did, I did not for the avoiding of any Wordly shame, saying; My Soul and Life were dearer to me than the avoiding of any Worldly Shame: neither yet did I it for any vain praise of the World, but in thereverent fear of God.

Then M. More questioned with me of receiving the Sacrament under the one kind. I said, Christs Institution was plain, that all men should Drink of the Cup. Then he told me of the 24. of Luke, and the 20. of the Acts, where was but mention of Breaking Bread only: whereof he gathered, that they received the Sacrament but under one kind.

That I denied saying, those places either did not speak of the Celebration of the Lords Supper, or else under the Name of Breaking Bread was signified and meant the receiving of the Sacrament, both of the Body and Blood of Christ, according to his Institution. So after much communication of that matter, M. Sherburn said, It was great pity that I being a wellfavoured young man, and one that might have good living and do good, would so foolishly call my self away, sticking so hard to such foolish opinions.

I answered as afore I had done to my Lord and to his Council, that my Life, Mother, Children, Brethren, Sisters, and Friends, with other delights of Life, were as dear and sweet unto me as unto any other man, and that I would be as loath to lose them as another would, if I might hold them with good Conscience, and without the Ignominy of Christ; and seeing I could not do that, my trust was, that God would strengthen me with his Holy Spirit to lose them all for his sake: for I take my self (said I) for a Sheep appointed to be slain, patiently to suffer what Cross soever it shall please my merciful Father to lay on me. And so after I had desired them that if I were committed to prison my Friends might be suffered to relieve me, they departed.

M. More after this brought unto me a book of one Alphonsus a Spanish Friar, of all heresies wherewith the Church of Rome, which he called Christs true Church, had been troubled since Christs time, willing me to read and take Counsel of that Book; and appointed me a place, where this Author did write against them that say, the lay people ought to receive under both kinds.

This Author I perceived did vehemently write against Luther, Melancthon, Pelican; and other Germanes of this our time, in all points defending the blasphemous abuses and enormities of the Romish Church, condemning as detestable Heresies whatsoever was written, taught, or believed contrary to the same, using for his strongest and surest Arguments, the Consent, Agreement, and Determination of the Romish Church. So within a few days M. More came to me again, asking me how I liked the Book. I said the Author of the Book did in all points, being a Papist, allow the Rites and abuses of the Romish Church; and shewed him further, that this Author without Authority, and contrary both to the Scriptures and old Doctors, did condemn for Heresies the lay people receiving of this Sacrament under both kinds, whereas this Author witnesseth his own self, Christs Church nine hundred years after Christ used the contrary.

So in conclusion he rebuked me, saying I was unlearned, and erred from the Catholick Faith, stubborn, and stood altogether in mine own conceit. I answered, for my learning, I knowledge myself to know nothing but Jesus Christ, even him that was crucified, and that my Faith was grounded upon Gods holy Word only, and such as, I doubted not, pleased God, and as I would stand in until the last day, God assisting me, and that I did not lay or do any thing either of stubbornness, self-willfulness, vain-glory, or any other Worldly purpose, but with good Conscience, and in the fear of God, and desired him to speak to my Lord and his Council, that might find some gentleness and mercy at their hands. He made me short that answer. I than I said, I commit my cause unto God, who hath numbered the hairs of my head, and appointed the days of my life, saying; I am sure God which is a righteous Judge, would make inquisition for my Blood, according as he hath promised. Then he took his book from me, and departed.

I continued still in ward until Low Sunday, and after dinner my Keeper Richard Scot came to me into my Chamber, and told me that two young men were come to carry me to Lancaster, and so delivered me unto them, a great company both of my Lords Servants and others, accompanying and bringing me on the way, unto Richard Adderions, and somewhat further, counselling and persuading like as is aforesaid.

To whom I made plain answer, that in matters of Faith I would give place to no earthly creature. So they comforted me, and said that they were sorry for me, saying; If I knew mine opinion to be good, I did well, and so they departed, willing my bringers to intreat me honestly.

My bringers by the way shewed me they were willed and advised to bind me, and that they desired first to see me: and after they had looked on me sitting at dinner, they answered they would take charge of me being loose; for they said I seemed to be an honest man.

The first night we were all night at Broughton, and the second day we came to Lancaster betimes at afternoon, and so they kept me all night with them of their Gentleness, and on the morrow delivered me to the Jaylor, who brought me into the highest prison, where I do remain.

After that, the said George came to Lancaster Castle, and there being brought with other prisoners unto the Sessions, was made to hold up his hand with the malefactors. The Earl of Darby had this communication with him as here followeth.

Communication between George Marth, and the Earl of Darby.

I said unto my Lord, I had not dwelled in the Country these three or four years past, and came home but lately to Visit my Mother, Children, and other my Friends, and to have departed out of the Country before Easter then next, and to have gon out of the Realm. Wherefore I trusted, being nothing could be laid against me, wherein I had offended against the Laws of this Realm, his Lordship would not with captious Questions examine me, to bring my Body into danger of Death, to the great discomfort of my Mother, but suffer me to avoid peaceably, seeing I might have fled out of the Country, and yet of mine own will came to his Lordship.

He said to his Counsel, he had heard tell of me above at London; and intended to make search for me, and take me either in Lancashire or above at London, and asked me into what Land I would have gon.

I answered, I would have gon either into Almain, or else into Denmark. He said to his Counsel; in Denmark they used such Herckie as they have don in England; but as for Almain, he said the Emperor had destroyed them.

So after such like words I said unto him, my trust was, that his Lordship being of the Honourable Council of the late King Edward, consenting and agreeing to Acts concerning Faith toward God and Religion, under great pain, would not so soon after consent to put poor men to Shameful Death, as he had threatened me for embracing the same with so good a Conscience.

He answered, that he, with the Lord Windsor and Lord Deeres, with one mo, whose name I have forgotten, did not consent to those Acts, and that the names of them four would be to be seen, as long as the Parliament House stood. Then my Lord did rehearse the evil luck of the Dukes of Northumberland and Suffolk, with others, because they favoured not the true Religion; and again the good hap and prosperity of the Queens Highness, because she favoured the true Religion, thereby gathering the one to be good, and of God, and the other to be wicked, and of the Devil, and said that the Duke of Northumberland confessed so plainly.

George Marth to the Reader.

Forasmuch as not only when I was at Latham, but also, since I departed thence, I hear that there be divers and sundry Reports and Opinions of the cause of mine imprisonment, as well at Latham as at Lancaster (as by credible persons I am informed) some saying it was only because I would not do open penance, and some because I could not agree with my Lord and his Council concerning the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, and the manner of Christs presence there, some because I would not grant it sufficient, and according to Christs Institution, the lay-people to receive the said Sacrament under the one kind only: I thought it good, dearly Beloved in Christ, and my bounden Duty, to certify you by mine own hand-writing, of mine Examination and handling at Latham, and to tell you the truth as near as I could, to quiet your mind in this behalf; and therefore I have here written with mine own hand the Certainty of those things, as near as I could, here above expressed, not omitting any thing at all concerning Religion, whereof they did examine me: how be it I perceive in some things I keep not the same order in writing that thing which was asked by them, and answered by me afore or after, as it was in very deed in all points, saving this, telling the truth as near as I can, desiring you to accept in good worth this my good will, and to pray for me and all them that be in bonds, that God would assist us with his Holy Spirit; and that we may with boldness Confess his Holy Name; and that Christ may be Magnified in our Bodies, that we may stand full and perfect in all the will of God; to whom be all Honour and Glory World without end, Amen.

And thus you have heard all the whole trouble which George Marth sustained both at Latham, and also at Lancaster, testified and written with his own hand, where to he addeth moreover, and faith:

While I was, faith he, in ward at Latham, divers at sundry times came unto me. Some said unto me that all my fellows had recanted, and were gon home, whereas indeed that was not so; for I saw divers of them divers times after. Other said, that it was reported amongst my Lords Household, that I had consented and agreed in all things with my Lord and his Council.

Furthermore, while I was at Lancaster, at this Session many came to me to talk with me, some of good will towards me, but without knowledge gave me such like Counsel as Peter gave Christ as he went up to Jerusalem, when he took him aside and began to rebuke him, saying; Master, favour thyself, this thing shall not be unto thee. But I answered with Christs sharp answer unto Peter again; who turned about, and said unto Peter, Come after me Satan: and perceiving that they were an hinderance unto me, and that they favoured not the things which are of God, but the things that are of men, I made them plain answer, that I neither could, nor would follow their Counsel, but that by Gods grace I would both live and die with a pure conscience, and according as hitherto I had believed and professed. For we ought in no wise to flatter and bear with them, though they love us never so well, which go about to pluck us away from the obedience that we owe unto God and to his word, but after Christs example sharply to rebuke them for their Council.

Some others, yea even strangers also came to me far unlike to these, who after sober communication had, consented with me in all things, lamenting much my troublesome estate giving me Comfortable words, and some money too, and referred to me oftentimes, for the space of two, three, or four days. There came also many Priests to me, by two, three, four, five, or fix at once, whose mouths it was a thing easie enough to stop; for the Priests (which is much to be lamented) be not always the greatest Clerks, and best learned in the Law of God. At their departing they either consented with me, or els had nothing to say against me, saying they could find no fault with my words. My communication with them then was about the Sacrament. There came also into the Prison to me Mr. Westby, Mr. Ashton of Hall, Mr. Ashton of Chatterton, and many more, both Gentlemen and others, to my great comfort. Unto whom I had good occasion to utter a great part of my Confidence: for God so strengthened me with his Spirit of Boldness according to my humble Request and Prayer before (everlasting Thanks be given him therefore) that I was nothing afraid to speak to any that came to me, no not even to Judges themselves, before whom I was thrice arraigned at the Bar, amongst the Thieves, with Irons on my feet, and put up my hand as other did; but yet with boldness I spake unto them so long as they would suffer me.

They also sent for me the fourth time into their Chamber, where amongst other things they laid it straitly to my charge, that I had reported, that I knew a whole Meis of good Gentlemen in Lancashire of mine Opinion, and thrice charged me, upon pain of Allegiance to the Queens Grace, to shew who they were. But I denied that I had spoken any such thing (as it was indeed a false forged Lye of some wicked Wretches). After that, they threatened and rebuked me, for my Preaching to the People out of the Prison, as they called it, and for my Praying and Reading so loud, that the People in the Streets might hear. The truth is, I and my Prison-Fellow Warborton, every day kneeling on our Knees, did read Morning and Evening Prayer, with the English Litany every day twice, both before Noon and after, with other Prayers more, and also read every day certain Chapters of the Bible, commonly towards Night: and we read also these things with so high and loud a voice, that the People without in the Streets might hear us, and would oftentimes, namely in the Evenings, come and sit down in our lights under the Windows and hear us read, wherewith others being offended, complained.

All this while George Marth was not yet brought before the Bishop, whose name was Doctor Cotes, placed the same time in the Bishoprick of Chester. Of whose coming then into Lancaster, the said George Marth reporteth himself as followeth.

How the Bishop came to Lancaster, and of his doings there.

D. Cotes Bishop of Chester.

The Bishop judges Marth to be an Heretic, before he hearth him. His Judgment of Bishops received by Gods Word.

The unmerciful threats of the Bishop towards G. Marth in Prison.

The School-master of Lancaster rebuked for coming to Marth in Prison. Popish Bishops declare themselves by their threats to be very Enemies to Gods Word.

The Bishop being at Lancaster, there set up and confirmed all blasphemous Idolatry, as Holy-Water casting, Procession, Gadding, Martins mumbing, Children confirming, Mass hearing, Idols up setting, with such Heathenish Rites forbidden by God; but no Gospel-Preaching, which Christ, Gods Son, so earnestly commanded. He was informed of me, and willed to send for me and examine me. Which thing he refused to do, saying he would have nothing to do with Heretics so hastily: So hasty in Judgment, and calling men Heretics, are our Bishops in their Lordly Dignities, afore they hear or see what is to be amended or condemned, contrary to the express Commandment of Gods Word, which saith, Condemn no man before thou hast tried out the Truth of the matter, and when thou hast made Inquisition, then reform righteously. Give no Sentence before thou hast heard the Cause, but first let them tell out their Tale: and be that giveth Sentence in a matter before he hear it, is a Fool, and worthy to be confounded.

And instead of his liberality towards me poor Prisoner, he sent for the Jaylor, and rebuked him because he suffered me to fare so well, willing him to have me more strictly kept and dieted: but if his Lordship were Tabled but one Week with me, I do think he would judge our Fare but slender enough.

Also he, and his Chaplains and Chancellor did find fault with the School-master and others, for speaking to me as to a most heinous Heretic, and also with the Jaylor for suffering them. Such is the mercy that those Religious Fathers shew to the Friendless and Comfortless in their Adversities. If we may know the Tree by the fruits (as Christ saith) no man can judge such for any other, but for very Enemies to Christ and his true Religion. God lay it never to their charges, but forgive them, and turn their hard hearts, if it be his will.

But it is no new thing for the Bishops to persecute the Truth, and the Prophets of the Lord for their constancy in Preaching of the true Faith; for so did their Patriarchal Fore-fathers, if ye mark well the Histories of the Holy Bible. Paulus was the head Bishop of the Temple, the Ring-leader of false Prophets, the chief Heretic-taker, that is as much as to say, the Out-thruster of true Godliness. After that the Dignity of Priesthood was given unto him, he abused it. For he taught not, neither reproveth by the Word, but feared the godly with Cruelty. He not only strook, but also imprisoned the holy Prophet Jeremy, though he withstood him not, but presently looked for the help of God, steadfastly preaching the Truth of God.

What mischief the ungracious Bishop Jasen wrought among the Jews, destroying all Godliness, and setting up abominable Idolatrous Laws, ye may read in the fourth Chapter of the second of Maccabees. How the execrable and blind Bishops, Amas and Caiphas, which never spake the Truth of God themselves, unless it were against their wills, unwittingly to their utter destruction, how (I say) they pressed the Truth in Christ and his Apostles, is so well known that I need not to rehearse it.

And thus much hitherto concerning the Prisonment of George Marth, and his Examinations before the Earl of Dorby and his Deputies above-named. Now proceeding further in the troublesome Persecution of this blessed man, let us likewise consider the later part of his Troubles and Examinations which followed under the Bishop of the same Diocese, which was Doctor Cotes; the effect whereof being drawn out of his own Writing, here briefly is to be seen, as followeth.

The Troubles and Examination of George Marth under D. Cotes Bishop of Chester.

YE heard before how George Marth being first imprisoned at Latham, and afterward translated unto Lancaster, was troubled by the Earl. Again, within few days after, the said Marth was removed from Lancaster, and coming to Chester, was sent for by Dr. Cotes then Bishop to appear before him in his Hall, no Body being present but they twain; and then he asked him certain Questions concerning the Sacrament: who made such Answers as the Bishop seemed therewith to be content, saying that he utterly denied Transubstantiation, and allowed not the abuse of the Mass, nor that the Lay-people should receive under one kind only, contrary to Christs Institution; in which point the Bishop went about to persuade him: howbeit (God be thanked) all in vain. Much other talk he had with him, to move him to submit himself to the Universal Church of Rome; and when he saw he could not prevail, he sent him to Prison again: and after being there, came to him divers times one Messie, a Fatherly old Man, one Wrench the School-Master, one Hensham the Bishops Chaplain, and the Arch-deacon, with many more; who with all probability of Words and Philosophy, or worldly Wisdom and deceitful Vanity, after the Tradition of Men, and the beggarly Ordinances and Laws of the World, but not after Christ as it were all singing one Song) went about to persuade him to submit himself to the Church of Rome, and to acknowledge the Pope to be Head thereof, and to interpret the Scriptures none otherwise than that Church did; with many such like Arguments and persuasions of fleshly Wisdom.

To whom the said George Marth answered, that he did acknowledge and believe (though much Evil be withal annexed) one holy Catholick and Apostolick Church, without which there is no Salvation, and that this Church is but one, because it ever hath, doth, and shall confess and believe one only God, and him only worship, and one only Messiah, and in him only trust for Salvation: which Church also is ruled and led by one Spirit, one Word, and one Faith, and that this Church is Universal and Catholick, because it ever hath been since the Worlds beginning, is, and shall endure to the Worlds end, and comprehending within it all Nations, Kindreds and Languages, degrees, states, and conditions of Men; and that this Church is builded only upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the head Corner-stone, and not upon the Romish Laws and Decrees, the Bishop of Rome being the Supreme Head.

Marsh sworn to answer before the Bishop.

G. Marsh purgeth himself.

The Bishops Clergy more able to examine than to dispute.

And where they said, the Church did stand in ordinary succession of Bishops, being ruled by General Councils, Holy Fathers, and the Laws of Holy Church, and so had continued by the space of fifteen hundred years and more; he made answer, that the holy Church, which is the Body of Christ, and therefore most worthy to be called Holy, was before any succession of Bishops, General Councils, or Romish Decrees; neither yet was bound to any time or place, ordinary Succession, General Councils, or Traditions of Fathers, either had any Supremacy over Empires and Kingdoms: but that it was a little poor silly Flock, dispersed and scattered abroad, as Sheep without a Shepherd in the midst of Wolves, or as a Flock of Orphans and Fatherless Children; and that this Church was led and ruled by the only Laws, Councils, and Word of Christ, he being the Supreme Head of this Church, and assisting, succouring and defending her from all Assaults, Errors, Troubles and Persecutions, wherewith she is ever compassed about.

He shewed and proved unto them also by the Flood of Noah, the destruction of Sodom, the Israelites departing out of Egypt; by the Parables of the Sower, of the Kings Sons Marriage, of the great Supper, and by other plain Sentences of Scripture, that this Church was of none estimation, and little in comparison of the Church of Hypocrites and wicked Wordlings.

He was thrust at with all violence of craft and subtilty, but yet the Lord upheld him and delivered him. Everlasting thanks be to that merciful and faithful Lord, which suffereth us not to be tempted above our might, but in the midst of our troubles strengtheneth us with his most Holy Spirit of Comfort and Patience, giveth us a mouth and wisdom how and what to speak; whereagainst all his Adversaries were not able to resist.

Another appearance of George Marsh before the Bishop.

NOW, after that the said Bishop had taken his pleasure in punishing this his Prisoner, and often reviling him, giving taunts and odious names of Heretick, &c. he caused him to be brought forth into a Chappell, in the Cathedral Church of Chelster, called our Lady Chappell, before him the said Bishop, at two of the Clock in the Afternoon, who was there placed in a Chair for that purpose, and Fulk Dutton Mayor of the said City, Dr. Wall, and other Priests assisting him, placed not far from the said Bishop, but somewhat lower. George Wensloe Chancellor, and one John Gerham Register, late directly over against the said Bishop.

Then they caused the said George Marsh to take an Oath upon a Book, to answer truly unto such Articles as should be objected against him. Upon which Oath taken, the Chancellor laid unto his charge, that he had preached and openly published most heretically and blasphemously within the Parish of Dean, Eccles, Bolton, Berry, and many other Parishes within the Bishops Diocesis, in the Months of January, February, or some other time of the year last, proceeding directly against the Popes Authority and Catholick Church of Rome, the blessed Mass, the Sacrament of the Altar, and many other Articles. Unto all which in sum he answered, That he neither heretically nor blasphemously preached or spake against any of the said Articles; but simply and truly, as occasion served, and (as it were) thereunto forced in Conscience) maintained the Truth touching the same Articles, as (he said) all you now present did acknowledge the same in the time of the late King Edward the Sixth.

Then they examined him severally of every Article, and bade them answer directly Yea or Nay, without circumstance; for they were come to Examine, and not to Dispute at that present.

Then he answered them unto every Article very modestly, according to the Doctrine by publick Authority received, and taught in this Realm at the death of the said King Edward: whose Answers were every one noted and written by the Register, to the uttermost that could make against him, which cannot at this present be gotten. After this, the Company for that time brake up, and he was returned to his Prison again.

The last and final appearance of George Marsh before the Bishop.

Within three Weeks after this, or thereabouts, in the said Chappell, and in like sort as before, the said Bishop and others before-named, there being assembled, the said G. Marsh was brought by the Keeper and others with Bills and divers Weapons before them; where first the said Chancellor, by way of an Oration, declared unto the People present the said Bishops charge and burning Charity, who even like as a good Shepherd doth see to his Flock, that none of his Sheep have the Scab or other disease for infecting other clean Sheep, but will fave and cure the said scabbed Sheep: so his Lordship had sent for the said G. Marsh there present, as a scabbed Sheep, and had weeded him out for corrupting others, and had done what he could in shewing his charitable disposition toward the said Marsh, to reduce him from his naughty Heresies; but all that he could do would not help: so that he was now determined, if the said Marsh would not relent and abjure, to pronounce and give Sentence definitive against him. Wherefore he bade the said George Marsh to be now well advised what he would do, for it stood upon his life: and if he would not at that present forsake his Heretical Opinions, it would be (after the Sentence given) too late, though he would never so gladly desire it.

Then the said Chancellor first asked him, whether he were not one of the Bishops Diocesis? To the which he answered, That he knew not how large his Diocesis was, for his continuance was at Cambridge. But then they replied and asked, whether he had not lately been at Deane Parish in Lancashire, and there abode? And he answered, Yea.

Then the Chancellor read all his former Answers that he made in that place at his former Examination, and at every one he asked him, whether he would stick to the same, or no? To the which he answered again, Yea, yea.

How say ye then to this, quoth the Chancellor? In your last Examination, amongst many other damnable and schismatical Heresies, you said, That the Church and Doctrine taught and set forth in King Edward's time, was the true Church, and the Doctrine of the true Church, and that the Church of Rome is not the true and Catholick Church.

I so said indeed, quoth Marsh, and I believe it to be true. Here also others took occasion to ask him (for that he denied the Bishop of Rome's Authority in England) whether Linus, Anacletus, and Clement, that were Bishops of Rome, were not good men, and he answered, Yes, and divers others: but (said he) they claimed no more Authority in England, than the Bishop of Canterbury doth at Rome; and I strive not, quoth he, with the place, neither speak I against the person of the Bishop, but against his Doctrine, which in most points is repugnant to the Doctrine of Christ.

Thou art an arrogant Fellow indeed then, said the Bishop. In what Article is the Doctrine of the Church of Rome repugnant to the Doctrine of Christ?

To whom George Marsh answered and said, Oh my Lord, I pray you judge not so of me: I stand now upon the point of my life and death; and a man in my case hath no cause to be Arrogant, neither am I, God is my Record. And as concerning the disagreement of the Doctrine, among many other things the Church of Rome erreth in the Sacrament. For where Christ in the Institution thereof did as well deliver the Cup, as the Bread, saying, Drink ye all of this, and Mark reported, that they did drink of it: in like manner S. Paul delivered it unto the Corinthians. And in the same sort also was it used in the Primitive Church by the space of many hundred years. Now the Church of Rome doth take away one part of the Sacrament from the Laity. Wherefore, if I could be persuaded in my Conscience by Gods Word that it were well done, I could gladly yield in this point.

Then said the Bishop, Non disputandum est cum Hæretico, that is, There is no disputing with an Heretick. And therefore when all his Answers were read, he asked him whether he would stand to the same; being as they were, said he, full of Heresie, or else forsake them, and come unto the Catholick Church.

Argument.

Linus and Anacletus were good men.

Says the Pope is the Supreme Head of all Churches.

Neither the place nor person of the Pope spoken against, but only his Doctrine.

Wherein the Doctrine of the Church of Rome erreth.

So faith the Task in his retico, that is, There is no disputing with an Heretick. And therefore when all his Answers were read, he asked him whether he would stand to the same; being as they were, said he, full of Heresie, or else forsake them, and come unto the Catholick Church.

Ann^o 1555. To whom he made this full answer, and said, That he held no Heretical Opinion, but utterly abhorred all kind of Heresie, although they most untruly so did slander him. And he desired all the People present to bear him witness (if hereafter any would slander him, and say that he held any grievous Heresie) that in all Articles of Religion he held none other Opinion than was by Law most godly established, and publickly taught in England at the death of King Edward the Sixth, and in the same pure Religion and Doctrine he would, by Gods Grace, stand, live and dye. And here the Chancellor spake to one Leach, which stood near unto Marth, and bade him stand farther from him: for his preference did him no good.

This being done, the Bishop took a Writing out of his bosom, and began to read the Sentence of Condemnation: but when the Bishop had read almost half thereof, the Chancellor called him, and said, Good my Lord, stay, stay: for if ye proceed any farther, it will be too late to call it again, and so the Bishop stayed. Then his Popish Priests, and many other of the ignorant People, called upon Marth, with many earnest words, to recant, and amongst other one Pallesyn a Shoe-maker said to him, For shame man remember thy self, and recant. They bade him kneel down and pray, and they would pray for him: So they kneeled down, and he desired them to pray for him, and he would pray for them.

The Bishop then asked him again, whether he would not have the Queens mercy in time; and he answered, he did gladly desire the same, and did love her Grace as faithfully as any of them; but yet he durst not deny his Saviour Christ, for losing his Mercy everlasting, and so win everlasting Death.

Then the Bishop put his Spectacles again upon his Nose, and read forward his Sentence about five or six Lines, and there again the Chancellor with a glowering and smiling Countenance called to the Bishop, and said, Yet, good my Lord once again stay, for if that word be spoken all is past, no relenting will then serve: and the Bishop (pulling off his Spectacles) said, I would stay, if it would be.

How fast thou speakest, wilt thou Recant? Many of the Priests and ignorant People bade him do so, and call to God for Grace; and pulled him by the Sleeve, and bade him recant and save his life. To whom he answered, I would as fain live as you, if in so doing I should not deny my Master Christ, and again he should deny me before his Father in Heaven.

So the Bishop read out his Sentence unto the end, and strait after said unto him, Now will I no more pray for thee, than I will for a Dog. And Marth answered, That notwithstanding he would pray for his Lordship: and after this the Bishop delivered him unto the Sheriffs of the City. Then his late Keeper bade him farewell good George, with weeping Tears, which caused the Officers to carry him to a Prison at the North-Gates, where he was very straitly kept until the time he went to his Death, during which time he had small comfort, or relief of any worldly Creature.

For being in the Dungeon or dark Prison, none that would him good could speak with him, or at least durst undertake to do for fear of Accusation: and some of the Citizens which loved him in God, for the Gospels sake (whereof there were but a few) although they were never acquainted with him, would sometime in the Evening at a hole upon the Wall of the City (that went into the said dark Prison) call to him, and ask him how he did. He would answer them most cheerfully, that he did well, and thanked God most highly, that he would vouchsafe of his mercy to appoint him to be a Witness of his Truth, and to suffer for the same, wherein he did most rejoice; beseeching him that he would give him Grace not to faint under the Cross, but patiently bear the same to his glory and comfort of his Church: with many other like godly sayings at sundry times, as one that most desired to be with Christ. Once or twice he had Money cast him in at the same hole, about Ten pence at one time, and Two shillings at another time: for which he gave God thanks, and used the same to his necessity.

When the time and day appointed came that he should suffer, the Sheriffs of the City, whose names were Am and Casper, with their Officers and a great number of poor simple Barbers with rusty Bills and Poll-Axes, went to the North-Gate, and there took out the said George Marth, who came with them most humbly and meekly, with a Lock upon his feet. And as he came upon the way towards the place of Execution, some Folks proffered him Money, and looked that he should have gone to his Martyrdom with a little Purse in his hand (in the manner of Felons was accustomed in that City in those parts, at their going to Execution) to the end to gather Money to give unto a Priest to say Trentals or Masses for them after their death, whereby they might, as they thought, be saved: but Marth said, he would not as then be troubled with meddling with Money, but willed some good Man to take the Money, if the People were disposed to give any, and to give it unto the Prisoners or poor People. So he went all the way unto his death with his Book in his hand, looking upon the same; and many of the People said, This man goeth not unto his death as a Thief, or as one that deserveth to dye.

Now when he came to the place of Execution without the City, near unto Spittle-Bow-brook, one Candrey being then a Deputy Chamberlain of Chester, shewed Marth a Writing under a Great Seal, saying, That it was a Pardon for him if he would recant. Whereat Marth answered, That he would gladly accept the same (and said farther, that he loved the Queen) but so much as it tended to pluck him from God, he would not receive it upon that condition.

After that, he began to speak to the People, shewing the cause of his Death, and would have exhorted him to stick unto Christ. Whereupon one of the Sheriffs said: George Marth, we must have no Sermoning now. To whom he said, Master, I cry you mercy: and kneeling down made his Prayers, and then put off his Clothes unto a shirt, and then was he chained to the Post, having a number of Faggots under him, and a thing made like a Firkin, with Pitch and Tar in the same over his Head: and by reason the Fire was not skillfully made, and that the Wind did drive the same to and fro, he suffered great extremity in his death, which notwithstanding he abode very patiently.

Wherein this in him is to be noted, That when as he had been a long time tormented in the Fire without moving, having his Flesh so broiled and puffed up, that they which stood before him underneath could see the Chain Martyr, wherewith he was fastened, and therefore supposed no less but he had been dead, notwithstanding suddenly he spread abroad his Arms, saying, Father of Heaven have mercy upon me, and so yielded his Spirit into the hands of the Lord.

Upon this, many of the People said that he was a Martyr, and died marvellously patiently and godly. Which thing caused the Bishop shortly after to make a Sermon in the Cathedral Church, and therein affirmed, That the said Marth was an Heretick, burnt like an Heretick, and was a Fire-brand in Hell.

In recompence of this his good and charitable Sermon, within short time after, the just Judgment of God appeared upon the said Bishop, recompensing him in such wise, that not long after he turned up his heels and died. Upon what cause his death was gendred, I have not here precisely to pronounce, because the rumor and voice of the People is not always to be followed. Notwithstanding such a Report went in all mens Mouths, that he was burned of an Harlot. Wherefore, whether he died for no, I am not certain, neither dare lean too much upon publick Speech. Albeit this is certain, that when he was afterward searched, being dead, by some of his secret Friends and certain Aldermen for stopping the rumor of the People, this Maidenly Priest and Bishop was found not to be free from certain appearance, which declared but small Virginity in him, and that the Rumor was not raised up altogether upon nought amongst the People. But of this I will stay, and proceed no further; not because more cannot be said, but because I will not be so uncharitable in defacing these Men, as they are true, in condemning Gods Servants to death.

Marth and Casper, with their Officers and a great number of poor simple Barbers with rusty Bills and Poll-Axes, went to the North-Gate, and there took out the said George Marth, who came with them most humbly and meekly, with a Lock upon his feet.

Marth said, he would not as then be troubled with meddling with Money, but willed some good Man to take the Money, if the People were disposed to give any, and to give it unto the Prisoners or poor People.

Letters of George Marth

This good Man wrote divers and sundry Letters out of Prison, besides his Examinations, as before ye have heard. Touching the which his Examinations, this Letter first he fenseth to his Friends, the Copy whereof here followeth.

A Letter of G. Marth to the Reader, touching the matter of his Examination.

A Letter of
G. Marth to the Re-der.

Here have you, dearly beloved Friends in Christ, the chief and principal Articles of Christian Doctrine briefly touched, which heretofore I have both believed, professed and taught, and as yet do believe, profess and teach, and am surely purposed by Gods Grace, to continue in the same until the last day. I do want both time and opportunity to write out at large the probations, causes, parts, effects, and contraries or errors of these Articles, which whose desireth to know, let them read over the common places of the godly Learned men, Philip Melancthon and Erasmus Sarcerius, whose Judgment in these matters of Religion, I do chiefly follow and lean unto. The Lord give us understanding in all things, and deliver us from this present evil World, according to his will and pleasure, and bring us again out of this Hell of Affliction, into which it hath pleased the merciful Lord to throw us down: and deliver us out of the mouth of the Lion, and from all evil doing, and keep us unto his everlasting and heavenly Kingdom. Amen.

Though Satan be suffered as Wheat to sift us for a time, yet faileth not our Faith through Christs aid, but that we are at all times able and ready to confirm the Faith of our weak Brethren, and always ready to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the Hope that is in us, and that with meekness and reverence, having a good Conscience; and whenas they backbite us as Evil-doers, they may be ashamed, forasmuch as they have falsely accused our good Conversation in Christ. I thought my self now of late years, for the Cores of this life, well settled with my loving and faithful Wife and Children, and also well quitted in the peaceable possession of that pleasant Euphrates, I do confess it: but the Lord, who worketh all things for the best to them that love him, would not there leave me, but did take my dear and beloved Wife from me; whose death was a painful cross to my flesh.

Altho I thought my self now of late well placed in der my most-loving and most gentle Mr. Lawrence Sanders, in the Cure of Langhton. But the Lord of his great mercy would not suffer me long there to continue (although for the small time I was in his Vineyard, I was not an idle workman.) But he hath provided me, I perceive it, to tast of a far other Cup; for by violence hath he yet once again driven me out of that glorious Babylon, that I should not tast too much of her wanton pleasures, but with his most dearly beloved Disciples to have my inward rejoicing in the Cross of his Son Jesus Christ: the glory of whose Church, I see it well, standeth not in the harmonious sound of Bells and Organs, nor yet in the glistering of Mitres and Copes, neither in the shining of gilt Images and Lights, (as the blind Papists do judge it) but in continual labours and daily afflictions for his Names sake.

God at this present here in England hath his Fan in his hand, and after his great Harvest, whereinto these years past he hath sent his Labourers, is now sifting the Corn from the Chaff and purging his floor, and ready to gather the Wheat into his Garner, and burn up the Chaff with unquenchable fire.

Take heed and beware of the leaven of the Scribes and of the Sadduces. I mean the erroneous Doctrine of the Papists, which with their glosses deprave the Scriptures. For as the Apostle St. Peter doth teach us, There shall be false Teachers amongst us, which privily shall bring in damnable Sects: And saith, that many shall follow their damnable ways, by whom the way of Truth shall be evil spoken of, and that through covetousness they shall with fained words make merchandize of us; and Christ earnestly warneth us, to beware of false Prophets, which come to us in Sheeps clothing, but inwardly they are ravening Wolves. By their fruits you shall know them. The fruits of the Prophets are their Doctrine. In this place are we Christians taught, that we should try the true Religion unto us, according to the saying of St. Paul, Try all things, and chuse that which is good. Also the Evangelist St. John saith, Believe not every Spirit, but prove the Spirits whether they be of God or not; for many false Prophets, saith he are gone out into the world. Therefore if thou wilt know the true Prophets from the false, try their Doctrine by the true Touch-stone, which is the Word of God: and as the godly Bereans did, search ye the Scriptures, whether those things which be preached unto you be even so or not; or else by the outward conversation if they may easily be deceived. Delecta fortassis aliqua.

A Letter Exhortatory of George Marth to the faithful Professors of Langhton.

Race be unto you, and Peace be multiplied in the knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord, Amen.

I thought it my duty to write unto you, my beloved in the Lord at Langhton, to stir up your minds, and to call to your remembrance the words which have been told you before, and to exhort you (as that good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, Barnabas did the Antiochians) that with purpose of heart ye continually cleave unto the Lord, and that ye stand fast, and be not moved away from the hope of the Gospel, whereof, God be thanked, ye have had plenteous preaching unto you by your late Pastor Mr. Sanders, and other faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ, which now, when Persecution ariseth because of the Word, do not fall away like shrinking Children, and forsake the Truth, being affamed of the Gospel whereof they have been Preachers, but are willing and ready for your fakes (which are Christs Mystical Body) to forsake not only the chief and principal Delights of this Life (I do mean) their Native Countries, Friends, Livings, &c. but also to fulfil their Ministry to the utmost, that is to wit, with their painful Imprisonments and Blood-sheddings, if need shall require, to confirm and seal Christs Gospel, whereof they have been Ministers; and (as S. Paul saith) they are ready not only to be cast into Prison, but also to be killed for the Name of the Lord Jesus.

Whether these being that good Salt of the Earth, that is, true Ministers of Gods Word, by whose Doctrine, being received through Faith, men are made savour unto God, and which themselves lose not their saltness, now when they be proved with the boisterous Storms of Adversity and Persecution; or others being that unsavoury Salt which hath lost his saltness, that is to wit, those ungodly Ministers, which do fall from the Word of God into the Dreams and Traditions of Antichrist: whether of these, I say, be more to be credited and believed, let all men judge.

Wherefore my dearly Beloved, receive the Word of God with meekness, that is grafted in you, which is able to save your Souls: And see that ye be not forgetful hearers, deceiving your selves with sophistry, but doers of the Word; whom Christ doth liken to a wise man, which buildeth his House on a Rock, that when the great Rain descended, and the Floods came and beat upon the House, it fell not, because it was grounded upon a Rock: this is to wit, that when Satan, with all his Legion of Devils, with all their subtle suggestions, and the World with all the mighty Princes thereof, with their crafty counsels, do furiously rage against us, we faint not, but abide constant in the Truth, being grounded upon a most sure Rock, which is Christ, and the Doctrine of the Gospel, against which the Gates of Hell, (that is, the power of Satan) cannot prevail.

And be ye followers of Christ and his Apostles, and receive the Word in much Affection (as the godly Theophylact saith) for the true Followers of Christ and the Apostles, be they which receive the Word of God. They only receive the Word of God, which both believe it, and also frame their lives after it, and be ready to suffer all manner of adversity for the name of the Lord, as Christ and all the Apostles did, and as all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must do: for there is none other way into the Kingdom of Heaven, but through much Tribulation. And if we suffer any thing for the Kingdom of Heavens sake, and for Righteousness sake, we have the Prophets, Christ, the Apostles and Martyrs for an example to comfort us: for they did all enter into the Kingdom of Heaven at the strait Gate and narrow way that leadeth unto Life, which few do find. And unless we will be content to deny our own selves, and take up the Cross of Christ, and his Saints, it is an evident Argument, that we shall never reign with him.

And again, if we can find in our hearts patiently to suffer Persecutions and Tribulations, it is a sure token of the righteous Judgment of God, that we are counted worthy of the Kingdom of God, for which we also suffer. It is verily (saith the Apostle) a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulation to them that trouble us, and rest to us that be troubled: For after this life, the godly being delivered from their tribulations and pains, shall have a most quiet and joyful rest: whereas the wicked and ungodly contrariwise shall be tormented for evermore with intolerable and unspeakable pains, as Christ by the Parable of the rich Glutton and wretched Lazzarus, doth plainly declare and teach. These ought we to have before our eyes always, that in the time of Adversity and Persecution (whereof all that will be the Children of God shall be partakers, and wherewith it hath pleased God to put some of us in ure already) we may stand steadfast in the Lord, and endure even unto the end, that we may be saved. For unless we, like good warriors of Jesus Christ, will endeavour our selves to please him, who hath chosen us to be Souldiers, and fight the good fight of Faith even unto the end, we shall not obtain that Crown of Righteousness, which the Lord, that is a righteous Judge, shall give to all them that love his coming.

Let us therefore receive with meekness the Word that is grafted in us, which is able to save our Souls, and ground our selves on the sure Rock Christ. For (as the Apostle saith) other foundation can no man lay, besides that which is laid already, which is Jesus Christ. If any man build on this foundation, gold, silver, precious stones, timber, hay, stubble, every mans work shall appear, for the day shall declare it, and it shall be shewed in the fire. And the fire shall try every mans work what it is. If any mans work that he hath builded upon abide, he shall receive a reward: if any mans work burn, he shall suffer loss; but he shall be saved himself, nevertheless yet as it were through fire.

By Fire here doth the Apostle understand Persecution and Trouble, for they which do truly preach and profess the Word of God, which is called the Word of the Cross, shall be railed upon and abhorred, hated, thrust out of company, persecuted and tried in the Furnace of Adversity, as gold and silver are tried in the Fire.

By gold, silver, and precious stones, he understandeth them that in the midst of Persecution abide steadfast in the Word. By timber, hay, and stubble, are meant such as in time of Persecution do fall away from the Truth. And when Christ doth purge his floor with the wind of Adversity, these scatter away from the face of the Earth like light Chaff which shall be burned with unquenchable fire. If they then which do believe, do in time of Persecution stand steadfastly in the Truth, the Builder (I do mean the Preacher of the Word) shall receive a reward, and the work shall be preserved and saved: but if so be that they go back and swerve, when Persecution ariseth, the Builder shall suffer loss, that is to say, shall lose his labour and cost, but yet he shall be saved, if he, being tried in the Fire of Persecution, do abide fast in the Faith.

Wherefore, my Beloved, give diligent heed, that ye as living stones be builded upon this sure Rock, and be made a spiritual House and a holy Priesthood to offer up spiritual Sacrifices, acceptable unto God by Jesus Christ. For we are the true Temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in us, if so be that we continue in the Doctrine of the Gospel. We are also an holy and royal Priesthood, to offer up spiritual Sacrifices and Oblations; for the Sacrifices of the New Testament are spiritual and of three manners.

The first is the Sacrifice of Praise and Thanksgiving, which S. Paul doth call the fruits of those lips which confess the Name of God.

The second is Mercy towards our Neighbours, as the Prophet Osee saith, I will have Mercy and not Sacrifice. Read the five and twentieth Chapter of Matthew.

The third is, when we make our Body a quick Sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, that is, when we mortifie and kill our fleshly Concupiscences and carnal Lusts, and so bring our flesh, through the help of the Spirit, under the obedience of Gods holy Law. This is a Sacrifice to God most acceptable, which the Apostle calleth Our reasonable serving of God. And let us be sure, that unless we do now at this present take better heed to our selves, and use thankfully the grace of God offered to us by the Gospel preached these years past, whereby we are induced and brought to the knowledge of the Truth; unless, I say, we keep Christ and his holy Word dwelling by Faith in the House and Temple of our hearts, the same thing that Christ threat-threateneth unto the Jews, shall happen unto us; that is to wit, the unclean Spirit of Ignorance, Superstition, Idolatry, and Inhability and Unbelief, the Mother and Head of all Vices, which by the Grace of God was cast out of us, bringing with him seven other Spirits worse than himself, shall to our utter destruction return again unto us: and so shall we be in worse case than ever we were before. For if we, after we have escaped from the filthiness of the world, through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, be yet tangled therein again and overcome, then is the latter end worse than the beginning: and it had been better for us not to have known the way of righteousness, than after we have known it, to turn from the holy Commandment given to us.

Ephes. 3.

Marth. 14.

For it is then happened unto us according to the true Proverb, The Dog is turned to his Vomit again, and the Sow that was walked to wallowing in the Mire. And thus to continue and persevere in Inhability, and to kick against the manifest and known Truth, and so to dye without Repentance, and with a despair of the Mercy of God in Jesus Christ, is to sin against the Holy Ghost, which shall not be forgiven, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. For it is not possible (saith Saint Paul) that they which were once lightened, and have tasted of the heavenly Gift, and have tasted of the good Word of God, and of the Power of the World to come; if they fall away, should be renewed again by Repentance: Forasmuch as they have, as concerning themselves, crucified the Son of God again, making a mocking of him.

S. Pauls meaning in this place is, that they that believe truly and unfeignedly Gods Word, do continue and abide steadfast in the known Truth.

If any therefore fall away from Christ and his Word, it is a plain token that they were but dissembling Hypocrites for all their fair Faces outwardly, and never believed truly; as Judas, Simon Magnus, Demas, Hymeneus, Philetas, and others were, which all fell away from the known Verity, and made a mock of Christ: which S. Paul doth call here, to crucifie Christ anew, because that they turning to their old Vomit again, did most blasphemously tread the benefits of Christs Death and Passion under their feet. They that are such can in no wise be renewed by Repentance: For their Repentance is fleshly, as the Repentance of Cam, Saul, and Judas was, which being without godly comfort, breedeth desperation unto death. These are not of the number of the Elect: and as S. John doth say, They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had been of us, they would have remained with us unto the end. Also the Apostle saith in another place, If we sin willingly after we have received the knowledge of the Truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin, but a fearful looking for judgment and violent fire, which shall devour the Adversaries.

They sin willingly, which of a set malice and purpose do withhold the Truth in Unrighteousness and Lying, kicking against the manifest and open known Truth, which although they do perfectly know that in all the World there is none other sacrifice for sin, but only that omni-sufficient sacrifice of Christs death: yet notwithstanding they will not commit themselves wholly unto it, but rather despise it, allowing other sacrifices for sin, invented by the imagination of man (as we see by daily experience) unto whom, if they abide still in their wickedness and sin, remaineth a most horrible and dreadful Judgment. This is that sin unto death, for which Saint John would that a man should pray.

Wherefore, my beloved in Christ, let us (on whom the ends of the world are come) take diligent heed unto our selves, that now in these last and perilous times (in which the Devil is come down, and hath great wrath because he knoweth his time is but short, and whereof the Prophets, Christ and the Apostles have so much spoken, and given us an earnest forewarning) we withhold not the Truth in Unrighteousness, believing, doing, or speaking any thing against our knowledge and confidence, or without Faith. For if we do so, for whatsoever cause it be, it is a wilful and obstinate infidelity, and a sin unto death: And as our Saviour Christ saith, If ye believe not, ye shall die in your own sins. For unless we hold fast the Word of Life, both believing it, and also bringing forth fruit worthy of Repentance, we shall with the unprofitable Fig-tree, which did but cumber the ground, be cut down, and our Talent taken from us, and given unto another that shall put it to a better use: and we, through our own unthankfulness put from the Mercy of God, shall never be able to pay our Debts, that is to say, we shall altogether be lost and undone. For the Earth that drinketh in Rain that cometh oft upon it, and bringeth forth Herbs meet for them that dress it, receiveth blessing of God: but that ground that beareth Thorns and Briers, is reproveth and is nigh unto cursing, whose end is to be burned.

Nevertheless, dear Friends, we trust to see better of you, and things which accompany Salvation, and that ye being the good ground, watered with the moistness of Gods Word plentifully preached among you, will with a good heart hear the Word of God and keep it, bringing forth fruit with patience. And be none of those forgetful and hypocritical hearers, which although they hear the Word, yet the Devil cometh, and catcheth away that which was sown in their heart; either having no root in themselves, endure but a season, and as soon as Tribulation or Persecution ariseth because of the Word, by and by they are offended: either with the cares of this World and deceitfulness of Riches choke the Word, and so are unfruitful. Read the Parable of the Sower, and among other things note and mark, that the most part of the hearers of Gods Word are but Hypocrites, and hear the Word without any fruit or profit, yea, only to their greater condemnation; for only the fourth part of the Seed doth bring forth fruit. Therefore let not us that be Ministers, or Professors, and Followers of Gods Word, be discouraged, though that very few do give credit, and follow the Doctrine of the Gospel, and be saved.

Whoever therefore hath ears to hear, let him hear: To him that for whosoever hath, to him shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away, even that he hath: that is to say, they that have a desire of Righteousness, and of the Truth, shall be more and more illuminated of God: on the contrary part, they that do not cover after Righteousness and Truth, are more hardened and blinded, though they seem unto themselves most wise. For God doth here follow an example of a loving Father, which when he seeth that fatherly love and correction doth not help towards his Children, useth another way. He ceaseth to be beneficial unto them, and to minister unto them fatherly correction: he giveth them over unto themselves, suffering them to live as they list themselves.

But we trust to see better of you, my dearly beloved, and that ye like very Gaderenites, for fear to lose your worldly substance or other delights of this Life, will not banish away Christ and his Gospel from among you; but that ye with all diligence of mind will receive the Word of God, taught you by such Ministers, as now when Persecution ariseth because of the Word, are not ashamed of the Testimony of our Lord Jesus, but are content to suffer Adversity with the Gospel, and therein to suffer trouble as evil doers, even unto Bonds. And if ye refuse thus to do, your own Blood will be upon your own heads. And as ye have had plentiful preaching of the Gospel, more than other have had: so ye shall be sure, if ye repent not and bring forth fruits worthy of Repentance, to be sorer plagued, and to receive greater vengeance at Gods hand, than others, and the Kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and be given to another Nation, which will bring forth the fruits thereof.

Wherefore, my dearly beloved in Christ, take good heed to your selves, and ponder well in your minds, how fearful & horrible a thing it is to fall into the hands of the Living God. And fee that ye receive not the Word of God in vain, but continually labour in Faith, and declare your Faith by your good Works, which are infallible witness of the true justifying Faith, which is never idle, but worketh by Charity. And fee that ye continually give your selves unto all manner of good Works: Amongst which the chiefest are to be obedient to the Magistrates (both they are the Ordinance of God, whether they be good or evil) unless they command idolatry and ungodliness, i.e. things contrary unto true Religion. For, then ought we to say with Peter, We ought more to obey Anno 1555. obey God than man. But in any wife we must beware of Tumult, Infurrection, Rebellion, or Resistance.

The Weapon of a Christian in this matter, ought to be the Sword of the Spirit, which is Gods Word and Prayer, coupled with Humility and due Submission, and with readines of heart, rather to die than to do any ungodliness. Christ also doth teach us, that all Power is of God; yea even the power of the wicked, which God causeth offendments to reign for our sins and disobedience towards him and his word. Whosoever then doth resist any Power, doth resist the Ordinance of God, and so purchase to himself utter destruction and undoing.

We must also by all means be Promoters of Unity, Peace and Concord. We must honour and reverence Princes, and all that be in Authority, and pray for them, and be diligent to set forth their profit and commodity.

Secondly, We must obey our Parents, or them that be in their rooms, and be careful for our Houtholds, that they be provided for and fed, not only with bodily food, but much rather with spiritual food, which is the Word of God.

Thirdly, We must serve our Neighbours by all means we can, remembering well the saying of Christ, Whosoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye likewise unto them, for this is the Law and the Prophets.

Fourthly, We must diligently exercise the necessary work of Prayer for all Estates: knowing that God therefore hath so much commanded it, and hath made so great promises unto it, and doth so well accept it. After these our Adversities, we must learn to know the Crois, and what affliction and mind we must bear towards our Adversaries and Enemies, whatsoever they be, to suffer all Adversities and Evils patiently, to pray for them that hurt, persecute, and trouble us: and by thus using our selves, we shall obtain an hope and certainty of our Vocation, that we be the Elect Children of God.

And thus I commend you, Brethren, unto God and to the Word of his Grace, which is able to build further, and to give you an Inheritance among all them which are sanctified; beseeching you to help Mr. Sanders and me your late Pastors, and all them that be in Bonds for the Gospels sake, with your Prayers to God for us; that we may be delivered from all them that believe not, and from unreasonable and froward men, and that this our Imprisonment and Affliction may be to the glory and profit of our Christian Brethren in the world, and that Christ may be magnified in our Bodies, whether it be by death or by life. Amen.

Salute from me all the faithful Brethren: and because I write not several Letters to them, let them either read or hear these my Letters. The Grace of our Lord be with you all, Amen. The 28. of June, by the unprofitable Servant of Jesus Christ, and now also his Prisoner, George Marfh.

Save your selves from this untoward Generation. Pray, pray, pray: never more need.

Another Letter of the said George Marfh to certain of his dearly beloved Friends at Manchester in Lancashire.

Grace be with you and Peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen.

After Salutations in Christ to you, with thanks for your friendly remembrances of me, desiring and wishing unto you, not only in my Letters, but also in my daily Prayers, such Consolation in Spirit, and taste of heavenly Treasures, that ye may thereby continually work in Faith, labour in Love, persevere in Hope, and be patient in all your Tribulations and Persecutions, even unto the end and glorious coming of Christ: these shall be earnestly to exhort and beseech you in Christ, as ye have received the Lord Jesus, even so to walk, rooted in him, and not to be afraid of any terror of your Adversaries, be they never so many and mighty, and you on the other side never so few and weak: for the Battell is the Lords. And as in times past, God was with Abraham, Moses, Isaac, David, the Machabees, and other, and fought for them, and delivered all their Enemies into their hands, even so hath he promised to be with us also unto the worlds end, and to assist, strengthen and help us, that no man shall be able to withstand us. For as I was with Job, so will I be with thee, faith God, and will never leave thee nor forsake thee. Be strong and bold; neither fear nor dread; for the Lord thy God is with thee, whether thou goest. Now if God be on our side, who can be against us?

In this our spiritual warfare is no man overcome; unless he traitorously leave and forsake his Captain, either cowardly cast away his Weapons, or willingly yield himself to his Enemies, either fearfully turn his back and fly. Be strong therefore in the Lord, dear Brethren, and in the power of his might, and put on all the Armour of God, that ye may be able to stand stedfast against the crafty Assaults of the Devil.

Now what Weapons ye must fight withal, I learn of S. Paul, a Champion both much exercised, and also most valiant and invincible. For we must think none other, but that the life of man is a perpetual warfare upon Earth, as the examples of all godly men throughout all Ages do declare. The valiant Warrior S. Paul being delivered into the hands of the ungodly, and that to many times, and also from so many extremities and dangers of death, as he his own self doth witness, is fain to commit himself in the end to the rough Waters of the Sea, where he was in great peril and jeopardy of his own life: yet was God always (to the great comfort of all that hear of it) most ready to comfort and succour him, and gloriously delivered him out of all his troubles; so that no man that invaded him, could do him any harm, and in the end he was compelled to say, I have finished my course, the time of my departing is at hand, I long to be loosed, and to be with Christ, which is the best of all, most heartily desiring death.

These things be written for our learning and comfort, and be to us a sure Obligation, that if we submit our selves to God and his holy Word, no man shall be able to hurt us, and that he will deliver us from all troubles, yea from death also, until such time as we covet and desire to dye. Let us therefore run with patience unto the Battell that is set before us, and look unto Jesus the Captain and Finisher of our Faith, and after his example, for the Rewards sake that is set out unto us, patiently to bear the Crois, and despise the shame. For all that will live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer Persecution.

Christ was no sooner baptized, and declared to the world to be the Son of God, but Satan was by and by ready to tempt him: which thing we must look for also; yea, the more we shall increase in faith and virtuous living, the more strongly will Satan assault us: whom we must learn, after the example of Christ, to fight against, and overcome with the Holy and Sacred Scriptures the Word of God (which are our heavenly Armour) and Sword of the Spirit. And let the fasting of Christ, while he was tempted in the Wilderness, be unto us an example of sober living, not for the space of forty days (as the Papists do fondly fancy of their own brains) but as long as we are in the wilderness of this wretched life, assaulted of Satan, who like a roaring Lion walketh about, and croucheth not, seeking our utter destruction.

Neither can the Servant of God at any time come and stand before God, that is, lead a godly life, and walk innocently before God, but Satan cometh also among them, that is, he daily accuseth, findeth fault, vexeth, persecuteth, and troubleth the godly: for it is the nature and property of the Devil always to hurt, and do mischief, unless he be forbidden of God: for unless God doth permit him, he can do nothing at all, not so much as enter into a filthy Hog: but we are more of price than many Hogs before God, if we cleave unto his Son by Faith.

Let us therefore, knowing Satans deceits, and rancour, walk the more warily, and take unto us the Shield of Faith, wherewith we may be able to quench and to overcome all the fiery and deadly darts of the wicked. Let us take to us the Helmet of Salvation, and Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God, and learn to use the same of the example of our grand Captain Christ, according to the example of our grand Captain Christ. Let us fast and pray continually. For this frantick kind of Devils goeth not out otherwife, as Christ doth teach teach us, but by faithful Prayer and Fasting, which is true Abstinence and Sobriety of Living, if we use the Line according to the Doctrine of the Gospel and Word of God. Fasting is acceptable to God, if it be done without Hypocrisie, that is to say, if we use it to this intent, that thereby this mortal Body and disobedient Carcass may be tamed and brought under the subjection of the Spirit: And again, if we fast to this intent, that we may spare wherewith to help and succour our poor needy Brethren.

This Fast do the true Christians use all the days of their life, although among the common sort of People remaineth yet still that superstitious kind of Fasting, which God so earnestly reproveth by his Prophet Ezra. For as for true chastening of the Body, and abstaining from Vice, with shewing Mercy towards our needy Neighbours, we will neither understand nor hear of it, but still think with the Jews; that we do God a great pleasure when we Fast, and that we then Fast, when we abstain from one thing, and fill our bellies with another. And verily in this point doth our Superstition much exceed the Superstition of the Jews: For we never read that they ever took it for a Fast, to abstain from Flesh, and to eat either Fish or White-meat, as they call it.

To Fasting and Prayer must be joynted Alms, and Mercy towards the Poor and Needy: And that our Alms may be acceptable unto God, three things are chiefly required.

First, That we give with a cheerful and joyful heart; for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

Secondly, That we give liberally, putting aside all niggardship, knowing that he that soweth little, shall reap little, and he that soweth plentifully, shall reap plentifully. Let every man therefore do according as he is able. The poorest Caitiff in the world may give as great and acceptable an Alms in the sight of God, as the richest man in the world can do. The poor Widow that did offer but two Mites, which make a Farthing, did highly please Christ: Inasmuch that he affirmed with an Oath, That she of her Penny had added more to the Offerings of God, than all the rich men, which of their Superfluity had cast in very much. For if there be first a willing mind (as S. Paul saith) it is accepted, according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not.

Thirdly, We must give without Hypocrisie and Ostentation, not seeking the Praise of men, or our own glory or profit. And although the Scriptures in some places make mention of a Reward to our Alms and other good Works, yet ought we not to think that we do merit or deserve any thing: but rather we ought to acknowledge, that God in his meer mercy rewardeth in us his own gifts. For what hath he that giveth Alms, that he hath not received? He then that giveth to a poor man any manner of thing, giveth not of his own, but of those goods which he hath received of God. What hast thou, saith the Apostle, that thou hast not received? If thou hast received it, why rejoicest thou, as though thou hadst not received it?

This Sentence ought to be had in remembrance of all men. For if we have nothing, but that which we have received, what can we deserve? or what need we to dispute and reason of our own Merits? it cometh of the free gift of God, that we live, that we love God, that we walk in his fear. Where is our deserving then? We must also in this our spiritual warfare arm our selves with continual Prayer, a very necessary, strong, and invincible weapon, and after the example of Christ and all other godly men, cry heartily unto God in Faith, in all our distresses and anguishes. Let us go boldly to the Seat of Grace, where we shall be sure to receive Mercy, and find Grace to help in time of need. For now is Pride and Persecution increased: Now is the time of destruction and wrathful displeasure.

Wherefore, my dear Brethren, be ye fervent in the Law of God, and jeopard ye your lives, if need shall require, for the Testament of the Fathers, and so shall ye receive great honor, and an everlasting name. Remember Abraham: Was not he found faithful in temptation, and it was reckoned unto him for righteousness? Jeseph in time of his trouble kept the Commandment, and was made a Lord of Egypt. Phineas was so fervent for the honour of God, that he obtained the Covenant of an Everlasting Priesthood. Jehua for the fulfilling of the Word of God, was made the Captain of Israel. Caleb bare record before the Congregation, and received an Inheritance. David also in his merciful kindness obtained the Throne of an Everlasting Kingdom. Elas being zealous and fervent in the Law, was taken up into Heaven. Ananias, Azarias, and Misael remained steadfast in the Faith, and were delivered out of the Fire. In like manner Daniel being unguilty, was saved from the mouth of the Lions.

And thus ye may consider throughout all Ages, since the world began, that whosoever put their trust in God were not overcome. Fear not ye then the words of ungodly men; for their glory is but dung and worms; to day they are set up, and to-morrow are they gone; for they are turned into Earth, and their memorial cometh to nought. Wherefore let us take good hearts unto us, and quit our selves like men in the Law: for if we do the things that are commanded us in the Law of the Lord our God, we shall obtain great honour therein.

Beloved in Christ, let us not faint because of Affliction, wherewith God trieth all them that are sealed unto Life everlasting: for the only way into the Kingdom of God is through much Tribulation. For the Kingdom of Heaven (as God teacheth by his Prophet Ezra) is like a City builded and set upon a broad Field, and full of all good things, but the entrance is narrow and sudden (full of sorrow and travel, perils and labours): Like as if there were a fire at the right hand, and a deep Water at the left; and as it were one straight path between them both, so final, that there could but one man go there. If this City were now given to an Heir, and he never went through the perilous way, how could he receive his Inheritance? Wherefore seeing we are in this narrow and straight way, which leadeth unto the most joyful and pleasant City of everlasting Life: let us not stagger, either turn back, being afraid of the dangerous and perilous way, but follow our Captain Jesus Christ in the narrow and straight way, and be afraid of nothing, no not even of Death it self: for it is he that must lead us to our Journeys end, and open us the door unto everlasting Life.

Consider also the course of this world, how many if worldly there be which for their Masters sake, or for a little Promotions sake, would adventure their lives in worldly affairs, as commonly in wars, and yet is their reward but light and transitory, and ours is unspeakable, great and everlasting. They suffer pains to be made Lords on Earth for a short season: how much more ought we to endure like pains, yea peradventure much less to be made Kings in Heaven for evermore? Consider also the wicked of this world, which for a little pleasures sake, or to be avenged on their Enemies, will fight with Sword and Weapons, and put themselves in danger of Imprisonment and Hanging. So much as Virtue is better than Vice, and God mightier than the Devil, so much ought we to excel them in this our Spiritual Battel.

And seeing Brethren, it hath pleased God to set me, and that most worthy Minister of Christs John Bradford, your Country-men, in the Fore-front of this Battel, where (for the time) is most danger, I beseech you all, in the Bowels of Christ, to help us, and in all our Fellow-souldiers standing in like perilous place, with your Prayers to God for us, that we may quit our selves like men in the Lord, and give some example of boldness and constancy mingled with patience in the fear of God, that ye and others our Brethren, through our example, may be so encouraged and strengthened to follow us, that ye also may leave example to your weak Brethren in the world, to follow you, Amen.

Consider what I say, the Lord give us understanding in all things. Brethren, the time is short; it remaineth that ye use this world as though ye used it not: for the fashion of this world vanisheth away. See that ye love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: but let your affection on heavenly things, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Be meek, and long suffering, serve and edifie one another, with the gift that God hath given you. Beware of strange Doctrines, lay aside the old Conversation of greedy Lusts, and walk in a new life. Beware of uncleanness, covetousness, foolish talking, false Doctrine, and drunken

By me an unprofitable Servant of Christ, George Marth.

To his welbelovéd in Christ, Jenkin Crampton, James Leiver, Elice Foggie, Ralph Bradshaw, the wife of Richard Bradshaw, Elice Crampton, and to every one of them, be these delivered from Lancaster. George Marth.

The Grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you all, Amen.

After salutations in Christ, and hearty thanks for your friendly Tokens and your other Remembrances towards me, beseeching God that ye may increase in faith, fear, and love, and all good gifts, and grow up into a perfect man in Christ: These be earnestly to exhort you, ye and to beseech you in the tender mercy of Christ, that with purpose of heart ye continually cleave unto the Lord, and that ye worship and serve him in spirit, in the Gospel of his Son. For God will not be worshipped after the Commandments and Traditions of men, neither yet by any other means appointed, prescribed and taught us, but by his holy Word. And though all men for the most part defile themselves, with the wicked Traditions of Men, and Ordinances after the World, and not after Christ: yet do ye after the example of Toby, Daniel, and his three Companions, Mattathias and his three Sons, be it at a point with your selves, that ye will not be defiled with the unclean meats of the Heathen; I do mean the filthiness of Idolatry, and the very Heathenish Ceremonies of the Papists: but as the true Worshipers, serve ye God in Spirit and Verity, according to the Sacred Scriptures, which I would wish, and will you above all things continually and reverently (as both Saint Paul and Christ command you) to search and read, with the wholesome Monitions of the same: to teach, exhort, comfort and edify one another, and your Brethren and Neighbours, now in the time of this our miserable Captivity, and great famishment of Souls, for want of the Food of Gods Word. And doubt not but that the merciful Lord, who hath promised to be with us even unto the worlds end, and that whensoever two or three be gathered together in his Name, he will be in the midst of them, will assist you, and teach you the right meaning of the Sacred Scriptures, will keep you from all Errors, and lead you into all Truth, as he hath faithfully promised.

And though you think your selves unable to teach, yet at the commandment of Christ, now in time of Famine, the hungry People being in a Wilderness far from any Towns, which if they be sent away fasting, are sure to faint and perish by the way, employ and bestow those five Loaves and two Fishes that ye have, upon that hungry Multitude, although you think it nothing among so many. And he that increased the five Loaves and two Fishes to feed five thousand men, besides women and children, shall also augment his gifts in you, not only to the curing and winning of others in Christ, but also to an exceeding great increase of your knowledge in God and his holy Word. And fear not your Adversaries; for either according to his accustomed manner God shall blow their evil eyes that they shall not see you, either shall they be slain in their fight, or else graciously deliver you out of their hands by one means or other.

Obey with reverence all your Superiours, until they command Idolatry or Ungodliness. Make provision for your Households, chiefly that they be instructed according to the Law of God. Love you? Wives even as you love your selves, and as Christ loved the Congregation. Love your Children, but rate them not, lest they be of a perverse mind: and bring them up in the nurture and discipline of the Lord, and teach them even as the goodly Parents of Toby the younger, and Susanna did teach their Child Tobias children, even from their infancy to reverence God according to his Law, and to abstain from sin, providing that in no wise they be brought up in idleness and wantonness, fearing that ye reckon your selves to be the Children of God, and look for the Life which God shall give to them which never turn their belief from him. See that ye ever fear God, and keep his Commandments: and though the Plague of God chance upon you, yet remain ye steadfast in the faith and fear of God, and thank him, and leave him in such holiness and righteousness as are acceptable before him all the days of your life. Comfort your selves in all your adversities, and stay your selves in him, who hath promised not to leave you as fatherless and motherless Children without any comfort, but that he will be to you like a most gentle and merciful Lord. He will continually stand by you in all your troubles, assisting, helping, and succouring you at all times. I will be with you (saith he) unto the end of the world. And cleave ye fast unto him, which was incarnate, lived, wrought, taught, and died for your sins, ye, rose again from death, and ascended into Heaven for your justification. Repent ye of the life that is past, and cease from sin, and from hence forward live as much time as remaineth in the flesh, not after the lusts of men, but after the will of God. To do good and distribute, forget not. Fast and pray busily, and as every man hath received the gifts, minister the same one to another as good Ministers of the manifold Graces of God, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever, and while the world standeth, Amen.

Yours George Marth.

Another Letter.

The same Grace and Peace (dearly beloved in Christ) I do intirely desire and wish unto you, which the Apostle S. Paul wisheth to all them, unto whom he did write and send his Epistles, than which two things no better can be wished and desired of God. Grace is throughout all the Epistles of Paul, taken for the free mercy and favour of God, whereby he saveth us freely without any deservings or works of the Law. In like manner peace is taken for the quietness and tranquillity of the Conscience, being thoroughly persuaded that through the only Merits of Christs Death and Blood-shedding, there is an atonement and peace made between God and Us; so that God will no more impute our sins unto us, nor yet condemn us.

Dearly Beloved, I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of things, though that you know them your selves, and be also established in the present Truth; notwithstanding I think it meet, as long as I am in this Tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance. Wherefore I beseech your Brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Jesus, that ye increase more and more, even as ye have received, how ye ought to walk, and to please God. And as Barnabas, that good man, and full of the Holy Ghost, exhorted the Antiochians, with purpose of heart cleave ye continually unto the Lord. And stand fast, and be not moved from the hope of the Gospel, whereof God be thanked, ye have had plenteous preaching unto you these years past, by the faithful Ministers of Jesus Christ, Leiver, Pilkinton, Bradford, Sanders, and others like, which now, when Persecution ariseth, because of the Word, do not fall away like thinking Children, and forsake the Truth, but are preft and ready for your fakes, which are his Mystical Body, to forsake forfake the chief and principal delights of this life, and some of them in giving place to the outrageous tyranny of the world, to forsake their Livings, Friends, Native Land, and other chief Pleasures of this Life, and to commit themselves to painful Exile, that if it please God, Christ may come again out of Egypt. And other some are ready to fulfil their Ministry unto the uttermost: that is to wit, with their painful imprisonments and blood-shedding, if need shall so require, to confirm and seal Christ's Gospel whereof they have been Ministers: and as S. Paul saith, not only to be cast into Prison, but also to dye for the Name of the Lord Jesus.

Men banished for the Gospel in Q. Marie days.

Be ye not therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord Jesus, neither be ye ashamed of us which are his Prisoners, but suffer ye adversity with the Gospel, for which Word of God is not bound with us. Therefore we suffer all things for the Elects sake, that they also may obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory: wherefore stand ye fast in the Faith, and be not moved from the hope of the Gospel, and so shall ye make us even with joy to suffer for your sakes, and as the Apostle saith, To fulfil that which is behind of the Passions of Christ in our flesh, for his Bodies sake, which is the Congregation.

The meeting of S. Paul's words opened.

S. Paul doth not here mean, that there wanteth any thing in the Passion of Christ, which may be supplied by man: for the Passion of Christ, as touching his own Person, is that most perfect and omni-sufficient Sacrifice, whereby we are all made perfect, as many as are sanctified in his Blood: but these his words ought to be understood of the Elect and Chosen, in whom Christ is, and shall be persecuted unto the worlds end. The Passion of Christ then, as touching his mystical Body, which is the Church, shall not be perfected till they have all suffered, whom God hath appointed to suffer for his Sons sake. Wherefore stablish your selves, and be of good comfort, and be not moved in these Afflictions, knowing that we are appointed thereunto. For on our parts nothing can be greater remembrance of us always, praying for us as we do for you, as the Apostle writeth of the Thessalonians, saying, Now are we alive, if ye stand stedfast in the Lord: for good Shepherds do always count the welfare and prosperous estate of Christs Flock to be their own: for while it goeth well with the Congregation, it goeth well with them also in whatsoever Affliction or Adversity they be: but when they see the Church in any peril or weakness, then be they weary of their own lives, then can they have no rest nor joy. Who is weak, saith S. Paul, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I do not burn? But this Affliction is not in them that seek their own lucre and glory.

The condition of a true Pastor.

And so much as the life of man is a perpetual warfare upon Earth, let us run with joy unto the battell that is set before us, and like good warriors of Jesus Christ please him, who hath chosen us to be Souldiers, and not like shrinking Children faint and fall away from the Truth now in time of Adversity and Tribulation, wherewith all that will live godly in Christ Jesus must be tried, even as gold and silver is proved in the fire, and whereof all the Scriptures have given us so much forewarning.

A Christian mans life is a warfare upon Earth.

For God is wont for the most part, to warn his Elect and Chosen, what affliction and trouble shall happen unto them for his sake, not to the intent to fray them thereby, but rather to prepare their minds against the boisterous storms of Persecution. As we have a notable example in the Apostle S. Paul, unto whom God sent Agabus, who prophesied unto him of the Imprisonment and Bonds that he should suffer at Jerusalem: in whom we have also a good example of constancy and steadfastness, which regarding nothing the tears of his familiar Friends, nor yet the peril of his own life, did through fire and water go on still to set forth the glory of God; and he being delivered from the hands of his ungodly and blood-thirsty Enemies, and that so many times, is in conclusion fain to commit himself to the rough waters of the Sea, where he was a long season in great peril and jeopardy of his own life. But God was always (to the great comfort of all that shall hear of it) most ready to help and succour him. First, he did send him a most friendly and sweet company, I mean Archippus and Lucas, so ruling the heart of the under Captain Julian, that he courteously intreated him, and gave him liberty to go to his Friends, and to refresh himself, and he was beneficial unto him at all times. In like manner was God with Joseph, and delivered him from all his Adversities, and gave him favour and wisdom in the sight of Pharaoh King of Egypt, inasmuch that he made him Governor over all Egypt, and over all his Household. In like manner was he with Jeremy and Daniel, in their great troubles, and appointed men for them in their most troubles, to relieve, succour, and help them, to their singular comfort.

Also when Peter was in Herods Prison, sleeping between two Souldiers, bound with two Chains, and the Keepers before the door keeping the Prison, the same night that Herod had intended to have brought him out unto the People the day following, and to have put him unto death to please the Jews withal, as a little before he had killed James the Brother of John with the Sword; God sent his Angel, and the Chains fell off from Peters hands, and the Iron gate opened unto him by its own accord, and so was Peter wonderfully delivered by God. For it is the true living God that looseth all Bands, and delivereth out of Prison, and not that fained God S. Leonard. On that true God did S. Peter call, unto him did he ascribe the glory of his deliverance, saying, Now I know of a truth, that God hath sent his Angel, &c.

Peter delivered out of Prison.

These things are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. The God of patience and comfort, grant that we be like minded one towards another, after the example of Christ Jesus, that we all agreeing together, may with one mouth glorifie God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Another Letter of G. Marth to R. Langley and others.

After hearty Commendations to you, with thanks for that ye did visit me a Prisoner in Christ, and unacquainted with, to your costs, this shall be to let you know, that ye shall receive from me mine Examination and handling at Latham, and the cause of mine Imprisonment, according as I did promise you: and this ye shall receive by my Brother, or some one of the Bradshaws of Bolton within this evenning, willing you to leave the same to such faithful men about Manchester or elsewhere, as you do take to be favourers of true Religion, and Christs holy Word, and then to deliver it again. And whereas you did put me in comfort, that if I did want any thing necessary unto this life, you with some others would be bearers with me in this my costly and painful Affliction; I give you most hearty thanks, and rejoyce greatly in the Lord, who stirs up the hearts of others to be careful for me in this my great necessity. I thank God, as yet I do want nothing, and intend to be as little chargeable to others (saying my Mother) as I can. If I do want, I will be bold with you and others, to send for your relief and help in my necessity; desiring you in the mean while to pray for me, and all others in the Bonds of Christ, that God would perform the thing which he hath begun in us, that we may with boldness confess Jesus Christ, and fight the good fight of Faith.

Yours George Marth.

Another Letter of G. Marth to his friend.

After hearty commendations and thanks to you, not only for your large token, but much more for your loving Letters, full of consolation to me as touching my person to you unknown: these shall be to certify you, that I rejoyce greatly in the Lord, when I do perceive how my sweet Saviour Christ doth stir up the minds, not only of my familiar friends in times past, but also of sundry & divers heretofore

Anno 1555. tofore unto me unknown and unacquainted, to bear part with me in this my painful and costly Imprisonment, sending me things not only necessary for this present Life, but also comfortable Letters, encouraging and exhorting mee to continue grounded and stablished in the Faith, and not to be moved away from the hope of the Gospel, whereof, according to my small talent, I have been a Minister: and daily I call and cry unto the Lord in whom is all my trust. And without whom I can do nothing, that he which hath begun a good work in me, would vouchsafe to go forth with it until the day of Jesus Christ, being surely certified in my Confidence of this, that he will so do, forasmuch as he hath given me, that not only I should believe on him, but also suffer for his sake. The Lord strengthen me with his Holy Spirit, that I may be one of the number of those blessed, which induring to the end, shall be saved.

And whereas you say, that my suffering of persecution with Christ is a thing to you most comfortable, I make answer, that in all mine adversity and necessity nothing on your behalf is greater consolation unto me, than to hear of the Faith and Love of others, and how they have good remembrance of us always, even as the Apostle reporteth by the Thessalonians, saying, Now are we alive, if ye stand stedfast in the Lord. For my trust in the Lord is, that this my business shall happen to the furtherance of the Gospel, and that you will be none of those forgetful and hypocritical hearers, whereof some being but way-side hearers, the devil cometh and taketh away the word out of their hearts, lest they should believe and be saved, (but let Prayer be made without ceasing by the Congregation unto God for them) and (no doubt) God will to your Consolation gloriously deliver by one means or other his oppressed. Only tarry ye the Lords leisure; be strong, let your heart be of good comfort, and wait ye still for the Lord. He tarrieth not that will come, look for him therefore and faint not, and he will never fail you.

Yours, George Marth.

A Letter of James Bradshaw to George Marth. What good affliction worketh in the godly.

Race and Peace from God the Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ be with you always, Amen.

We had a Letter from you, which is a great comfort unto us, to see you take the Cross so thankfully. Trouble and affliction doth prove, try, instruct, confirm and strengthen the Faith, provoke and stir up Prayer, drive and force us to amendment of Life, to the fear of God, to meekness, to patience, to constancy to gentleness, to soberness, temperance, and to all manner of virtues, and are the occasion of exceeding much good, as well transitory as eternal, in this World as in the World to come. There is neither good nor bad, godly nor ungodly, but he hath one cross or other. And although some there be that can shift for a while, and make provision for themselves for a time, by craft and subtilty and dissimulation, or by some fallhood in fellowship (as they call it) yet they bring themselves at length into the highest danger, confusion and shame, both in this World, and in the World to come. And seeing that all the troubles and adversity in this World are a thousand times more light and easie, yea nothing in comparison of the eternal fire, which is prepared and already kindled for the unfaithful wicked enemies of God; all Faithful and Godly Persons ought to bear and suffer their transitory affliction and adversity the more patiently, willingly, and thankfully; considering and remembering all the dearly beloved friends of God, which were wonderfully vexed and plagued of their enemies, Abraham of the Caldees, Lot of the Sodomites, Isaac of Ishmael, Jacob of Esau, Moses of his People, David of Saul, and of his own Son. As for Job, he had not a drop of Blood in his Body. John Baptist, the holiest that ever was born of a Woman, was, without any Law, right or reason, beheaded in Prison, as though God had known nothing at all of him.

We have many thousands fellow Martyrs and companions of our misery and adversity, in respect of whose imprisonment, rackings, chains, fire, wild beasts, and other means wherewith they were tormented, all that we suffer is but a blast of wind. Therefore now, whosoever is ashamed of the cross of Christ, and aggrieved therewith, the same is ashamed to have Christ for his fellow and companion, and therefore shall the Lord Jesus Christ be ashamed of him again at the latter day.

Thus I leave for this time, beseeching you to let me have your advice, because I do not outwardly speak that with my Tongue that I do not think in my Heart. Pray for me, as I for you. I beseech the Holy Ghost have you in his keeping always, Amen.

By your friend,
James Bradshaw.

A Prayer of G. Marth, which he used daily to say.

O Lord Jesus Christ, which art the only Physician of wounded Consciences, we miserable sinners trusting in thy gracious goodness, do briefly open unto thee the evil tree of our hearts, with all the roots, boughs, leaves, and fruits, and with all the crooks, knots and knarres, all which thou knowest: for thou thoroughly perceivest as well the inward lusts, doubtings, and denying thy providence, as these gross outward Sins which we commit inwardly and deadly. Wherefore we beseech thee, according to the little measure of our infirmity, although we be far unable and unapt to pray, that thou wouldest mercifully circumscribe our stony Hearts, and for these old Hearts create new within us, and replenish us with a new Spirit, and water us, and moisten us with the juice of Heavenly Grace, and wells of Spiritual Waters, whereby the inward venom and noysome juice of the flesh may be dried up, and custom of the Old Man changed, and our Hearts, always bringing forth thorns and briars to be burned with fire, from henceforth may bear spiritual fruits in righteousness and holiness, unto Life everlasting, Amen.

Beloved, among other exercises, I do daily on my knees, use this Confession of Sins, willing and exhorting you to do the same, and daily to acknowledge unfaithfully to God your unbelief, unthankfulness, and disobedience against him. This shall ye do, if ye will diligently consider and look your selves first in the pure glass of Gods Commandments and there see your outward filthiness and uncleanness, and learn to vanquish the same, that is to wit, fall in hearty displeasure against Sin, and thereby be provoked to long after Christ, for we truly are Sinners; but he is just, and the justifier of all them that believe on him. We are poor, but he is rich in mercy toward all them that call upon him. If we hunger and thirst for righteousness, let us resort unto his Table, for he is a most liberal feeder. He will set before us his own holy Body, which is given to us to be our meat, and his precious Blood, which was shed for us, and for many for the remission of Sins, to be our drink. He biddeth, willeth, and calleth for guests, which hunger and thirst. Come (saith he) all ye that labor and are laden, and I will refresh you, cool and ease you, and you shall find rest unto your Souls.

The Life and Story of W. Flower, who for striking of a Priest, was apprehended, first having his hand cut off, and after Martyred for his constant standing to the Truth.

William Flower, otherwise named Branch, first W. Flower concerning his trade of Life, and bringing up, he was born at Snowhill in the County of Cambridge, where he went to School certain years, and then came to the Abbey of Ely, where, after he had remained a while, he was a professed Monk according to the Order and Rule of the same House wherein he remained, using and bearing the Habit of a Monk, and observing the Rules and Order of the same House, until he came to one and twenty years of Age, or thereabout: and before he came to that Age, and being a professed Monk, he was made a Priest also in the same House, and there did celebrate and sing Mass. W. Flower at a good space together. After that, by reason of a Visitation, and certain Injunctions given in the same time by the Authority of King Henry the eighth, he forsook the same House, and casting from him the said Monks Habit and Religion afore said, took upon him and used the Habit of a Secular Priest, and returned to Snowhill, where he was born; and there he did celebrate and sing Mass, and taught Children their Primar and Accidence about half a year together.

Then he went from thence to Ludgate in Suffolk, and then, for some time, he went to Stamland, where he married and lived as a secular Priest about a quarter of a year; and then, for some time, he went to Stamland, where he married and lived as a secular Priest, until the coming out of the Articles: And then he departed from thence, and went into Glocestershire, where at Lanham he had his abode in the Countrey a while, at length in Tewkesbury, according to Gods Holy Ordinance, he married a Wife, with whom he ever after lawfully and honestly continued: and after his Marriage, he tarried in Tewkesbury about two years together, and then from thence he went unto Bristol, where he tarried three quarters of a year, and practised Physick and Chirurgery, and from thence he removed to Northamptonshire, where under a Gentleman he taught Children their Primars, and to write and read, a good space. And so departing from thofe parts; he came to London, and there continuing for a certain space. After that, being directed by Gods Countenance, he returned to Southampton.

where he was born from thence to Brankley in Essex, then to Canall, where he taught Children a space; and so came to Lambeth in London, where he hired a House, and served his Wife, whose he and his Wife did afterwards live to, till his time: howbeit for the most part he was idle and slothful at home, except once or twice, in a Month, to visit and see his Wife, where he living a while upon Essex day abouts 10. or 12. Christen the Forenoon, the same day, came over the Water Men, cometh into St. Dunstons Church at Westminster, where he hearing and seeing a Priest call John Calvin his King and giving the sacrament of the Altar to the People, and thereby being greatly offended in his Conscience by the Prii that for the same his doing (for that he perceived him not to be a Catholick Minister, neither his Altar to be Catholick and lawfull according to Gods Word), he did rise and wound him upon the Head, and also upon his Arm and Hand with his Woodknife, the Prii upon the same time in his Hand a Chalice, with certain Consecrated Hosts therein, which were sprinkled with the Blood of the said Priest.

In the which so doing as indeed he did not well or Evangelically, so afterward, being examined before Bishop Boner, did no less confess his not well doing in the same, submitting therefore himself willingly to punishment, when it should come. Howbeit touching his Beier in the Sacrament, and the Popish Ministration, he neither would nor did submit himself.

Whereupon the foresaid W. Elizer, being first apprehended and laid in the Gatehouse at Wexminster (where he had given two Groats the five day a little before to the Prisoners, saying he would shortly after come to them) with as many from as he could bear: afterward was converted before Boner his Ordinary, April 19. Anno 1555. where the Bishop after he had sworn him upon a Booke according to his ordinary manner ministered Articles and Interrogatories to him. But before I speak of the Articles, first we have here to let forth what Communion passed betwixt him and Robert Smib being then also there Prisoner with him in Newgate; concerning his Pact done at Wexminster, the tenor and effect of which Communication here followeth.

Robert Smith.

Friend, for as much as I do understand that you do profess the Gospel, and also have so done along season, I am bold to come unto you, and in the way of Communion to demand and learn a truth at your own Mouth, of certain things by you committed, to the astonishing not only of me, but of divers other, that also profess the verity.

Flower. I praise God for his great goodness, in shewing me the light of his holy word; and I give you hearty thanks for your visitation, intending by Gods Grace to declare all the Truth that ye shall demand lawfull of me, in all things.

Smith. Then I desire you to shew me the Truth of Anno your deed, committed on John Chelam Priest in the 1555.
Church, as neer as you can, that I may hear from your own Mouth how it was.

File. I came from my House at Lambeth over the Water, and entering into S. Margaret's Church (so called) and there seeing the People falling down before a most shameful and detestable idol, being moved with extreme zeal for my God, whom I saw before my Face dishonoured, I drew forth my Hanger, and I strake the Priest which Ministered the same unto them; whereupon I was immediately apprehended, and this is most true, as the Act is manifest.

Smi. Did ye not know the person that ye strake, or were ye not zealous upon him for any evil will or hatred between you at any time.

Flo. No verily, I never to my knowledge saw the Person before that present, neither ought him or any man alive evil will, or malice; for if he had not had it, another should, if I had any time come where the like occasion had been ministred; if God had permitted me so to do it

Smith. Do ye think that thing to be well done, and after the Rule of the Gospel?

Fla. I do confess all Flesh to be subject to the Power of Almighty God, whom he maketh his Ministers to do his will and pleasure; as in example, Moses, Aaron, Phineas, Joshua, Eimry, Jehu, Judah, Mattathias, with many others, not only changing degrees, but also planting zeals to his honour; against all order and respect of Flesh and Blood. For, as saith S. Paul, His Works are plain finding out : by whose Spirit I have also given my self at this present unto such order, as I shall please the good will of God to appoint, in death, which before the Act committed I looked for.

Smith. Think you it convenient for me, or any other, to do the like by your example?

Fla. No verily, neither do I know if I were to do as gain, whether I could do it again, or no: for I was a very early at Pauls Church (fo called) upon Christs day in the morning, to have done it in my jealousie:
but when I came in place I was no more able to do it, than now to undo that is donee and yet now being compelled by the spirit, not only to comeover the Water, and to enter the Church, but being in mind fully content to dye for the Lord, gave over my Elefth willingly without all fear, I praise God. Wherefore I cannot learn you to do the like. First, because I know not what is in you. Secondly, because the rules of the Gospel commandeth us to suffer with patience all wrongs and injury; yet nevertheless, if he make you worthy, that hath made me zealous, ye shall not be letted, judged, nor condemned: for he that is in his People his unpkeable works in all Ages, which no man can comprehend. I humbly beseech you to judge the biall of the spirit, and condemn not Gods doings, for I cannot expref with my Mouth the great Mercies that God hath shewed on me in this thing, which I repent not.

Smith. Are ye not assured to have death ministred unto you for the same Act committed, and even with extremity?

Fla. I did betwixt the dead committed, adjudg my Body to dye for the same: whereupon I came and about me writing, mine Opinion of God and the Holy Scriptures that it if had pleased God to have given them leave to have killed my Body in the Church, they might in the said writing have seen my hope, which I praife God for I had up safe within my breast, notwithstanding any death that may be inflicted upon my Body in this World:
being ascertained of everlasting life through Iesus Christ our Lord, and being most heartily sorry for all mine offences committed in this Flesh, and trusting shortly through his mercy, to cease from the same.

Smith. It is no need to examine or commune with you of the hope that ye have any further: for I perceive (God be praised) ye are in good Estate, and therefore I beseech God for his mercies spread his Wings over you, that as for his love you have been zealous, even to the loss of this Life, so he may give you his Holy Spirit to conduct you out of this Death into a better Life, which I think will be shortly.

I do. I hunger for the love (dear friend, being full asserted that they can kill but the Body, which I am assured shall receive life again everlasting, and see no more death; entirely desiring you and all that fear the Lord, to pray with me to Almighty God, to perform the same in me shortly. And thus Robert Smith departed, leaving him in the Dungeon, and went again to his Ward. And this (gentle Reader) is the Truth, as near as the said Smith could report it.

And thus much concerning the talk between him and Robert Smith in Newgate, concerning his Fact in striking the Priest. Now to return again to the matter of his Examination, where we left: We shewed before how this William Flower, after his striking the Priest, first was laid in the Gatehouse; then, being Examined before Boners, had Articles ministered against him the Copy whereof here followeth, Articles objected and ministered by Boner, against William Branch, alias Flower, late of Lambeth in the County of Surry.

Articles objected against W. Flower by B. Boner.

To the latter days certain said depart from the Faith forbidding marriage and eating of meats. 2 Tim. 4.

A great Heretic.

First, that thou being of a lawful Age and discretion at the least of seventeen years Old wast professed Monk in the late Abbey of Ely, wherein after thy profession thou remainedst until the Age of 21. years, using all the mean time the Habit and Religion of the same House, and wast reputed and taken notoriously for such a person.

Item, that after the premises, thou wast ordered and made Priest, according to the laudable custom of the Catholick Church, and afterward thou didst execute and minister as a Priest, and wast commonly reputed, named, and taken for a Priest.

Item, that after the premises thou forgetting God, thy Conscience, honesty, and the laudable order of the Catholick Church, didst contrary to thy Profession and Vow, take, as unto thy Wife, one Woman, commonly called Alice Pulson, in the Parish Church of Tewkesbury in the Diocese of Gloucester, with whom thou haddest mutual cohabitation, and carnal copulation, as Man and Wife, and begat of her two Children.

Item, that thou being a Religious Man and a Priest, didst contrary to the order of the Ecclesiastical Laws, take upon thee to practise in divers places within the Diocese of London, Physick, and Chirurgery, when thou wast not admitted, expert, nor learned.

Item, that upon Easter day last past, that is to wit, the fourteenth day of this present Month of April, within the Parish Church of S. Margarets at Westminster, within the County of Middlesex and Diocese of London, thou didst maliciously, outrageously, and violently pull out thy Weapon, that is to wit, thy Woodknife or Hanger. And whereas the Priest and Minister there, called Sir John Chelton, was executing his Cure and Charge, especially in doing his service, and ministering the Sacrament of the Altar to Communicants, then didst thou wickedly and abominably smite with thy said Weapon the said Priest, first upon the head very fore, and afterwards upon his hands or other parts of his Body, drawing Blood abundantly upon him; the said Priest then holding the said Sacrament in his hand, and giving no occasion why thou shouldst so hurt him; the people being grievously offended therewith, and the said Church polluted thereby, so that the Inhabitants were compelled to repair to another Church to Communicate, and to receive the said Sacrament.

Item, that by reason of the premises, thou wast and art by the Ecclesiastical Laws of the Church, amongst other penalties, Excommunicate and accursed, ipso facto, and not to be companied withal, neither in the Church, nor otherwise, but in special Cases.

Item, that thou, concerning the verity of Christs Natural Body and Blood in the Sacrament of the Altar, hast been by the space of these years, 20. 19. 18. 17. 16. 15. 14. 13. 12. 11. 10. 9. 8. 7. 6. 5. 4. 3. 2. and 1. or any one of them, and yet art at this present of this opinion; that is to say, that in the said Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration, there is not really, truly, and in very deed contained (under the forms of Bread) the very true and Natural Body of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Item, that thou for the hatred, and disdain that thou hadst and didst bear against the said Sacrament, and the verity thereof, and against the said Priest ministering the same (as before) didst smite, wound, and hurt him in manner and form as before is declared.

Item, that thou, over and besides the pains due unto thee for the doing of the cruel fact, art also by the order of the Ecclesiastical Laws of the Church, and the laudable Custom and Ordinance of the same, to be reputed, taken, and adjudged (as thou art indeed) a very Heretic, and to be punished by and with the pains due for Heresie, by reason of the said Heresie & Damnable Opinion.

Item, that all the premises be true, manifest, and notorious and famous, and that upon the same, and every part thereof, there was and is within the said Parish of S. Margarets and other places thereabout, a publick voice and fame.

The Answer of William Flower made to the Articles aforesaid.

To the first Article he answereth and confesseth the same to be true in every part thereof, except that he faith and confesseth that he never consented and agreed in his heart to be a Monk.

To the second Article he answereth and confesseth the same to be true in every part thereof. Howbeit he faith, that he never did, nor yet doth effect the said order of Priesthood, according to the said order of the Catholick Church, because he was offended therewith in his Conscience.

To the third Article he answereth and confesseth, that he intending to live in godly Matrimony, and not forgetting God, did marry with the said Alice Pulson named in this Article, wherein he believed that he did well, and according to Gods Laws. Further, confessing and believing, that all the time when he was professed Monk, and made Priest; he did thereby utterly forget God, but when he did so marry the said Alice Pulson, he did continuing with her did beget three Children, he did remember God, as he faith, and believeth that he did then lawfully.

To the fourth Article he answereth, and believeth the same to be true in every part thereof.

To the fifth Article he answereth and confesseth, that his Conscience being greatly offended with the said Sir John Chelton Priest, for ministering of the Sacrament of the Altar to the people at the place and time specified in this Article, he did so smite and strike the same Priest with his Hanger or Woodknife, as well upon his head, as upon other parts and places of his Body, which he remembereth not, whereby the Blood ran out, and was shed in the said Church, as he believeth, having, as he faith, none other cause or matter so to do, but only that his Conscience was offended and grieved, in that the same Priest did so give and minister the said Sacrament to the People, which People he believeth was greatly abashed and offended with his said fact and doing, and were enforced and compelled to go out of the Church, and to repair to another to receive the said Sacrament. And further, being then demanded and Examined, whether he did then mind and intended to have killed the said Priest, or not he said he would not answer thereunto. And being further examined, whether he did well or evil in striking the said Priest; he would make no answer thereunto, as he said.

To the sixth he answereth and faith, that whether he be so Excommunicate or accursed, as is contained in this Article, he referreth himself herein to the Ecclesiastical Laws.

To the seventh he answereth and faith, that by the space of six and twenty years now past, he hath always been, and yet is of this opinion touching the said Sacrament of the Altar, as followeth; undelict, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration, there is not really, truly, and in very deed contained under the form of Bread, the very true and Natural Body of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

To the eighth he answereth, and believeth the same to be true in every part thereof.

To the ninth he answereth, and herein he referreth himself to the said Laws, Customs, and Ordinance specified in this Article; that is to say, the Canonical Laws.

Flower saith he never consented to the Articles.

Flower made no answer to his will.

Flower confesseth his Matrimony to be honest & lawful. W. Flower wrote de facto to God being in the state of Matrimony, than before.

The order of Priests striking the Priest at the Altar.

Note that the said W. Flower afterwards in his next answer corrected and reformed this Answer.

Flower will not answer whether he intended to kill the Priest.

To

To the last he answereth and believeth, that those things before by him confessed be true, and those which he hath denied, be untrue; and that the said common Voice and Fame hath and doth only labour and go upon those things by him before confessed.

By me W. Flower, alias Branch.

recount.

After this Examination done, the Bishop began after the best sort of his fine Divinity to instruct him, and to exhort him to return again to the Unity of his Mother the Catholick Church, with such reasons as he is commonly wont to use to others, promising many fair things if he would do so, besides the remitting of that was past.

To this William Flower answering again, thanked him for his offer: And where it was in his power to kill or not to kill his Body, he stood therewith contented, let him do therein what he thought; yet over his Soul he had no such power, which being once separated from the Body, is in the hands of no man, but only of God either to save or spill. As concerning his opinion of the Sacrament, he said he would never go from that he had spoken, do he with him what he would.

Then the Bishop assigned him again to appear in the same place at afternoon, betwixt 3. and 4. In the mean time to advise himself of his former Answers, where he would stand to the same his opinions or no: which if he so did, he would further proceed against him, &c.

At Afternoon the said William Flower, appeared again before the said Bishop the hour and place appointed. To whom the Bishop sitting in his Consistory, spake these words: Branch, ye were this forenoon here before me, and made Answer to certain Articles; and thereupon I respited you till now, to the intent you should consider and weigh with your self your state, and to remember while you have time, both your abominable Act, and also that evil opinion which ye have conceived touching the verity of Christs true Natural Body in the Sacrament of the Altar.

To whom the said Branch answered again, and said as followeth: That which I have said, I will stand to; and therefore I require that the Law may proceed against me. Whereupon the Bishop commanded his Notary (Harward by name) to read to him again his Articles, as before. Which being read, the said William Flower persisting in his Godly Sentence, answered to all parts of the Articles, as in the forenoon before, save only that he requested the Bishop concerning the fifth Article, he might alter something his Answer therein, after this tenor and manner of words, to wit, and moreover confessed and faith, that whereas he strake the Priest on Easter day last past, in S. Margarets Church in Westminister, he hath since that time, and yet doth mislike himself in that doing, and doth now judge and believe that the same his Act was evil and naughty. Howbeit he faith and believeth that for the matter and cause wherefore he so frook the said Priest (which was for ministring of the Sacrament of the Altar, which he taketh and judgeth abominable) he neither did nor doth mislike himself at all therein.

Moreover, he desired of the said Bishop Licence to be granted him, to alter and take out somewhat of the ninth Article, and in place thereof, these words to be placed, to wit, Herein he referreth himself to the Laws, Customs and Ordinance specified in this Article, &c. At which request, Boner granted to the altering of both the Articles according as he desired, and so put in the Acts.

After this, the Bishop turning again to his old manner of exhorting, went about with words (and words only) to persuade him to submit himself to the Catholick Church, and to the Faith thereof. All which his persuasions notwithstanding, William still remained in the constancy of his Sentence, saying, that he would not be removed from that he had spoken, to dye therefore. Whereupon the Bishop assigned him the next day (being the twentieth day of April) to appear in the same day and place, between the hours of 8. and 9. before noon, there and then to hear the Sentence pronounced, in case he would not relent, &c.

The last appearance of William Flower before Bishop Boner.

Anno 1555.

In the which day, hour, and place, the said William Flower as he was appointed, was brought by the Keeper, belonging to the Warden of the Fleet, before Boner, who after his wonted manner of perswasion going about to reduce him to his Catholick Church and the Unity thereof, that is from Christ to Antichrist, sometimes with fair promises alluring, sometime with menaces and terrors, fearing him, &c. To this William answering, said on this wise: Do what ye will, I am at a point: for the Heavens shall as soon fall, as I will forsake mine opinion &c. Whereupon the Bishop after he had commanded these words to be registred, called for the depositions of certain witnesses, produced for the better information of this matter, the names of which witnesses were these: William Tennyngs, John Bray, Robert Graunt, Richard Dod, William Pampion, Robert Smalwood, the Parish Priest of S. Margarets at Westminister. The sum and effect of whose depositions here ensue.

The Depositions or Attestations produced upon the Answers of William Flower.

Robert Graunt of Westminister, Examined upon the said Answers of William Flower, faith and depose; that he did hear and see the said Flower acknowledge and recognize the said Answers, and subscribe to the same with his own hand, and also was present in the Church of S. Margarets in Westminister, when the said William Flower did finite and wound the Priest, when (as he faith) he was ministring the Sacrament; and how this examine among other preased towards him to take him, and was hurt thereby upon his Chin, and after he was taken, this examine help to conduct him to the Gatehouse at Westminister.

Richard Dod of Westminister, examined upon the said Answers, faith and depose; that he did hear and see the said Flower acknowledge and recognize the said Answers, and subscribe to the same with his own hands; and also did see and was present, when the said Flower upon Easter day last past drew his Wood-knife, and strake the Priest upon the head, hand, and arm: who being wounded therewith, and having a Chalice with consecrated Hosts there in his hand, sprinkled with the said Priests Blood, was holpen and refused by this examine, and the said Flower carried to the Gatehouse at Westminister, and his Wood-knife taken away by this examine.

William Pampion, one of the Churchwardens of the said Parish Church of S. Margarets in Westminister, examined upon the said Answers of the said Flower, faith and depose, that the same Answers be true, and in his sight were subscribed with the hand of the said Flower. And that upon Easter day last past, about eleven of the Clock in the forenoon, in the Parish Church of S. Margarets in Westminister, among a great number of the People ready to be housled, the Priests back being turned toward the said Flower, he the said Flower suddenly drew forth his Wood-knife, and strake Sir John Cheltham the Priest both upon his head, hand, and arm, whereby he was wounded, and bled abundantly, and the Chalice with consecrated Hosts being in his hand, were sprinkled with his Blood, and the People in great fear cried out lamentably, as though they should presently have been killed.

Robert Smalwood of Westminister, examined upon the said Answers, faith and depose, that he did hear and see the said Flower acknowledge and recognize the said Answers, and subscribe the same with his own hand, and touching the striking and wounding the Priest in S. Margarets Church in Westminister upon Easter day last, this examine faith, he was not there when the fact was done, but immediately after, he came to Church, and found Sir John hurt, and wounded in the head Anno 1555. head, hand, and arm, by the said Flower, and the People in great heaviness by reason thereof. Also the People did report (as this examine saith) That Flower did the deed, as the Priest had the Chalice in his hand, ministering the Sacrament to the People.

William Jennings of Westminster, being examined upon the Answers of the said William Flower, saith and deposeth by virtue of his Oath, that he did hear and see the said Flower acknowledge and recognize the said Answers, and subscribe to the same with his own hand in the Confessory place: and further deposeth, that he (upon Easter day last past) was present in the Church of S. Margarets in Westminster, where Flower strake the said Sir John Cheliam Priest, first upon the head and afterward upon his arm two fore strokes, whereby the said Priest is like to lose his hand. Also this Jurate deposeth, that the said Sir John Cheliam had a Chalice with certain Consecrated hosts therein (in his hand) which were sprinkled with the Blood of the said Priest, and after the said Flower was apprehended by this examine and others, they carried him immediately to the Gatehouse in Westminster.

John Bray one of the Churchwardens of the Parish Church of S. Margarets in Westminster, sworn and examined upon the said Answers, saith and deposeth, that he did hear and see the said Flower acknowledge and recognize the said Answers, and also subscribe unto the same. And further deposeth of Flowers striking the Priest, in effect, as the rest of the examines do, and that this said Jurate was present there at the deed doing.

After the depositions of these foresaid witnesses being taken, published, and denounced, the said Bishop speaking to William Flower, asked him if he knew any matter or cause why his Sentence should not be read, and he to be pronounced as an Heretic. Whereunto the Martyr of God answered again as followeth; I have nothing at all to say, for I have already said unto you all that I have to say; and that I have said I will not go from: and therefore do what you will, &c.

Which when he had spoken, the Bishop proceeded to the Sentence, Condemning and Excommunicating him for an Heretic, and after pronounced him also to be degraded, and so committed him to the Secular Power. Upon the 24. day of the foresaid Month of April, which was S. Marks Even, he was brought to the place of Martyrdom, which was in S. Margarets Churchyard at Westminster, where the fact was committed: and there coming to the Stake where he should be burned, first he maketh his Prayer to Almighty God, with a Confession of his Christian Faith, in manner as followeth.

A Prayer and Confession of William Flower.

O Eternal God, most mighty and Merciful Father, who hast sent down thy Son upon the Earth, to save me and all Mankind, who ascended up into Heaven again, and left his Blood upon the Earth behind him, for the redemption of our Sins, have mercy upon me, have mercy upon me, for thy dear Son our Saviour Jesus Christs sake in whom I confesse only to be all Salvation and Justification, and that there is none other mean, nor way, nor holiness, in which or by which any man can be saved in this World. This is my Faith, which I beseech all men here to bear witness of.

Then he said the Lords Prayer, and so made an end.

Then M. Cholmeley came to him, willing him to recant his Heretic, whereby he might do good to the People, or else he would be damned.

Flower answered as followeth: Sir, I beseech you for Gods sake to be contented: for that I have said, I have said, and I have been of this Faith from the beginning; and I trust to the living God he will give me his holy Spirit to continue to the end. Then he desired all the World to forgive him whom he had offended, as he forgave all the World.

This done, first his hand being held up against the Stake, was stricken off, his left hand being stayed behind him. At the which striking off his hand, certain that were present beholders of the matter, and purposely observing the same, credibly informed us, that he in no part of his Body did once shrink at the striking thereof, but once a little he stirred his shoulders.

And thus fire was set unto him, who burning therein, cried with a loud Voice; O the Son of God have mercy upon me, O the Son of God receive my Soul, three times, and so his Speech being taken from him, he spake no more, lifting up notwithstanding his stump with his other arm as long as he could.

And thus indured this constant witness and Faithful Servant of God the extremity of the fire, being therein cruelly handled, by reason that to his burning little wood was brought, so that for lack of fagots there not sufficient to burn him, they were fain to strike him down into the fire. Where he lying a long (which was doleful to behold) upon the ground, his neither part was consumed in the fire, whilst his upper part was clean without the fire, his Tongue in all mens sight still moving in his Mouth.

May 1555.

The third of May a Letter was sent to George Cole and Thomas Daniel, to make search for, and apprehend John Bernard and John Walsh, who used to repair to Sudbury, and carrying about with them the Bones of Pigot that was burned; do shew them to the People, persuading them to be constant in his Religion, and upon Examination to commit them to further ordering, according to the Laws.

This day Stephen Appes was committed to the Little Ease in the Tower, there to remain two or three days, until further Examination.

The 12. day M. Thomas Ros's Preacher, was by the Councils Letters delivered from the Tower to the Sheriff of Norfolk, be to conveyed and delivered to the Bishop of Norwich, and he either to reduce him to recant, or else proceed against him according to the Law.

The 16. a Letter was sent to the Lord Treasurer, signifying what the L. L. had done for Ros, and that order should be given, according to his Lordships request, for Letters to the Bishops: and for Appes, whom the Lieutenant of the Tower reporteth to be mad, his Lordship perceiving the same to be true, should commit him to Bebbles, there to remain until their further order.

The 26. a Letter was sent to the Lord Treasurer, to confer with the Bishop of London, and the Justices of the Peace of that County, wherein they are to be executed, that are already Condemned for Religion, and upon agreement of places, to give order for their Execution accordingly.

The 28. a Letter was sent to the Lord Treasurer, to cause speedy preparation to be made of such money as was appointed for such persons as should carry the joyful tydings of Queen Marius good delivery of Child, to divers Princes, so as they be not compelled to stay when time shall come. The Embassadors were, to the Emperor the Lord Admiral, to the French King the Lord Fitzwater, to the King of Romans Sir Henry Sidney, to the King of Portugal Richard Shelley, whose free passage through France M. Doctor Watton was willing to procure by Letters the 24. of June.

The 29. was a Letter directed to Sir Francis Inglesfield to make search for one John D. at London, and to apprehend him, and send him to the Council, and to make search for such Papers and Books as he thinketh may touch the same D. or one Bengier.

The Burning and Martyrdom of John Cardmaker and John Warne Upholster which suffered both together in Smithfield, Anno. 1555.

Upon the 30. day of May suffered together in Smithfield John Cardmaker, otherwise called Taylor, John Cardmaker, and John Warne Upholster, of the Church of Wals, and John Warne Upholster, of the Parish of S. John in Walbrook. Of which it remaineth now particularly to enquire, beginning first with M. Cardmaker, who first was an obsequant Prier before the dissolution of the Abbeyes: then after was a married Minister, and in King Edwards time time appointed to be a Reader in Pauls, where the Papists were so much agreed with him for his Doctrines sake, that in his reading they cut and mangled his Gown with their Knives. This Cardmaker being apprehended in the beginning of Queen Mariæ Reign, with M. Barlow Bishop of Bath, was brought to London, and laid in Prison in the Fleet, King Edwards Laws yet being in force. But after the Parliament was ended, in which the Pope was again admitted as supreme Head of the Church, and the Bishops had also gotten Power and Authority, Ex officio, to exercise their Tyranny, these two were brought before Wincheſter Chancellor, and others appointed by Commission (as before is mentioned) to examine the Faith of such as were then Prisoners, and as unto others before, so now unto them the Chancellor offered the Queens mercy, if they would agree, and be conformable, &c.

To this they both made such an Answer, as the Chancellor with his fellow Commissioners allowed them for Catholics. Whether they of weakness so answered, or he of subtilty would so understand their Answer, that he might have some forged Example of a shrinking Brother to lay in the dish of the rest, which were to be examined, it may easily be perceived by this, that to all them which followed in Examination, he objected the example of Barlow and Cardmaker, commending their soberness, discretion, and learning. But whatsoever their Answer was, yet notwithstanding Barlow was led again to the Fleet, from whence he afterward being delivered, did by exile constantly bear witness to the Truth of Christs Gospel. Cardmaker was conveyed to the Counter in Breadstreet, the Bishop of London procuring it to be published, that he should shortly be delivered, after that he had subscribed to Transubstantiation and certain other Articles. To the same Prison where Cardmaker was, Lawrence Sanders was brought (after the Sentence of Excommunication and Condemnation was pronounced against him) where these two Prisoners had such Christian Conference, that whatsoever the Breath of the Bishop blustered, and the tickle ears of the People too lightly believed, in the end they both showed themselves constant Confessors and worthy Martyrs of Christs of Lawrence Sanders it is already written. After whose departure Cardmaker remained there Prisoner, to be baited of the Papists, which would needs seem to have a certain hope that Cardmaker was become theirs. Continual and great Conference divers of them had with him, with reasonings, persuadings, threatnings, and all to none effect. To the end that their doings might appear, he required them to put their reasons in writing, and promised by writing to answer them.

Doctor Martin, who bare also a part in those pageants, took upon him to be the chief doer by writing, whose long unflattering Letters and simple reasons for Transubstantiation, and such papistical trash, this Cardmaker answered largely, learnedly, and substantially, confuting the same, opening the fallshood of his Arguments, and delivering the Sentences of the Fathers (which Martin abused for his purpose) to their true understanding; which his Answers I would had come to our hands. Thus constantly abode this Man of God all the enemies doings, as he did also the death which he suffered in Smithfield in London: whereof ye shall hear more anon. But first we will survey the matter and manner of his Articles objected against him by B. Boner, with his Answers annex to the same, as consequently hereunder followeth.

Articles objected by Boner against John Taylor, alias Cardmaker, with his Answers unto the same.

First, I Edmund Bishop of London, object against thee Sir John Taylor, alias Cardmaker, that thou wast and art of the City and Diocets of London, and so of the Jurisdiction of me Edmund Bishop of London.

Item, that thou in times past didst profess the rule of S. Francis, and didst by Vow promise to keep poverty, chastity, and obedience, according to the rule of S. Francis.

Item, that thou in times past didst receive all the orders of the Church then used: to wit, sam majores quam Anno minores.

Item, that thou after thy said entry into Religion and profession and orders aforesaid, didst take to Wife a Widow, and with her hadst carnal Copulation, and didst get of her a Woman Child, breaking thereby thy Vow and Order, and also the Ordinance of the Church.

Item, that thou hast believed and taught, and so dost believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar under the visible signs there, that is to say, under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is really and truly the true and very Natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

Item, that the Belief of the Catholick Church is, that in having the Body and Blood of Christ really and truly contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, is to have (by the Omnipotent Power of Almighty God) the Body and Blood of Christ there invisibly and really present under the said Sacrament, and not to make thereby a new God, or a new Christ, or a new Body of Christ.

Item, that it may stand well together, and so is the Faith of the Catholick Church; that the Body of Christ is visibly and truly ascended into Heaven, and there is in the visible form of his Humanity; and yet the same Body in substance is invisibly and truly contained in the said Sacrament of the Altar.

Item, that Christ at his last Supper taking Bread into his hands, blessing it, breaking it giving it to his Apostles, and saying; Take, eat, this is my Body; did institute a Sacrament there, * willing that his Body really and truly should be contained in the said Sacrament, its substance of Bread and Wine there remaining, but only the accidents thereof.

Answers of Cardmaker to the Articles aforesaid.

To the first Article he answereth, and confesseth the same to be true in every part thereof.

To the second Article he answereth and confesseth, that he, being under Age, did profess the said Order and Religion, and afterward by the Authority of King Henry the eighth, he was dispensed with for the same Religion.

To the third he answereth, and confesseth the same to be true in every part thereof.

To the fourth he answereth and confesseth, the first part thereof to be true; and to the second part of the same Article he answereth and saith, that in marriage he brake no vow, because he was set at liberty to marry, both by the Laws of this Realm, and also by the Laws and Ordinances of the Church of the same.

To the fifth he answereth and confesseth, that he hath believed and taught, as it is contained in this Article, but he doth not now so believe nor teach.

To the sixth he answereth, that he doth not believe the same to be true in any part thereof.

To the seventh he answereth, that he doth not believe the same to be true in any part thereof.

To the eighth he answereth and doth believe, videlicet, that it is true; that is to say, that Christ taking Bread at his last Supper into his hands, blessing it, breaking it giving it to his Disciples, and saying; Take, eat, This is my Body, did institute a Sacrament there. And to the other part of his Article, videlicet (willing that his Body really and truly should be contained in the said Sacrament, no substance of Bread and Wine there remaining, but only the accidents thereof) he answereth that he doth not believe the same to be true.

By me John Cardmaker.

Master Cardmaker calling to mind afterwards the ready cavillings of the Papists, and thinking himself not to have fully and according to his true meaning answered the latter part of the last eighth Article, did the next day after the fore said Answers exhibit unto the Bishop in a schedule this hereafter following.

Where in my Answer to your Articles I deny the Presence of Christ in the Sacrament, I mean not his Sacramental Presence, for that I confess; but my denial is of his Carnal Presence in the same. But yet further, because this word is oftentimes taken of the holy Fathers, not only for Bread and Wine, but also for the whole administration 1555. John Cardmaker was read.

The belief of the Popes Catholick Church.

To speak naturally of the Natural Body of Christ, these two cannot stand together as one true, unless we grant Christ to have two Bodies. * Thus Christ never willed, neither can the Scriptures bear it.

John Cardmaker answereth to the Articles.

The first part of this Article is true: the second is false.

A more full Answer to the second part of the eighth Article.

Anno 1555. Sacramental Preface in the Sacrament. Christ Pre- fered in the Sacrament denied stration and receiving of the same, according to Christs Institution: so I say, that Christ is present spiritually too, and in all them which worthily receive the Sacrament; so that my denial is fill of the Real, Carnal, and Corporal Prefence in the Sacrament, and not of the Sacramental, nor Spiritual Prefence.

This have I thought good to add to my former Answer, because no man should misunderstand it.

By me John Cardmaker.

Next to these Articles of Mr. Cardmaker, I thought best to infer the Articles and Answers likewise of John Warne his Martyr fellow, in manner as followeth.

Articles ministered against John Warne Upolster, of the Parish of S. John in Walbrook, with his Answers to the same.

Articles against John Warne Upolster in Walbrook.

I Tell, That thou John Warne, being of the age of 29 years, and of the Parish of S. John of Walbrook in London, hast believed, and dost believe firmly and stedfastly, that in the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, there is not the very true and natural Body of our Saviour Christ in Subtance, under the forms of Bread and Wine.

Against Transubstantiation.

Item, That thou hast believed, and dost believe, that after the words of Consecration spoken by the Priest, there is not (as the Church of England doth believe and teach) the Body of Christ; but that there doth only remain the Subtance of material Bread, as it is before the Consecration, or speaking of the words of Consecration; and that the said Bread is in no wise altered or changed.

Against the Sacrifice of the Mass.

Item, That thou hast said and dost believe, that if the Catholick Church do believe and teach, that there is in the Mass, now used in England, and in other places of Christendom, a Sacrifice wherein there is a Sacrament containing the Body and Blood of Christ really and truly; then that Belief and Faith of the Church is naughty, against Gods Truth and the Scripture.

Herefor laughing a Squall storm on the Head.

Item, That thou hast said, that where about a twelve month ago, and more, a great rough Water Spaniel of thine was shorn on the Head, and had a Crown like a Priest made in the same; thou didst laugh at it and like it, though thou didst it not thy self, nor knewest who did it.

Item, That thou neither this Lent last past, nor at any time since the Queens Majesties Reign, hast come into the Church, or heard Mass, or been confessed, or received the Sacrament of the Altar; and hast said, that thou art not sorry that thou hast so done, but thou art glad, because thou hast not therewith defiled thy Conscience, which otherwise thou shouldst have done.

Upon all which Articles John Warne being examined by the said Borer, in presence of divers Witnesses, the 23. of May, the year 1555. did confesse and believe the same, and subscribe hereunto his Name with his own Hand.

By me John Warne.

Another addition of Articles.

Also it was objected against the said John Warne, by the Bishop aforesaid, as followeth.

Item, That thou John Warne wast in time past here in the City of London, converted in the Guildhall for Heresie against the Sacrament of the Altar, according to the order of the Laws of this Realm of England in the time of King Henry the Eighth, and when Alderman Barnes was Sheriff, and the Thursday after that Anne Askew was burnt in Smithfield, and thereupon thou wast sent a Prisoner to Newgate, to whom Edmund Bishop of London did repair with his Chaplains, to instruct thee in the true Faith of Christ, touching the said Sacrament of the Altar, and to bring thee from thy Error, which was, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the Body of Christ, nor any Corporal Prefence of Christs Body and Blood, under the forms of Bread and Wine; but that in the said Sacrament there is only material Bread and Wine, without any Subtance of Christs Body and Blood at all: and because thou wouldst not leave and forsake thy said Heresie therein, but perst and abide obstinately and wilfully therein, thou wert according to the said Laws condemned to death and to be burnt; and thereupon labour being made for thee to the King and other in the Court, thou hadst a Pardon of King Henry the Eighth, and so thereby didst save thy life.

Nevertheless, in thy Heart, Conscience, and Mind, thou didst both then, and also afore believe no other wise than at this present thou dost believe; that is to say, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is neither the very true Body or Blood of Christ, nor no other Subtance but the Subtance of material Bread and Wine. and to receive the said material Bread and Wine, and to break it, and to distribute it among the People, only is the true receiving of Christs Body, and no otherwise: so that thy Faith and belief is, that in the said Sacrament there is no Subtance of Christs material Body and Blood: but all the thing that is there, is material Bread, and the receiving thereof as afore; and that the Subtance of the natural and true Body of Christ, born of the Virgin Mary, is only in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament of the Altar. In which thine Opinion thou hast ever hitherto since continued, and so dost continue at this present, thou confessing all this to be true, and in witness thereof subscribing thy Name therunto, as followeth.

By me John Warne.

John Warne being examined upon the aforesaid Articles by the Bishop before certain Witnesses, whose names were John Roswell, John Heywood, Robert Rowens, and the 23. of May, did answer to the same, confessing and granting the Articles and the Contents thereof to be true, according as they were objected in every part, subscribing also the same with his Hand. Such strength and fortitude Gods holy Spirit wrought in him, to stand stoutly and confidently to the defence of the sincere Doctrine of his Son.

Whereupon the Bishop exhorting him with many words to leave his Heresies (as he called them) and to return to the bosom of his Mother the holy Church, commanded him to appear again the next day, being the 24. of the same Month.

Who so doing (and answering as he did before) was willing to come thither again at Afternoon, and so he did where and at what time he was earnestly exhorted by the said Bishop to recant his Opinions. To whom he answered, that he would not depart from his received Profession, unless he were therunto thoroughly persuaded by the holy Scriptures.

Upon which Answer he was willing to come again the next day, being the 25. day of the same Month, at one of the Clock in the Afternoon. At which day and hour the Bishop examined him again upon all his former Articles before objected, to the which he most constantly did stick, with this further Answer therunto added: I am perswaded (quoth he) that I am in the right Opinion, and I see no cause to repent; for all Filthiness and Idolatry is in the Church of Rome.

The Bishop then seeing that notwithstanding all his fair Promises, and terrible Threatnings (whereof he used store) he could not any thing prevail; finished it is Examination with the definitive Sentence of Condemnation pronounced against the said John Warne, and so charged the Sheriffs of London with him, under whose Custody he remained in the Prison of Newgate, until the 30. day of the same Month of May.

Upon the which 30. of May, being the day appointed for their Execution, John Cardmaker, and John Warne, were brought by the Sheriffs to the place where they should suffer. Who being come to the Stake, first the Sheriffs called Cardmaker aside, and talked with him secretly, so long, that in the mean time Warne had made his Prayers, was chained to the Stake, and had Wood and Reed set about him, so that nothing wanted but the firing; but still abode Cardmaker talking with the Sheriffs.

The People which before had heard that Cardmaker would recant, and beholding this manner of doing, were afraid in a marvellous dump and sadness, thinking inwardly that Cardmaker should now recant at the burning of John Warne pronounced by King Henry 8.

John Warne and belief is, that in the said Sacrament there is no Subtance of Christs material Body and Blood: but all the thing that is there, is material Bread, and the receiving thereof as afore; and that the Subtance of the natural and true Body of Christ, born of the Virgin Mary, is only in Heaven, and not in the Sacrament of the Altar.

At length Cardmaker departed from the Sheriffs, and came towards the Stake, and (in his Garments as he was, kneeled down and made a long Prayer in silence to himself; yet the People confirmed themselves in their fantasie of Recanting, seeing him in his Garments, praying secretly, and no semblance of any burning.

His Prayers being ended, he rose up, put off his Clothes unto his Shirt, went with bold Courage to the

The People seeing this so suddenly done, contrary to their fearful expectation, as men delivered out of a great doubt, cried out for joy (with so great a shout as hath not lightly been heard a greater) saying, God be praised, the Lord strengthen thee Cardmaker, the Lord Jesus receive thy Spirit. The Confession of the Faith of John Warne Citizen of London, which he wrote the day before he was burned, the 30th day of May, Anno 1555.

I believe in God the Father Almighty, and Maker of Heaven and Earth.

The Confession of John Warne.

A Father, because he is the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the everlasting Word, whom before all worlds he hath begotten of himself, which Word was made Flesh, and therein also manifested to be his Son; in whom he hath adopted us to be his Children, the Inheritors of his Kingdom, and therefore he is our Father; An Almighty God, because he hath of nothing created all things visible and invisible, both in Heaven and in Earth, even all Creatures contained therein, and governeth them.

And in Jesus Christ his only Son our Lord.

The eternal Word, perfect God with his Father, of equal Power in all things, of the same Substance, of like Glory, by whom all things were made, and have life, and without whom nothing liveth: He was made also perfect Man, and so being very God, and very Man in one Person, is the only Saviour, Redeemer, and Ransomer of them which were lost in Adams our Forefather. He is the only mean of our deliverance, the hope of our health, the surety of our salvation.

Which was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary.

According to the Fathers most merciful promise, this eternal Son of God, forsaking the heavenly Glory, humbled himself to take Flesh of a Virgin, according to the Scriptures, uniting the Substance of the Godhead to the Substance of the Manhood, which he took of the Substance of that blessed Virgin Mary in one Person, to become therein the very Messiah, the anointed King and Priest, for ever appointed to pacifie the Fathers wrath, which was justly gone out against us all for our sin.

Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and descended into Hell.

He was Arraigned before Pontius Pilate the Ruler of Jewry, and so unjustly accused of many Crimes, that the Ruler judged him innocent, and sought means to deliver him; but contrary to known Justice, he did let go Barabbas which had deserved death, and delivered Christ to be crucified, who deserved no death: which doth declare unto us manifestly, that he suffered for our sins, and was buffeted for our offences, as the Prophets do witness, thereby to have it manifested to all men, that he is that Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world. Therefore suffering for our sins, he received and did bear our deserved condemnation, the pains of death, the taste of abjection, the very terror of Hell, yielding his Spirit to his Father, his Body to be buried in Earth.

The third day he rose again from death to life.

To make full and perfect the whole work of our Redemption and Justification, the same crucified Body which was laid in the Grave, was raised up again the third day from death, by the Power of his Father, and Glory of his Godhead: he became the first fruits of the Resurrection, and got the victory of death, that all by him might be raised up from death. Through whom all true penitent sinners may now boldly come unto the Father, and have remission of their sins.

He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty.

After that in his Death and Resurrection he had conquered Sin, Death, and the Devil, and had been conversant forty days in the Earth, being seen of the Apostles, and more than five hundred Brethren at once, in the same Body in which he wrought the work of our Salvation,

The triumphant victory over death.

Anno 1555. Bode how the wrought the work of our Salvation, be seated at the right hand with eternal Triumph, for the victory over Death; so, He leaving the Passage open, by which all we believe may and shall enter into his Kingdom, where as now at the right hand of his Fathers right hand, is at ease, in Power and Glory equal, in Majesty co-eternal.

From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead.

He shall appear again in great Glory to receive his Elect unto himself, and to put his Enemies under his feet, changing all living men in a moment, and raising up all that be dead, that all may be brought to his Judgment. In this shall he give each man according to his Deeds. They which have followed him in Regeneration, which have their sins washed away in his Blood, and are clothed with his Righteousness, shall receive the everlasting Kingdom, and reign with him forever; and they, which after the race of the corrupt Generation of Adam have followed Flesh and Blood, shall receive everlasting damnation with the Devil and his Angels.

I believe in the Holy Ghost.

I do believe that the Holy Ghost is God, the third Person in Trinity, in Unity of the Godhead equal with the Father and the Son, given through Christ to inhabit our Spirits, by which we are made to feel and understand the great power, virtue, and loving kindness of Christ our Lord. For he illuminateth, quickeneth, and certifieth our Spirit, that by him we are sealed up unto the day of Redemption, by whom we are regenerate and made new Creatures, so that by him and through him we do receive all the abundant goodness promised us in Jesus Christ.

The Holy Catholic Church.

The Church. This is an holy number of Adams Posterity, elected, gathered, washed, and purified by the Blood of the Lamb from the beginning of the world; and is dispersed through the same by the tyranny of Gog and Magog; that is to say, the Turk and his Tyranny, and Antichrist, otherwise named the Bishop of Rome, and his Angels, as this day also doth teach.

The Communion of Saints.

Which most holy Congregation (being as Paul teacheth, builded upon the Foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Christ being the Head-corner-stone) though it be by the tyranny of Satan and his Ministers persecuted, some by Imprisonment, some by Death, and some by other Afflictions and painful Torments; yet doth it remain in one perfect Unity, both in Faith and Fellowship: which Unity is knit in an unpeasable knot, as well of them which are departed from this mortal life, as of them which now be living, and hereafter shall be in the same, and so shall continue until they all do meet in the Kingdom, where the Head Jesus Christ, with all his holy Members (of which number through Christ I assuredly believe I am one) shall be fully complete, knit, and united together for evermore.

The forgiveness of sins.

Remission only through Christ. I do believe that my sins, and all their sins which do rightly believe the holy Scripture, are forgiven only through Jesus Christ, of whom only I do profess that I have my whole and full Salvation and Redemption, which S. Paul saith, cometh not through our works and deservings, but freely by Grace, lest any should boast himself. Through the Blood of the Cross all things in Heaven and Earth are reconciled, and set at Peace with the Father; without him no heavenly life given, nor sin forgiven.

The Resurrection of the Body.

Refused. I do believe, that by the same my Saviour Christ, I and all men shall rise again from death; for he, as S. Paul saith, is risen again from the dead, and is become the first fruits of them which sleep. For by a man came death, and by a man cometh the Resurrection from death. This man is Christ, through the power of whose Resurrection I believe that we all shall rise again in these our Bodies; the Elect clothed with Immortality to live with Christ for ever; the Reprobate also shall rise Immortal to live with the Devil and his Angels in death everlasting.

And the Life everlasting.

Through the same Jesus, and by none other, I am sure to have life everlasting. He only is the way and entrance into the Kingdom of Heaven. For so God loved the world, that he did give his only Son Jesus Christ, to the end that so many as do believe in him might have everlasting life. The which I am sure to possess so soon as I am dissolved, and departed out of this Tabernacle, and in the last day shall both Body and Soul possess the same for ever, to the which God grant all men to come.

I believe, that the Sacraments, that is to say, of Baptism and of the Lords Supper, are Seals of Gods most merciful Promises towards Mankind. In Baptism, as by the outward Creature of water I am washed from the filthiness which hangeth on my flesh; so do I assuredly believe, that I am by Christs Blood washed clean from my sins, through which I have sure confidence of my certain Salvation. In the partaking of the Lords Supper, as I receive the Substance of Bread and Wine (the Nature of which is to strengthen the Body) so do I by Faith receive the redemption wrought in Christs Body broken on the Cross, life by his death, resurrection by his resurrection, and in sum, all that ever Christ in his Body suffered for my Salvation, to the strengthening of my Faith in the same. And I believe, that God hath appointed the eating and drinking of the Creatures of Bread and Wine in his holy Supper according to his Word, to move and to stir up my mind to believe these Articles above written.

This is my faith; this do I believe; and I am content by Gods Grace to confirm and seal the truth of the same with my Blood.

By me John Warne.

A Letter of John Cardmaker to a certain Friend of his.

The Peace of God be with you.

You shall right well perceive that I am not gone back, as some men do report me, but as ready to give my life, as any of my Brethren that are gone before me, although by a Policy I have a little prolonged it, and that for the best, as already it appeareth unto me, and shall shortly appear unto all. That day that I recant any point of Doctrine, I shall suffer twenty kinds of death, the Lord being mine assistance, as I doubt not but he will. Commend me to my Friend, and tell him no less. This the Lord strengthen you, me, and all his Elect. My Riches and Poverty is as it was wont to be, and I have learned to rejoice in Poverty as well as Riches, for that I account now to be very Riches. Thus fare ye well in Christ. Salute all my Brethren in my Name. I have conferred with some of my Adversaries, learned men, and I find that they be but Sophists and Shadows.

A note concerning Mr. Cardmaker.

After Cardmaker being Condemned, and in Newgate, one Beard a Promoter came to him two or three days before he was burned, and said unto him, Sir, I am sent unto you by the Council, to know whether ye will recant or no?

Card. From which Council are ye come? I think ye are not come, nor yet sent from the Queens Council, but rather from the Commissioners, unto whom (as I suppose) ye belong. And whereas ye would know, whether I will recant or no, thus I pray you report of me to those whom ye said sent you. I know you are a Taylor by your Occupation, and have endeavoured your self to be a cunning Workman, and thereby to get your living: so I have been a Preacher these twenty years, and ever since that God by his great Mercy hath opened mine eyes to see his eternal Truth, I have by his Grace endeavoured my self to call upon him, to give me the true understanding of his holy Word, and I thank him for his great Mercy; I hope I have discharged my Conscience in the setting forth of the same, to that little Talent that I have received.

Beard. Yea Sir; but what say you to the blessed Sacrament of the Altar?

Card. I say, and mark it well, that Christ the night before

And furthermore, to conclude the matter briefly with him, he asked of him, Whether the Sacrament he spake of had a beginning or no? Whereunto when he had granted and affirmed the same to be, then Mr. Cardmaker again thus interred thereupon: If the Sacrament (said he) as you confess, have a beginning and an ending, then it cannot be God; for God had no beginning nor ending; and so willing him well to note the same, he departed from him.

The fifth day, Mr. Secretary Bourne, the Master of the Rolls, Sir Francis Englefield, Sir Richard Read, and Doctor Hughes, authorizing them, or two or three of them at the least, to proceed to further Examination of Benger, Cary, D. and Field, upon such Points as they shall gather out of their former Confessions, touching their lewd and vain practices of Calculating or Conjuring, presently sent unto them with the said Letters.

The seventh day there was another Letter to Sir John Tregonwell, willing him to join in Commission with the said Lord North, and others above named, about the Examination of the said Parties and others, for Conjuring and Witchcraft.

And the 29. of August, Cary and D. were set at liberty upon Bonds for their good Appearing until Christmas after.

The twelfth day a Letter was sent to the Lord Treasurer, to cause Writs to be made to the Sheriff of Suffex, for the burning and executing of Dirike a Brewer, at Leves, and other two, the one at Staining, the other at Chichester.

The 23th of June a Letter was sent to Boner, to examine a Report given to the Council of four Parishes within the Soken of Essex, that should still use the English Service, and to punish the Offenders, if any such be.

But before we come to the Story of them, first here is to be noted the Copy of the King and Queens Letter, directed from the Court the same day, and sent by a Post early in the morning to the Bishop, in tenor and form as followeth.

To the right reverend Father in God, our right trusty and wellbelov'd, the Bishop of London.

The King and Queens Letter to his Grace.

Right Reverend Father in God, right trusty and wellbelov'd, we greet you well. And where of late we addressed our Letters to the Justices of Peace within every of the Counties of this our Realm, whereby amongst other Instructions given them for the good order and quiet government of the Country round about them, they are willed to have a special regard unto such disordered persons as (forgetting their duties towards God and Us) do lean to any erroneous and heretical Opinions, refusing to shew themselves conformable to the Catholick Religion of Christs Church; & herein if they cannot by good admonitions and fair means reform them, they are willed to deliver them to the Ordinary, to be by him charitably travelled withal, and removed (if it may be) from their naughty Opinions, or else if they continue obstinate, to be ordered according to the Law, provided in that behalf: understanding now, to our no little marvel, that divers of the said disordered persons, being by the Justices of Peace for their contempt and obstinacy, brought to the Ordinaries to be used as aforesaid, are either refused to be received at their hands, or if they be received, are neither so travelled with, as Christian Charity requires, nor yet proceeded withal according to the order of Justice, but are suffered to continue in their Errors, to the dishonour of Almighty God, and dangerous example of others; like as we find this matter very strange, so we have thought convenient both to signify our knowledge, and therewith also to admonish you to have in this behalf such regard henceforth to the Office of a good Pastor and Bishop, as when any such Offenders shall be by the said Officers or Justices of Peace brought unto you, you to use your good wisdom and discretion in procuring to remove them from their Errors, if it may be, or else in proceeding against them (if they shall continue obstinate) according to the order of the Law; so as through your good furtherance, both Gods glory may be better advanced, and the Commonwealth more quietly governed. Given under our Signet, at our Honour of Hampton Court, the 24th of May, the first and second years of our Reigns.

This Letter thus coming from the Court to the Bishop, made him the more earnest and hasty to the condemnation, as well of others, as of these men, of whom now we have presently to intreat, of John Simson I mean, and John Ardeley. Which being both of one Country, and of one Town together, and of one Trade, that is, being both Husbandmen in the Town of Wigborow in Essex, and also almost both of one age, save that Simson was of the age of 34. the other of 30. were brought up both together by the under Sheriff of Essex, to Boner Bp. of London, upon the Accusation (as in that time it was called) of Heresie.

ley and John Simson, both men in the Town of Wigborow.

As touching the order and manner of their Examinations before the Bishop; as the Articles ministred against them, were much like, so their Answers again unto the same were not much discrepant in manner and form; as out of the Bishops own Registers here followeth exprefsed.

Articles objected against John Simson and John Ardeley of the Parish of Wigborow the Great in Essex, Husbandsmen, by Boner Bishop of London, at Fulham, May 22. Anno 1555.

1. First, that thou John Simson (or John Ardeley) Husbandman of the age of 34. years or thereabout, wast and art of the Parish of great Wigborow, within the Diocess of London, and thou hast not believed, nor dost believe, that there is here in Earth one Catholick and Universal whole Church, which doth hold and believe all the Faith and Religion of Christ, and all the necessary Articles and Sacraments of the same.

Item, That thou hast not believed, nor dost believe, that thou art necessarily bounden, under the pain of damnation of thy Soul, to give full faith and credence unto the said Catholick and Universal Church, and to the Religion of the same, in all necessary Points of the said Faith and Religion, without wavering or doubting in the said Faith or Religion, or in any part thereof.

3. Item, That thou hast not believed, nor dost believe that that Faith and Religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spain, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being the Members and Parts of the said Catholick and Universal Church, do believe and teach, is both agreeing with the said Catholick and Universal Church, and the Faith and Religion of Christ, and also is the very true Faith and Religion which all Christian People ought to believe, observe, follow, and keep: but contrariwise thou hast believed, and dost believe, that that Faith and Religion, which the said Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforesaid have heretofore believed, and do now believe, is false, erroneous, and naughty, and in no wise ought to be believed, observed, kept, and followed of any Christian man.

4. Item, That albeit it be true, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is in Substance the very Body and Blood of Christ under the forms of Bread and Wine, and albeit that it be so believed, taught, and preached undoubtedly in the said Church of Rome, and all other the Churches aforesaid, yet thou hast not so believed; nor dost so believe; but contrariwise thou hast and dost believe firmly and steadfastly, that there is not in the said Sacrament of the Altar under the said forms of Bread and Wine, the very Substance of Christs Body and Blood, but that there is only the Substance of material and common Bread Anno 1555. and Wine, with the forms thereof; and that the faid material and common Bread and Wine, are only the Signs and Tokens of Christs Body and Blood, and by Faith to be received, only for a remembrance of Christs Paffion and Death, without any fuch Subftance of Christs Body and Blood at all.

5. Item, That thou haft believed and taught, and thou haft openly fpoken, and to thy power maintained and defended, and fo doft believe, think, maintain, and defend, that the very true receiving and eating of Christs Body and Blood, is only to take material and common Bread, and to break it, and to diftribute it amongft the People, remembering thereby the Paffion and Death of Chrift only.

6. Item, That thou haft likewise believed, taught and fpoken, that the Mafs now ufed in this Realm of England, and other the Churches aforefaid, is abominable and naught, and full of Idolatry, and is of the Ordinance of the Pope, and not of the Inftitution of Chrift, and hath no goodnefs in it, faving the Gloria in Excelsis, and the Epiftle and the Gofpel, and that therefore thou haft not, nor will not come to be prefent at the Mafs, nor receive the Sacrament of the Altar, or any other Sacrament of the Church, as they are now ufed in this Realm of England, and other the Churches aforefaid.

7. Item, That thou haft in times paff believed precisely, and officinately affirmed and faid, and fo doft now believe and think, that Auricular Confeflion is not needful to be made unto the Prieft, but it is a thing fuperfluous and vain, and ought only to be made to God, and to none other perfon: and likewise thou haft condemned as fuperfluous, vain, and unprofitable, all the Ceremonies of the Church and the Service of the fame, and haft faid, that no Service in the Church ought to be faid but in the Englifh tongue, and if it be otherwife faid, it is unlawful and naught.

The Answers of John Simfon, and alfo of John Ardeley, to the forefaid Articles.

TO the firft, they believe, that here in Earth there is one Catholick and Univerfal holy Church, which doth hold and believe as is contained in the firft Article, and that this Church is difperfed and fcattered abroad throughout the whole world.

To the fecond, they believe, that they be bound to give Faith and Credence unto it, as is contained in the fecond Article.

To the third, as concerning the Faith and Religion of the Church of Rome, of Italy, Spain, France, Ireland, Scotland, and other Churches in Europe, they fay, they have nothing to do with that Faith and Religion: But as concerning the Faith and Religion of England, that if the faid Church of England be ruled and governed by the Word of Life, then the Church of England hath the Faith and Religion of the Catholick Church, and not otherwife; and do fay alfo, that if the Church of England were ruled by the Word of Life, it would not go about to condemn them and others of this Herefie.

To the fourth they answer, that in the Sacrament, commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar, there is very Bread and very Wine, nor altered nor changed in Subftance in any wife, and that he that receiveth the faid Bread and Wine, doth fpiritually and by faith only receive the Body and Blood of Chrift, but not the very Natural Body and Blood of Chrift in Subftance under the forms of Bread and Wine.

To the fifth they fay, they have answered, answering to the faid fourth Article, and yet nevertheless they fay, that they have believed, and do believe, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not the very Subftance of Christs Body and Blood, but only the Subftance of the Natural Bread and Wine.

To the fixth they fay, that they believe, that the Mafs is of the Pope, and not of Chrift; and therefore it is not good, nor having in it any goodnefs, faving the Gloria in Excelsis, the Epiftle and Gofpel, the Creed, and the Pater noster; and for this caufe they fay they have not, nor will not come and hear Mafs.

To the feventh John Ardeley answereth and faith, that he believeth the Contents of the fame to be true; but

John Simfon doth answer, that he is not as yet fully refolved with himfelf, what answer to make therunto; and further, that as touching the common and daily Service faid and ufed in the Church, he faith, that he never faid, that Service in the Church ought to be faid but in the Englifh Tongue, nor yet he never faid, that it is be otherwife faid and ufed than in Englifh, it is unlawful and naught.

John Ardeley and John Simfon.

Thus thefe Articles being to them objected, and their Answers made unto the fame, as before, the Bifhop, according to the old trade of his Confiftory Court, relited them to the Afternoon, bidding them to make their Appearance the faid day and place, between the hours of two and three. At what time the faid Bifhop repeating again the faid Articles unto them, and beginning with John Ardeley did urge and follicitate him, according to his manner of words, to recant.

To whom John Ardeley again, constantly ftanding to his profefled Religion, gave answer in words as followeth; My Lord (quoth he) neither you, nor any other of your Religion, is of the Catholick Church; for you be of a falfe Faith: and I doubt not but you fhall be deceived at length, bear as good a face as ye can. Ye will fhed the innocent Blood, and you have killed many, and yet go about to kill more, &c.

And added further, faying, If every pair of my head were a man, I would fuffer death in the Opinion and Faith that I am now in. Thefe with many other words he fpake. Then the Bifhop yet demanded if he would relinquifh his erroneous Opinions (as he called them) and be reduced again to the Unity of the Church. He answered as followeth, No, God forefield that I fhould fo do, for then I fhould lofe my Soul.

After this, the faid Bifhop asking John Ardeley (after his formal manner) if he knew any caufe why he fhould not have Sentence condemnatory againft him; fo read the Condemnation, as he alfo did againft John Simfon, ftanding likewise in the fame caufe and confcancy with John Ardeley: which was done the 25th day of May, and fo were they both committed to the Secular Power, that is, to the hands of the Sheriffs, to be conveyed to the place where they fhould be executed. But before I come to their Execution, here is not to be paffed a thing not unworthy the looking upon, which hapned in the clofing up the Examination of thefe two innocent Martyrs of God, which is this.

At the time of the Examination of this Simfon and John Ardeley aforefaid, there was afsembled fuch a great multitude of People, that becaufe the Confiftory was not able to hold them, they were fain to ftand in the Church, near about the faid Confiftory, waiting to fee the Prifoners when they fhould depart. It hapned in the mean time, that the Bifhop being fet in a heat with the flour and bold Answers of the faid two Prifoners (efpecially of John Simfon) burft out in his loud and angry voice, and faid, Have him away, have him away.

Now the People in the Church hearing thefe words, and thinking (becaufe the day was far fpent) that the Prifoners had their Judgment, they being defirous to fee the Prifoners had to Newgate, fevered themfelves, one running one way, another another way, which caufed fuch a noife in the Church, that they in the Confiftory were all amazed, and marvelled what it fhould mean: wherefore the Bifhop alfo being fomewhat afraid of this fudden ftir, asked what there was to do. The ftanders by answering faid, That there was like to be fome tumult; for they were together by the caufe.

When the Bifhop heard this, by and by his heart was in his heels, and leaving his Seat, he with the reft of the Court betook them to their legs, haftning with all fpeed poffible to recover the door that went into the Bifhops Houfe: but the reft being fomewhat lighter of foot than my Lord, did fooner recover the door, and thronging haftily to get in, kept the Bifhop ftill out, and cried, Save my Lord, fave my Lord, but meaning yet firft to fave themfelves if any danger fhould come, whereby they gave the ftanders by good matter to laugh at; refembling in fome part a fpectacle not much unlike to the old fa-gers at Oxford, worse feared than hurt, when as the Church there was noised to be set on fire, whereof ye may read before. But of this matter enough.

Now John Simson and John Ardeley being delivered (as is aforesaid) to the Sheriffs, were shortly after sent down from London to Essex, where both they in one day (which was about the Tenth day of June) were put to death, albeit in several places; for John Simson suffered at Rochford, John Ardeley the same day was had to Rasley, where he finished his Martyrdom most quietly in the quarrel of Christs Gospel.

A Note of John Ardeley.

For the better consideration of the rigorous cruelty of these Catholick days, this is furthermore not unworthy of all men to be noted and known to all Posterity, concerning the Examinations of this Ardeley and his Company, how that they being brought before the Commissioners, were by them greatly charged of stubbornness and vain-glory. Unto whom they answered in defence of their own simplicity, that they were content willingly to yield to the Queen all their Goods and Lands, so that they might be suffered to live under her, in keeping their Conscience free from all Idolatry and Papistical Religion. Yet this would not be granted, although they had offered all to their heart blood; so greedy and so thirsty be these Persecutors of Christian blood. The Lord give them Repentance if it be his will, and keep from them the just reward of such cruel dealing. Amen.

The ridiculous handling and proceeding of Bishop Boner and his Rates against John Tooley, first suspected and condemned after his death, and then digged out of his Grave, and given to the Secular Power, and so burned for an Heretic.

The Story of John Tooley.

About the same time of the burning of these two aforesaid, in the beginning of the said Month of June, fell out a solemn Process, and much ado was made about the Popes Spirituality against John Tooley in a case of Heretic. The story is this: There was about the time that the Spaniards began first to keep a flir in England, one John Tooley a Citizen and Poulter in London, who conspired with certain other of his Society, to rob a Spaniard at S. James's; and although the deed were heinous and wicked of it self, yet was it aggravated and made greater than it was by other, being committed against such a person, and against such a Country, which both the Queen and her whole Court did highly favour. The robbery being known, and brought into Judgment, this Tooley was found guilty, and judged to be hanged, whereas notwithstanding in this Realm there are many more Thiefs committed than Thieves executed.

The aforesaid Tooley being led to the Gallows (which stood fast by Charing Cross) a little before he died, standing upon the Cart, read a certain Prayer in a printed Book, and two other Prayers written in two several Papers: who then having the Halter about his Neck, desired the People there present to pray for him, and to bear him witness that he died a true Christian man, and that he trusted to be saved only by the Merits of Christs Passion, and shedding of his precious Blood, and not by any Masses, or Trentals, Images, or Saints, which were (as he said) meer Idolatry and Superstition, and devised by the Bishop of Rome: and as the same Tooley, and two other his Fellows which were there hanged with him, did steal and rob for Covetousness, so the Bishop of Rome did sell his Masses and Trentals, with such other Paltry, for Covetousness, and there being in a great anger (as appeared) against the Bishop of Rome, spake with a loud voice these words following; From the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and all his detestable Enormities; From false Doctrine and Herefie, and from the Contempt of thy Word and Commandment, Good Lord deliver us.

Ex Registo.

And then adding further to the same, he spake unto the People; All you that be true Christian men, say with me, Amen. And immediately thereupon 200. persons and more, to the judgment and estimation of those that were there present, answered and said, Amen, three times together at the least.

After this it hapned, that when Tooley had read the Bill the first time, it fell from him, and a certain young man (who was thought to be a Prentice) stooped down and took up the Bill, and climbed up by the Cart, and delivered it unto Tooley again, which he again did read to the People. That done, he delivered unto one of the Marshals Officers the Book aforesaid, and willed him to deliver it unto one Haukes, saying, that it was his Book. Furthermore, he delivered one of the Prayers, written in a Paper, to one Robert Bromley Sergeant, which desired to have it of him. Upon the top of which Bill was written a line, containing these words, Beware of Antichrist; and subscribed underneath, Perme Thomam Harold, Prisoner in the Marshalsea, enemy to Antichrist. For the Bill aforesaid, Robert Bromley was brought afterward coram nobis, and was fain to ask Pardon of the Bishop, and to detest all the words of Tooley, and glad so to escape.

Thus while Tooley had made his Prayers, as is aforesaid, to be delivered from the Popes Tyranny, by the same Prayer he fell into great tyranny. For so soon as the brute of this fact came unto the ears of the Priests and Mitred Prelates, they were not a little mad thereat, thinking it not tolerable that so great a Reproach should be done against the holy Father. Calling therefore for a Council together, as though it had been a matter of great importance. Tooley's talk at his death was debated among themselves.

At last (after much Pro and Contra) they all consented to those mens judgment, which thought it meet that the violating of the Popes Holiness should be revenged with fire and fagot. And I do easily believe that Cardinal Poole was no small doer in this Sentence: for as Winchester and Boner did always thirst after the blood of the living, so Poole's lightning was for the most part kindled against the dead; and he reserved this Charge only to himself, I know not for what purpose, except peradventure being loth to be so cruel as the other, he thought nevertheless by this means to discharge his duty towards the Pope. By the same Cardinals like lightning and fiery flit the Bones of Martin Bucer and Paulus Phagius, which had lien almost two years in their Graves, were taken up and burned at Cambridge, as Tooley's Carcass was here at London. And besides this, because he would them foke token of his diligence in both Univerities, he caused Peter Martyrs Wife, a Woman of worthy memory, to be digged out of the Church-yard, and to be buried on the Dunghil. Of these two prodigious acts ye shall hear more hereafter. But now to our purpose of Tooley, which having ended his Prayer, was hanged and put into his Grave, out of which he was digged again, by the commandment of the Bishops, and because he was so bold to derogate the Authority of the Bishop of Rome, at the time of his death, it pleased them to judge and condemn him as an Heretic, upon the commandment of the Councils Letter, as here appeareth.

A Letter sent unto Boner Bishop of London, from the Council.

After our very hearty Commendations to your Lordship, understanding that if late amongst others that have suffered about London for their Offences, one lewd person that was condemned for Felony, died very obstinately, professing at the time of his death sundry heretical and erroneous Opinions; like as we think it not convenient that such a matter should be overpassed without some example to the world, so we thought good to pray your Lordship to cause further inquiry to be made thereof, and thereupon to proceed to the making out of such Process as by the Ecclesiastical Laws is provided in that behalf. And so we bid your Lordship heartily well to fare. From Hampton Court, the 28. of April, 1555.

The Councils Letter to B. Boner concerning Tooley.

Anno 1555. After a Citation was ſet up upon Pauls Church door under the Biſhop of Londons great Seal; the tenor whereof here enſueth.

The Writ or Mandate of Boner Biſhop of London, ſet up at Charing Croſs, on Pauls Church door, and at S. Martins in the field, for the citing and further inquiring out of the caſe of John Tooley.

Edmond by the ſufficiency of God, Biſhop of London, to all and ſingular Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and others, Clerks and learned Men, being within our Dioceſs of London, and ſpecially unto Richard Clunie, our ſworn Summor, greeting, ſalutation, and benediſtion. Forſomuch as it is come to our hearing by common fame, and the declaration of ſundry credible perſons, that one John Tooley late Citizen and Poulter of London, the Son of perdition and iniquity, coming to the profundity of malice in the ſelf ſame time in the which he ſhould go to hanging, according to the Laws of the Realm, for the great treaſon lately by him committed, at which time chiefly he ſhould have cared for the wealth of his Soul, and to have died in the Unity of the Catholick Church, did utter divers and ſundry damnable, blaſphemous and heretick opinions and errors, utterly contrary and repugnant to the Verity of the Catholick Faith and Unity of the ſame, and did exhort, ſtir up, and encourage the People, there ſtanding in great multitude, to hold and defend the ſame errors and opinions: And moreover, certain of the People there ſtanding, as it did appear, affected with Errors and Hereties, as fauours and defenders of the ſaid John, did confirm and give expreſſe conſent to the foreſaid words, propoſitions, and affirmations; which thing we do utter with ſorrow and bitterness of heart.

We therefore the foreſaid Edmond and Biſhop aboveſaid, not being able, nor daring to paſs over in ſilence, nor winck at the foreſaid heinous Act, left by our negligence and ſlackneſs the Blood of them might be required at our hands at the moſt terrible day of Judgment, deſiring to be certified and informed whether the premiſſes declared unto us, be of the truth, and left that any ſcattered ſheep, lurking amongſt the ſimple flock of our Lord, do infect them with peſtiliferous Heretie: to you therefore we ſtraightly charge and command that you cite, or cauſe to be cited all and ſingular, having or knowing the truth of the premiſſes, by ſetting up this Citation upon the Church door of S. Martins in the field, being within our Dioceſs of London, and alſo upon the Cathedral Church door of Saint Pauls in London, leaving there the Copy hereof, or by other means or ways, the beſt you can; that this Citation and Monition may come to their knowledge.

All which and ſingular by the tenor of theſe preſents we cite and admoniſh that they appear, and every one of them do appear before us, our Vicar general, or Commiſſary, whatſoever he be in that behalf, in our Cathedral Church of S. Paul in London, in the Conſiſtory place, upon Thursday the ſecond day of May now next enſuing, betwixt the hours of nine and ten of the Clock in the forenoon the ſame day, to bear witneſs of the truth in this behalf, and to depoſe and declare faithfully the truth that they know or have heard of the premiſſes, and moreover to do and receive what Law and reaſon doth require.

Further we commit unto you as before, and ſtraightly enjoying you do command, that ye will generally cite the Wife of the ſaid Tooley that is dead, and his Children, and his kindred by Father and Mother, his friends and his familiars in eſpecial, and all other and every of them, if there be any perſons that deſire to defend and purge the remembrance of the perſon in the premiſſes, that ye admoniſh them after the manner and form aforeſaid, whom welikewiſe by the tenor of theſe preſents, do in ſuch ſort cite and moniſh that they appear all, and that every one of them do appear (under pain to be compelled to keep ſilence for ever hereafter in this behalf) before us, or our Vicar general in ſpiritual matters, or ſuch our Commiſſary, at the day, hour, and place aforeſaid, to defend the good name and remembrance of him that is dead, and to ſay, ſallege and propoſe in due form of Law a cauſe reaſonable, if they have or can tell of any, why the ſaid John Tooley, that is dead, ought not to be determined, and declared for ſuch an Heretick and excommunicate perſon, and his remembrance condemned, in the deteſting and condemning of ſo heinous a detestable crime, and his Body or carcaſs to lack Church burial, as a rotten of member cut off from the Church, and the ſame to be committed to the arm and Power ſecular, and they compelled hereafter for ever to hold their peace.

And furthermore, to do, receive, and to ſuffer as Law and reaſon will, and as the quality of ſuch matter, and the nature of themſelves do conſtrain and require; and moreover, that you cite and moniſh, after the manner aforeſaid, all and every of the receivers, fauours, and creditors of the ſaid John Tooley that is dead, eſpecially if any of them do incline and give conſent to thoſe wicked and deteſtable affirmations, propoſitions, and rehearſals aforeſaid, that on this ſide the ſaid Thursday they return and ſubmit themſelves unto us, and to the lap of the Mother holy Church: which thing if they do, we truſting upon the mercy of Almighty God; do promiſe that we will receive them being penitent for ſuch their Errors and faults; with thanks, benignity, mercy, and favour, to the comfort and health of their own Souls, and in that behalf ſave their honeſties to the uttermoſt of our power; otherwiſe if they will not provide thus to come of their own accord, but to abide the ordinary proceſs of the Law; let thoſe Men know that we will puniſh more ſeverely this offence, according to the uttermoſt of the Law, and as far as the Law will bear it; and what ye ſhall do in the premiſſes, let him among you, which ſhall execute this our preſent Mandate, certifie vs, or our Vicar general in ſpiritual matters, either by his own perſon, or by his Letters Patents, together with theſe authentically ſealed.

Dated at London under our Seal, the laſt day of April. 1555. and of our tranſlation the 11.

When the time of this Citation was expired, and this Tooley being cited did not appear: next in order of Law came the Suſpenſion (whereas one ſuſpenſion had been enough for him) and after that cometh the Excommunication, that is, that no man ſhould eat and drink with him; or if any met him by the way, he ſhould not bid him good morrow, and beſides that, he ſhould be excluded from the Communion of the Church. Theſe things being prepared in ſuch manner, as in ſuch caſes fall wiſely they uſe to do, at length one ſtood out for the nonce, that made Answer to certain Articles, rehearſed in Judgment openly and that in the behalf of the dead Man. But when the poor dead Man could neither ſpeak for himſelf, nor did (as they ſaid) ſufficiently Answer them by the other, to avoid the name of an Heretick: firſt witneſſes were provided againſt him, whole names were Henry Clark Eſquire, Thomas Way Keeper of the Maſtreaſſy, Philip Andrew Undermaſthal, William Holingworth Filhonger, William Gellard, William Walten Chandler, Richard Longman Merchantaylor, Philip Britten, John Barton Brewer, Thomas Smith Sergeant. Then he was for an Heretick condemned, and ſo committed to the ſecular power, namely to the Sheriffs of London, which with the like diligence went about to execute their charge. Therefore receiving the man being ſuſpended Excommunicated, Condemned as an Heretick, and beſides that, dead, they laid him on the fire to be burned namely, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, for a continual remembrance thereof: This was done the fourth day of June.

Here followeth the Hiſtory and Martyrdom of the worthy ſervant of Chriſt, Thomas Haukes Gentleman, with his Examinations and Answers had with B. Boner, recorded and penned with his own hand.

Immediately after the Story of Doctor Taylor, mention before was made of fix men brought and conveyed before Biſhop Boner upon the eighth day of February 1571. The names of which Martyrs were Stephen Knight, W. Pigot, Thomas Tomkins, J. Laurence, W. Hunter. In which number was alſo Tho. Haukes, and condemned likewiſe with them the 9. day of the foreſaid Month.

The carcaſs of Tooley cut off from Church burial.

The Wife, Children and kindred of John Tooley cited.

Month of February. But because his Execution did not so shortly follow with theirs, but was prolonged to this present 10. day of the Month of June, wherewith we are now in hand, it followeth therefore now consequently to enter tractation thereof; first, beginning briefly with his Godly Conversation and Institution of Life, then shewing of his Troubles, also of his Examinations and Conflicts with the Bishop and other Adversaries, according as the order of his story doth require.

The life and conversion of Tho. Haukes.

As touching therefore his education and order of Life, first he was of the Country of Essex, born of an honest stock, in calling and profession a Courtier, brought up daintily from his Childhood, and like a Gentleman. Besides that, he was of such comeliness and stature, so well endued with excellent qualities, that he might seem on every side a Man (as it were) made for the purpose. But his gentle behaviour toward other, and especially his fervent study and singular love unto true Religion and Godliness did surmount all the rest. Wherein as God did singularly adorn him: even so he, being such a valiant Martyr of God, may seem to nobilitate the whole company of other holy Martyrs, and as a bright star to make the Church of God and his Truth, of themselves bright and clear, more gloriously to shine by his Example.

The Victory of Martyrs, is the Triumph of Christ.

For if the Conquests of Martyrs are the Triumphs of Christ (as S. Ambrose doth notably and truly write) undoubtedly Christ in few Men hath either Conquered more notably, or Triumphed more gloriously, than in this young Man: he stood so wisely in his cause, so godly in his Life, and so constantly in his death.

Tho. Haukes first in Service with the Earl of Oxford.

But to the Declaration of the matter: first this Haukes following the guile of the Court, as he grew in years, entered service with the Lord of Oxford, where he remained a good space, being there right well esteemed and loved of all the household, so long as Edward the sixth lived. But he dying, all things began to go backward, Religion to decay, godliness not only to wax cold, but also to be in danger every where, and chiefly in the Houses of good Men. Haukes milking the state of things, and especially in such Mens Houses, rather than he would change the Profession of true godliness, which he had tasted, thought to change the place, and so, forsaking the Noblemans House, departed thence to his own home, where more freely he might give himself to God and use his own Conscience.

Haukes compelled to leave the Earl of Oxford's House.

But what place in this World shall a Man find so secret for himself, whither the old wicked Serpent cannot creep, whereby he may have some matter to overthrow the quietness of the godly? Now in the mean season (as it happened) Haukes keeping his House at home, had born unto him a young Son, whose Baptism was deferred to the third week, for that he would not suffer him to be Baptized after the papistical manner, which thing the Adversaries not able to suffer, laying hands upon him, did bring him to the Earl of Oxford, there to be reasoned with, as not found in Religion, in that he seemed to contemn the Sacraments of the Church.

Haukes brought before the Earl.

The Earl either intending not to trouble himself in such matters, or else seeing himself not able, to weigh with him in such cases of Religion, sent him up to London with a Messenger, and Letters, and so, willing to clear his own hands, put him in the hands of Boner B. of London; the contents of which his Letter sent to Boner, be these.

Haukes sent up by the Earl to Bishop Boner.

A Letter of the Earl of Oxford to Boner.

The Earl's letter to Boner.

Most reverend Father in God, be it known unto you, that I have sent you one Thomas Haukes, dwelling in the County of Essex, who hath a Child that hath remained unchristened more than three weeks; who, being upon the same examined, hath denied to have it Baptized, as it is now used in the Church, whereupon I have sent him to your good Lordship, to use as ye think best, by your good discretion.

When the Bishop had perused this Letter, and afterward read it to M. Haukes, he hearing the same, thought with himself that he should not be very well used, seeing he was put to his discretion. Then wrote the Bishop a Letter again to him that sent the Prisoner, with many great thanks for his diligence in setting forth the Queens proceedings. Then began the Bishop to enter Communication with M. Haukes, first asking, what should move him to leave his Child unchristened so long? To whom M. Haukes answered thus again as followeth.

Haukes. Because we be bound to do nothing contrary to the Word of God.

Boner. Why? Baptism is commanded by the Word of God.

Haukes. His Institution therein I do not deny.

Boner. What deny ye then?

Haukes. I deny all things invented and devised by Man.

Boner. What things be those that he devised by Man, that ye be so offended withal?

Haukes. Your, Oyl, Cream, Salt, Spittle, Candle, and conjuring of Water, &c.

Boner. Will ye deny that which all the whole World, and your Father hath been contented withal?

Haukes. What my Father and all the whole World hath done, I have nothing to do withal: but what God hath commanded me to do, to that stand I.

Boner. The Catholick Church hath taught it.

Haukes. What is the Catholick Church?

Boner. It is the Faithful Congregation, wheresoever it be dispersed thoroughout the whole World.

Haukes. Who is the Head thereof?

Boner. Christ is the Head thereof.

Haukes. Are we taught in Christ, or in the Church now?

Boner. Have ye not read in the eighth of John where he said, he would send his Comforter which should teach you all things?

Haukes. I grant you it is so, that he would send his comforter, but to what end? Forsooth to this end, that he should lead you into all Truth and Verity, and that is not to teach a new Doctrine.

Boner. Ah Sir, ye are a right Scripture Man. For ye will have nothing but the Scripture. There is a great number of your Country-Men of your Opinion. Do you know one Knight and Pygot?

Haukes. Knight I know, but Pygot I do not know.

Boner. I thought ye were acquainted with him: it seemeth so by your Judgment. What Preachers do ye know in Essex?

Haukes. I know none.

Boner. Do ye not know one Baget there?

Haukes. Yes forsooth, I know him.

Boner. What manner of Man is he?

Haukes. An honest Man so far as I know.

Boner. Do you know him if ye see him?

Haukes. Yea that I do. Then said he to one of his Servants, Go call me Baget hither. And then he said to me; Ye seem to be a very proud Man and a stubborn. He that brought me up stood all this while by.

Haukes. What should move your Lordship so to say?

Boner. Because I see in a Man that came with you much humility and lowliness.

Haukes. It seemeth your Lordship speaketh that to me, because I make no courtesy to you: and with that came Baget. Then the Bishop said to Baget: How say ye, Sir, know ye this man?

Baget. Yea forsooth my Lord; with that Baget and I shook hands. Then said the Bishop to Baget, Sir, this Man hath a Child which hath lyen three weeks unchristened (as I have Letters to shew) who refuseth to have it Baptized, as it is now used in the Church: how say you thereto?

Baget. Forsooth, my Lord, I say nothing thereto (with low courtesy to the hard ground.)

Boner. Say you nothing thereto? I will make you tell me whether it be laudable, and to be frequented and used in the Church or not.

Baget. I beseech your Lordship to pardon me, he is old enough, let him answer for himself.

Boner. Ah Sir knave, are ye at that point with me? Go call me the Porter, said he, to one of his Men, Thou shalt sit in the Stocks, and have nothing but Bread and Water. I perceive I have kept you too well. Have I made thus much of you, and have I you at it is point? Then came the Bishops Man, and said, The Porter is gone to London: Then said the Bishop to Baget, Come Come with me, and he went away with him, and commanded me away, and bade one of his Gentlemen to talk with me (who was one of his own teaching) who desired amongst other things to know of me, with whom I was acquainted in Eſſex, and what men they were that were my teachers.

Haukes. When I ſee your Commiſſion, I will make you Answer. And then immediately came the Biſhop again: but ere he came, his man and I had much talk. Then the Biſhop ſate down under a Vine in his Orchard, and called Baget to him, whom he carried away, and brought again, and called me alſo, and ſaid to Baget: How ſay ye now Sir unto Baptiſm? Say whether it be to be frequented and uſed in the Church as it is now, or no?

Baget. Forſooth my Lord, I ſay it is good.

Boner. I beſee your heart, could ye not have ſaid ſo before? Ye have wounded this mans Conſcience. Then the Biſhop turned to me, and ſaid; How ſay ye now, Sir, this man is turned and converted.

Haukes. I build my Faith neither upon this man, neither upon you, but only upon Chriſt Jeſus, who (as Paul ſaith) is the founder and author of all mens Faith.

Boner. I perceive ye are a ſubborn fellow. I muſt be glad to work another away with you, to win you.

Haukes. Whatſoever ye do, I am ready to ſuffer it: for I am in your hands to abide it.

Boner. Well ye are ſo. Come on your waies, ye ſhall go in, and I will uſe you Chriſtianlike: You ſhall have meat and drink, ſuch as I have in my Houſe: but in any wiſe talk not.

Haukes. I purpoſe to talk nothing but the Word of God and Truth.

Boner. I will have no Hereſie talked on in my Houſe.

Haukes. Why is the Truth become Hereſie? God hath commanded that we ſhould have none other talk in our Houſes, in our Beds, at our Meats, and by the way, but all Truth.

Boner. If ye will have my favor; be ruled by my Council.

Haukes. Then I truſt you will grant me my requeſt.

Boner. What is that?

Haukes. That your Doctours and Servants give me none occaſion: for if they do, I will ſurely utter my Conſcience. Then commanded he his Men to take in Baget, and let not Haukes and him talk together. And ſo thus we departed, and went to dinner, and I dined at the Stewards Table.

After Dinner, his Chaplains and his Men began to talk with me. But amongst all other, there was one Darbiſhire principal of Broadgates in Oxford, and the Biſhops kinsman, who ſaid to me, that I was too curious: for ye will have (ſaid he) nothing but your little pretty Gods Book.

Haukes. And is it not ſufficient for my Salvation? Ye, (ſaid he) it is ſufficient for our Salvation, but not for our Inſtruction.

Haukes. God ſend me the Salvation, and you the Inſtruction. And as we thus reaſoned, came the Biſhop, who ſaid unto me; I gave you a Commandment that you ſhould not talk.

Haukes. And I deſired you that your Doctours and Servants ſhould give me none occaſion, Then went we into his Orchard again, he and his Doctours and I.

Boner. Would not ye be contented to have, that your Child ſhould be Chriſtened after the Book that was ſet out by King Edward?

Haukes. Yes, with a good will: it is a thing that I deſire.

Boner. I thought ſo: ye would have the ſame thing. The principal is in the Name of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, and in the neceſſity it may ſerve.

Haukes. Chriſt did uſe it without any ſuch neceſſity: and yet we lack the chiefeſt point.

Boner. What is that?

Haukes. Go, teach all Nations, Baptizing them, &c.

Boner. Thou ſpeakſt that becauſe I am no Preacher.

Haukes. I ſpeak the Text: I do not mean you. Then ſpoke all the Doctours and his Men that were with him: he ſpoke it of you my Lord (with a great noiſe that they made.)

Boner. Will ye be content to tarry here, and your Child ſhall be Baptized, and you ſhall not know of it, ſo that you will agree to it?

Haukes. If I would ſo have done, I needed not to have come to you: For I had the ſame Council given before.

Boner. You ſeem to be a luſty young Man; you will not give your head for the waſhing; you will ſtand in the defence of it for the honor of your Country. Do ye think that the Queen and I cannot command it to be done in ſpite of your teeth?

Haukes. What the Queen and you can do, I will not ſtand in it: but ye get my conſent never the ſooner.

Boner. Well, you are a ſubborn young Man: I perceive I muſt work another way with you.

Haukes. Ye are in the hands of God, and ſo am I.

Boner. Whatſoever you think, I will not have you ſpeak ſuch words unto me. And ſo we departed untill even long time: and ere evenſong was begun, my Lord called for me to come to him into the Chappel, and ſaid; Haukes, thou art a proper young Man, and God hath done his part unto thee: I would be glad to do thee good. Thou knoweſt that I am thy Paſtor, and one that ſhould answer for thee. If I would not teach thee well, I ſhould answer for thy Soul.

Haukes. That I have ſaid, I will ſtand to it, God willing: there is no way to remove it.

Boner. Nay, nay Haukes, thou ſhalt not be ſo willful. Remember Chriſt bade two go into his Vineyard, the one ſaid he would, and went not; the other ſaid he would not, and went.

Haukes. The laſt went.

Boner. Do thou likewiſe, and I will talk friendly with thee; how ſayeſt thou? It is in the firſt of S. John; I am the Bread of Life, and the Bread that I will give is my Fleſh, which I will give for the Life of the World. And whoſoever eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood, hath everlaſting Life. My Fleſh is very meat indeed, and my Blood is drink indeed. And he that eateth my Fleſh and drinketh my Blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. Do ye believe this?

Haukes. Ye, I muſt needs believe the Scriptures.

Boner. Why? then I truſt that you be found in the Bleſſed Sacrament.

Haukes. I beſeech your Lordſhip to feel my Conſcience no farther then in that, that I was accuſed in unto you.

Boner. Well, well, let us go unto Evenſong.

Haukes. With that I turned my Back to go out of the Chappel.

Boner. Why, will you not tarry Evenſong?

Haukes. No forſooth.

Boner. And why?

Haukes. For I will not.

Boner. And why will ye not?

Haukes. For becauſe I have no edifying thereby, for I underſtand no Latin.

Boner. Why? you may pray by your ſelf. What Books have ye?

Haukes. I have the New Teſtament, the Books of Solomon, and the Pſalter.

Boner. Why I pray you tarry here, and pray you on your Pſalter.

Haukes. I will not pray in this place, nor in any ſuch. Then ſaid one of his Chaplains; let him go my Lord, and he ſhall be no partaker with us in our Prayers.

Haukes. I think my ſelf beſt at eaſe when I am fartheſt from you. And ſo the Biſhop went to Evenſong, and I came down, and walked between the Hall and the Chappel in the Court, and tarried there till Evenſong was done, and within an hour after that Evenſong was done, the Biſhop ſent for me into his Chamber where he lay himſelf, and when I came, there was he, and three of his Chaplains.

Boner. Ye know of the talk that was between you and me, as concerning the Sacrament. You would not have your Conſcience ſought any farther, than in that ye were accuſed of.

Haukes. I thought you would not be both mine accuſer and judge.

Boner. Well, ye shall Answer me to the Sacrament of the Altar, the Sacrament of Baptism, the Sacrament of Penitence, and the Sacrament of Matrimony.

Haukes. There is none of these, but I dare speak my Confidence in them.

The matter and cause of the Sacrament.

Boner. The Sacrament of the Altar ye seem to be sound in.

Haukes. In the Sacrament of the Altar? why Sir, I do not know it.

Boner. Well, we will make you to know it, and believe in it too, ere ever we have done with you.

Haukes. No, that shall ye never do.

Boner. Yes, a Fagot will make you do it.

Haukes. No, no, a point for your fagot. What God thinketh meet to be done, that shall ye do and more ye shall not do.

The matter
and cause of the Sacrament.

Boner. Do ye not believe that there remaineth in the Blessed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of Consecration be spoken, no more Bread, but the very Body and Blood of Christ? and at that word he put off his Cap.

Haukes. I do believe as Christ hath taught me.

Boner. Why? did not Christ say, Take, eat, this is my Body?

Haukes. Christ said so: but therefore it followeth not, that the Sacrament of the Altar is so as you teach, neither did Christ ever teach it so to be.

Boner. Why? the Catholick Church taught it so, and they were of Christs Church.

Haukes. How prove you it? The Apostles never taught it so. Read the Acts, the second, and the twenty. Neither Peter nor Paul ever taught it, neither instituted it so.

Boner. Ah Sir, ye will have no more than the Scripture teacheth, but even as Christ hath left it bare.

Haukes. He that teacheth me any otherwise, I will not believe him.

Boner. Why? then ye must eat a Lamb, if ye will have but Christs Institution only.

Haukes. Nay, that is not so, before that Christ did institute the Sacrament, that Ceremony ceased, and then began the Sacrament.

Boner. Alas, you know not how it began, neither of the Institution thereof.

Haukes. Then I would be glad to learn.

Boner. Marry, we will teach you: but you are so stubborn that ye will not learn.

Haukes. Except ye learn me by the word of God, I will never credit you, nor believe you: and thus we concluded. Then the Bishop and his Chaplains laughed and said: Jesu, Jesu, what a stubbornness and arrogancie is this? and this was in his Chamber where he lay. Then said the Bishop to me, go ye down and drink, for it is fasting day: it is Midsummer Even, but I think ye love neither fasting nor Praying.

Haukes. I will never deny fasting neither Praying, so that it be done as it ought to be done, and without Hypocritie or vain glory.

Boner. I like you the better for that: and so we left for that night.

The next day the Bishop went to London: for Tech-nam was made Dean that day, and I tarried still at Fulham.

Then did the Bishops men desire me to come to Mats, but I did utterly refuse it, answering them as I did their Master.

That Night the Bishop came home to Fulham again.

Talk between Harpsfield and Thomas Haukes.

Then upon the Munday Morning, very early, the Bishop did call for me. There was with him Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, to whom the Bishop said; this is the Man which I told you of, who would not have his Child Christened, nor will have any Ceremonies.

Harpsfield. Christ used Ceremonies. Did he not take Clay from the ground, and took spittle, and made the Blind Man to see?

Haukes. I wot well that, but Christ did never use it in Baptism, If ye will needs have it, put it to the use that Christ put it unto.

Harpsfield. Admit your Child die unchristened: what a heavy case stand you in?

Haukes. I admit that if it do, what then?

Harpsfield. Marry then are ye damned, and your Child both.

Haukes. Judge you no farther than ye may by the Scriptures.

Harpsfield. Do ye not know that your Child is born in Original Sin?

Haukes. Yes that I do.

Harpsfield. How is Original Sin washed away?

Haukes. By true Faith and Belief of Christ Jesus.

Harpsfield. How can your Child bring an Infant be- lieve?

Haukes. The Deliverance of it from Sin standeth in the Faith of his Parents.

Harpsfield. How prove you that?

Haukes. By S. Paul, in the seventh and the first to the Corinthians, saying, The unbelieving man is sanctified by the believing Woman, and the unbelieving Woman is sanctified by the believing Man, or else were your Children unclean.

Harpsfield. I will prove that they whom thou putteth thy trust in, will be against thee in this Opinion.

Haukes. Who be those?

Harpsfield. Your great learned Men in Oxford.

Haukes. If they do it by the Scriptures, I will believe them.

Boner. Recant, recant do ye not know that Christ said, Except ye be Baptized ye cannot be saved?

Haukes. Doth Christianity stand in outward Ceremo- nies, or no?

Boner. Partly it doth: what say you to that?

Haukes. I say as S. Peter saith, Not the washing of Water purgeth the filthiness of the Flesh, but a good Conscience consenting unto God.

Harpsfield. Beware of Pride, Brother, beware of Pride.

Haukes. It is written, Pride serveth not for Men, nor yet for the Sons of Men.

Boner. Let us make an end here. How say you to the Mats, Sirra?

Haukes. I say it is detestable, abominable, and profit- able for nothing.

Boner. What nothing profitable in it? what say you to the Epistle and Gospel?

Haukes. It is good, if it be used as Christ left it to be used.

Boner. Well, I am glad that ye somewhat recant: re- cant all, recant all.

Haukes. I have recanted nothing, nor will do.

Boner. How say you to Confessors.

Haukes. I say it is abominable and detestable, yea, and a Blasphemy against God and his Son Christ, to call up- on any, to trust to any, or to pray to any, save only to Christ Jesus.

Boner. To trust to any, we bid you not: but to call upon them, and to pray to them, we bid you. Do ye not know when ye come into the Court ye cannot speak with the King and the Queen, unless ye call to some of the privy Chamber that are next to the King and Queen?

Haukes. They that list receive your Doctrine. You teach me that I should not believe nor trust in any, but to call on them: and S. Paul saith, How should I call upon him, on whom I believe not?

Boner. Will you have no Body to pray for you when you be dead?

Haukes. No surely, except you can prove it by the Scriptures. Then the Bishop pointed unto Harpsfield, and said unto me; Is it not well done to desire this man to pray for me?

Haukes. Yes surely, so long as we live, Prayer of the Righteous Man is available: but this Mans Prayers, you being dead, profiteth nothing at all.

Boner. Will ye grant the Prayer of the Righteous Man to prevail?

Haukes. I grant it doth for the living, but not for the dead.

Boner. Not for the dead?

Haukes. No forsooth, for David saith, No Man can deliver us from death, nor make agreement unto God.

God

Anno 1555. God for him: for it cost more to redeem their Souls, so that ye must let that alone for ever.

Also Ezekiel said. Though Noah, Daniel, or Job dwell among them, yet can they in their righteousness exceed no further than themselves. Then the Bishop said to Harpsfield, Sir, ye see this Man hath no need of our Lay, neither of any of the Blessed Saints. Well, I will trouble you no longer; I did call you hoping that you should do some good on him, but it will not be. And he said to me, Sir, It is time to begin with you; we will rid you away, and then we shall have one Heretick less.

Ex k. 14.

When he came over one by Devison, gets about 1. 5. words by Authority.

Harps. What Books have you?
Haukes. The New Testament, Salomons Books, and the Psalter.

Harps. Will you read any other Books?

Haukes. Yea, if you will give me such Books as I will require.

Harps. What Books do you require?

Haukes. Latimer Books, my Lord of Canterburies Book, Bradfords Sermons, Ridleyes Books.

Boner. Away, away, he will have no Books but such as maintain his Heresies: and so they departed for Harpsfield was bootied to ride unto Oxford, and I went to the Porters lodg again.

The next days talk.

The next daye talk. The Bishop came was Lord, Bishop sometime of Colchester, and Suffragane of Exeter, of whom read before. B. 2. we improved for his Anger.

The next day came thither an Old Bishop, who had a Pearl in his Eye, and he brought with him to my Lord a dish of Apples, and a Bottle of Wine. For he had lost his living, because he had a Wife. Then the Bishop called me again into the Orchard, and said to the Old Bishop: this young Man hath a Child, and will not have it Christened.

Haukes. I deny not Baptism.

Boner. Thou art a Fool thou canst not tell what thou wouldst have, and that he spake with much anger.

Haukes. A Bishop must be blameless or faultless, sober, discreet, no chider, nor given to anger.

Boner. Thou judgest me to be angry: no by my Faith am I not, and stroke himself upon the Breast.

Then said the Old Bishop, Alas good young Man, you must be taught by the Church, and by your ancients, and do as your forefathers have done before you.

Boner. No, no, he will have nothing but the Scriptures, and God wot he doth not understand them. He will have no Ceremonies in the Church, no not one, What say you to Holy Water?

Haukes. I say to it, as to the rest, and to all that be of his making that make them.

Boner. Why, the Scriptures do allow it.

Haukes. Where prove you that?

Boner. In the Book of Kings, where Elizeus threw salt into the Water.

Haukes. Ye say truth; that it is written in the fourth Book of the Kings, the second Chapter, the Children of the Prophets came to Elizeus, saying The dwelling of the City is pleased, but the Waters be Corrupted. This was the cause that Elizeus threw Salt into the Water, and it became sweet and good: and so when our Waters be corrupted, if ye can by putting in of Salt make them sweet, clear and wholesome, we will the better believe your Ceremonies.

Boner. How say you to Holy Bread?

Haukes. Even as I said to the other. What Scripture have you to defend it?

Boner. Have ye not read where Christ fed five thousand men five with Loaves, and three Fishes.

Haukes. Will ye make that Holy Bread? There Christ dealt Fish with his Holy Bread.

Boner. Look I pray you how Captious this Man is.

Haukes. Christ did not this miracle, or other, because we should do the like miracle: but because we should believe and credit his Doctrine thereby.

Lamer. We believe no Doctrine, but that which is wrought by miracles.

Haukes. No forsooth, for Christ said, These Tokens shall follow them that believe in me: They shall speak with new Tongues, they shall cast out Devils, and if they drink any deadly poison, it shall not hurt them.

See how Boner proveth holy Water by the Scripture. Elizeus put Salt in the Water, not to wash away Sin, but only to make the Water sweet.

Boner proveth holy Bread by the five Loaves and three Fishes.

Meth. 16.

Boner. With what new Tongues do ye speak?

Haukes. Forsooth, where before that I came to the knowledge of Gods Word, I was a foul bawling, and filthy talker, since I came to the knowledge thereof, I have lauded God, praised God, and given thanks unto God, even with the same Tongue; and is not this a new Tongue?

Boner. How do you cast out Devils?

Haukes. Christ did cast them out by his word, and he hath left the same word, that whosoever doth credit and believe it, shall cast out Devils.

Boner. Did you ever drink any deadly Poyson?

Haukes. Yea forsooth that I have; for I have drunken of the peccilent Traditions and Ceremonies of the Bishop of Rome.

Boner. Now you shew yourself to be a right Heretick.

Haukes. I pray you, what is Heresie.

Boner. All things that are contrary to Gods Word.

Haukes. If I stand in any thing contrary hereto, then am I worthy to be called.

Boner. Thou art one, and thou shalt be burned, if thou stand and continue in this Opinion. Ye think we are afraid to put one of you to death: yes, yes, there is a Brotherhood of you, but I will break it; I warrant you.

Haukes. Where prove you that Christ or his Apostles did kill any Man for his Faith?

Boner. Did not Paul Excommunicate?

Haukes. Yes my Lord, but there is a great difference between Excommunicating and Burning.

Boner. Have ye not read of the Man and the Woman in the Acts of the Apostles, whom Peter destroyed.

Haukes. Yes forsooth, I have read of one Ananias, and Sapphira his Wife, which were destroyed for lying against the Holy Ghost, which serveth nothing to your purpose.

Boner. Well you will grant one yet.

Haukes. Well, if you will have us to grant you be of God, then shew mercy, for that God requirith.

Boner. We will shew such mercy unto you, as ye shewed unto us: for my Benefice or Bishoprick was taken away from me, so that I had not one penny to live upon.

Haukes. I pray ye my Lord what do you give him now that was in the Bishoprick or Benefice before that ye came again to it? whereunto he answered me never a word: for he turned his Back unto me, and talked with other Men, saying that he was very sorry for me, but he trusted that I would turn with S. Paul, because I was so earnest, and so he departed and went to Dinner, and I to the Porters Lodge again.

After Dinner I was called into the Hall again and the Bishop desired the Old Bishop to take me into his Chamber: for I would be glad (said he) if ye could convert him. So he took me into his Chamber, and sate him down in a Chair, and said to me; I would to God I could do you some good. Ye are a young Man, and I would not with you to go too far, but learn of your elders to bear some what.

Haukes. I will bear with nothing that is contrary to the Word of God. And I looked that the Old Bishop should have made me an Answer, and he was fast a sleep.

Then I departed out of the Chamber alone, and went to the Porters Lodge again, and there saw I the Old Bishop last: I suppose he is not yet awake.

Talk between Fecknam and Haukes.

The next day came Fecknam unto me and said; Are ye he that will have no Ceremonies?

Haukes. What mean you by that?

Fecknam. Ye will not have your Child Christened, but in English, and you will have no Ceremonies.

Haukes. Whatsoever the Scripture commandeth to be done I refuse not.

Fecknam. Ceremonies are to be used by the Scriptures.

Haukes. Which be those?

Fecknam. How say you by Pauls Breches?

Haukes. I have read no such thing.

Fecknam. Have ye not read in the Acts of the Apostles, how How converted Christ should speak with Tongues.

R. Boner did Heretick by his own doctrine.

The Papists do besides Gods Book in burning men for their Faith.

This Bishop here forgetteth his lesson, Beside the perfecting his own.

The Haukes after wards called for a glass to talk with the Old Bishop.

The next day talk with Fecknam.

Haukes. No forsooth: for Christ turned back, and said to Peter, Who is it that toucheth me? And Peter said, Thou seest the People thrust thee; and askest thou, Who touched me? Some Body hath touched me (saith Christ) for verily hath gone out of me. I pray you, whether was it the vertue that healed this Woman, or his vesture?

Anno 1555. I Haukes. Yea, I have been taught another Gospel since I came into this House.

Other doctrine taught in the Church of Rome than ever Paul taught. Chad. What Gospel have ye been taught?

Haukes. Praying to Saints, and to our Lady, and trust in the Mass, holy Bread, holy Water, and in Idols.

Idols. Chad. He that teaches you so, teaches you not a mass.

Haukes. Cursed be he that teacheth me so: for I will not trust him nor believe him.

Boner. You speak of Idols, and you know not what they mean.

Haukes. God hath taught us what they be: for whatsoever is made, graven, or devised by mans hand, contrary to Gods Word, the same is an Idol. What say you to that?

The Cross. Chad. What be those that ye are so offended withal?

Haukes. The Cross of Wood, Silver, Copper, or Gold, &c.

Boner. What say ye to that?

Haukes. I say it is an Idol. What say you to it?

Images. Boner. I say every Idol is an Image, but every Image is not an Idol.

Haukes. I say, what difference is there between an Idol and Image?

Note here Boner's definition of an Idol. Boner. If it be a false God, and an Image made of him, that is an Idol: but if an Image be made of God himself, it is no Idol, but an Image, because he is a true God.

Haukes. Lay your Image of your true God and of your false God together, and ye shall see the difference.

Note here how grossly Chad's understanding the words of St. Paul. Have not your Images feet and go not, eyes and see not, ears and hear not, hands and feel not, mouths and speak not? and even so have your Idols.

Chad. God forbid, saith St. Paul, that I should rejoice in any thing else, but in the Cross of Christ Jesus.

Haukes. Do ye understand Paul so? Do ye understand Paul? Unto the which he answered me never a word.

Boner. Where can we have a godlier remembrance when we ride by the way, than to see the Cross?

Haukes. If the Cross were such a profit unto us, why did not Christs Disciples take it up and set it on a Pole, and carry it in procession, with Salve, Jesu dicitur?

Chad. It was taken up.

Haukes. Who took it up? Helene, as ye say; for she sent a piece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with the Visitors when that House was suppressed, and the piece of the holy Cross (which the Religious had in such estimation, and had robbed many a Soul, committing Idolatry to it) was called for, and when it was proved, and all come to all, it was but a piece of a Lath covered over with Copper, double gilded as it had been clean Gold.

The People seduced by false pieces of the holy Cross. Boner. Fie, fie, I dare say thou slanderest it.

Haukes. I know it to be true, and do not believe the contrary. And thus did the Bishop and the Doctor depart in a great fume: and Chadsey said unto me, as he was about to depart, It is pity that thou shouldst live, or any such as thou art. I answered, In this case I desire not to live, but rather to dye.

Chad. Ye dye boldly, because ye would glory in your death, as Joan Butcher did.

Haukes. What Joan Butcher did, I have nothing to do withal: but I would my part might be to Morrow. God make you in a better mind, I said they both, and so they departed, and I went to the Porters Lodge with my Keeper.

The next day Dr. Chadsey preached in the Bishops Chappel, and did not begin his Sermon until all the Service was done: and then came the Porter for me, and said, My Lord would have you come to the Sermon, and so I went to the Chappel Door, and stood without the Door.

Boner. Is not this Fellow come?

Haukes. Yes I am here.

Boner. Come in man.

Haukes. No, that I will not. He called again, and I answered, I will come no nearer, and so I stood at the Door. Then said the Bishop go to your Sermon.

Then Dr. Chadsey put the stole about his Neck, and carried the holy Water-Sprinkle unto the Bishop, who blessed him and gave him holy Water, and so he went to his Sermon.

The Text that he treated on was the 16. of Matthew, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?

Another Sermon. Petet said, Some say that thou art Helias, some say that thou art John Baptist, some say thou art one of the Prophets. But whom say ye that I am? Then said Peter, Thou art Christ the Son of the ever-living God. Then left he the Text there, and said, *Whose Sins forever ye bind, are bound: which Authority (said he) is left to the Heads of the Church, as my Lord here is one, and so unto all the rest that be underneath him. But the Church hath been much kicked at since the beginning: yet kick the Hereticks, spurn the Hereticks never so much, the Church doth stand and flourish. And then he went straightway to the Sacrament, and said his mind on it, exalting it above Heaven (as the most of them do) and so returned to his place again, saying, *Whose Sins ye do remit, are remitted and forgiven: and so he applied it to the Bishops and the Priests to forgive Sins, and said, All that be of the Church will come and receive the same. And this he proved by St. John in the 11. Chap. saying, that Christ came to raise Lazarus, which when he was risen, was bound in bands: and then said Christ to them that were in Authority (who were his Disciples) go ye and loose him, loose him ye. And this was the effect of his Sermon, applying all to them, that they have the same Authority that Christ spake of to his Apostles, and so ended his Sermon, and they to Dinner.

Another Communication between Tho Haukes and the Bishop.

And after Dinner I was called into the Chappel, where were certain of the Queens Servants, and other Strangers, whom I did not know.

Boner. Haukes, how like you the Sermon?

Haukes. As I like all the rest of his Doctrine.

Boner. What? are ye not edified thereby?

Haukes. No surely.

Boner. It was made only because of you.

Haukes. Why? then am I sorry that ye had no more Hereticks here, as ye call them: I am sorry that ye have bestowed so much labour on one, and so little regarded.

Boner. Well, I will leave you here, for I have business, I pray you talk with him: for if ye could do him good (said he) I would be glad.

This the Bishop spake to the Queens men, who said unto me, Alas, what mean you to trouble your self about such matters against the Queens proceedings?

Haukes. Those matters have I answered before them that be in Authority: and unless I see you have a farther Commission, I will answer you nothing at all. Then said the Bishops Men, (which were many) my Lord hath commanded you to talk with them.

Haukes. If my Lord will talk with me himself, I will answer him. They cried, Fagots, burn him, hang him, to Prison with him: it is pity that he liveth, lay Irons upon him, and with a great noise they spake these words. Then in the midst of all their rage I departed from them, and went to the Porters Lodge again.

The next days Talk.

The next day the Bishop called me into his Chamber, and said, Ye have been with me a great while, and ye are never the better, but worse and worse: and therefore I will delay the time no longer, but send you to Newgate.

Haukes. My Lord, you can do me no better pleasure.

Boner. Why? would you so fain go to Prison?

Haukes. Truly I did look for none other, when I came to your hands.

Boner. Come on your ways, ye shall see what I have written. Then did he shew me certain Articles, and these are the Contents of them:

Whether the Catholick Church do teach and believe, that Christs real Presence doth remain in the Sacrament, or no, after the words of Consecration, according to the words of Saint Paul, which are these; Is not the Bread which we break the partaking of the Body of Christ,

The Text that he treated on was the 16. of Matthew, Whom do men say that I the Son of man am?

Christ, and the Cup which we bleſſe, the partaking of the Blood of Chriſt? which if it were not ſo, Paul would never have ſaid it.

Haukes. What your Church doth, I cannot tell: but I am ſure that the holy Catholick Church doth never ſo take it, nor believe it.

Boner. Whether doth the Catholick Church teach and believe the Baptiſm that now is uſed in the Church, or no?

Answer of Haukes to the firſt Article.
Answer to the ſecond Article.

Talk between Haukes and Dr. Harpfield, Archdeacon of Canterbury.

Haukes. I answered to it, as I did to the other queſtion before. Then did the Biſhop with much flattery counſel me to be perſwaded, and to keep me out of Priſon, which I utterly reſuſed, and ſo we departed. And I ſuppoſed that the next day I ſhould have gone to Priſon, and ſo I had, ſave for the Archdeacon of Canterbury, whoſe name is Harpfield, whom the Biſhop had deſired to talk with me, and began to perſwade me concerning the Sacrament, and the Ceremonies: and after much talk he ſaid, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the ſame Body that was born of the Virgin Mary, which did hang upon the Croſs.

Haukes. He was upon the Croſs both alive and dead: which of them was the Sacrament?

Harpf. The Archdeacon answered, alive.

Haukes. How do you prove that?

Harpf. You muſt believe. Doth not S. John ſay, He is condemned already that believeth not?

Haukes. S. John ſaith, He that believeth not in the Son of God is already condemned, but he ſaith not, He that believeth not in the Sacrament is already condemned.

Harpf. There is no talk with you: for ye are both without Faith and Learning, and therefore I will talk no more with you in Scripture.

Another queſtion put to Harpfield, why the Ponder is ſet between the Church and the Chancel.

Haukes. Then two that ſtood by bade me enter further in talk with him; and then ſaid I unto him, Why is the Roodloſt ſet betwixt the body of the Church and the Chancel?

Harpf. I cannot tell: for ye have asked a queſtion which you cannot aſſail your ſelf.

Haukes. Yes that I can: for this faith one of your own Doctōrs, That the body of the Church doth repreſent the Church Militant, and the Chancel the Church Triumphant: and ſo becauſe we cannot go from the Church Militant to the Church Triumphant, but that we muſt bear the Croſs of Chriſt; this is the cauſe of the Roodloſt, being between the body of the Church and the Chancel.

Harpf. This is well and Clerkly concluded.

Haukes. As all the reſt of your Doctrines; and ſo with many perſwaſions on his part we ended, and ſo departed: and I to the Porters Lodge again.

Another days Talk.

Haukes ſent to the Gate-houſe at Weſtminſter with the Biſhops Warrant.

The next day in the Morning, which was the firſt day of July, the Biſhop did call me himſelf from the Porters Lodge, commanding me to make me ready to go to Priſon, and to take ſuch things with me as I had of mine own. And I ſaid, I do neither intend to bribe, neither to ſteal, God willing. Then he did write my Warrant to the Keeper of the Gate-houſe at Weſtminſter, and delivered it to Harpfield, who with his own man and one of the Biſhops men brought me to Priſon, and delivered the Warrant and me both to the Keeper: and this was contained in the Warrant.

The Biſhops Warrant.

I will and command you, that you receive him who cometh named in this Warrant, and that he be kept as a ſafe Priſoner, and that no man ſpeak with him, and that ye deliver him to no man, except it be the Council, or to a Juſtice: for he is a Sacramentary, and one that ſpeaketh againſt Baptiſm, a ſeditious man, a perillous man to be abroad in theſe perillous days. And thus was I received, and they departed. And there I remained thirteen days, and then the Biſhop ſent two of his Men unto me, ſaying, My Lord would be glad to know how ye do. I answered them, I do like a poor Priſoner. They ſaid, My Lord would know, whether ye be the ſame man that ye were when ye departed. I ſaid, I am no Changing. They ſaid, My Lord would be glad that ye ſhould do well: I ſaid, if my Lord will me any good, I pray you deſire him to ſuffer my Friends to come to me. So they ſaid they would ſpeak for me, but I heard no more of them.

This is the firſt Examination of me Thomas Haukes, being examined by Edmund Boner, then Biſhop of London, and by his Chaplains and Doctōrs at Fulham, four miles from London, where I lay, till I came to Priſon to Weſtminſter: and after his two Men had been with me, I heard no more of him till the third day of September.

Here followeth the ſecond time of mine Examination, the which was the third day of September, for the Biſhop did ſend his Men for me to come to his Palace of London; and ſo my Keeper and his Men brought me to his Palace the ſame day.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter, then being Chancellor, Preached that day at Pauls-Croſs, and the Biſhop of London ſaid to my Keeper, I think your Man will not go to the Sermon to day.

Haukes. Yes my Lord, I pray you let me go: and that that is good I will receive, and the reſt I will leave behind me, and ſo I went. And when the Sermon was done, I and my Keeper came to the Biſhops Houſe, and there we remained till Dinner was done: and after Dinner the Biſhop called for me, and asked me, if I were the ſame Man that I was before.

Haukes. I am no Changing, nor none will be.

Boner. Ye ſhall find me no Changing neither. And ſo he returned into his Chamber, and there he did write the ſide of a ſheet of Paper, and all that while I ſtood in the great Chamber, and as many with me as might well ſtand in the Chamber. And as I ſtood there, Dr. Smith came unto me, (who once recanted, as it appeared in Print) ſaying, That he would be glad to talk Brotherly with me. I asked him what he was. Then ſaid they that ſtood by, he is Dr. Smith. Then ſaid I, Are you he that did recant? And he ſaid, it was no recantation, but a declaration.

Haukes. You were beſt to term it well for your own Honesty.

Dr. Smith. Shall I term it as it pleaſeth you? Haukes. To be ſhort with you, I will know whether ye will recant any more or no, before that I talk with you, credit you, or believe you: and ſo I departed from him to the other ſide of the Chamber. Then ſaid the Biſhops Men and his Chaplains, that my Lord commanded me to talk with him. Then they that ſtood by cried with a great noiſe, Hang him, burn him; it is pley that he liveth, that diſobeyeth my Lords commandment.

Then ſaid one Miles Huggard, Where prove you that Infants were baptized?

Haukes. Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son; and of the Holy Ghoſt. Sir, here is none excepted.

Mr. Huggard. What ſhall we go to teach Children?

Haukes. That word doth trouble you; it might be left out full well: it is too much for you to teach. Is not your name Miles Huggard?

Mr. Hug. So am I called.

Haukes. Be you not a Hoſier, and dwell in Pudding-Lane?

Mr. Hug. Yes that I am, and there I do dwell.

Haukes. It ſhould ſeem ſo, for ye can better ſkill to cat a Pudding, and make a Hoſe, than in Scripture either to answer or oppoſe. With that he was in great rage, and did chaſe up and down. Then I deſired that ſome man would take ſome pain to walk the Gentleman, he did fret ſo for anger. Frivolous Questions.
May 31.

Haukes. Like will to like; such Master, such Man. For I know the Priest to be a very vile man, as any could be. I asked the Parton, what kin he was to the Weather-Cock of Pauls; and he fell into a great Laughter with the rest of his Companions. He said, that I did Rail.

Then said another that stood by unto me; what Book have you here? I answered, the New Testament. May I look in it, said he? Yea, that ye may, said I. And so he looked in my Book, and said it was corrupt. I answered him, if the things contained in it be true, then are ye false Prophets. He said that he would oppose me in the first word of the Testament, saying, Here is a generation of Christ: and *Ej*ay faith, No man can tell his Generation.

Haukes. What meaneth *Ej*ay by that?

I would learn of you, said he.

Haukes. Ye would be angry if the Scholar should teach the Master: but if ye will have me to teach you; I will tell you *Ej*ay's meaning.

Then said he, No man can tell the Generation between the Father and the Son: but you (I dare say) did know it before.

Haukes. Why then *Ej*ay denieth not the Generation.

Then said he, Why is Christ called Christ?

Haukes. Because he is a Messias.

Then said he, Why is he called a Messias?

Haukes. Because he was so prophesied by the Prophets.

Then said he, Why is your Book called a Book?

Haukes. These words do breed more strife than godly edifying.

Beware, said he, that ye do not decline from the Church, for if you do, you will prove your self an Heretic.

Haukes. Even as ye do call us Hereticks, that do incline to Christ's Church from your Church: so are ye all false Prophets that do decline from Christ's Church to your own Church. And by this shall all men know you to be false Prophets: if ye say, This faith the Church: and will not say, This faith our Lord. And so he went his way, as though he had a Flea in his Ear.

Then came another and said unto me, He would talk with me, for he perceived (as he said) that I was angry, and out of patience.

Haukes. I will see your Commission, or ever I talk with you, or with any man more. For I wist not how to be rid of them, they came so thick about me. For I said, that I came to talk with my Lord, and not with any of them.

With that came the Bishop, bringing a Letter in his hand, the which he had written in my Name, and read it unto me after this manner: I Thomas Haukes do here confess and declare before my said Ordinary Edmund Bishop of London, that the Mass is abominable and detestable, and full of all Superstition; and also as concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ (commonly called the Sacrament of the Altar) that Christ is in no part thereof, but only in Heaven: this I have believed, and this I do believe, &c.

Haukes. Stop there my Lord: what I have believed, What have you to do withal? But what I do believe, to that stand I, and will. Then he took his Pen, and said that he would scrape it out for my pleasure, and so he did to my thinking.

Then he went further with his writing, and said, I Tho. Haukes have talked with my said Ordinary, and with certain good, godly and learned Men. Notwithstanding I stand still in mine Opinion.

Haukes. Shall I grant you to be good, godly and learned Men, and yet grant my self to stand in a contrary Opinion? No, I will not grant you to be good, godly and learned Men.

Boner. Ye will grant that ye have talked with us: The other I will put out for your pleasure. Then said all his Doctors, If your Lordship be ruled by him, he will cause you to put out all together: and then he read more to me. Here unto this Bill have I set my hand, and then he offered me the Bill and his Pen, and bade me set my hand to it.

Haukes. Ye get not my hand to any thing of your making or devising.

Boner. Wilt not thou set to thy hand? It shall be to thy shame for the denying of it.

And then he called all his Doctors, and said, he would have every mans hand to it that was in the Chamber; and so he had all their hands to it and said, He that will not set his hand to it, I would he were hanged, and so said all his Chaplains and Doctors with a great noise.

Then the Bishop thrust me on the Breast with great anger, and said he would be even with me, and with all such proud Knaves in Essex.

Haukes. Ye shall do no more than God shall give you leave.

Boner. This fear shall not be unpunished, trust to it.

Haukes. As for your Curfings, Railings and Blasphemings, I care not for them: for I know the Moths and Worms shall eat you, as they eat Cloth or Wool.

Bishop. I will be even with you, when time shall come.

Haukes. You may in your malice destroy a man: but when ye have done, ye cannot do so much as make a finger, and ye be meetly even with some of us already.

Boner. If I do thee any wrong, take the Law of me.

Haukes. Solomon saith, Go not to Law with a Judge; For he will judge according to his own honour.

Boner. Solomon saith, Give not a Fool an answer.

Haukes. What do you count me a Fool?

Boner. Yea, by my Troth do I; and so dost thou me too: but God forgive thee, and so do I.

Haukes. Thought is free, my Lord. Then took Boner the Bill and read it again; and when he saw that he could not have my hand to it; then he would have had me to take it into my hand; and to give it to him again.

Haukes. What needeth that Ceremony? Neither shall it come into my hand, heart or mind. Then he wrapt it up, and put it in his Bosom, and in a great anger went his way, and called for his Horse and went to Horse-back, for the same day he rode in Visitation into Essex: and so went I to Prison, from whence I came with my Keeper.

And this was the second time of my Examination. Written by me Tho. Haukes, who desireth all Faithful men and Brethren to pray unto God, to strengthen me in his Truth unto the end. Pray, pray, pray, gentle Brethren pray.

The public Examination of Tho. Haukes.

AFTER all these private Conferences, Perswasions and long Debatings had with T. Haukes in the Bishops House, as hitherto hath been declared, the Bishop seeing no hope to win him to his wicked ways, was fully set to proceed openly against him after the ordinary course of his Popish Law. Whereupon T. Haukes shortly after was cited with the rest of his other Fellows above-specified, to wit, T. Tomkins, S. Knight, W. Pygot, J. Lawrence, and W. Hunter, to appear in the Bishops Conistory, the 8 day of February, this present year, viz. 1555. Upon which appearance, was laid against him in like order as to the other, first the Bill of his Confession, written with Boners hand, to the which Bill ye heard before how the blessed Servant of God denied to subscribe.

After which Bill of Confession, being read; and be constantly standing to the said Confession, the Bishop then assigned him with the other five the next day following, which was the 9th of February, to appear before him again, to give a resolute Answer what they would stick unto. Which day being come, and these afore-said six Prisoners being severally called before the Bishop, at the coming of Thomas Haukes, the Bishop willed him to remember what was said to him yesterday; and now while he had time and space, to advise with himself what he would answer, for he stood upon Life and Death. Well quoth Mr. Haukes again, I will willingly receive whatsoever shall be put upon me. Then were certain other Interrogatories or Articles commenced against him by the said Bishop (in like manner as

To the which matter being read, the said Haukes answered openly again, saying that it was true, and that he was glad it was so true as it was, with more words to the like effect. And this was in the forenoon, the ix. day of February. In the afternoon again the said Haukes appearing and hearing the fore-said bill of his Confession, with the Articles and Interrogatories read unto him, with like Constancy in answering again to the Bishop; My Lord (said he) as you being my Friend have caused these my sayings to be written; so do you cause them to be read: and yet I will never go from them. And then being exhorted by the Bishop, with many fair words, to return again to the Bosom of the Mother Church: No my Lord (said he) that will I not: for if I had an Hundred Bodies, I would suffer them all to be torn in pieces, rather than I will abjure or recant. And so continuing still in the same song, notwithstanding that the Doctors and Lawyers were ever calling upon him to come again to the Unity of the Church, he ever kept them off with this Answer, that he would never go from the belief he was in, so long as he believed. Whereupon Boner at the last read the Sentence of Death upon him, and so was he condemned the same day with the residue of his fellows, which was the ninth of February. Nevertheless his execution was prolonged, and he remained in prison till the 10. day of Thomas Haukes by the way use much exhortation to his Friends, and whensoever opportunity served to talk with them he would familiarly Admonish them.

A little before his Death, certain there were of his familiar Acquaintance and Friends, who frequented his company more familiarly, which seemed not a little to be confirmed both by the example of his constancy, and by this talk; yet notwithstanding, the same again, being feared with the sharpness of the punishment which he was going to privily, desired that in the midst of the Flame he would shew them some token, if he could, whereby they might be more certain, whether the pain of such burning were so great that a man might not therein keep his mind quiet and patient. Which thing he promised them to do: and so secretly between them it was agreed, that if the rage of the pain were tolerable and might be suffered, then he should lift up his hands above his head toward Heaven, before he gave up the Ghost.

Not long after, when the hour was come, T. Haukes was led away to the place appointed for the slaughter, by the L. Rich and his Attendants who being now come unto the stake, there mildly and patiently addressed himself to the fire, having a strait chain cast about his middle, with

In the which when he continued long, and when his speech was taken away by Violence of the flame, his kin also drawn together, and his fingers consumed with the fire, so that now all men thought certainly he had been gone, suddenly and contrary to all expectation the blessed Servant of God, being mindful of his promise afore made, reached up his hands burning on a light fire, which was marvellous to behold, over his head to the living God, and with great rejoicing as seemed, strook or clapped theme three times together. At the sight whereof there followed such applause and outcry of the People, and especially of them which understood the matter, that the like hath not commonly been heard: and so the blessed Martyr of Christ; straightway sinking down into the fire, gave up his Spirit, An. 1555. ye shall in all your doings, that you may always direct your eyes according to his Holy Word; that when he shall appear to reward every man according to their works, ye may as obedient Children, be found watching, ready to enter into his everlasting Kingdom, with your lamps burning; and when the Bridegroom shall thew himself, ye need not to be ashamed of this life which God hath lent you, which is but transitory, vain, and like unto a vapour, that for a season appeareth and vani-sheth away: so soon passeth away all our terrestrial honour, glory and felicity. For all flesh (saith the Prophet) is grass, and all his glory as the flower of the field, which for a season sheweth her beauty, and as soon as the Lord bloweth upon it, it withereth away, and departeth.

In this transitory and dangerous wilderness, we are as Pilgrims and strangers following the footsteps of Moses, among many unspeakable dangers, beholding nothing with our outward man, but all vain vanities and vexation of mind, subject to hunger, cold, nakedness, sickness, loss, labour, banishment, in danger of that dreadful Dragon, and his sinful seed, to be devoi-red, tempted and tormented, who ceaseth not behind every bush to lay a bait, when we walk away to have his pleasure upon us, casting abroad his apples in all places, times, and seasons, to see if Adam will beallured and enticed to leave the living God and his most holy commandments, whereby he is assured of everlasting life, promising the World at will, to all that will fall down in all ages, and for a mess of pottage sell and set at nought the Everlasting Kingdom of Heaven. So frail is Flesh and Blood; And in especial Israel is most ready to walk away, when he is filled with all manner of Riches, as saith the Prophet.

Therefore I am bold in bonds (as entirely desiring your everlasting health and felicity) to warn you, and most heartily desire you to watch and pray: For our estate is dangerous, and requireth continual prayer. For on the high Mountains, doth not grow most plenty of grass, neither are the highest trees farthest from danger, but seldom sure, and always shaken of every wind that bloweth. Such a deceitful thing (saith our Saviour) is Honour and Riches, that without grace it choketh up the good seed sown on his creatures, and blindeth so their seeing, that they go groping at noon day in darkness:
it maketh a man think himself somewhat, that is nothing at all. For though for our Honour we esteem ourselves and stand in our own light, yet when we shall stand before the living God, there shall be no respect of persons. For riches helpeth not in the day of vengeance:
neither can we make the Lord partial for money. But as ye have ministered unto the Saints, so shall ye receive the reward, which I am fully persuaded and assured shall be plentifully poured upon you all, for the great goodness shewed unto the Servants of the Living God.
And I most heartily beseech Almighty God to pour forth a plentiful reward upon you for the fame, and that he will assist you with his Holy Spirit in all your doings, that ye may grow, as ye have begun, unto such a perfection as may be to Gods Honour, your own salvation, and the strengthening of the weak members of Christ. For though the World rage and blaspheme the elect of God, ye know that it did so unto Christ, his Apostles, and to all that were in the Primitive Church, and shall be unto the Worlds End.

Therefore believe in the light while ye have it, lest it be taken away from you; if you shall seem to neglect the great Mercy of God that hath been opened unto you, and your hearts consented unto it, that it is the very and only truth pronounced by Gods only Son Jesus Christ, by the good will of our Heavenly Father. Therefore I say in the Bowels of my Lord Jesus Christ, stick fast unto it; let it never depart out of your hearts and conversation, that you with us and we with you at the great day, being one flock, as we have one Shepherd, may rise to the life immortal, through Jesus Christ our only Saviour. Amen.

Tours in him that liveth for ever, Thomas Haukes.

Here followeth another letter of Thomas Haukes, sent to his Wife after his condemnation, being prisoner in Newgate: the copie whereof is this.

The copie of Thomas Haukes Letter to his Wife.

Grace be with you, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, which gave himself for our sins, to deliver us from this present Evil World, through the good will of God our Father, to whom be praise for ever and ever, Amen.

My dear yoke-fellow in the Lord, forasmuch as the Lord hath not only called me to work in his vineyard, but hath also fulfilled his good work in me (I trust to his glory, and to the comfort of all those that look for his coming) I thought it my duty, dear yoke-fellow, to write unto you some lessons out of Gods Book; and if you will direct your self thereafter, doubt not of it but God, who refuseth none that will come to him with their whole heart, will assist you with his Holy Spirit, and direct you in all his ways, to his Honour and Glory, who grant it for his mercy sake, Amen.

First, I exhort you to fear God, to serve and honour his holy Name, to love him with all your heart, soul, and mind, to believe faithfully all his promises, to lay sure hold upon them, that in all your troubles whatsoever they are, ye may run straight to the great mercy of God, and he will bring you forth of them: Keep you within his wings, then shall ye be sure that neither Devil, Flesh, nor Hell shall be able to hurt you.

But take heed; If you will not keep his Holy Precepts and Laws, and to the uttermost of your power call for the help of God to walk in the same, but will leave them, and run to all abominations with the wicked World, and do as they do; then be sure to have your part with the wicked World in the burning Lake that never shall be quenched. Therefore beware of Idolatry, which doth most of all stink before the face of Almighty God, and was of all good men most detested from the beginning of the World. For the which, what Kingdoms, Nations, and Realmes God hath punished with most terrible plagues, with fire, brimston, hunger, sword, and pestilence, &c.
to the utter subversion of them, it is manifestly to be seen though the whole Bible. Yea, his own peculiar People, whom he had done so much for, when they fell from him, and went and served other gods, contrary to his commandment, he utterly destroyed and rooted them out from off the Earth: and as many as died in that damnable state, not repenting their abominable evil, he threw them into the Pit of Hell. Again, how he hath preserved those that abhor Superstition and Idolatry, and that have only taken hold upon God with their whole heart, to serve him, and to love him, to fear him, &c. it is most manifestly to be seen even from the beginning, out of what great dangers he hath ever delivered them: yea when all hope of deliverance was past as touching their expectation, even then in the sight of all his enemies would he work his godly will and purpose, to the utter amazing and destruction of all those that were his manifest enemies.

Further, I exhort you in the bowels of Christ that you will exercise and be steadfast in prayer; for prayer is the only mean to pierce the Heavens, to obtain at the hand of God whatsoever we desire, so that it be asked in faith. Oh what notable things do we read in Scriptures that have been obtained through fervent prayer? We are commanded to call upon him for help, aid, and succour in necessities and troubles, and he hath promised to help us. Again, they that will not call upon him with their whole heart, but upon other dead creatures, in whom there is no help (for there was none found worthy to open the book, but only the Lamb Christ which was killed for our sins) I say, who that will refuse his help, must even by the terrible Judgments of God come utterly to confusion: as it hath, and is daily manifest to be seen. And whatsoever you desire of God in your prayer ask it for Jesus Christs sake, for whom and in whom God, hath promised to give us all things necessary. And though that which we ask come not by and by at the first and second calling, yet continue still knocking, and he will at length open his Treasures of mercy, so that ye shall be sure to obtain; for he hath so promised, if ye continue in faith, hoping surely in him. These former lessons, with all such instructions as I have told you by mouth,
I do

Care for his Children.

He meaneth M. Clement Throgmorton, who desired to have the bringing up of his Child.

Further, where it hath pleased God to send us Children, my desire is, that they may be brought up in the fear of God, and in his Laws. And this is to certify you, that ye deliver in any wife my Eldest Son unto M. Throgmorton, who upon his good will hath promised me to bring him up according to my desire; and (I trust) as God hath put into his heart. See therefore that ye deliver him in any wife without delay: and as for the other, if ye shall seem to be burdened with him (which I think nature will not suffer) my desire is, that it be brought up in the fear of God to the uttermost of your endeavour, with some honest man that hath the fear of God before his eyes, and let us give thanks unto God which hath given them us beseeching him that they may be counted worthy to be of that flock that shall stand on the Right Hand of the Majesty of God, when he shall judge the World, Amen.

Keeping of good company.

Exhortation to take heed whom he meaneth, and that the misery in the Lord.

Yet once again I warn you, that ye continue in fervent prayer, as I said before; then shall ye be sure, that God even of his own mercy, according as he hath promised, will be an Husband unto you, and provide better for you than ever I was able to do: yea, he will cause all men that fear him to pity you, to help you, to succour you in all your necessities, so that if any will do you wrong, he will be avenged on him. Moreover, I wish you to keep company with those of whom ye may learn to come to a more perfect knowledge in God, and I doubt not but God will provide that such will be glad to receive you if you shall profess and go forward in his truth.

Finally, and to make an end, I desire you that ye take heed with whom ye couple your self. See that he be a man that feareth God, loveth his Laws, and will walk in the same to the uttermost of his power: such a one as can be content to love you, and to care for you. Take heed he be no brawler, no drunkard, no wicked person, not given to filthiness, no worldling, no dicer nor carder. In fine, no filthy person, but chuse you such a one as God may be glorified in both your lives. And again on your part, love him, serve him, obey him in all godliness, as long as God shall give you life in this World. Then shall ye both be sure to obtain that Kingdom which God the Father hath prepared, and Jesus Christ obtained for you, that never shall have end, where I trust to abide your coming, Amen.

By your Husband, Thomas Haukes.

Ye heard before in the Letter of Tho. Haukes written to his Wife, mention made concerning his Eldest Son to be sent to M. Throgmorton. Now what he writeth to the said M. Throgmorton touching the same matter, by this his Letter to the said party hereunder ensuing, may appear.

Grace, mercy and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Jesus Christ, be with you, and assist you in all your thoughts, words, and works, that be in all things, as most worthy, may be glorified, and that the blessing of Abraham may be poured plentifully on you and all your posterity.

Whereas the Love of God hath moved you to require my Son to be brought up before your eyes, and the self same love hath also moved me in like case to leave him in your hands, as unto a Father in mine Absence, I shall require you in Gods behalf according to your promises, that ye will see him brought up in the Fear of the Lord, and instructed in the knowledge of his Holy Word, that he may thereby learn to leave the evil, and know the good, and always be pricked forward with Fatherly Instructions to follow my Footsteps, that as Almighty God hath made me worthy through his special grace to work his will in Obedience, he may learn to follow me his Father in the like, to Gods Honour and Praise: And this I require you in Gods behalf to fulfill, or cause to be fulfilled, as ye before the living God will make Answer for the same. I have left for the Child certain Books which shall be delivered unto you, wherein his Instruction and Salvation lieth, if he learn and practise the same. And thus most humbly beseeching you once again, to be as good to him, as your promise was unto me, that is, to be a Father, and a wall of defence unto him in all troubles, I leave him in your hand through the Lord Jesus, and desire him to bless both him and you according to his good promise: and all that good which ye shall do unto him, I shall most heartily desire the everlasting God to recompence unto you in his Kingdom, where I hope to meet both him and you among all Gods Elect. To which God be all Praise, Honour, and Glory, Amen.

Tours and all mens in Christ Jesus, Thomas Haukes.

The History of Thomas Wats, examined, tried, and burnt for the truth of the Gospel.

Thomas Wats of Billerica, within the County of Essex, of the Diocese of London, was by his occupation a Linen Draper: who before he was apprehended, had sold and made away his cloth in his shop, and disposed his things being set in order to his Wife and Children, and gave away much of his cloth unto the poor. For he looked always to be taken by Gods Adversaries and his, as shortly after came indeed to pass: so that upon the 26. day of April, he was apprehended and brought before the Lord Rich, and other Commissioners at Chelmsford, and there being accused for not coming to the Church, was upon the same examined before the Lord Rich, Henry Tyrell, Sir Anthony Brown, Edmund Tyrell, Thomas Mulman, John Wiseman, Roger Appleton, Richard Weston, Justice Gaudy, &c. The summe and principal effect of which examination, hereunder followeth briefly expressed.

The Examination of Thomas Wats before the Lord Rich, and others.

When this Thomas Wats came before the Lord Rich, and other the Justices, whose Names are specified in the letter following (which they sent unto the Bishop of London against him) at the Sessions at Chelmsford, the Lord Rich said these Words or the like in effect unto him.

Wats, ye be brought hither, as I understand, because of disobedience to the King and the Queens Laws. Ye will not come to the Church, ye will not hear Mass, &c. but have your Conventicles a sort of you in corners, contrary to the Kings and Queens proceedings. Unto which his words Wats answered and said.

My Lord, if I have offended a Law, I am subject here to the Law. Then Anthony Brown Justice said unto him; Wats, I pray thee tell me who hath been thy Schoolmaster to teach thee this gear, or where didst thou first learn this Religion? Forsooth, quoth Wats, even of you, Sir: you taught it me, and none more than you. For in King Edwards days in open Sessions you spake against this Religion now used, no Preacher more. You then said the Mass was abominable, and all their Trumpety besides, wishing and earnestly exhorting that none should believe therein, and that our belief should be only in Christ: and you said then, whosoever should bring in any strange Nation to rule here it were Treason, and not to be suffered. Then said Brown to my Lord Rich, he belies me my Lord. What a kuave is this? he will soon belie me behind my back, when he doth it before my face, and my Lord Rich said again, I dare say he doth so.

After these words, Wats took occasion to speak somewhat of King Philip and of his coming in, but what it was, I could not justly learn. But thus much was heard, that after those words spoken, the Bench among themselves stood up, and said one to another, Throgmorton, saving one good man called Justice Gaudy, who a little before was about to speak: but when he heard them cry Treason, he held down his head as one grieved and troubled at their doings.

In conclusion, the Commissioners being weary of him, or else not willing to meddle further in such matters, sent him up to the Bishop of London, with their letter withall, importing the cause of his sending up, as the contents thereof hereunder follow to be seen.

the Lord

Tyrel, and other Justices to Boner.The Wats sent up by the Justices of Essex to Bishop Boner.

After our most hearty commendation to your good Lordship, these shall be to advertise you, that at our Sessions of Oyer and Terminer holden at Chelmsford the 26. day of April last past, there came before us in open Court one Thomas Wats of Billerica within your Diocess, by ordinary process, and then and there being examined why he refused to come to his Parish Church, and there to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, and hear Divine Service, according to the institution of Holy Church, he openly there answered generally; that like as the Service of the Church set out in the days of late King Edward 6. was said by us now to be Abominable, Heretical, Schismatical, and all naught, so he said, that all that is now used and done in that Church, is Abominable, Heretical, Schismatical, and naught, with divers other erroneous, and arrogant words: and therefore we have thought good to send him to your Lordship, to be further examined by you of his particular opinions, as to your Pastoral Office shall seem convenient, certifying you further, that in our opinion he is one of the most arrogant Heretics that hath been heard speak, or ever came before you, and not meet to be kept here in any Goal, as well for fear of corrupting others, as for divers and sundry other special causes hereafter to be more declared. Thus leaving to molest your good Lordship, we commit you to the Holy Ghost. Given at Chelmsford the 27. of April, Anno 1555.

tices.R. RichHenry TyrelAnthony Browne.Edmund Tyrel.Thomas Mildman.John Wylman.Roger Appleton.Richard Weston.

Now when the Bishop had received him, how he used him is easie (by his common practices with others) to judge. What his private conferences were, I know not, but what was publicly done in the Consistory at Pauls (the common stage for these tragedies) you shall here see.

*The first appearance of Thomas Wats in the Bishops Consistory.*The first appearance of
Th. Wats in the Bishops Consistory.

First upon Thursday, being the second day of May, Thomas Wats was brought thither before the Bishop of London, and there being examined upon his words had before the Lord Rich, and others (as is contained in their Letters) he did earnestly affirm the same to be true. Whereupon the Bishop objected, and examined him upon these Articles following, to the which he answered, as under may appear.

*Articles objected against Thomas Wats of Billerica in the County of Essex, within the Diocess of London, by Boner Bishop there, as enjuncts.*Articles assigned Th. Wats.The Sacraments of the Church of Rome.The substance of the Sacrament.

1 Item, that the said Thomas Wats was of Billerica, and so of the Jurisdiction of the Bishop of London.

2 Item, that he believed not in the Sacraments of the Holy and Catholick Church, as the Catholick Church of Rome, and all other Churches members of the same, ever hitherto have believed, and is taught of all good and faithful People, nor hath allowed the Sacraments, Rites, Usages, or Ceremonies of the said Church, but hath despised the same.

3 Item, that he believeth, and also hath taught others, that the substance of material Bread and Wine do remain in the Sacrament of the Altar after the consecration, and that the said material Bread and Wine are the signs and tokens of Christs Body hanged upon the Cross, and of his Blood there shed, and that in the said Sacrament there is only a memory or remembrance of Christs Body and Blood, and nothing else.

4 Item, that he believeth and doth precisely affirm, that the very true presence of Christs Body as Blood in substance, is not in the Sacrament of the Altar, but only in Heaven, and no where else.

5 Item, that he believeth, affirmeth, and saith, that the Mass now used in the Church of Rome, here in England, and others places, is full of Idolatry, abomination, and wickedness, and that Christ did never institute it, nor ordain it, nor yet allow it: is a good and laudable thing to be used in his Church.

6 Item, that he believeth and affirmeth, that Auricular Confession to be made unto the Priest is not necessary, but superfluous: and that it is enough for a man to believe only, and to confess himself unto God, without any Priest or Minister at any time, though he may have the Priest to confess him unto.

7 Item, that he believeth that Luther, Wickliffe, Doctor Barnes, and all other that have holden against the Sacrament of the Altar, and suffered death by fire or otherwise for the maintenance of the said opinion, were good men and faithful Servants and Martyrs of Christ in so believing and dying.

8 Item, that he hath and doth believe, that to fast, pray, or to do alms-deeds, is a thing utterly unprofitable; for if a man shall be saved, he shall be saved without doing of them; and if he shall be damned, they shall not help him, or do him any good at all.

9 Item, that the said Wats of late coming into open Court at the Sessions before the Lord Rich, Sir Henry Tyrel Knight, Anthony Brown Esquire, and others, and being then and there examined, did openly confess, that he had refused to come to the Church, and to hear there the Divine Service, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, according to the order of the Church: because that like as the Service of the Church set out in the days of the late King Edward the sixth, was said and alleged to be Abominable, Heretical, Schismatical, and all naught, so he the said Thomas Wats then and there said openly before the said Commissioners, that all that is now used and done in the Church, is Abominable, Heretical, Schismatical, and altogether naught: And that he did also then utter before the said Commissioners other Erroneous and Arrogant words, to the hurt of his Soul, and to the evil example of the People there present.

10 Item, that he the said Thomas by reason of the premises, was and is to be taken, had, reputed, and judged as a manifest and open Heretic, and for the same, by the order of Ecclesiastical Laws is to be declared accursed; and being obstinate and incorrigible, is to be delivered to the Secular Powers, there to be punished as an Heretic.

11 Item, that he over and besides all these offences and Trespases aforesaid, had also added this Trespas, that is to wit, that he had believed and deliberately spoken that the Church of Rome in her Rites, Ceremonies, Sacraments, Constitutions, and Traditions, is the Synagogue of Satan; and therefore that he had consented and agreed in opinion and belief with one John Toole, of late hanged at Charing Cross, who at the time of his executing, desired the People to pray to be delivered from the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, with all his enormities; as who should say, that his Authority and doings were Tyranny, and had all enormities and iniquities in them.

12 Item, that the premises and every part thereof be true, notorious, manifest, and openly spoken and talked of amongst the honest and credible persons in great multitude, and that of all and singular the same within Billerica aforesaid, and other places thereabout, being of the Diocess of London, there is a common voice and fame thereof.

The answer of the said Thomas Wats to the aforesaid Articles.

TO the first he said and confessed the same to be true in every part thereof.

To the second Article he answered, that he believeth in all the Sacraments according to Christs Institution, and the Catholick Church; but not according to the Bishop of Romes Church: and further said, that he doth the same that he had done in times past; for in the Church then believed, but not to believe, for the Church of Rome had taught him, that he did not believe as Christ hath taught him, but as the Church of Rome hath taught him, and other whose names he had heard of, which say he said did preach the Word of God, and since dy.

To the third he answered, that he hath and doth believe, that Christ's Body is in Heaven, and no where else: neither, that he will never believe that Christ's Body is in the Sacrament.

To the fourth he answered, confessing and firmly believing the same to be true.

To the fifth, that he did believe, that the Mass is abominable, and that he will not go once from that his belief.

To the sixth, that he neither did, nor yet doth believe, that the Priest can absolve him of his sins: howbeit, he doth not it is good to ask counsel at the Priests mouth.

To the seventh he said, that he knew not what the opinions of the said persons named in the said Article were; and in case the said persons did believe, that the Body, and Blood of Christ were really and in very deed in the Sacrament of the Altar, then that they were not good men. But in case they did believe that the Body and Blood of Christ was not in the Sacrament of the Altar really and truly, then he believed that they were good Christian men.

To the eighth, that he had not spoken as is contained in this Article, but said, that he hath and doth believe, that fasting, prayers, and almsdeeds be works of a lively faith.

To the ninth he confessed, that he did utter and speak, as in this Article is contained, and further he desired God that he might die in that faith and belief, wherein he now is.

To the tenth he answered and said, that he will submit himself herein to the order of the law: and further said, that he trusteth that with God he shall be blessed, although with men he be cursed.

The Bishop of Rome as enemy to Christ.

To the eleventh he said, the he believed that the Bishop of Rome is a mortal enemy to Christ and his Church. And as for Tooly he said, he did never see or know him: but in case the said Tooly did with and pray as is contained in the Article, then he did likewise with and consent with him therein.

To the twelfth he answered, that all which before he confessed to be true, is also true: and all that he hath denied to be true, he denieth again to be true, and believeth the same to be according to such things as he hath confessed.

By me Thomas Wats.

Another appearance of Thomas Wats in the Consistory.

The Wats again appeareth in the Consistory. The Bishop words to The Wats.

These Articles thus propounded and answered, the Bishop commanded him to appear again in the same place at three of the Clock in the afternoon, upon the same day. At which hour being brought thither by his Keeper, the Bishop began with him in this wise; Wats, you know what I said unto you to day, and what I appointed unto you at this time. The time is now come: weigh and consider with your self, that you are but a Man, and albeit that you will willingly cast away your Body, yet canst not so away your Soul, but while ye have time, return and confess the truth.

The answer of Wats.

Whereunto Thomas Wats answered and said, I am weary to live in such Idolatry as ye would have me to live in. Upon which answer the Bishop caused his Articles again to be read. He thereto answered as before, and farther, subscribed the same with his own hand.

Another appearance before D. Harpsfield.

Another appearance before D. Harpsfield.

The Bishop after many persuasions to cause him to recant, would him to depart as then, and to come again on Saturday at eight of the clock in the morning. Where the Bishop being absent, D. Nicolas Harpsfield, as then being his Deputy, did sit, and earnestly exhorted him to deny his opinions. To whom in the end he answered.

Well, ye have a law to condemn me, and I submit myself to the law; but not to the laws of the Church (as you call it:) And farther I doe affirm, and still stand to mine answers that I have made.

Whereupon Dr. Harpsfield would him to appear there again upon Friday, being the 10 day of the same Month of May. Upon which day the Bishop privately sent for the said Thomas Wats into his Chamber, and there with many fair promises tempted and tried him, whether he would revoke his errors (as he then termed them.) But Wats answered him in this sort; I will not believe your Church, neither the Romish Church, and therefore you do but labour in vain thus to travail with me. He was hereupon again dismissed for that time until Friday the 17. day of May, and then commanded to appear in the Consistory; which commandment he obeyed, and having the accustomed former Articles ministred unto him, made then such Answers as before.

Thomas Wats brought again to the Consistory.

This being toft and to fro from day to day, and hour to hour, he was at the last, the 18. day of the Month of May, brought into the Consistory, where first was made a brief recital of all the former procces: and there the said Wats being (by the Bishop and others) would to deny his profession, made this final Answer; God keep me from the Doctrine that ye would have me to come unto, which ye have now declared. And I beseech God that I may persevere in that, that I have done; for I will stand to mine Answers.

The Bishop perceiving his fair flattering promises nothing to prevail (and having no great store of other reasons to perwade with) put forth his last and strongest argument of Condemnation. Which being ended, he was delivered to the Sheriffs of London, and by them was sent to Newgate, where he remained until the 9. day of June, or (as some record) to the 22. of May: at what time he was carried unto Chelmsford, and there was brought to Scott's house, keeping then anline in Chelmsford, where, as they were eating meat with Haukes and the rest that came down to their burning; they prayed together both before and after their meat.

Then Wats went and prayed privately to himself, and afterward came to his wife and his six Children being there, and said these words in effect; Wife, and my good Children, I must now depart from you. Therefore henceforth know I you no more, but as the Lord hath given you unto me, so I give you again unto the Lord, whom I charge you see you do obey, and fear him: and beware ye turn not to this abominable Papistry, against the which I shall anon, by Gods grace, give my Blood. Let not the murdering of Gods Saints cause you, to relent, but take occasion thereby to be the stronger in the Lords quarrel, and I doubt not but he will be a merciful Father unto you. All these and such like words spake he unto them, and they unto him: of whom two, as it is said, offered to be burnt with him. In the end he bade them farewell, and kissed them all and was carried to the fire.

At the stake, after he had kissed it, he spake to my Lord Rich these or the like words: My Lord, faith he. Beware, beware, for you do against your own Conscience Lord Rich, herein, and without you repent, the Lord will revenge it: For you are the cause of this my Death.

Concerning the Childbed of Queen Mary as it was rumoured among the People.

Long persuasion had been in England with great expectation for the space of half a year or more, that the Queen was conceived with Child. This report was made by the Queens Physicians, and other high about the Court: so that divers were punished for saying the contrary. And commandment was given, that in all Churches supplication and prayer should be made for the Queens good deliverance: the certifier whereof ye may read before in the letter of the Council sent to Bomer.

ANNO 1555. And also the same moreover may appear by provision made before in Act of Parliament for the Child.

And now forasmuch as in the beginning of this month of June, about Whitsonide, the time was thought to be nigh that this young Matter should come into the World, and that Midwives, Rockers, Nurfs, with the Cradle and all, were prepared and in a readiness suddenly upon what cause or occasion it is uncertain, a certain vain Rumor was blown in London of the prosperous Deliverance of the Queen, and the Birth of the Child. Inasmuch that the Bells were rung, Bonfires and Processions made, not only in the City of London, and in most other parts of the Realm, but also in the Town of Antwerp Guns were shot off upon the River by the English Ships, and the Mariners thereof rewarded with an hundred Pi-Processions and Bonfires in London for Joy of the young Prince, Triumph at Antwerp for the same. sfolets or Italian Crowns by the Lady Regent, who was the Queen of Hungary. Such great rejoicing and triumph was for the Quens Deliverie, and that there was a Prince born. Yea, divers Preachers, namely one the Parson of S. Anne within Aldersgate, after Procession and T. Deum sung took upon him to describe the proportion of the Child, how fair, how beautiful, and great a Prince it was, as the like had not been seen.

In the midst of this great ado, there was a simple man (this I speak but upon Information) dwelling within four miles of Barwick, that never had been before half way to London, which said concerning the Bonfires made for Queen Maries Child, Here is a joyful Triumph, but at length all will not prove worth a mess of Pottage, as indeed it came to pass: For in the end all proved clean contrary, and the joy and expectations of Men were much deceived. For the People were certified, that the Queen neither was as then delivered, nor after was in hope to have any Child.

At this time many talked diversly. Some said this Rumor of the Quens Conception was spread for a Policy; some other affirmed, that she was deceived by a Timpany or some other like device, to think her self with Child, and was not; some thought she was with Child, and that it did by some chance miscarry, or else that she was bewitched; but what, was the truth thereof the Lord knoweth, to whom nothing is secret. One thing of mine own hearing and seeing, I cannot pass over unwittingly.

There came to me, whom I did both hear and see, one Isabel Malt, a Woman dwelling in Aldersgate-street in Horn-Alley, not far from the House where this present Book was printed, who before wifely made this declaration unto us, That the being delivered of a Man-child upon Whitunday in the Morning, which was the 11. day of June, Anno 1555. there came to her the Lord North, and another Lord to her unknown, dwelling then about Old Fish-street, demanding of her if she would part with her Child, and would swear that she never knew nor had any such Child. Which, if she would, her Son (they said) should be well provided for, she should take no care for it, with many fair offers if she would part with the Child.

After that came other Women also, of whom one they said should have been the Rocker; but she in no wise would let go her Son, who at the writing hereof being alive, and called Timothy Malt, was of the Age of 13. years and upward.

Thus much, I say, I heard of the Woman her self. What credit is to be given to her relation, I deal not withal, but leave it to the liberty of the Reader, to believe it they that list; to them that list not, I have no further warrant to assure them.

Among many other great preparations made for the Quens deliverance of Child, there was a Cradle very sumptuously and gorgeously trimmed, upon the which Cradle for the Child appointed, thre Verses were written, both in Latin and English.

Quam Maria sobolem, Deus optime, summe dedisti, Anglis incommensurabile, tuere, Rege.

The Child which thou to Mary, O Lord of Might hast sent,
 To Englands Joy, in health preserve, keep and defend.

About this time there came over into England a certain English Book, giving warning to Englishmen of the Spaniards, and disclosing certain close practices for recovery of Abby-Lands, which Book was called A Warning for England. Whereof ye shall understand more, God willing, when we come to the Spanish Inquisition. So that by the occasion of this Book, upon the 13. day of this Month came out a certain Proclamation, set forth in the name of the King and Queen, repealing and dissualling all manner of Books written or printed, whatsoever should touch any thing the emprising of the Popes Dignity, whereby not only much godly Edification was hindered, but also great peril grew among the People. The Copy of which Proclamation here followeth.

A Proclamation set out by the King and Queen, for the refraining of all Books and Writings, tending against the Doctrine of the Pope and his Church.

Whereas by the Statute made in the second year of King Henry the Fourth concerning the repressing of Hereſie, there is ordained and provided a great punishment, not only for the Authors, Makers, and Writers of Books containing wicked Doctrine, and erroneous and Heretical Opinions, contrary to the Catholick Faith and Determination of the holy Church, and likewise for their Fautors and Supporters; but also for such as shall have or keep any such Books or Writings and not make delivery of them to the Ordinary of the Diocess or his Ministers within a certain time limited in the said Statute, which Act or Statute being by Authority of Parliament of late revived, was also openly proclaimed, to the intent the Subjects of the Realm upon such Proclamation should the rather eschew the danger and penalty of the said Statute, and as yet nevertheless in most parts of the Realm the same is neglected, and little regarded: The King and Queen our Sovereign Lord and Lady, therefore, &c. it traitly charge and command, that no person or persons, of what estate, degree, or condition soever he or they be, from henceforth presume to bring or convey, or cause to be brought or conveyed into this Realm, any Books, Writings or Works hereafter mentioned; that is to say, any Book or Books, Writings or Works made or set forth, by, or in the name of Martin Luther, or any Book or Books, Writings or Works made and set forth, by, or in the name of Oecolampadius, Zuinglius, John Calvin, Pomerant, John Alasco, Bullinger, Bucer, Melancthon, Bernardinus Ochinus, Erasmus, Sacerius, Peter Martyr, Hugh Latimer, Robert Barnes, otherwise called Friar Barnes, John Bale, otherwise called Friar Bale, Justus Jonas, John Hooper, Miles Coverdale, William Tindal, Thomas Cranmer late Archbishop of Canterbury, William Turner, Theodore Basil, otherwise called Thomas Becon, John Frith, Roy, and the Book commonly called Halls Chronicle, or any of them in the Latin Tongue, Dutch Tongue, English Tongue, Italian Tongue, or French Tongue, or any other like Book, Paper, Writing or Work, made, printed, or set forth, by any other person or persons, containing false Doctrine contrary and against the Catholick Faith, and the Doctrine of the Catholick Church. And also that no person or persons presume to write, print, utter, sell, read, or keep any, or cause to be written, printed, uttered, or kept any of the said Books, Papers, Works or Writings, or any Book or Books written or printed in the Latin or English Tongue, concerning the common Service and Administration set forth in English to be used in the Churches of this Realm, in the time of King Edward the Sixth, commonly called the Communion Book, or Book of Common Service and ordering of Ministers, otherwise called, The Book set forth by Authority of Parliament, for Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, or to be used in the Mother Tongue within the Church of England, but shall within the space of fifteen days next after the publication of this Proclamation, bring or deliver, or cause the said Books, Writings, and Works, and every of them remaining in their custody and keeping, to be brought and delivered to the Ordinary of the Diocess, where such Books, Works, or Writings be or remain, or to his Chancellor or Commissaries, with out fraud, colour or deceit, at the said Ordinaries.

1. Whether they have seen any of the foresaid Books.
2. Whether they have heard of any of the said Books.
3. Where they were, and in what place they have seen them.
4. Whom they know to have lately come from beyond the Sea, especially from Zurich, Strabrough, Frankfurt, Wetzell, Emden and Disburch.
5. Whom they know or vehemently suspect to be common Carriers of Letters, or Money, thither from hence.

6. That they bring to my Lord Mayor all such Seditious Books as they have, or shall have found hereafter. In this Proclamation thou hast heard, Christian Reader, the profound and learned Censure of the Catholick Church of England, what Books they mislike and reject as Heretical, Schismatical, and pernicious. Against the which Catholick Censure of these learned Fathers, I have not at this time to infer: neither doth any leisure now serve to write Apologies in defence of these Authors here condemned. Only so much leave it may please the Reader to grant me to set before him here a pair of Ballance, wherein to weigh the Books on the one side condemned, with the Books on the other side allowed, to the end that we weighing the one with the other, may discern the better between them, which part weigheth best with Gods holy Truth and true Catholick Church, against manifest Idolatry and palpable Abomination. And now therefore, as they have in this present Proclamation given their condemnation upon these Books above recited: so I desire thee to give thy censure upon their Books by them allowed, and upon the matter in them contained, and mark well what good stuff it is.

Let us repeat and surveye first part of the said Primer (for to expels all it were too long) beginning with the first Lesson of our Lady, in these words:

Holy Mary; Mother most pure of Virgins all;
Mother and Daughter of the King Celestial,
So comfort us in our desolation,
That by thy Prayer and special Mediation.

We enjoy the reward of thy Heavenly Reign, &c.

Confer this with the Scriptures, good Reader, and judge uprightly whether this Doctrine be tolerable in the Church or not.

It followeth more in the second Lesson.

Holy Mary, of all godly the godliest,
Pray for us, all holy the holiest;
That be our Prayers accept may in good wise,
Which of thee was born, and reigneth above the Skies,
&c.

In the third Lesson.

Thy Son beseech with humble Intercession,
To purge us clean of our Transgression;
That so being redeemed we may the place ascend,
Where thou dwellest with him World without end.

Another Versicle.

Holy Mother of God, make thy Petition, that we may

And in the Anthem after Benedictus, thus it followeth:

We beseech thee of thy pity to have us in remembrance, and to make means for us unto Christ; that we being supported by thy help, may deserve to attain the Kingdom of Heaven. False Meite.

Furthermore in the Collect after it followeth:

And grant, that through the gracious Intercession of the Virgin thy Mother, we may be delivered from this present heaviness, and have the fruition of eternal gladness. Wrong Meditation.

It followeth moreover in the said Primer thus, concerning the material Crofs.

O God, which hast ascended thy most holy Crofs, and hast given lights to the darkness of the World, vouchsafe by the virtue of thy Crofs to illumine, visit and comfort both our Hearts and Bodies, &c. Idolatry to the material Crofs.

Moreover, in the name of St. John Baptist thus it prayeth:

O Lord, defend us always through the continual succours of St. John Baptist. For the more frail we be, the more need we have to be relieved with necessary Prayers, &c. Let no man glory in any man; for all things are yours, &c.
1 Cor. 3.

In which words note (good Reader) not only the absurdity of Doctrine, but also the solidity of the Reason. For where their Doctrine pretendeth that St. John Baptist should pray for us, here we pray to God for St. John Baptist, that he will hear his Prayer praying for us. It followeth furthermore in the name of Peter and Paul:

Hear us mercifully, and grant that through the merits of them both, we may obtain the glory everlasting, &c.

What is

is Apollo, but the Servants of him on whom

1 Cor. 3.

Of St. Andrew.

So let him, O Lord, be a continual Petitioner for us to thee, &c.

Of St. Lawrence thus:

Saint Lawrence the Deacon did work a great work. For by the virtue of the Holy Crofs he gave sight to the blind, &c.

And how can this be true, when the Holy Crofs was not yet found in the time of St. Lawrence? For Helen which first found the Crofs, as they say, came after St. Lawrence more than forty years.

To Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury. By the Blood of Thomas, which be for thee did spend, Make us, Christs, to climb, as hither Thomas did ascend.

Of

Anno 1555. Of St. Nicholas.
O God, which hast glorified Nicholas, thy holy Bishop, with innumerable Miracles, grant we beseech thee, that by his Merits and Prayers we may be delivered from the fire of Hell.

Of Mary Magdalen.
Grant we beseech thee, through thy mercy, to let her purchase for us the Bliss everlasting, &c.

Another Prayer to our Lady.
The dolorous compassion of Gods sweet Mother, Bring us to the Bliss of Almighty God the Father, &c.

Another Prayer in the said Primer to our Lady.
Establish us in peace and tranquillity,
And change the name of sinful Eva:
Lose thy Prisoners from Captivity,
Unto the blind give sight again.
Deliver us from malignity,
To the end we may some Grace attain.
Shew thy self to be a Mother:
So that he accept our Petition.
Deliver us from bondage of Sin, &c.

Item,
Holy Mother succour the miserable, comfort the weak Frighted, give courage to the desperate, pray for the People, make Intercession for the Clergy, and be a mean for the devout Woman-kind, &c.

Another blasphemous Prayer.
O thou meek Mother, have mercy therefore
On Wretches, for whom thou badst these pains all,
Seeing thy Son that Vine cluster pressed sore:
And from the pestilence of Death eternal,
Keep us by voiding the Fiend infernal,
And join us with them which rewarded be
With eternal Life, seeing the Deity.

Another blasphemy in the said Primer.
Hail Queen, Mother of Mercy, our life, our sweetness, our hope. Unto thee do we cry and sigh, weeping and wailing. Come off therefore our Patroness, cast upon us thy pitiful eyes, and after this our banishment, shew to us the blessed fruit of thy Womb. O Gate of glory be for us a Reconciliation unto the Father and the Son. From the wretches their faults expel: wipe the spots of sins unclean, &c.

Item, to our Lady.
The fruit of thy Womb everlasting,
We may behold through thy deserving, &c.

Item,
Grant we beseech thee, that by her Merits and Prayers we may attain to that unspeakable Joy, whereas she being assumpt, dost now rejoice with thee in Heaven for ever.

And thus much hitherto of this Catholic Primer, called our Ladies Mattens. Whereunto, if it were not tedious for the Reader, we would also adjoin our Ladies Pfalter, to the intent that all indifferent Readers, as they have seen what Books these Catholic Fathers have condemned and do condemn for Heretical; so the same also may see and judge, what Books on the other side they approve as lawful and Catholic. And forasmuch as it is not known peradventure to all men, what our Ladies Pfalter is, or what it meaneth; yea, and some peradventure will deny any such Book of our Ladies Pfalter to be written or approved, here therefore we will first produce the name of the Author, who was Bonaventure, a Sera-phical Doctor, Bishop also and Cardinal, Canonized moreover by Pope Sixtus the Fourth, An. 1482. for a Saint in the Kalender, who in his Book thus intitled in Latin, Incipit Pfalterium beate Virginie, compilationem per Seraaphicum Doctorem Sanctum Bonaventuram Episcpum Albanensem, necnon sancta Romanæ Ecclesiæ Pres-biterum Cardinalem, in honorem generitricis, &c. Fol. 34.
In the second part of his whole works (which were imprinted at Argentea, An. 1495.) to shew himself a devout Servant to his Lady, hath taken every Psalm of Davids Pfalter (which he peculiarly made and referred to Almighty God) and hath in divers of the said Psalms and Verses put out the name of the Lord, and hath placed in the name of our Lady. This being done through the whole Psalms and every one of them; it is now called our Ladies Pfalter, used to be sung and said in the praise and service of our Lady. A brief taste whereof, for Examples sake (for, to shew all, it were too long) we thought here to exhibit unto the Reader in order, as followeth.

The Title in English of the Pfalter.

¶ Here beginneth the Pfalter of the blessed Virgin, The Title made by the Seraphical Doctor St. Bonaventure, the called our Bishop of Alban, and Cardinal of the holy Church of Ladies Rome. Pfalter.

1. Beatus vir, qui intelligit nomen tuum, Maria Virgo, The Book cis pulchritudine carnis; superas Angelos & Archange- by a parte los excellentia sanctitatis. Misericordia tua & gratia opem St.

ubique predicatur, &c. Gloria Patri. Bonaventuræ

That is to say,

Blessed is the man which understandeth thy Name, O Virgin Mary, thy Grace shall comfort his Soul. Thou shalt bring forth in him the most plentiful fruit of Justice, being watered as it were with fountains of water.
All Women thou shalt in the beauty of thy body; all Angels and Archangels in the excellency of thy Holiness. Thy mercy and thy grace is magnified every where,
&c. Glory be to the Father, &c.

2. Quare fremuerunt inimici nostri, & adversum nos meditati sunt inania? Protergat nos dextera tua, Mater Dei, ut acies terribiliter confundens & destruens eos.
Venite ad eam, qui laboratis & tribulati estis, & dabit refrigerium animabus vestris. Accedite ad eam in tenta-tionibus vestris, & stabiliet vos serenitas vultus ejus.
Benedicite illam in toto corde vestro, misericordia enim illius plena est terra, &c. Gloria Patri.

Why do our Enemies fret and imagine vain things against us? Let thy right hand defend us, O Mother of God, terribly confounding and destroying them as a Sword. Come unto her all ye that labour and are troubled, and she will give rest unto your Souls. Come unto her in your temptations, and her loving Countenance shall stablish and comfort you. Bless her with all your heart; for the Earth is full of her mercy. Glory be to the Father, &c.

3. Domina quid multiplicati sunt qui tribulant me?
In tempestate tua persequeris & dissipabis eos. Dissolve co-llegationes impietatis nostræ; tolle fasciculos peccatorum nostrorum. Misere mei Domina & sana infirmitatem meam; tolle dolorem & angustiam cordis mei. Ne tra-das me manibus inimicorum meorum, & in die mortis meæ conforto animam meam. Deduc me ad portum sa-lutis, & spiritum meum redde saltem meo.

Why are they so many, O Lady, that trouble me?
In thy fury thou shalt persecute and destroy them. Loose the bonds of our impiety, and take away the burden of our Sins. Have mercy upon me, O Lady, and heal my infirmity. Take away my sorrow and the anguish of my heart. Deliver me not into the hands of mine Enemies, and in the day of my death comfort my Soul.
Bring me unto the haven of Salvation, and restore my Spirit unto my Maker and Creator. Glory be to the Father, &c.

4. Cum invocarem, exaudisti me Domina, & i sublimi folio tuo mei dignata es recordari. A rugientibus preparatis ad eam & de manibus quærentium me liberabit gratia tua. Quoniam benigna est misericordia & pietas tua in omnes, qui invocant nomen sanctum tuum. Bene-dictio sit Domina in æternum, & majestas tua in se-culum. Glorificate eam omnes gentes, &c.

When I called to thee, thou heardest me, O my Lady, & in a high place thou didst vouchsafe to think upon me. From the roaring of them that prepare themselves to devour me, and out of the hands of such as seek after my life, thy grace shall deliver me: Because thy mercy and thy pity are great towards all them that call upon thy holy Name. Blessed be thou, O Lady, for ever, and thy majesty for ever and ever. Glorify her all Nations of the Earth, &c.

5. Verba mea auribus percipe Domina, &c. Convertite luctum nostrum in gaudium, & tribulationem nostram in jubilationem. Corrumpite ante pedes nostros inimici nostri; virtute tua eorum capta conterantur, &c.

Hear my words, O Lady, &c. turn our mourning into gladness, and our trouble into rejoicing. Let our Enemies fall before our feet, and with thy power dash their heads in pieces.

6. Domina ne in furore Dei sinas corripi me, neque in ira ejus judicari, &c. De porta inferi, & de ventre abyssi sanctus precibus libera nos. Aperiantur nobis janua sempiterna, ut enarremus in aeternum mirabilia tua. Quia mei mortuique qui in inferno sunt, laudabunt te Domina, sed qui tua gratia vitam eternam obtinebunt.

O Lady, suffer me not to be rebuked in Gods anger, nor to be chastised in his heavy displeasure, &c. From the gate and deep pit of Hell, with thy holy Prayers deliver us. Let the everlasting gates be opened, that we may shew forth thy marvellous works for ever. Because the dead, nor they that be in Hell, shall not praise thee, O Lady, but they which shall obtain by thy grace life everlasting.

7. Domina mea in te speravi, de inimicis meis libera me Domina. Conclude ora Leonis, & labia persecutorum confringe. Non moris propter nomen tuum facere nobis misericordiam tuam. Splendor vultus tui fulgeat super nos, ut servetur conscientia nostra apud altissimum. Si persequitur inimicus animam meam, Domina, adjuvatio tuo conforter, ne vibret gladium suum contra me.

O my Lady, in thee will I put my trust; deliver me from mine Enemies, O Lady. Stop the mouth of the Lion, and bind the lips of the Persecutors. Make no tarrying for thy Names sake, to shew thy mercy upon me. Let the brightness of thy Countenance shine upon us, that our Conscience may be saved before the Most High. If the Enemy do persecute my Soul, O Lady, help me that he destroy me not.

8. Confitebor tibi Domina in toto corde meo, & narrabo in populo laudem & gloriam tuam, &c. Inveniet gratiam per te innocentem gratia & saluti; reserant ad iudicandum humiles penitentes; sana contritiones corda eorum, &c.

I will give thanks to thee, O Lady, with my whole heart, and will shew forth among the Nations thy praise and glory, &c. They shall find grace through thee, the Leader out of grace and salvation, the humble and penitent groan for pardon and forgiveness; heal thou the sores of their heart, &c.

9. In te Domina confido, &c. Exquirite illum a juventute vestra, & glorificabit vos, &c. Misericordia illius nostrorum auferat multitudinem peccatorum, & fecunditatem nobis conferat meritorum, &c.

In thee, O Lady, do I put my trust, &c. Seek her even from your youth, and she shall glorify you, &c. Her mercy take from us the multitude of our sins, and give unto us plenteousness of merits, &c.

10. Salvum me fac mater pulchra dilectionis, fons clementiae, &c. Gyrum terrae sola circuis, ut subvenias invocantibus te, &c.

Save me O Mother of Love, and Fountain of Mercy, &c. Thou thy self alone hast gone about the compass of the Earth, to help them that call upon thee.

11. Utique quo Domina oblocutis me, & non liberas me in die tribulationis? Utique quo exaltabitur inimicus meus super me? Potentia virtutis tuae contere ipsum, &c. Magnificamus te gratia innocentem, per quam secula reparantur, &c.

How long dost thou forget me O Lady, and dost not deliver me in the day of my trouble? How long shall mine Enemy triumph over me? With thy mighty power destroy him, &c. We magnify thee the finder and the author of Grace, by whom the world is repaired, &c.

12. Confitebor tibi Domina, quoniam tuam speravi in te, &c. Benedicite sicut voca tuas, quibus laude deifico Salvatore eorum, &c.

Praise me O Lady, for in thee have I put my trust, &c. Blessings be thy words, which with thy diffusing Milk didst nourish the Saviour, &c.

13. Diligam te Domina casti & terrae; in gentibus nomen tuum invocabo. Confringam illi tribulam corde, & vultus eius contra inimicos suos, &c. Religiosissime, honorate illam, quia ipsa est auctrix vestra & specialis advocata. Ego refrigerium nostrum, gloriosa mater Christi, quia tu es totius religionis mirabile firmamentum.

I will love thee O Lady of Heaven and Earth; I will call upon thy name among the Nations. Confess thyself unto her, ye that are troubled in heart, and she shall strengthen you against your Enemies, &c. All ye Cloysters honour her, for she is your helper and special Advocate. Be thou our refreshing and rest, for thou art the marvellous foundation of all Religion.

20. Exaudi nos Domina in die tribulationis, &c. Ne projicias nos in tempore mortis nostrae, sed succurre animae, cum deseruerit corpus suum. Mitte Angelum in occursum ejus per quem ab hostibus defendatur, &c. Sentiat in penus refrigerium tuum, & concede ei locum inter electos Dei.

Hear us O Lady in the day of trouble, &c. Cast us not away in the time of our death, but succour our Soul when it forsaketh the Body. Send an Angel to meet it, that it may be defended from the Enemies, &c. In torments and pain let it feel thy comfort, and grant to it a place among the elects of God.

25. Ad te Domina levavi animam, &c. Non praevaleant adversum me laquei mortis, &c. Ductrix mea esto ad patriam, & me catus Angelorum dignetur aggregare.

To thee O Lady do I lift up my Soul, &c. Let not the snares of Death prevail against me, &c. Be thou my guide to the heavenly Rest, and to the company of Angels associate me.

26. Judica me Domina, quoniam ab innocentia mea digressus sum: sed quia speravi in te non infirmabor, &c.

Judge thou me O Lady, for I am fallen from mine Innocency: but because I put my trust in thee, therefore I shall not fall, &c.

27. Domina illuminatio mea sit splendor faciei tuae, &c. Serenitas gratiae tuae resurget menti meae, &c. O Lady, let the brightness of thy face be my sight, and let the clearness of thy grace shine upon my mind, &c.

28. Ad te Domina clamabo, &c. Miserere mei in die angustiae meae, & in luce veritatis tuae libera me.

To thee O Lady, &c. Have mercy upon me in the day of my trouble, and in the light of thy Truth deliver me, &c.

31. In te Domina speravi, non confundar in aeternum, in gloria tua suscipe me. Tu es fortitudo mea & refugium meum, consolatio mea & protectio mea, &c. Educas me laqueo quem absconderunt mihi, quoniam tu es adiutrix mea. In manus tuas Domina commendo spiritum meum.

In thee O Lady do I put my trust, let me not be confounded for ever, in thy glory receive me. Thou art my strength and my refuge, my consolation and protection, &c. Deliver me from the snare that they have laid for me, because thou art my helper. Into thy hands I commend my Spirit, &c.

34. Benedicam Dominam in omni tempore, &c. In periculis in rebus dubiis invocare eam, & in necessitatibus invenietis auxilium, &c. Sumite exemplum conversionis ejus & emulemini fuita humilitatis ejus. Quia ergo Domina humilima fuit, Verbum incarnatum & te carnem suscipere coegit.

I will always praise our Lady, &c. In perils, in adversity call upon her, and in time of need ye shall find succour. Let her conversation be an example unto you, and follow the virtue of her humility. Because therefore O Lady thou wast humble and lowly. Thou didst compel the Word incarnate to take flesh of thee.

36. Dixit injustus, &c. A malo proposito discedat; Mater Dei, inclina vultum Dei super nos: Coge illum peccatoribus misereri, &c. Benedicam tui imperium tuum super caelos, benedicam tui magnificentia tua super terram.

The wicked man said, &c. Let him depart from his evil purpose; O Mother of God, turn the countenance of God towards us: Compel him to be merciful unto Sinners. Blessed be thy Lupery and Dominion in Heaven, and blessed be thy Magnificence upon the Earth.

45. Eructavit cor meum verbum bonum Domina, &c. Per tuam sanctitatem peccata mea purgantur: per tuam integritatem mihi incorruptibilitatem condonatur, &c.

My heart is inditing a good matter, O Lady, &c. By thy Holiness let my sins be purged, by thy Integrity let me obtain incorruption, &c.

47. Omnes gentes plaudite manibus, &c. Quoniam ipsa est porta vite, janua salutis, & vite nostre reconciliatrix: spes penitentium, salumen lugentium, pax beatorum, atque salus. Misere mei Domine, misere mei, quia in te lux & spes omnium confidentium in te, &c.

Clap your hands all ye People, &c. For she is the gate of Life, the door of Salvation, the reconciler of our Life; the hope of the Penitent, the comfort of the Sorrowful, the blessed peace of Hearts, and Salvation. Have mercy upon me, O Lady, have mercy upon me; for thou art the light and hope of all that put their trust in thee.

Thou that rulest Israel, &c. The favour of life cometh from her, and all health floweth out of her heart, &c.

91. Qui habitat in adiutorio matris Dei, in protectione ipsius commorabitur, &c. Clamare ad illum in periculis vestris, et flagellum non appropinquabit Tabernaculo vestro. Frustris gratias inveniet qui speraverit in illa. Porta Paradisi reverbatur ei.

Who dwell in the help of the Mother of God, shall dwell in the shadow of her protection, &c. Cry unto him in your dangers, and the scourge shall not come near your Tabernacle. The fruit of grace shall be to him who trusteth in her, and the gate of Paradise shall be open unto him.

95. Venite exultemus Domine nostra, &c. Suscipe in fine animas nostras, & introduce nos in requiem aeternam, &c.

Come let us rejoice to our Lady, &c. Receive our Souls at our last end, and bring them into everlasting Rest, &c.

105. Confitemini Domine nostra, & invocate nomen ejus, &c. Salus sempiterna in manu tua, Domine, &c.

Praise our Lady, and call upon her name, &c. Everlasting salvation is in thy hand, O Lady, &c.

110. Dixit Dominus Domine nostra; Sede mater mea a dextris meis, &c.

The Lord said unto our Lady; Sit here my Mother on my right hand, &c.

114. In exitu anima mea ex hoc mundo occurre ei Domine, & suscipe eam, &c. Esto illi scala ad regnum caelorum, & iter rectum ad Paradisum Dei, &c.

In the passing of my Soul out of this World, come and meet it, O Lady, and receive it, &c. Be to it a Ladder to the Kingdom of Heaven, and a right way to the Paradise of God, &c.

119. Miserationibus tuis plena est terra, ideo viam justificationum tuarum exquisivi, &c. Concupiscam in aeternum laudare te Domine cum docueris me justificationes tuas, &c.

125. Qui confidunt in te, mater Dei, non timebunt faciem inimici, &c.

They that put their trust in thee, O Mother of God, shall not be afraid of the face of their Enemy, &c.

127. Nisi Domine adseveraverit domum cordis nostri, non permanebit aedificium ejus.

Except our Lady shall build the house of our Heart, the building thereof shall not continue.

128. Beati omnes qui timent Dominam nostram, & beati omnes qui sciunt facere voluntatem suam, &c.

Blessed is every one that feareth our Lady, and blessed be all they which know to do her will, &c.

130. De profundis clamavi ad te Domine, Domine exaudi vocem meam: Fiant aures tuae intendentes, &c.

Out of the deep I have called unto thee, O Lady, O Lady hear my voice, &c.

132. Memento Domine David, & omnium invocantium nomen tuum, &c.

140. Eripe me Domine ab omni malo, & ab hoste inferno defende me, &c.

Deliver me O Lady from all evil, and from the infernal Enemy defend me, &c.

145. Oculi nostri sperant in te Domine. Miste nobis cibum & escam delectantem. Laudationem tuam loquatur lingua mea, et benedicam te in seculum seculi.

Our eyes look up and trust in thee. Do thou send us meat and food convenient, &c. My tongue shall speak thy praise, and shall bless thee for ever.

148. Lauda, Jerusalem, Dominam, glorifica illam etiam O Sion. Ipsa enim construit muros tuos, & filios tuos benedicit. Gratia sua te impingat, pacemque donat terminis tuis.

Praise thou our Lady, O Jerusalem, and glorify her likewise O thou Sion: For she buildeth up thy Walls, and blesseth thy Children. Her grace maketh thee fat, and giveth peace unto thy coast, &c.

I could recite also other things more of like Blasphemy, following immediately after this Psalter of our Lady, in the Seraphical Doctor aforesaid, as these:

Ecce Domine Salvatrix mea, fiducialiter agam in te, & non timebo, &c. Quia fortitudo mea es tu. Et facta es mihi in salutem, i. Behold my Lady my Saviour, I will be bold in thee, and will not fear, &c. Because thou art my strength, &c. And art become my Salvation, &c.

Exalta totum genus humanum, quia talem dedit tibi Mediatricem Dominus Deus tuus, i. Rejoyce, O all Mankind, because the Lord thy God hath given unto thee such a Mediatrice, &c.

Confitebor tibi Domine, quia abscondisti haec a sapientibus, & revelasti ea parvulis, i. I will confess to thee, O Lady, because thou hast hid these things from the wise, and hast revealed them to the little Ones.

Generatio provera atque perversa agnosce Dominam nostram Salvatricem tuam. Numquid ipse est mater tua qua possedit te, & in fide generavit te? i. O thou wicked and peevish Generation, knowledge our Lady thy Saviour. Is not she the Mother that hath possessed thee, and in Faith hath begotten thee?

O benedicta, in manibus tuis reposita est nostra salus, i. O thou blessed, in thy hands is laid up our Salvation, &c.

In nomine tuo omne genu flectatur, caelestium, &c. In thy Name let every knee bend, in Heaven and Earth, and in Hell.

Quomodo infans sine Nutrice non potest vivere; ita nec sine Domina nostra posses habere salutem, i. Like as an Infant cannot live without the Nurse, so neither canst thou have Salvation without our Lady.

Quicumque vult salvus esse, ante omnia opus est ut teneat de Maria firmam fidem. Quam nisi quisque integram inviolatamque servaverit, ab ipso dubio in aeternum peribit, i. Who so will be saved, before all things he must needs hold hold this Belief of our Lady: which Believe, unless every one shall hold perfect and found, he shall perish without doubt for ever.

Moreover, after these so horrible things and intollerable to be heard, consequently in the next tractation followeth the Rosary or Garland of our Lady, compiled by the said Bonaventure; wherein these words are to be read as followeth: O Mediatrix between God and Man, the Lord hath worthily magnified thee, but thou only shouldst conceive his Son. Wherefore, O good Mary our Mediatrix, Mother of Grace, and Mother of Mercy, &c. And moreover, within few lines it followeth in these words, Therefore, O our Emperess and Lady most bountiful, by the authority of a Mother command, command (I say) thy well-beloved Son, that he will stir up our minds from the love of worldly things, to heavenly desires, &c.

Item, O the Advocate of the miserable, the eyes of thy Servants be directed to thee, &c.

To these premises, I might also adjoin the horrible and most blasphemous words of the said Bonaventure in the said Book, Fol. 100, pag. 2, Col. 1. which I beseech thee to read and note. Qua major bonitas quam quod Christus, i. What greater goodness can be, than that Christ is content to be captive upon the Altar?

Whereupon he speaketh in the person of Jeremy, saying, Behold I am in your hands, do with me as you see good, &c. Where note (saith he) that when any Duke or Prince is taken Prisoner for his Subjects, he is not let go, before he pay some great sum of Money for his ransom. Even so neither we ought to let Christ go out of our hands being our Prisoner and Captive, except he grant to us remission of our Sins and his heavenly Kingdom. The Priest therefore lifteth up the Body of Christ upon the Altar, as though he said thus, Behold him whom the whole World is not able to comprehend, he is holden here our Captive, wherefore let us hold him fast, and not let him go before we obtain of him our requests, &c.

Notes.

The Church of Rome examined.

Is not here good Catholick stuff (Christian Reader) row your Counters I beseech you this Doctrine with the Doctrine of the Apostles, which teach us that we are fully complicit in Christkind I will refer me to no better Judge than to your own Conscience. And now therefore, if any man have been in doubt in times past of the Doctrine and proceeding of the Church of Rome, whether it be rightly charged with blind Errors, with Blasphemy intollerable, and Idolatry abominable or not, here now he may be fully certified and resolved. For where was ever Idolatry or Blasphemy to be found, if it be not here in this Martins and Psalter of our Lady? If Idolatry be to make an Idol to be worshipped as God, which is no god, what do we here but make an Idol of our Lady (as we call her) to be worshipped with, no less dignity, glory, authority, reverence and service, than is the Lord God himself? And as he is called our Lord, so she is called our Lady. And if he be King, yet she is the Queen of Heaven. And though he have the name of God, yet she beareth so the title of the Mother of God; that as Mothers have authority over their Children, so she is willed to shew her self to be his Mother, to cause him to grant our Petitions. Finally, if he be our Patron, yet she is our Patroness. The Commandment saith, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. And what worship or service can we give to God, more than we do ascribe unto her? And what benefit is to be asked at the hands of Christ our Saviour, which is not equally asked of her? To save our Souls, to give us peace, to grant grace, to comfort the desperate, to loose our captivity, to release our sins, to deliver from the fiend, to bring to Heaven, &c. To her we pray, we cry, we weep, we sigh, we groan, we knock and kneel, to her we trust, and if we believe not also in our Lady, we be Heretics ipso facto.

The Church of Rome convicted of manifest Idolatry.

Furthermore, as Christ our only Lord and Saviour hath his Church and Congregation which profits his Name, of whom we are called Christians; so neither is the likewise without her Chappels, her Cloysters, her Chapters, Fraternities and Brotherhoods, which professing her name in like sort, are called our Ladies Brethren, or white Friars, besides an innumerable sort of other Patrons of Churches, of whom every one hath his peculiar Church and Religion by himself, yet all these together be included under the general devotion of our Lady their supreme Patroness and Governess.

To Trust and believe in our Lady.

Now to proceed further to the other part of the Commandment, which saith, Him only shalt thou serve. What service hath the Lord in all the Church, but our Lady also jointly with him hath the like? Her Mass, her Martins, her Even-song, her Hours and Complin, her Rosaries, her Anthems, her Collects, her Primer, her Psalter, her Holy-days likewise, yea five to one. Finally, as the Lord hath his Prayer called the Lords Prayer, so hath she her Ave Marias, yea ten Aves to one Pater noster; yea and read further in the said Bonaventure, and ye shall see he also to have her Te Deum, her Benedicamus, her Magnificat, and also her Quicumque vult.

If the Lord our God had not expressed unto us his own will by plain words, limiting unto us by express Injunction what to believe, what to follow, and how to worship and serve him, and how to receive from him our Salvation; but had left us to the imagination of our own Inventions, every man to shift for himself after his own policy, then peradventure this way taken by the Popes Church, to make friends and mediators between God and us, for reconciliation, remission, and salvation, might have some rhyme or reason; but now Gods Word doth bind us, doth prescribe and limit us precisely in every point touching Salvation, what to believe, and what to do, shewing us plainly that we cannot be saved, but by the Blood of his Son only, neither can be justified but by Faith only in the same Christ his Son: Wherefore not to believe that which he hath promised, is infidelity, and to follow any other belief than he hath set us, is plain Idolatry. The which two special Errors most commonly do follow the Doctrine of the Romish Church, as not only in this Primer and Psalter of our Lady aforesaid, but also in all their proceedings, teachings and preachings, besides may well appear. For where the Scripture doth perfectly promise and pronounce us, to be justified through our Faith in Christ, and willet us to seek our Salvation no where else, but only in the merits of Jesus: the Institution of the Church of Rome, neither will receive that God hath freely given, (wherein standeth Infidelity) neither yet will seek the same there where as they should, but in the merits and prayers of our Lady, of St. John Baptist, St. Peter and Paul, St. Andrew, St. Nicholas, St. Thomas of Canterbury, and by the worthiness of the material Cross, and such other unlawful means, wherein standeth plain Idolatry. And yet such Books as these can be suffered among the Catholics to be currant, as good, wholesome and lawful Books; whereas the other, which lead us the true way from Infidelity and blind Idolatry to true Christianity, in no wise can be sufferable. But of this to complain it is vain. Wherefore to pass from this Proclamation, let us proceed (God willing) in the course of our History.

The Story of Thomas Osmond, William Bamford, and Thomas Osborne, Martyrs.

Mention was made before in the story of Thomas Hauker, of six Prisoners besides, which were sent down with him to Essex the same time as he went to Execution. Of which six Prisoners, three were sent to be burned, the other three to recant, and do penance: Of whom it followeth next in the story now to interest. The names of which fix were these, Thomas Osmond Fuller, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weaver, Thomas Osborne Fuller, Nicholas Chamberlain Weaver, Thomas Brodhill Weaver, Richard Webb Weaver, being all of the Town of Coxhall. All which fix Coxhall Men, next after the Examinations of Thomas Hauker, and Thomas Watts, were sent up to Boner to be examined, by the Earl of Oxford and Sir Philip Paris Knight, with a Letter also with them sent, the Copy whereof here followeth.

A Letter from the Earl of Oxford to Bishop Boner.

Anno of Coxhall aforesaid, whose names hereafter do follow, audelices, Nicholas Chamberlain Weaver, John Walker Fuller, Thomas Brodehill Weaver, Richard Web Weaver, William Bamford, alias Butler, Weaver, and Thomas Osborne Fuller, for that they at the Feast of Easter now last, have not obeyed to the Order of the holy Catholick Church in receiving of the Sacraments; but obstinately refusing the same, besides of holding divers other Opinions, contrary to the Faith of the said Church. Wherefore we have thought it good to send the same Persons unto your good Lordship further to be ordered, as in such case shall appertain. Thus we commit your good Lordship to the keeping of Almighty God. From Hedingham the first of May, Anno 1555.

Your Lordship: assuredly, Oxford, Philip Paris.

Thus the said Prisoners being sent up the first day of May, were brought before the said Bishop the 17. of the said Month to be examined upon divers and sundry Articles ministered and objected against them; wherunto they were compelled to answer, and to put their hands to the same: the Copie of which Articles and Answers, being all one in form and effect (if the Register say true) here followeth.

The Copy of the Articles objected against Thomas Oimond, William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlain of Coxhall.

1. Item, That thou Thomas Oimond Fuller, wast and art of the Parish of Coxhall, within the Diocesis of London, and thou hast not believed nor dost believe, that there is here in the Earth one Catholick and Universal whole Church, which doth hold and believe all the Faith and Religion of Christ, and all the necessary Articles and Sacraments of the same.

2. Item, That thou hast not believed nor dost believe, that thou art necessarily bounden under the pain of the damnation of thy Soul, to give full Faith and Credence unto the said Catholick and Universal Church, and to the Faith and Religion of the same in all necessary points of the said Faith and Religion, without doubting or wavering in the said Faith and Religion, or in any part thereof.

3. Item, That thou hast not believed that the Faith and Religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spain, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being true members and parts of the said Catholick and Universal Church, do believe and teach, is both agreeing with the Faith and Religion of Christ, and also is the very true Faith and Religion which all Christian People ought to believe, observe, follow and keep; but contrariwise, thou hast believed and dost believe, that that Faith and Religion, which the said Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforesaid, have heretofore believed, and do believe, is false erroneous and naughty, and in no wise ought to be believed, observed, kept, and followed of any Christian person.

4. Item, That albeit it be true, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is in substance the very Body and Blood of our Saviour Christ under the forms of Bread and Wine; and albeit that it be so believed, taught and preached undoubtedly in the said Church of Rome, and all other Churches aforesaid, yet thou hast not so believed, nor dost so believe, but contrariwise thou hast believed, and dost believe firmly and steadfastly, that there is not in the said Sacrament of the Altar, under the said forms of Bread and Wine, the very substance of Christs Body and Blood, but that there is only the substance of material and common Bread and Wine, with the forms thereof; and that the said material and common Bread and Wine are only the signs and tokens of Christs Body and Blood, and are by Faith to be received only for a remembrance of Christs passion and death, without any such substance of Christs Body and Blood at all.

5. Item, That thou hast believed and taught, and hast openly spoke and defended, and so dost believe, think, maintain and defend, that the very true receiving and eating of Christs Body and Blood, is only to take material and common Bread, and to break it and distribute it among the People, remembering thereby the passion and death of Christ only.

6. Item, That thou hast likewise believed, though it and spoken, that the Mass, now used in the Realm of England, and other the Churches aforesaid, is abominable and naughty, and full of Idolatry, and is of the Ordinance of the Pope, and not of the Institution of Christ, and hath no goodness in it, saving the Gloria in Excelsis, the Epistle and Gospel, and therefore thou hast not, nor will not come and be present at Mass, nor receive the Sacrament of the Altar, nor any other Sacrament of the Church, as they are now used in the Realm of England, &c.

7. Item, That thou hast in times past believed, and yet dost now believe, that Auricular Confession is not necessary to be made unto the Priest, but is a thing superfluous, void and naughty, only to be made to God and to none other person. And likewise thou hast condemned as superfluous, vain and unprofitable, all the Ceremonies of the Church, and the Service of the same, and hast said that no Service in the Church ought to be said but in the English Tongue, and if it be otherwise, it is unlawful and naughty.

8. Item, That thou being notoriously and openly suspected for an Heretick, and a person culpable in the Premises, wast of late called and convened before the Earl of Oxford, and Master Philip Paris, and there wast charged with the said Heresies, especially against the Sacrament of the Altar. And because thou didst maintain and stand to thy said Heresies, and wouldst not come to the Church and be confessed, and receive the said Sacrament as other Christian People did, but utterly didst refuse to do the same, thou wast by the said Earl of Oxford, and Mr. Philip Paris sent up by a Constable unto the Bishop of London, and wast by them denounced, taught, and put up to me as an Heretick and misbeliever, &c.

9. Item, That thou hast known and believed, thou dost know and believe, or at least thou hast credibly heard reported, spoken and said, that all and all manner of persons, which do teach, preach, or hold any thing concerning the Sacraments of the Church, or any the Articles of the Faith, otherwise than is found already discussed and determined by our Mother the holy Church, or doth call into doubt or question that thing which is already decided or determined by the Church, or that willingly and wittingly do utter, openly or privily, any slanderous or blasphemous words concerning the said Sacraments or any of them, or that do preach, teach or keep any Sect or kind of Heresie against the wholesome Doctrine of the Church, and do wittingly, willingly, or obstinately defend the Sect or kind of Heresie, are by the Canons of the whole and Universal Catholick Church, and also by the Ecclesiastical Laws of this Church of England, by their so doing, accursed with that Curse, which doth separate them from the entry into the Church, from the receiving of the Sacraments, and from the company of faithful People, and are (in continuing in this said Sect and Heresie) to be pronounced, declared, and taken for Hereticks, and to be delivered to the Secular Power, and by the Laws Temporal of this Realm of England, and the custom of the same, to be by the said Secular Power put to death and burnt for this said Sect and Heresie.

10. Item, That thou by reason of the Premises wast and art to be pronounced, taken, had, reputed, and judged for a manifest and open, wilful and obstinate Heretick, for a wicked and cursed Person, and to be punished accordingly for the same, according to the said Canon Laws, usages and customs.

The Answers which the said Thomas Oimond, William Bamford, and Nicholas Chamberlain severally made unto these Articles.

To the first they answered and confessed the same to be true, except that they do believe that there is here in the Earth one Catholick and whole Church, and that the same Church doth hold and believe, as is contained in this Article.

To the second they answered, and believe the said Article not to be true; for they say that they have and do believe that they are necessarily bounden, under pain of damnation of their Soul, to give full faith and credence unto the said Catholick Church, and to the Faith and Religion of the same, in all necessary points of the same Faith and Religion, without wavering or doubting in any part thereof.

To the third they answer, that the Church of Rome, and other Churches mentioned in this Article, be not true Members and Parts (as they be used in Faith and Religion) of the Catholick Church of Christ, and that the Faith and Religion used in the said Churches, is not agreeable with the Church of Christ, but are false and erroneous.

To the fourth they answer and say, That howsoever the said Churches of Rome and others of Christendom have and do believe touching the Sacrament of the Altar, yet they do believe that in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine, there is not the very substance of Christs Body and Blood, but that there is only the substance of material Bread and Wine, and that the same material Bread and Wine be only the signs and tokens of Christs Body and Blood, and are to be received only for a remembrance of Christs passion and death, without any substance of Christs Body and Blood at all.

To the fifth Article they answer, That the true receiving and eating of Christs Body, according to Christs Institution, is to take, distribute, and eat material Bread, and thereby to remember the passion and death of Christ, and so receive by Faith (as they believe) Christs Body and Blood, and not otherwise.

To the sixth they answer, The same to be true in every part thereof, except that over and besides the Gloria in excelsis, the Epistle and Gospel, which they believe to be good, they believe the Enter noster and Creed used in the Mass, be also good.

To the seventh they answer and confess, That Auricular Confession is not necessary to be made to the Priest; nevertheless they think that it is necessary to go to such a Priest as is able to give good counsel: And that for counsel only, and not otherwise. And as concerning the Ceremonies of the Church, they answer the same to be vain and unprofitable. No Service in the Church ought to be said, but only in the English Tongue.

To the eighth, they answer and believe the same to be true in every part thereof, except they do not believe that they be Hereticks, or suspected of Heresie.

To the ninth Osmund and Bamford answered, That they referred themselves to the said Laws mentioned in that Article; but Chamberlain made no answer at all to this Article.

To the tenth, the said Osmund and Bamford answered and said, That by reason of their Belief before by them confessed, they are not to be reputed, taken or adjudged for wilful and obdurate Hereticks, nor to be punished therefore, as is declared in that Article. The other answered nothing.

These Articles in the same form and manner of words are commonly objected to all other that follow after, with the same Answers also thereunto annexed. In which Articles thou must note (Reader) the crafty and subtle handling of these Lawyers and Register, who so deceitfully frame their Articles and Positions, that unless a man do advisedly consider them, it is hard for a simple man to answer to them, but he shall be snared and entangled. So they paint their Church with such a visage of Universal, whole, holy, Catholick, as who should say: He that denieth Rome, denieth the holy Church of Christ here in Earth. Likewise in examining them, and specially the simple sort in the matter of the Sacrament, to the material Bread in the Sacrament they put their word (only) very capriciously and fraudulently, so take them at the worst advantage, making the People believe that they take the holy Sacrament to be no better than only common Bread: when they do not so, but make a difference between the same, both in the use, honour and name thereof.

The crafty and capricious dealing of the Popes inpropound-ing their Articles.

Again, as in the Examinations bold but only against the erroneous reports of Romish Religion, these Bishops in their Interrogatories give out the matter so generally, as though the said Examiners in general shake against all the Articles of Faith taught in Rome, Spain, England, France, Scotland, &c.

Moreover, concerning Latin Service, in such crafty form of words they propound their Article, that it might appear to the People, these Men do deny any Service to be lawful in any Place, Country or Language, but only in English.

And as these Articles are craftily, capriciously and deceitfully in form of words devised by the Bishops and their Notaries: so the Answers again to the same, be no less subtilly framed, and after the most odious manner put down in the name of the Examiners, which being read unto them, thus without further advice they were constrained upon a sudden, to subscribe the same with their hands. Whereby, if any word escaped their hand, peradventure not considerably subscribed; there the Popes take their advantage against them, to defame them, and to bring them into hatred with the People.

These Articles thus propounded and answered, they were until the Afternoon dismissed. At what time they did again appear, and there were examined and travelled with by fair and flattering Speeches, as well of the Bishops as of others his Assistants, to recant and revoke their Opinions, who notwithstanding remained constant and firm, and therefore, after the common usage of their Ecclesiastical Laws, were sent away again until the next day, being Saturday, and the 18 day of May. Then in the Fore-noon the Bishop using his accustomed manner of proceeding, which he had used before as well with them as with others, did likewise dismiss them, and at last in the Afternoon condemned them as Hereticks, and so delivered them to the Sheriffs, in whose custody they remained until they were delivered to the Sheriff of Essex, and by him were executed, Chamberlain at Colchester, the 14 of June; Thomas Osmund at Manningtree, the 15 of June; and William Bamford alias Butler, at Harwich, the same 15 day in the Month of June.

The History of the worthy Martyr and Servant of God, Mr. John Bradford, with his Life, Acts, and sundry Conflicts with his Adversaries, and Martyrdom at length most constantly suffered for the Testimony of Christ and his Truth.

As touching the first Country and Education of John Bradford, he was born at Mancheffer in Lancashire. His Parents did bring him up in Learning from his Infancy, until he attained such knowledge in the Latin Tongue, and skill in Writing, that he was able to gain his own living in some honest condition. Then he became Servant to Sir John Harrington, Knight, who in the great Affairs of King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth, which he had in hand when he was Treasurer of the Kings Camps and Buildings, at divers times in Bulleois, had such experience of Bradford activity in Writing, his expertness in the Art of Auditors, as also of his faithful Trustfulness, that not only in those Affairs, but in many other of his private business he trusted Bradford in such fort, that above all other he used his faithful Service.

Thus continued Bradford certain years in a right honest and good trade of life, after the course of this World, like to come forward (as they say) if his mind could have so liked, or had been given to the World as many other be. But the Lord which had elected him unto a better function, and pre-ordained him to preach the Gospel of Christ in that hour of grace, which in his secret counsel he had appointed, called this his chosen Child to the understanding and partaking of the same Gospel of Life. In which Call he was so truly taught, that forthwith his effectual Call was perceived by the fruits. For then Bradford did forsake his worldly Affairs and forwardness in worldly Wealth, and, after the just Account given to his Master of all his doings, he departed from him, and with marvellous favour to further the Kingdom of God by the Ministry of his holy Word, he gave himself wholly to the study of the holy Scriptures. The which his purpose to accomplish the better, he departed from the Temple at London, where the Temporal Law is studied, and went to the University of Cambridge, to learn by Gods Law how to further the building of the Lords Temple. In Cambridge his diligence in study, his profiting in knowledge and godly Conversation pleased all men, that within one whole year after that he had been there, the University did give him a degree of a Master of Art.

Anno 1555
Bradford
M. of Art.

of Pembroke Hall.
M. Bucer.
laying.

Immediately after the Master and Fellows of Pembroke Hall did give him a Fellowship in their College with them: yet that man of God Martin Bucer, so liked him, that he had him not only most dear unto him, but also oftentimes exhorted him to bestow his talent in Preaching. Unto which Br. answered always, that he was unable to serve in that office, through want of Learning; To the which Bucer was wont to reply, saying; If thou have not fine Manchet Bread, yet give the poor People Barly Bread, or whatsoever else the Lord hath committed unto thee. And whiles Bradford was thus persuaded to enter into the Ministry, Doctor Ridley that worthy Bishop of London, and glorious Martyr of Christ, according to the order that then was in the Church of England, called him to take the degree of a Deacon. Which Order, because it was not without some such abuse, as to the which Bradford would not consent, the Bishop yet perceiving that Bradford was willing to enter into the Ministry, was content to order him Deacon without any abuse, even as he desired. This being done, he obtained for him a Licence to preach, and did give him a Prebend in his Cathedral Church of Saint Pauls.

In this preaching office by the space of three years, how faithfully Bradford walked, how diligently he laboured, many parts of England can testify. Sharply he opened & reprov'd, in woe by he preached Christ crucified, pitifully he impugned Heresies and Errors, earnestly he persuaded to godly life. After the Death of blessed young King Ed. the sixth, when Queen Mary had gotten the Crown, till continued Bradford diligent in preaching, until he was unjustly deprived both of his office and liberty by the Queen and her Council. To the doing whereof, because they had no just cause, they took occasion to do this injury for such an act, as among Turks and Infidels would have been with thankfulness rewarded, and with great favour accepted, as indeed it did no less deserve.

The fact was this. The 13. of August, in the first year of the reign of Q. Mary, Master Bourn, then Bishop of Bath, made a Seditious Sermon at Pauls Crois in London, as partly is declared before, to set Pope abroad, in such sort that it moved the People to no small indignation, being almost ready to pull him out of the pulpit. Neither could the reverence of the place, nor the presence of Bish. Boser, who then was his Master, nor yet the commandment of the Major of London, whom the people ought to have obeyed, stay their rage: but the more they spake, the more the People were incited. At length Bourn seeing the People in such a mood, and himself in such peril (whereof he was sufficiently warned by the hurling of a drawn Dagger at him as he stood in the Pulpit) and that he was put from ending his Sermon, fearing lest (against his will) he should there end his wretched life, desired Bradford, who stood in the Pulpit behind him, to come forth, and to stand in his place and speak to the People. Good Bradford at his request was content, and there spake to the People of godly and quiet obedience. Whom as soon as the People saw to begin to speak unto them, so glad they were to hear him, that they cried with a great shout; Bradford, Bradford, God save thy life Bradford: well declaring not only what affection they bare unto him, but also what regard they gave unto his words. For after that he had entred a little to preach unto them, & to exhort them to quiet and patience, chiscons all the raging ceased, and in the end quietly departed each man to his house. Yet in the mean season (for it was a long time before that so great a multitude could all depart) Bourn thought (and truly) himself not yet full sure of his life till he were safely housed, notwithstanding that the Major and Sheriffs of London were there at hand to help them. Wherefore he desired Bradford not to depart from him till he were in safety: which Bradford according to his promise, performed. For while the Major and Sheriffs did lead Bourn to the School Masters House, which is next to the Pulpit, Bradford went at his back, shadowing him from the People with his gown, and so to set him safe.

Let the Reader now consider the peril of Bourn, the charity of Bradford, and the headyness of the multitude, and also the grudging minds of certain, which yet still there remained behind; grieved not a little in their minds, to see that so good a man should save the life of such a Popish Priest, so impudently and openly railing against K. Edward. Among whom one Gentleman said these words: Ah Bradford, Bradford! thou dost save him that will to burn thee. I give thee his life: if it were not for thee, I would (I assure thee) run him through with my sword. Thus Bourn for that time, through Bradford's means, escaped Bodily Death: but God hath his Judgment to be shewed in the time appointed.

The same Sunday in the afternoon Bradford preached at the Bow Church in Cheapside, and reprov'd the People sharply for their Seditious Misdemeanour. After this he did abide still in London with an innocent Conscience, to try what should become of his just doing.

Within three days after, he was sent for to the Tower of London, where the Queen then was, to appear there before the Council. There was he charged with this act of saving of Bourn, which act they there called Seditious: & also objected against him for preaching, & so by them he was committed first to the Tower, then unto other prisons, out of which neither his innocence, godliness, nor charitable dealing could purchase to him liberty of Body, till by Death (which he suffered for Christ's cause) he obtained the Heavenly liberty, of which neither Pope nor Papist shall ever deprive him. From the Tower he came to the Kings Bench in Southwark: and after his condemnation, he was sent to the Counter in the Pauley in London: in which two places, for the time he did remain prisoner, he preached twice a day continually, unless sickness hindered him: where also the Sacrament was often ministered and through his means (the Keepers so well did bear with him) such reform of good folks was daily to his comfort, and to the ministration of the Sacrament, that commonly his chamber was well nigh filled therewith. Preaching, reading and praying was all his whole life. He did not eat above one meal a day; which was but very little when he took it: and his continual study was upon his knees. In the midst of dinner he used often to mule with himself, having his hat over his eyes, from whence came commonly plenty of tears dropping on his trencher. Very gentle he was to man and child, and in so good credit with his Keeper, that at his desire in an evening (being prisoner in the Kings Bench in Southwark) he had licence upon his promise to return again that night, to go into London without any Keeper to visit one that was sick, lying by the Still-yard. Neither did he fail his promise, but returned to his prison again, without preventing his hour, than breaking his fidelity: so constant was he in word and in deed.

Of personage he was somewhat tall and slender, spare of Body, of a faint Sanguine colour, which an Awburn became. He slept not commonly above four hours in the night, and in his bed, till sleep came, his book went not out of his hand. His chief recreation was in no gaming or other pastime, but only in honest company, and comely talk, wherein he would spend a little time after Dinner at the board, and so to prayer and his Book again. He counted that hour not well spent, wherein he did not some good, either with his pen, study, or in exhorting of others, &c. He was no niggard of his purse, but would liberally participate that he had to his fellow prisoners. And commonly once a week he visited the thieves, pick-purses, and such others that were with him in prison where he lay on the other side, unto whom he would give godly exhortation, to learn the amendment of their lives by their trouble; and after that so done, distribute among them some portion of money to their comfort.

By the way, this I thought not to conceal. While he was in the Kings Bench, and Mr. Saunders in the Marshalsea both prisoners, on the Backside of those two prisons they met many times, and conferred together when they would: so mercifully did the Lord work for them, even in the midst of their troubles: and the said Bradford was so trusted with his Keeper, & had such liberty in the Backside, that there was no day, but that he might have easily escaped away, if he would, but that the Lord had another work to do for him. In the Summer time, while he was in the said Kings Bench, he had liberty of his Keeper to ride into Oxfordshire, to a Merchants House of his acquaintance, and horse and all things prepared for him for that Journey; and the party in readiness that should ride with him: but God prevented him by sickness that he went not at all.

One of his old Friends and Acquaintance came unto him while he was prisoner, and asked him, if he sued to get him out, what then he would do, or whether he would go? Unto whom he made answer, as not caring whether he went out or no: but if he did, he said he would marry, and abide still in England secretly, teaching the People as the time would suffer him, and occupy himself that way. He was had in for great reverence and admiration with all good men, that a Multitude, which never knew him but by fame, greatly lamented his Death: yet, and a number also of the Papists themselves withed heartily his life. There were few days in which he was thought not to spend some tears before he went to bed, neither was there every a prisoner with him, but by his company he greatly profited, as all they will yet witness, and have testified of him no less, to the glory of God, whose society he frequented, as among many, one special thing I thought to note, which is this.

Bishop Ferrar being in the Kings Bench prisoner, as before you have heard, was travelled withal of the Papists in the end of Lent, to receive the Sacrament at Easter in one kind, who after much perswading yielded to them, and promised so to do. Then (so it happened by Gods providence) the Easter Even, the day before he should have done it, was Bradford brought to the Kings Bench prisoner, where the Lord making him his Instrument, Bradford only was the mean that the said Bishop Ferrar revoked his promise and word, and would never after yield to be spotted with that Papistical pitch; so effectually the Lord wrought by this worthy Servant of his. Such an instrument was he in Gods Church, that few or none there were that knew him, but esteemed him as a precious Jewel and Gods true messenger.

The night before he was had to Newgate, which was the Saturday night, he was fore troubled divers times in his sleep by dreams, how the chain for his burning was brought to the Counter-gate, and how the next day being Sunday, he should be had to Newgate, and on the Monday after burned in Smithfield, as in deed it came to pass accordingly, which hereafter shall be shewed. Now he being vexed so oftentimes in this sort with these dreams, about three of the clock in the morning he waked him that lay with him and told him his unquiet sleep and what he was troubled withal. Then after a little talk, Master Bradford rose out of the bed, and gave himself to his old exercise of reading and prayer, as always he had used before: and at dinner according to his accustomed manner he did eat his meat, and was very merry, no Body being with him from morning to night, but he that lay with him, with whom he had many times on that day communication of Death, of the Kingdom of Heaven, and of the ripeness of sin in that time.

In the afternoon they two walking together in the Keepers chamber, suddenly the Keepers wife came up, as one half amazed, and seeming much troubled, being almost windless, said: Oh Master Bradford, I come to bring you heavy news. What is that said he? Marry, quoth she, to morrow you must be burned; and your chain is now a buying, and soon you must go to Newgate. With that Mr. Bradford put off his cap, and lifting up his eyes to Heaven, said; I thank God for it; I have looked for the same a long time, and therefore it cometh not now to me suddenly, but as a thing waited for every day and hour, the Lord make me worthy thereof: and so thanking her for her gentleness, departed up into his chamber, and called his Friend with him, who when he came thither, he went secretly himself alone a long time, and prayed; Which done, he came again to him that was in his chamber, and took him divers Writings and Papers, and shewed him his mind in those things what he would have done, and after they had spent the afternoon till night in many and sundry such things, at last came to him half a dozen of his Friends more, with whom all the evening he spent the time in prayer and other good exercise, so wonderfully, that it was marvellous to hear and see his doings.

A little before he went out of the Counters, he made a notable prayer of his farewell, with such plenty of tears, and abundant Spirit of prayer, that it ravished the minds of the hearers. Also when he shifted himself with a clean shirt that was made for his burning (by one Mr. Walter Marlers Wife, who was a good nurse unto him, and his very good Friend) he made such a prayer of the wedding garment, that some of those that were present were in such great admiration, that their eyes were as thoroughly occupied in looking on him, as their ears gave place to hear his prayer. At his departing out of the chamber, he made like wife a prayer, and gave money to every Servant and Officer of the House, with exhortation to them to fear and serve God, continually labouring to eschew all manner of Evil. That done, he turned him to the wall and prayed vehemently, that his words might not be spoken in vain, but that the Lord would work the same in them effectually, for his Christs sake. Then being beneath in the Court, all the prisoners cried out to him and bid him farewell, as the rest of the House had done before with weeping tears.

The time they carried him to Newgate, was about xi. or xii. a clock in the night, when it was thought none would be stirring abroad: and yet, contrary to their expectation in that behalf, was there in Cheapside and other places (between the Counters and Newgate) a great multitude of People that came to see him, which most gently bade him farewell, praying for him with most lamentable and pitiful tears, and he again as gently bade them farewell, praying most heartily for them and their welfare. Now whether it were a commandment from the Queen and her Councillor from Boser and his adherents, or whether it were merily devised of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of London, or no, I cannot tell; but a great noise there was over night about the City by divers, that Bradford should be burnt the next day in Smithfield, by four of the clock in the morning, before it should be greatly known to any. In which rumor, many heads had divers minds; some thought the way to the People to be the cause thereof: other thought nay, that it was rather because the Papists judged his Death would convert many to the truth, and give a great overthrow to their Kingdom. So some thought one thing, and some another, that no just conjecture of the cause could be known that ever I heard yet. But this was certain, the People prevented the device suspected; for the next day, at the said hour of four a clock in the morning, there was in Smithfield such a multitude of men and women, that many being in admiration thereof, thought it was not possible that they could have warning of his Death, being so great a number in such short time, unless it were by the singular providence of Almighty God.

Well, this took not effect as the People thought; for that morning it was nine a clock of the day, before Master Bradford was brought into Smithfield: which, in going through Newgate thitherwards, spied a Friend of his whom he loved, standing on the one side the way to the Keepers housewards, unto whom he reached his hand over the People, and plucked him to him, and delivered to him from his head his velvet night-cap, and also his handkerchief, with other things besides. And after a little discourse with him, and each of them parting from other, immediately came to him a Brother in law of his, called Roger Bejwick, which as soon as he had taken the said Bradford by the hand, one of the Sheriffs of London called Woodroffe, came with his staff, and brake the said Rogers Head, that the Blood ran about his shoulders. Which sight Bradford beholding with grief, bade his Brother farewell, willing him to commend him to his Mother, and the rest of his friends, and to get him to some Surgeon sometimes; so they departing, had little or no talk at all together. Then was he led forth to Smithfield with a great company of weaponed men, to conduct him thither, as the like was not seen at any mans burning: for in every corner of Smithfield there were some, besides those that stood about the Stake. Bradford then being come to the place fell flat to the ground, secretly making his prayers to Almighty God. Then rising again, and putting off his cloths unto his shirt, he went to the stake, and there suffered with a young of twenty years of age, joyfully and constantly, whose name was John Leaf. Touching the order and manner of whole burning, more shall be said (God willing) hereafter. In the mean time, we will now shew forth the sundry examinations, conflicts, and conferences between him and other his Adversaries during the time of his imprisonment, which was in all two years lacking one month and a half. Which Examinations here follow to be declared.

It was before a little above declared, that John Bradford, within three days after the Sermon of Master Bourn, was by the Councill committed to the Tower, where he remained from the month of August, Anno 1553 to the 22. day of January, Anno 1555, upon which day he was called Anno called out to examination before Steven Hinchey and other of the Commissioners. The effect of which examination and communication which passed between him and them, proceeded in manner as followeth.

The effect of the communication between John Bradford and the Lord Chancellor and others in Communion with him, the two and twenty day of January, Anno 1555.

After the Lord Chancellor, and the residue of the Queens Councill in Communion with him, had ended their talk with Master Farrar late Bishop of Saint David's, the Under-marshal of the Kings Bench was commanded to bring in John Bradford: who, being come into the presence of the Councill sitting at a Table, kneeled down on his knee, but immediately by the Lord Chancellor was bidden stand up, and so he did.

When he was risen, the Lord Chancellor earnestly looked upon him, to have (belike) overfaced him: but he gave no place, that is, he ceased not in like manner to look on the Lord Chancellor still continually, save that once he cast up his eyes to Heaven-ward, sighed for Gods grace, and so over faced him.

L.Chan. Then the Lord Chancellor as it were amazed, and something troubled, spake thus to him in effect; That of long time he had been imprisoned justly for his seditious behaviour at Pauls Crofs, the thirteenth of August, in the year One thousand five hundred fifty three, for his false preaching and arrogancie, taking upon him to preach without Authority. But now (quoth he) the time of mercy is come, and therefore the Queens Highness, minding to offer unto you mercy, hath by us sent for you, to declare and give the fame, if so be ye will with us return: and if you will do as we have done, you shall find as we have found, I warrant you. This was the sum of his words, and in manner the same words which he spake.

Brad. To these words John Bradford spake (after reverent obedience made) in this manner: My Lord and Lords all, I confess that I have been long imprisoned, and (with humble reverence be it spoken) unjustly, for that I did nothing Seditiously, Falsely, or Arrogantly, in word or fact, by preaching or otherwise, but rather sought truth, peace, and all goodly quietness, an obedient and faithful Subject both in going about to save the Bishop of Bathe now, then Mr. Bower, the Preacher at the Crofs, and in preaching for quietness accordingly.

L.Chan. At these words, or rather before he had fully finished, the said Lord Chancellor something snuffed, and spake with an Admiration, that there was a loud lye: for (quoth he) the fact was Seditious, as you my Lord of London can bear witness.

Bower. You say true my Lord; I saw him with mine own eyes, when he took upon him to rule and lead the People malepertly, thereby declaring that he was the Author of the Sedition.

Brad. My Lords, notwithstanding my Lord Bishops seeing and saying, yet the truth I have told, as one day my Lord God Almighty shall reveal to all the World, when we shall all come and appear before him: In the mean season, because I cannot be believed of you, I must and am ready to suffer, as now your sayings be, whatsoever God shall license you to do unto me.

L.Chan. I know thou hast a glorious tongue, and goodly shew thou makest: but all is lyes thou speakest. And again, have not forgot how stubborn thou wast when thou wast before us in the Tower, whereupon thou wast committed to prison concerning Religion: I have not forgotten thy behaviour and talks, wherethrough worthily thou hast been kept in prison, as one that would have done more hurt than I will speak of.

Brad. My Lord, as I said I say again, that I stand as before you, so before God, and one day we shall all stand before him: the truth then will be the truth, though now ye will not so take it. Yea my Lord, I dare say, that my Lord of Bathe, Mr. Bower will witness with me, that I fought his safeguard with the perill of mine own life, I thank God therefore.

Bower. That is not true: for I my self did see thee take upon thee too much.

Brad. No, I took nothing upon me undefined, and that of Master Bower himself, as if he were here present, I dare say he would affirm. For he desired me both to help him to pacifie the People, and also not to leave him till he was in safety. And as for my behaviour in the Tower, and talk before your Honours, if I did or said any thing that did not beset me, if your Lordships would tell me wherein it was, I should and would shortly make you answer.

Chan. Well, to leave this matter: how sayest thou now? Wilt thou return again, and do as we have done, and thou shalt receive the Queens mercy and pardon?

Brad. My Lord, I desire mercy with Gods mercy, but mercy with Gods wrath, God keep me from: Although (I thank God therefore) my conscience doth not accuse me, that I did speak any thing wherefore I should need to receive the Queens mercy or pardon. For all that ever I did or spake, was both agreeable to Gods Laws, and the Laws of the Realm at that present, and did make much to quietness.

Chan. Well, if thou make this babbling rolling in thy eloquent tongue, and yet being altogether ignorant and vain-glorious, and wilt not receive mercy offered to thee, know for truth, that the Queen is minded to make a "purgation of all such as thou art."

Brad. The Lord before whom I stand, as well as before you, knoweth what vain-glory I have sought, and seek in this behalf: his mercy I desire, and also would be glad of the Queens favour, to live as a subject without a clog of conscience. But otherwise the Lords mercy is better to me than life. And I know to whom I have committed my life, even into his hands which will keep it, so that no man may take it away before it be his pleasure. There are twelve hours in the day, and as long as they last, so long shall no man have power thereon. Therefore his good will be done; life in his displeasure is worse than Death, and Death with his true favour, is true life.

Chan. I know well enough, that we shall have glorious talk enough of thee: be sure therefore that as thou hast deceived the People with false and devilish Doctrin, so shalt thou receive.

Brad. I have not deceived the People, nor taught any other Doctrin, than by Gods grace I am, and hope shall be ready to confirm with my life. And as for the devilishness and fallencies in the Doctrin, I would be sorry you could so prove it.

Duresm. Why, tell me, what say you by the Ministration of the Communion, as now you know it is?

Brad. My Lord, here I must desire of your Lordship and of all your Honours a question, before I dare make you an answer to any Interrogatory or Question, wherewith you now begin: I have been six times sworn that I shall in no case consent to the practicing of any Jurisdiction, or any Authority on the Bishop of Rome: behalf within this Realm of England. Now, before God, I humbly pray your Honors to tell me whether you ask me this question by his Authority, or not? If you do, I dare not, nor may answer you any thing in his Authority, which you shall demand of me, except I would be forsworn, which God forbid.

Ser. Bower. Hast thou been sworn six times what office hast thou born?

Brad. Forsooth I wasthree sworn in Cambridge, when I was admitted Master of Art, when I was admitted Fellow of Pembroke Hall, and when I was there, the Visitors came thither, and swore the University. Again, I was sworn when I entered into the Ministry, when I had a Prebend given me, and when I was sworn to serve the King a little before his Death.

Chan. Tush, Herods Oath is a man should make no conscience at.

Brad. But my Lord, these were no Herods Oaths, no unlawfull Oaths, but Oaths according to Gods Word, as you your self have well affirmed in your book De vera obedientia.

M. Roch. My Lords (quoth another of the Councill) that stood by the table, Master Rochester I ween I never speaketh. I knew wherefore this man was in prison before now: but I fee well that it had not been good that this man had been abroad: what the cause was that he was put in prison, I know not; but I now well know that not without a cause he was and is to be kept in prison.

Bower. Yea, it was reported this Parliament time by the Earl of Derby, that he hath done more hurt by Letters, and exhorting those that have come to him, in Refuge, Ligon, Mens mercy with Gods wrath refused.

That is the worst you and your Pope can do, argument you have. The Lords mercy is better than life to Bradford.

Bradford reply to confirm his doctrine with his life.

in Religion, than ever he did when he was abroad by preaching. In his letters he curieth all that teach any false Doctrine (for so he calleth that which is not according to that he taught) and most heartily exhorteth them to whom he writeth to continue still in that they have received by him, and such like as he is. All which words divers of the Council affirmed. Whereunto the said M. Bourn added, saying; How say you Sir, have you not thus Seditiously written and exhorted the People?

M. Bradford is fully charged with Sedition.

Brad. I have not written, nor spoken any thing Seditiously, neither (I thank God therefore) have I admitted any Seditious Cogitation, nor I trust ever shall do.

Bourn. Yea, thou hast written Letters.

Chan. Why speakest thou not? Hast thou not written as he saith?

Brad. That I have written, I have written.

Rob. South-well speaketh.

South. Lord God, what an Arrogant and Stubborn Boy is this, that thus stoutly and dallyingly behaveth himself before the Queens Council? Whereat one looked upon another with disdainful Countenances.

Brad. My Lords and Masters, the Lord God which is, and will be Judge to us all, knoweth, that as I am certain I stand now before his Majesty; so with reverence in his fight I stand before you, and unto you accordingly in words and gesture I desire to behave my self. If you otherwise take it, I doubt not but God in his time will reveal it. In the mean season, I shall suffer with all due obedience your sayings and doings too, I hope.

All is lye shamefully not Winc-
chester.

Chan. These be gay and glorious words of reverence but as in all other things, so herein also thou doest nothing but lye.

Brad. Well, I would God the Author of truth, and abhorer of lyes, would pull my tongue out of my head before you all, and shew a terrible Judgment on me here present, if I have purposed or do purpose to lye before you, whatsoever you shall ask me.

Winc-chester hides as a

Chan. Why then dost thou not answer? Hast thou written such Letters as here is objected against thee?

Brad. As I said, my Lord, that I have written, I have written, I stand now before you, which either can lay my Letters to my charge, or no; if you lay any thing to my charge that I have written, if I deny it, I am than a liar.

Chan. We shall never have done with thee, I perceive now: be short, be short, Wilt thou have mercy?

Brad. I pray God give me his mercy, and if therewith you will extend yours, I will not refuse it, but otherwise I will none.

Here now was much ado, one speaking this, and another that of his Arrogance, in refusing the Queens pardon, which he so lovingly did offer unto him; whereto Bradford answered thus:

M. Bradford
desireth to live that he may have life without clog of conscience.

Brad. My Lords, if I may live as a quiet subject without clog of conscience, I shall heartily thank you for your pardon; if otherwise I behave my self, than I am in danger of the Law in the mean season I ask no more, but the benefit of a Subject, till I be convinced of transgression, if I cannot have this, as hitherto I have not had, Gods good will be done.

Winc-chester speareth & guilteth the Doctrines taught in King Edwards time.

Chan. Upon these words my Lord Chancellor began a long process of the false Doctrine wherewith the People were deceived in the days of King Edward, and so turned the end of his talk to Bradford, saying: How sayest thou?

M. Bradford
standeth in deniall of the Doctrine taught in King Edwards time.

Brad. My Lord, the Doctrine taught in K. Edwards days was Gods pure Religion: the which as I then believed, so do I now more believe it than ever I did, and therein I am more confirmed, and ready to declare it by Gods grace even as he will to the World, than I was when I first came into prison.

Durel. What Religion mean you in K. Edwards days? What year of his reign?

Brad. Forsooth even the same year my Lord, that the King died, and I was a Preacher. Here wrote Secretary Bourn I wrote not what.

The reason of winc-chester wherewith he dispro-veth the Doctrine of K. Edwards days.

Chan. Now after a little pausing, my Lord Chancellor beginneth again to declare, that the Doctrine taught in King Edwards days was Heresie, using for probation and demonstration thereof, no Scripture nor Reason, but this: that it ended with Treason and Rebellion, so that (quoth he) the very end were enough to prove that Doctrine to be naughty, Brad. Ah my Lord, that you could enter in Gods Sanctuary, and mark the end of this present Doctrine that you now fo magnifie.

Chan. What meanest thou by that? I ween we shall have a snatch of Rebellion even now.

Brad. My Lord, I mean no such end as you would gather: I mean an end which no man feeth, but such as enter into Gods Sanctuary. If a man look on present things, he will soon deceive himself.

Here now did my L. Chancellor offer again mercy, and Bradford answered, as before: Mercy with Gods mercy should be welcom, but otherwise he would none. Whereupon the L. Chancellor did ring a little Bell, belike to call in some Body: for there was present none in manner, but only those before named, and the Bishop of Worcester. Now when one was come in; it is best, quoth Mr. Secretary Bourn, that you give the Keeper a charge of this fellow. So was the Undermarshall called in.

The Queens mercy again offered to
M. Bradford.

Chan. Ye shall take this man to you, and keep him close without conference with any man, but by your knowledge, and suffer him not to write any Letters, &c. for he is of another manner of charge unto you now, than he was before. And so they departed, Bradford looking as cheerfully as any man could do, declaring thereby even a desire to give his life for confirmation of that he had taught and written.

M. Bradford secured & gained into prison.

The effect of the second examination of John Bradford in S. Mary Overies Church, before the L. Chancellor, and divers other Bishops, the 29. of January. Anno 1555.

After the Excommunication of John Rogers, John Bradford was called in, and standing before the L. Chancellor and other Bishops set with him, the said L. Chancellor speake thus in effect.

The second examination of M. Bradford before the Bishop of Winc-
and others.

L. Chan. Where before the 22. of January, the said Bradford was called before them (said he) and they offered unto him the Queens pardon, although he had condemned the same, and further said, that he would flitely and stoutly maintain, and defend the Erroneous Doctrine taught in the days of K. Edwards the 6. yet in consideration that the Queens Highness was wonderful merciful, they thought good oftentimes to offer the same mercy again, before it were too late: therefore advise you well, said he, there is yet space and grace before we proceed, that you be committed to the Secular Power, as we must do and will do, if you will not follow the example of Mr. Barlowe, and Mr. Cardmaker, whom he there commended, adding oratoriously amplifications to move the said Bradford to yield to the Religion presently set forth.

Example of
M. Barlowe and Cardmaker laid against Bradford.

Brad. After the L. Chancellors long talk, Bradford began on this sort to speak; My Lord, and my Lords all, as now I stand in your sight before you, so I humbly beseech your Honours to consider, that you sit in the seat of the Lord, who (as David doth witness) is in the congregation of Judges, and sitteth in the midst of them judging; and as you would your place to be now of us taken as Gods place, so demonstrate your selves to follow him in your sitting, that is, seek no guileless Blood, nor hunt not by questions to bring into the snare, them which are out of the same. At this present I stand before you guilty or guileless, then proceed and give sentence accordingly: if guileless, then give me the benefit of a subject, which hitherto I could not have.

Si illum objurgas, vice qui auctoritas talis, quid scias illi qui desiderit dammum sui malum?

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor replied, and said, that the said Bradford began with a true sentence, Deus stetit Synagoga, &c. But quoth he, this and all thy gesture declareth but Hypocrisie and vain-glory. And further he made much ado to purge himself, that he fought not guileless Blood, and so began a long process how that Bradfords fact at Pauls Cross, was presumptuous, arrogant, and declared a taking upon him to lead the People, which could not but turn to much disquietnes, in that thou (speaking to Bradford) was so refract & stout in Religion at that present. For the which, as thou wast then committed to prison, so hitherto thou hast been kept in prison, where thou hast written Letters to no little hurt to the Queens people, as by report of the Earl of Derby in the Parliament House was credibly declared. And to this he added, that the said Bradford did stubbornly behave himself the last time he laid against him before them, and therefore not for any other thing now I demand of thee, quoth he, but of and for thy Doctrine and Religion.

The witness of the Earl of Derby
he laid against
M. Bradford.

Brad.

Anno 1555. Brad. My Lord, where you accuse me of Hypocrite and Vain-glory, I must and will leave it to the Lords Declaration, which one day will open yours and my Truth and hearty meanings: in the mean season, I will content my self with the testimony of mine own Conscience, which if it yield to Hypocrite, could not but have God to be my foe also; and so both God and Man were against me. And as for my fact at Pauls-Cross, and behaviour before you at the Tower, I doubt not but God will reveal it to my comfort. For if ever I did things, which God used to publick benefit, I think that my deed was one, and yet for it I have been and am kept of long time in Prison. And as for Letters and Religion, I answer, as I did the last time I was before you.

M. Bradford defendeth his Fact at Pauls-Cross.

The words of M. Bradford mis-reported.

M. Bradford more confirmed in his Doctrine since his imprisonment than before.

Wickliffe maketh but a small matter of an Oath.

Bradford standeth still to his Oath.

The cause why Bradford answereth not to Wickliffe, by his interrogatories.

Chan. There didst thou say stubbornly and malepertly, that thou wouldest manly maintain the erroneous Doctrine in King Edwards days.

Brad. My Lord, I said the last time I was before you, that I had fix times taken an Oath, that I should never consent to the practising of any Jurisdiction on the Bishop of Rome behalf, and therefore durst I not answer to any thing that should be demanded fo, left I should be forsworn, which God forbid. Howbeit, saving mine Oath, I said that I was more confirmed in the Doctrine set forth publickly in the days of King Edward, than ever I was before I was put in Prison: and so I thought I should be, & think yet still I shall be found more ready to give my life as God will, for the confirmation of the same.

Chan. I remember well that thou madest much ado about needles matter, as though the Oath against the Bishop of Rome were so great a matter. So others have done before thee, but yet not in such sort as thou hast done: for thou pretendest a Conscience in it, which is nothing else but meer hypocrite.

Brad. My Conscience is known to the Lord: and whether I deal herein hypocritically or no, he knoweth. As I said therefore then my Lord, so I say again now, That for fear left I should be perjured, I dare not make answer to any thing you shall demand of me, if my answering should consent to the confirming or practising of any Jurisdiction for the Bishop of Rome here in England.

L. Chan. Why didst thou begin to tell that we are Dii, and sit in Gods place, and now wilt thou not make us an answer?

Brad. My Lord, I said, you would have your place taken of us now as Gods place: and therefore I brought forth that piece of Scripture, that ye might the more be admonished to follow God and his ways at this present, who seeth us all, and well perceiveth whether of Conscience I pretend this matter of the Oath, or no.

L. Chan. No, all men may well see thine hypocrite: for if for thine Oaths sake thou didst not answer, then wouldest thou not have spoken as thou didst, and have answered me at the first: but now men well perceive, that this is but a starting-hole to hide thy self in, because thou darrest not answer, and so wouldest escape, binding the simple Peoples eyes, as though of Conscience you did all you do.

Brad. That which I spake at the first, was not a replication or an answer to that you spake to me: and therefore I needed not to lay for me mine Oath. For I thought you would have more weighed what I did speak, than you did: but I perceived you did not consider it, but came to ask matter, whereto by answering I should consent to the practising of Jurisdiction on the Bishop of Rome behalf here in England, and so be forsworn; then of Conscience and simplicity I spake as I do yet again speak, that I dare not for Conscience sake answer you. And therefore I seek no starting-holes, nor go about to blind the People, as God knoweth. For if you of your Honours shall tell me, that you do not ask me any thing whereby mine answering should consent to the practising of the Bishop of Rome Jurisdiction, ask me wherein you will, and you shall hear that I will answer you as fairly as ever any did that came before you. I am not afraid of death, I thank God: for I look, and have looked for nothing else at your hands of long time: but I am afraid, when Death cometh, I should have matter to trouble my Conscience, by the guiltiness of Perjury, and therefore do I answer as I do.

L. Chan. Thine be gay glorious words, full of hypocrise and vain-glory, and yet dost thou not know that I sit here as Bishop of Winchester in mine own Diocess, and therefore may do this which I do and more too?

Brad. My Lord, give me leave to ask you this question, that my Conscience may be out of doubt in this matter. Tell me here Coram Deo, before God, all this Audience being witness, that you demand of me nothing whereby mine answering should consent to and confirm the practice of Jurisdiction for the Bishop of Rome here in England, and yet your Honour shall hear me give you as flat and as plain answers briefly, to whatsoever you shall demand me, as ever any did.

L. Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was wonderfully offended, and spake much how the Bishop of Rome Authority needed no confirmation of *Bradford*s answering, nor no such as he was; and turned his talk to the People, how that Bradford followed crafty covetous Merchants, which because they would lend no money to their Neighbours when they were in need, would say that they had sworn off, that they would never lend any more money, because there Debtors had so oft deceived them. Even to thou, quoth he to Bradford, dost at this present, to cast a mist in the Peoples eyes, to blear them with an Heresie (which is greater, and more hurtful to the Commonwealth than the other is) pretend thine Oath, whereby the People might make a Conscience, whereas they should not. Why speakest thou not?

Brad. My Lord as I said, I say again, I dare not answer you for fear of Perjury, from which God defend me, or else I could tell you that there is a difference between Oaths. Some be according to Faith and Charity, as the Oath against the Bishop of Rome: some be against Faith and Charity; as this, to deny by Oath, my help to my Brother in his need.

L. Chan. Here my L. Chancellor again was much offended, still saying that Bradford durst not answer, and further made much ado to prove, that the Oath against the Bishop of Rome was against Charity.

Brad. But Bradford answered, that howsoever his Honour took him, yet he was assured of his meaning, that no fear but the fear of Perjury made him unwilling to answer: For, as for death, my Lord (quoth he) as I know there are 12. hours in the day, so with the Lord my time is appointed. And when it shall be his good time, then I shall depart hence: but in the mean season I am safe enough, though all the People had sworn my death. Into his hands have I committed it, and do, his good will be done. And saving mine Oath, I will answer you in this behalf, that the Oath against the Bishop of Rome was not, nor is against Charity.

L. Chan. How prove you that?

Brad. Forsooth I prove it thus:

Argument.
Fe- Nothing is against Charity, which is with Gods Word, and not against it.
fi- The Oath against the Bishop of Romes Authority in England, is with Gods Word, and is not against it.
no. Ergo, The Oath against the Bishop of Romes Authority in England, is not against Charity.

L. Chan. Is it against Gods Word, that a man should take a King to be Supream Head of the Church in this Realm?

Brad. No, saving still mine Oath, it is not against Gods Word, but with it, being taken in such sense as it may well be taken: that is, attributing to the Kings power, the Sovereignty in all his Dominion.

L. Chan. I pray you where find you that?

Brad. I find it in many places, but specially in the 13. Rom 13. to the Romans, where S. Paul writeth, Every soul to be subject to the superiour Power: but what Power? Quæ gladium gestat. The Power verily which beareth the Sword; which is not the Spiritual, but the Temporal Power. As Chrysostom full well noteth upon the same place, which your Honour knoweth better than I. He (Chrysostom I mean) there plainly sheweth that Bishops, Prophets, and Apostles, are obedient to the Temporal Magistrates.

L. Chan. Here yet more the Lord Chancellor was stirred, and said, how that Bradford went about to deny all Bradford ready to answer under precession.

Difference of Oath: some with Faith and Charity, some against it.

The Oath against the Bishop of Rome, is not against Charity.

A King how he may be taken for Supream Head of the Church in his own Dominion.

Rom 13. Bishops, Prophets and Apostles subject to Temporal Magistrates.

all obedience to the Queen for his Oath: and so (quoth he) this man would make Gods word a warrant of disobedience: for he will answer the Queen on this fort, that when the faith, Now swear to the Bishop of Rome, or obey his Authority: No (will he say) for I should be forsworn, and so he makes the Queen no Queen.

Refusing of the Popes obedience being sworn against him is no denying of a due obedience to the Queen.

Brad. No, I go not a about to deny all obedience to the Queens Highness, but denying obedience in this part, if he should demand it. For I was sworn to K. Edward, not simply, that is, not only concerning his own person, but also concerning his Successors, and therefore in denying to do the Queens request herein, I deny not her Authority, nor become disobedient.

The pre-ference judgment of a Minister, as to the Oath of God, and so much in his Vow to the Pope.

L. Chan. Yes that thou dost: and so he began to tell a long tale, how if a man should make an Oath to pay to me an hundred pounds by such a day, and the man to whom it was due would forget the debt, the debtor should say, No, you cannot do it: for I am forsworn then.

Brad. Here Bradford desired my L. Chancellor not to trifle it, saying, that he wondered his Honour would make Solemn Oaths made to God, trifles in that fort; and make so great a matter concerning Vows (as they call it) made to the Bishop for Marriage of Priests.

Argument. A Speech of a negative non valde.

Chan. At these words the L. Chancellor was much offended, and said he did not trifle: but quoth he, thou goest about to deny obedience to the Queen, which now requirith obedience to the Bishop of Rome.

Brad. No my Lord, I do not deny obedience to the Queen, if you would discern between Genus and Species. Because I may not obey in this; Ergo, I may not obey in the other, is no good reason. As if a man let or sell a piece of his Inheritance, yet this notwithstanding, all his Inheritance is not let or sold: and so in this case, all obedience I deny not, because I deny obedience in this Branch.

Chan. I will none of these similitudes.

Brad. I would not use them, if that you went not about to perfwade the People, that I meant that which I never meant: for I my self not only mean obedience, but will give example of all most humble obedience to the Queens Highness, so long as the requirith not obedience against God.

Chan. No, no, all men may see your meaning well enough. There is no man, though he be sworn to the King, that doth therefore break his Oath, if he afterwards be sworn to the French King and to the Emperor.

Brad. It is true my Lord, but the cases be not like. For here is an exception; I Thou shalt not swear to the Bishop of Rome at any time. If we in like manner were sworn; I Thou shalt not serve the Emperor, &c. you see there were some alteration and more doubt. But I beseech your Honour remember what ye your self have written, answering the Objections heretofore in your Book De vera obedientia. Vincat modo deum verbi venias. i. Let Gods Word; and the reason thereof, bear the bell away.

Winchester, preterea per hunc Bradford non est auct.

Chan. Here the L. Chancellor was thoroughly moved, and said still, how that Bradford hath written seditious Letters, and perverted the People thereby, and did stoutly stand, as though he would defend the Erroneous Doctrine in King Edwards time, against all men: and now, quoth he, he saith, he dare not answer.

Bradford ready to render reason of his faith.

Brad. I have written no seditious Letters, I have not perverted the People: but that which I have written and spoken, that will I never deny, by Gods grace. And where your Lordship saith, that I dare not answer you: that all men may know that I am not afraid, saving mine Oath, ask me what you will, and I will plainly make you answer, by Gods grace, although I now see my life lieth thereon. But O Lord, into thy hands I commit it, come what come will: only sanctifie thy Name in me, as in an instrument of thy grace, Amen. Now ask what you will, and you shall see I am not afraid, by Gods grace, fairly to answer.

Christ present only as the Sacrament to faith.

L. Chan. Well then, how say you to the blessed Sacrament? Do you not believe there Christ to be present concerning his Natural Body?

Brad. My Lord, I do not believe that Christ is corporally present at and in the due Administration of the Sacrament. By this word, corporally I mean that Christ is there present corporally into faith.
